[1, 2] It is first objected that the trial court erred in permitting the people to introduce certain surrebuttal testimony. At the conclusion of the defendant Torres' testimony, his counsel and the district attorney announced, "That is all," whereupon counsel for Calderon asked permission to call two witnesses in rebuttal, which was granted, the court directing that counsel "confine the evidence strictly to rebuttal testimony." Two other witnesses then testified in rebuttal for the people, at which time the district attorney announced, "That is all for the state, if your honor please." Thereupon a conference was held at the bench between the judge and the district attorney. The court then remarked:

"Well, it is now very close to 12 o'clock. I think we will take an adjournment until 2 o'clock, regardless of what is taken up at that time."

When the court reconvened, Lueras was called in rebuttal, to which counsel for his codefendants objected, upon the ground that the people had closed, and all witnesses had been excused. The district attorney stated, and here insists, however, that he did not close, except for the time being, and as to the witness then testifying, and that he had expressed at the bench an intention of calling Lueras in the afternoon. At this time he said that, if a motion were necessary, he would move to reopen, and the court granted the motion, saying that "it must be confined strictly to rebuttal evidence." Lueras testified, and was cross-examined by counsel for Calderon, after which the latter took the stand and denied the rebuttal testimony of Lueras.

Appellants do not attempt to show wherein they were prejudiced in this respect, or what, if any, new evidence they might have offered had their witnesses not been excused. It is said that counsel for the people had an opportunity to coach the witness before 2 o'clock, but it affirmatively appears that he did not do so. Such a matter is one peculiarly within the discretion of the trial court, and under the circumstances of this case we think it did not exceed its authority in admitting the testimony in question.

[3] It is next contended that the court erred in giving to the jury a form of verdict finding the defendant Andrew Calderon "guilty of burglary, a felony, and find it burglary of the first degree," and that the same form of verdict was given the jury as to the defendant Torres. It is argued that this was an attempt to instruct that they be convicted, and that the offense be fixed of the first degree only, and it is asserted that the court further erred in refusing to instruct the jury that they might find the appellants guilty of the offense charged in any degree within their discretion.

The record discloses that the jury were instructed fully upon all phases of the case, and as to their duty in the event that they should find from the evidence that the defendants, or either of them, committed burglary in the first or second degree, or that one committed the offense of either degree with the aid of the other, or that one or both were guilty. The jury were given forms of verdict finding each defendant not guilty, and others reading "first degree as charged in the information," with the admonition that, if they should find that the offense was committed, and that it occurred in the daytime, they "should substitute 'second degree as charged in the information.'" It is obvious that the forms of verdict furnished by the trial court in no way limited the jury in their findings, and that they were properly instructed to return them in accordance with the evidence and the law as given them by the court.

There are no other points which merit discussion. The judgments and orders appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MYERS. (Cr. 1658.)★

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 22, 1928.

1. Criminal law ☞15—Enactment of criminal statute as amended operated as absolute repeal of original statute.

Enactment of a criminal statute as amended operated as absolute repeal of original statute.

2. Indictment and Information ☞109—Information charging burglary held demurrable for failure to charge specific nature of offense (Pen. Code, §§ 950, 952; Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046).

Information charging crime of burglary, in that on or about certain date defendant willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and burglariously entered a certain store building with intent to commit the crime of theft therein, held demurrable under Pen. Code, §§ 950, 952, for failure to state which of the five offenses comprised within the definition of theft under Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, was intended.

3. Indictment and Information ☞109—Where each of several distinct acts may constitute offense defined by statute, information charging commission of offense generally or of all acts specified is demurrable (Pen. Code, §§ 950, 952).

Where each of different and distinct acts specified in a number of subdivisions of a single section constitutes the offense defined, an information charging commission of the offense generally or with each and all acts specified, is subject to demurrer, under Pen. Code, §§ 950, 952.

4. Indictment and Information ☞71—Information must present distinct issue for trial so that defendant may be prepared to meet it and plead jeopardy against further prosecution.

Information must present a distinct issue for trial, so that defendant may be prepared to meet it, and, in the event of conviction or acquittal, plead jeopardy against further prosecution, and this is especially true where, from language used in statute, many things may be done which will constitute the offense.

5. Indictment and Information ☞71—Rules requiring pleading with reasonable certainty to inform defendant of charge have not been abrogated by Legislature or courts.

Rules requiring that pleading must with reasonable certainty inform defendant with what he is charged have not been abrogated by the Legislature or the courts.

Frank A. Myers was convicted of burglary in the second degree, and he appeals. Reversed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the State.

Walter K. Tuller, of Los Angeles, amicus curiae.

CRAIG, Acting Presiding Justice. The appellant was charged with the crime of burglary; it being alleged by information that on or about the 6th day of January, 1928, he willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and burglariously entered the store, room, and building of one August Wahlforth, in the city of Los Angeles, with intent to commit the crime of larceny, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided. A demurrer was interposed whereby it was contended that the information failed substantially to conform to sections 950, 951, and 952, of the Penal Code, that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense, and that the facts stated did not state a public offense. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant pleaded not guilty. The defense offered no evidence, and the defendant did not testify. After the people had closed, the trial court directed that the information be amended by substituting the word "theft" for the word "larceny," to which the defendant then demurred generally, which demurrer also was overruled. The jury was instructed that, if they believed beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant entered the store of August Wahlforth on said date with intent to commit the crime of theft as charged in the information, they should find him guilty of burglary, and state the degree thereof. A verdict of burglary in the second degree was returned.

It was insisted by objection to the introduction of any evidence, and by repeated objections during the trial, that no issue was raised by the information and plea of not guilty, and that the facts alleged failed to sufficiently state a public offense. A motion for an instructed verdict was overruled, and the defendant appeals.

We think the demurrer should have been sustained, and hence it will serve no useful purpose to consider other arguments advanced by appellant "Burglary," as defined by section 459 of the Penal Code, consists of feloniously entering any "house, * * * store, * * * with intent to commit grand or petit larceny." Section 490a of the Penal Code, as added by St. 1927, p. 1046, requires that the word "theft" be substituted for "larceny." Prior to 1927, larceny, as defined by section 484 of the Penal Code, consisted of "the felonious stealing, taking, carrying, leading or driving away the personal property of another." The same section as amended thereafter, and prior to the commission of the alleged offense here involved, was enacted as follows:

"Theft Defined. Every person who shall feloniously steal, take, carry, lead, or drive away the personal property of another, or who shall fraudulently appropriate property which has been intrusted to him, or who shall knowingly and designedly, or by any false or fraudulent representation or pretense, defraud any other person of money, labor, or real or personal property, or who causes or procures others to report falsely of his wealth or mercantile character and by thus imposing upon any person, obtains credit and thereby fraudulently gets or obtains possession of money or property or obtains the labor or service of another, is guilty of theft. * * *" (St. 1927, p. 1046.)

[1, 2] The enactment of section 484 in its present form operated as an absolute repeal of the original section. Billings v. Harvey, 6 Cal. 381; Buck v. Canty, 162 Cal. 226, 121 P. 924. The entering of a building or store with intent to steal another's personal property was formerly the only means in which one might be said to have entered with intent to commit larceny. Since by amendment a burglar may be prosecuted and convicted of the same offense by entering with intent to commit theft heretofore universally accepted as the popular term for "larceny," and as descriptive thereof (Bouv. Dict.; 2 Bl. Comm. 230), with intent to commit theft by fraudulently appropriating property intrusted to him, with intent to commit theft by defrauding another of real or personal property by fraudulent representations or pretenses, or by causing or procuring others to report falsely of his financial standing, to his gain, or by obtaining the labor or service of another, he may be guilty of burglary by entering with intent to commit either of these five offenses. Or, to state the matter differently, burglary may be committed in any one of the five ways designated by the statute. But the information wholly fails to charge any offense other than mere entering "with the intent then and therein to commit the crime of theft."

[3-5] The Penal Code plainly directs that an indictment or information must contain a statement of the acts constituting the offense so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. Where, as in the instant case, different and distinct acts specified in a number of subdivisions of a single section, each of which constitutes the offense defined, an information charging a defendant with the commission of the offense generally, or with each and all of the acts specified, would be subject to demurrer for failure to comply with the provisions of sections 950 and 952 of the Penal Code. People v. Lee, 107 Cal. 477, 40 P. 754; People v. Plath, 166 Cal. 227, 135 P. 954; People v. Taylor, 187 Cal. 378, 203 P. 85. The pleading must present a distinct issue for trial, that the defendant may be prepared to meet it, and, in the event of conviction or acquittal, plead jeopardy against further prosecution. People v. Lanterman, 9 Cal. App. 674, 100 P. 720. Especially is this true where from the language used in the statute many things may be done which may constitute the offense. People v. Silva, 8 Cal. App. 349, 97 P. 202; People v. Webber, 138 Cal. 145, 70 P. 1089. The rules of the common law have been changed by the Codes, and many formalities and particularities formerly deemed necessary are no longer required, but fundamental rules requiring that the pleading must with reasonable certainty inform the defendant with what he is charged have not been abrogated by the Legislature or the courts. People v. Ward, 110 Cal. 369, 42 P. 894.

The judgment and orders appealed from are reversed.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA BOND & FINANCE CORPORATION v. MATHES.★ (Civ. 6189.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 26, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 25, 1928. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 17, 1928.

1. Taxation $\S$ 552—Two lots held separately assessed, so as to justify collection of 50 cents on each lot, in addition to delinquent taxes and penalties (Pol. Code, $\S$ 3770).

Where two lots belonging to same person were separately described, and a separate valuation placed against each on the assessment roll, and similar entries were made in the delinquent tax roll, the two lots sold for taxes were separately assessed, and hence tax collector was justified, under Pol. Code, $\S$ 3770, in collecting, in addition to delinquent taxes and penalties, 50 cents on each lot.

2. Taxation $\S$ 627—Delinquent tax list as published, describing property in single entry as "lots 44 and 45, block 192," with amount due opposite, instead of separately, held properly prepared (Pol. Code, $\S\S$ 3747, 3762, 3771a).

Delinquent tax list, which as prepared and published showed name of L. S. Everts, with description of property opposite his name as "lots 44 and 45, block 192," and amount due of \$5.49 opposite description, instead of showing lots separately, with amount due opposite each described lot, as appellant contended should have been done, held properly prepared, under Pol. Code, $\S$ 3762, requiring list to contain property owner's name, with property's description and delinquency opposite, and in view of sections 3747 and 3771a.

3. Taxation $\S$ 659—Notice of tax sale, received through mail by property owner within provided time, though envelope was incorrectly addressed, held conforming to statute requirements (Pol. Code, $\S$ 3771a).

Owner of property to be sold for taxes having received notice of sale through mail within time provided by statute, and acknowledged receipt of the same, although his name was spelled incorrectly on envelope, held, that notice conformed to requirements of Pol. Code, § 3771a.

4. Taxation $\Rightarrow$ 734(1)—That tax sale was made for the first year's delinquent taxes, instead of last, did not avoid sale.

Tax sale was not void, because made for delinquent taxes for first fiscal year they were delinquent, instead of for the last year of delinquency.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action by the Southern California Bond & Finance Corporation against James H. Mathes. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Herbert C. Kelly, of San Diego, and Benjamin Kirby, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hamilton & Lindley, of San Diego, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendant in an action to quiet title to lots 44 and 45 in block 192 of the City Heights Tract, a subdivision of land situate within the city of San Diego. For several years prior to June 30, 1924, the lots in question belonged to one L. S. Everts, and commencing in the year 1918 he purposely allowed the taxes thereon to become and remain delinquent until June 30, 1924, when the lots were sold at tax sale by the tax collector of San Diego county for the delinquent taxes due for the fiscal year 1918-1919, at which sale respondent became the purchaser. Within the statutory time, prior to the tax sale, Everts received by registered mail from Herbert S. Croghan, the tax collector of said county, the printed form of notice of sale required to be given by the tax collector pursuant to the provisions of section 3771a of the Political Code; and immediately upon the receipt of said notice Everts mailed to the tax collector a reply, written on the reverse side of said notice, as follows:

"Mr. Herbert Croghan—Dear Herb: Thanks for the notice. When I charged these lots off my books several years ago, I did so because I did not feel they were worth the extra cost to me for paving, grading, etc., and I still feel the same way about it. Here's hoping that the party who gets them has a rabbit's foot. Sincerely, Leslie Everts."

Following the tax sale and on July 10, 1924, the tax collector executed and delivered to respondent a tax deed in due form, and thereafter, to wit, on July 17, 1924, Everts and his wife executed and delivered to the appellant, Southern California Bond & Finance Corporation, a quitclaim deed to said property, which constitutes appellant's ground of title.

In an opinion rendered by the trial court it was indicated that there were irregularities "with reference to the amount computed as the tax and penalty" and that there was "also a question with reference to the service of the notice of sale," which rendered the tax proceedings faulty; but the court held that, by virtue of said letter from Everts to the tax collector, neither Everts nor his grantee were in a position to "attack the tax sale for these irregularities," and accordingly directed that judgment be given for respondent. There were no findings made as to the asserted irregularities above mentioned, nor upon the questions of waiver or estoppel, the court having found generally that plaintiff was not the owner of the property nor entitled to the possession thereof, and judgment was entered in conformity with such general findings.

[1] Upon publishing the delinquent list, the tax collector is required by section 3770 of the Political Code to "collect, in addition to the taxes due on the delinquent list, together with the penalties for delinquency, fifty cents on each lot, piece, or tract of land separately assessed * * * which shall be paid to the county and be placed to the credit of the salary fund"; and pursuant to the provisions of said section the tax collector in the present case entered a charge of $1 against the two lots. The main contention appellant makes against the validity of the tax proceedings herein is that, if the assessment of said lots as entered upon the assessment roll be construed as a single assessment of the two lots, then the sale was void, because an overcharge of 50 cents was made on such single assessment, citing Rimmer v. Hotchkiss, 162 Cal. 385, 123 P. 256, Hall v. Park Bank, 165 Cal. 356, 132 P. 452, and Warden v. Broome, 9 Cal. App. 172, 98 P. 252; and that, on the other hand, if it be held that the lots were separately assessed, thereby justifying the added charge of $1 under said section 3770, then the sale was irregular, because, as appellant claims, the lots were not afterwards separately advertised and sold, citing Knox v. Higby, 76 Cal. 264, 18 P. 381; and Stege v. City of Richmond, 194 Cal. 305, 228 P. 461.

In our opinion, the entries made in the assessment roll show beyond question that the lots were separately assessed, because they were separately described and a valuation of $70 was placed against each lot, and the entries made in the delinquent tax roll were identical with those made in the assessment roll. Therefore, the lots being separately assessed, the tax collector was justified, under the provisions of section 3770 of the Political Code in collecting, in addition to the taxes shown to be due on the delinquent list, together with the penalties for delinquency, 50 cents for each lot.

[2] Regarding the second question, as to whether there was any irregularity in the publication of the delinquent list, section 3764 of the said Code, as it existed in 1919 at the time of the delinquency herein, provided that:

"The tax collector must publish the delinquent list which must contain the name of the persons and a description of the property delinquent and the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs due, opposite each name and description."

In the published delinquent list for the fiscal year 1918-1919, the listing of property in question was made as follows:

Number.	Name and Description.	Taxes, Penalties, Costs.
7640	Everts, L. S.—In city of East San Diego, in City Heights, lots 44 and 45, block 192.....	$5.49

And in the addenda to the published delinquent list for the fiscal year 1923-1924, said property was listed as follows:

No.	To Whom Assessed and Description of Property.	Least Acceptable Bid.
1357	Everts, L. S.—In city of East San Diego, City Heights, lots 44 and 45, block 192.....	$5.49

It would appear, therefore, that all of the legal requirements of the statute were complied with; the published delinquent list having contained the name of the owner, and description of the property delinquent, and the amount of the taxes, penalties, and costs due thereon. Appellant contends, however, that in the preparation and publication of the delinquent list the tax collector should have departed from the form of the entries made in the assessment roll and in the delinquent roll, and segregated said lots and advertised them separately, with the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs due on each lot set opposite the description thereof. But our attention has been called to no statute or decision requiring or authorizing this to be done, and in the absence of such authorization the tax collector would have no right to do so. Nor do we believe that such action on his part is contemplated by the statute, because, in view of the innumerable subdivisions of land in the state containing their countless numbers of lots, which are being assessed and taxed in the identical manner here followed, such segregation and advertisement on the part of the tax collector would be not only impracticable, but would result in the publication of a delinquent list of endless length.

Moreover, in order to carry out the scheme provided by the law that each piece of property separately assessed shall bear and pay its own taxes and penalties, such segregation and advertisement which appellant contends should be made is wholly unnecessary, because section 3747 of said Code especially provides that "the taxes on any particular lot, piece, or parcel of land contained in any assessment may be paid separately from the whole assessment, *if [as here] such lot, piece, or parcel has a separate valuation on the assessment roll * * " (italics ours), and that, when so paid, "the tax collector shall make an entry on the margin of the assessment-book, showing what certain property has been released by the payment of the taxes as herein provided, together with the amounts of such taxes separately and specifically set forth," and section 3771a of said Code provides in part that " * * no bid shall be accepted at such [tax] sale for a sum less than the amount of all taxes, penalties and costs due as shown in the advertised list. * * " It is evident, therefore, from the foregoing sections, that each lot in question here, being separately assessed, was subject to separate redemption or sale, without interfering with and independent of the tax lien existing against the other, provided payment was made of the amount of tax and penalties shown by the delinquent roll to be due against that particular lot.

The cases of Knox v. Higby, supra, and Stege v. City of Richmond, supra, cited by appellant, are not controlling in the present case, because there, as the decisions point out, the delinquent rolls and the published lists differed from the assessment roll, and were published in such form as to require the proceeds from the sale of one piece of property, which was separately assessed, to be applied in satisfaction of the tax lien existing against another piece of property, which was also separately assessed. Here the delinquent roll and the published list conformed strictly to the entries made in the assessment roll, and the lots being separately assessed, the exact amount of taxes, penalties, and costs against each lot was readily determinable from the delinquent roll, and therefore, under the provisions of section 3747, each lot became and was subject to separate redemption or sale. For the reasons stated, we conclude that there was no irregularity in the tax proceedings which invalidated the sale.

We are also unable to sustain appellant's claims that there was a variance of 9 cents between the total amount of taxes and penalties shown to be due by the delinquent roll and the total amount shown to be due by the published list. The specific items set forth in the delinquent roll prove that the correct total was $5.49, and this was the amount set forth in the published list. When the total was first entered in the delinquent roll, obviously a mistake of 9 cents was made in addition, the amount inserted being $5.40; but, as the photographic copy of the delinquent roll inserted in the transcript shows, this entry was corrected to read $5.49.

[3] The printed form of notice of sale received by Everts was properly addressed to "L. S. Everts, 727 First Nat'l Bank Bldg. San Diego, Calif.," but the envelope in which it was sent was addressed to "L. S. Eberts," and appellant therefore contends that there was a failure to conform to the requirements of section 3771a of said Code. The point is utterly without merit, for admittedly Everts received the notice within the period of time the same was required to be mailed, and immediately answered it. In the case of Krotzer v. Douglas, 163 Cal. 49, 124 P. 722, cited by appellant, the notice having been improperly addressed did not reach the owner at all; and in the other case cited, Knight v. Hall, 28 Cal. App. 435, 152 P. 952, the notice was not mailed within the statutory period. Neither case is therefore in point.

[4] Appellant further contends that the tax sale was void, because it was made for the delinquent taxes for the fiscal year 1918-1919, the first delinquency, instead of being made for the delinquency of 1923-1924, citing Scott v. Beck (Cal. Sup.) 259 P. 933. But a rehearing was subsequently granted in that case (266 P. 951), and the final decision therein was placed upon different grounds. Therefore the decision which was set aside cannot be taken as authority.

Concluding, as we do, that the proceedings upon which the tax sale herein was based were not void, it is unnecessary to consider or determine the legal effect of the letter from Everts to the tax collector, written on the back of the notice of sale.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

On Application for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Appellant petitions for a rehearing, again urging substantially the same grounds heretofore relied upon for reversal, together with the additional ground that the decision herein is in conflict with one rendered about the same time by the District Court of Appeal of the Second District, Division 1, in the case of Gottstein v. Kelly et al. (Cal. App.) 269 P. 940. It appears that the decision in that case was filed five days prior to the filing of the one in the present case, and although, as the record in that case discloses, the sole attorney for appellant therein was also leading counsel for appellant in the present case, having been the sole attorney of record for appellant from the institution of the suit to the time appellant's reply was filed, at which time other counsel became associated with him, the petition for rehearing herein conveyed to us for the first time the information that the main point involved in the present appeal was involved also in another appeal before the reviewing court of another district. And in this connection it should be stated, also, that while that case involved several legal points, the position taken by said attorney in that case with reference to the legal point upon which the present appeal was decided was diametrically opposed to the position he took before us. In that case he was claiming title under and sought to sustain a tax deed, and therefore was urging the trial and appellate courts to declare that the asserted irregularity in the tax proceedings relating to the form in which the delinquent tax list was published was no irregularity at all; whereas, in the case before us, he sought to nullify a tax deed founded upon the same asserted irregularity, and was urging that such irregularity was wholly fatal to the tax proceeding.

However, we have examined the decision in that case, and it would appear therefrom that, although the decisive point involved in the case before us was there considered and discussed, it did not prove to be the turning point on that appeal; the court there holding that the erroneous use of the word "percentage" in the publication of the delinquent list, instead of the statutory word "penalties," rendered the proceeding void. There was no such defect in the present case. Therefore, notwithstanding that the opinion in that case contains an expression of views upon the point at issue here, which may be somewhat at variance with the ultimate conclusion we have reached thereon, we are of the opinion that, in view of the different ground upon which that case was decided, the decision therein does not seriously affect the one in the present case.

Moreover, upon examining the record in that case, it becomes evident that the arguments advanced by said attorney in support of the validity of the tax deed in that case tends strongly to fortify the decision we have rendered here, for in that case in dealing with the point involved here he says in his reply brief:

"Respondent criticizes the form of the published delinquent notice, because the amount was not set opposite each description. But section 3764 does not say 'each description,' but 'each name and description.' There being but one name in this instance, there was but one place where any amount was required by this section to be stated. There are several California cases dealing with the form of such published list, and in all of them a substantial compliance with the statutory requirements has been considered sufficient, and the lists have in each instance been liberally construed."

And after quoting from section 3885 of the Political Code and several California cases, he continues:

"No person could be misled by this delinquent list. Any person of ordinary intelligence, examining it, could tell that the amount stated in it was the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs for which the three lots were being sold to the state. Under these circumstances the list performed its function and was sufficient" (citing several California cases).

And in his petition for a rehearing in that case he says:

"The question thus seems to be narrowed down to the discussion of whether it is necessary for the tax collector, in publishing the delinquent list, to specify an amount against each lot separately listed and valued, in cases where several such lots are included in a single assessment, and the computations on the as-assessment roll and delinquent roll are carried out on a single line, and contain only a single gross amount. It is respectfully urged that the duty of the tax collector in publishing the delinquent list is to copy the items in the delinquent roll and assessment roll, rather than to recalculate and divide them into their component items, and that any other rule would be impracticable in operation, would be of no actual benefit to any person, would involve much clerical labor, and would undoubtedly result in many mistakes and discrepancies, and thus needlessly hinder the state in its attempt to collect its just dues."

As indicated, we find no reason to recede from the conclusion we have reached in the case before us, and believing, as we do, that there is no merit in the other points raised by appellant, including the one that the recitals in the tax deed render it void, the petition for rehearing herein is denied.

KAGE v. HASS et al. (Civ. 6437.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 20, 1928.

1. Venue $\S$ 59—Change of venue is properly denied, where defendant, residing in county where action was commenced, does not join in motion.

A motion for a change of venue, is properly denied, where one of defendants, whose residence is in the county where the action was commenced, is a proper party to the action, and does not join in the motion.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 912—On appeal from order denying change of venue, appellate court must assume trial court found defendant not joining in motion was resident of county.

In support of order denying defendant's motion for a change of venue, appellate court must assume that trial court found, on conflicting evidence, that defendant not joining in the motion was a resident of the county in which action was brought, and under such circumstances trial court's judgment will not be disturbed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Henry Kage against Joseph Hass and another. From an order denying his motion for a change of venue, the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Theodore L. Breslauer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ralph Booth McAbee, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant Isenberg to recover a judgment for money loaned. He filed his complaint May 7, 1927. The defendant Isenberg appeared and filed a demurrer June 13, 1927. Thereafter, on August 26, 1927, pursuant to his request, the plaintiff was granted permission to file an amended complaint. The amended complaint was so framed that it pleaded a cause of action against the defendant Isenberg and the defendant Joseph Hass as individuals, and against the two as copartners. Later an alias summons issued against the defendant Joseph Hass. On October 5, 1927, the defendant Isenberg appeared and filed a demurrer to the amended complaint. On November 14, 1927, the defendant Joseph Hass appeared and filed a demurrer to the amended complaint, a notice of motion to change the place of trial from the city and county of San Francisco to the county of Los Angeles, an affidavit in support of his motion, and a demand that the change be made. The motion for change of venue was made solely by the defendant Joseph Hass, and was not joined in by the defendant Isenberg. The motion for a change of venue was denied, and the defendant Hass has appealed from the order.

[1] A motion for a change of venue is properly denied, where one of the defendants, whose residence is in the county where the action was commenced is a proper party to the action and does not join in the motion. Paxton v. Paxton, 150 Cal. 667, 89 P. 1083. We do not understand that the defendant questions that rule, but he contends that the evidence in the record shows that both defendants Isenberg and Hass resided in Los Angeles. We think he is mistaken as to the facts. In his notice of motion the defendant Hass stated:

"That said motion will be based upon all the papers, files, and records in this cause, and upon the affidavit of the defendant Joseph Hass served herewith, and said defendant's demand for change of place of trial, also served herewith, and upon this notice."

Nothing to the contrary appearing in the record, we may assume the motion was based on the papers enumerated in the notice of motion. In his affidavit the defendant Hass alleged that both defendants resided in Los Angeles. In the verified amended complaint the plaintiff alleged:

"That the said defendant A. H. Isenberg now is, and at all times herein mentioned has been, a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California."

It therefore appears that the evidence before the trial court was conflicting on the subject as to where the defendant Isenberg resided.

[2] In support of the judgment of the trial court we must assume that the trial court found the fact against the defendant Hass and in favor of the plaintiff. In other words, it must have found that the defendant Isenberg was a resident of the city and county of San Francisco. Under such circumstances on appeal the judgment of the trial court will not be disturbed. Mitchell v. Kim, 42 Cal. App. 111, 183 P. 368.

The order is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CALVERT et al. (Cr. 1046.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 21, 1928.

1. Criminal law § 742(2)—Whether deputy sheriff, testifying to hauling still to defendant's truck, where it was taken away, and to notifying sheriff thereof, was accomplice, held for jury.

In prosecution for possessing still for manufacture of liquor, evidence that deputy sheriff testified to seeing defendant operating still, and hauling equipment, including liquor, to defendant's truck, where it was loaded and taken away, and that deputy informed sheriff what he saw, held, to present jury question whether deputy sheriff was accomplice.

2. Criminal law § 507(4)—Officer, feigning complicity in crime to secure evidence, is not accomplice.

Officer, who feigns complicity in commission of crime for mere purpose of securing evidence on which to prosecute offender, is not accomplice.

3. Criminal law § 824(7)—Failure to instruct jury that witness was accomplice held not error, where testimony clearly showed he was accomplice, and defendants did not request such instruction.

Where witness' testimony showed clearly that he was accomplice to crime of possessing still, so that jury could not have found otherwise, failure of court to instruct jury that witness was accomplice was not error, where record failed to show defendants requested such instruction, and proposed instruction did not contain witness' name, which was inserted after trial.

4. Criminal law § 889—Instruction that jury, returning guilty verdict with recommendation for leniency, had nothing to do with leniency, and directing jury to return verdict without recommendation, held not error.

Where jury found defendants guilty as charged in information, with recommendation for leniency of court, instruction by court that question of leniency was something with which jury had nothing to do, and directing jury to retire for further consideration, and giving them forms of verdict containing no recommendation as to punishment, was not error.

5. Criminal law § 957(3)—Affidavits of jurors, stating they were guilty of misconduct, held properly stricken, where defendants did not contend verdicts were decided by lot (Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 2).

Where counsel for defendants did not contend that verdicts of jurors were decided by lot, court did not err in striking affidavits of some of jurors, in which they stated they were guilty of misconduct in arriving at their verdict, under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 2.

6. Criminal law § 956(11)—Counter affidavits, showing telephone conversation by jurors during deliberation did not refer to trial, warranted denial of new trial on ground of misconduct (Pen. Code, § 1128).

Where affidavits were presented that three jurors were permitting during deliberation to telephone to their homes, in violation of Pen. Code, § 1128, counter affidavits, showing telephone conversations did not refer to case or to any matter which could have influenced jurors, was sufficient to warrant denial of motion for new trial on ground of such misconduct.

7. Intoxicating liquors § 203—Information charging unlawful, willful, and felonious possession of still did not fail to state public offense, because not charging still was "knowingly" possessed (Pen. Code, § 7, subds. 1, 5).

Information charging defendants with "unlawfully, willfully, and feloniously" possessing still did not fail to state public offense, because not charging still was "knowingly" possessed, since doing a thing willfully is doing it knowingly, under Pen. Code, § 7, subds. 1, 5, and 4 Words and Phrases, Second Series, "Willful."

8. Intoxicating liquors § 137—Word "still" includes receiver into which distilled liquor is discharged (St. 1927, p. 497).

Under St. 1927, p. 497, prohibiting possession of still for manufacture of liquor, word "still" is used in broader sense, as including receiver into which distilled liquor is discharged.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Still.]

9. Criminal law § 678(1)—Evidence that liquors from separate pots were discharged into single receiver showed possession of one still, not several, and did not require election (St. 1927, p. 497).

In prosecution under information charging possession of still, which referred to complete still, evidence that liquid from two pots or retorts was being discharged into single receiver, and that another incomplete still was nearby, showed but one complete still in possession and control of defendants, under St. 1927, p. 497, and contention that evidence showed that defendants had possession of three stills, constituting three separate offenses, and that district attorney should have been compelled to elect on which he relied for conviction, could not be sustained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Thomas Calvert and others were convicted of possession of a still, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Lindauer & Horan, of Vallejo, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The information charges that on or about March 29, 1928, Thomas Calvert, Arnold Calvert, Carl A. Calvert, Anthony Pimentel, and Frank Smith did "unlawfully, willfully, and feloniously possess and have in their control a still, which was then and there designed, used, and intended for use in the manufacture of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes, to wit, whisky, sometimes called 'jackass brandy,' then and there containing one-half of 1 per centum and more of alcohol by volume." Pimentel pleaded guilty and was released on probation. The other defendants were tried together. Smith was acquitted, and the three Calverts were found guilty. They moved for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment and the order denying a new trial.

John J. and Frank Alameda are the owners of 140 acres of land near Cordelia, in Solano county. They leased the buildings thereon to a man named Jack Burns for a period covering the time of the alleged offense. About 11 o'clock in the forenoon of March 29, 1928, three peace officers went to the Alameda place, and in an open shed thereon they discovered a still in operation, discharging alcohol into a wash boiler; Pimentel being in the immediate charge of the plant at that time. Parts of another still were later found lying near a creek in the same vicinity. The officers then went to the dwelling house, about 350 feet from the shed, where they found Smith and the three Calverts; Arnold being in bed. It does not appear by what right or authority the defendants were in possession of the premises. Carl said to one of the officers, but not in the presence of the other defendants, that "they were paying money for protection"; that "they were supposed to be tipped off, if they were going to be raided." Thomas made similar statements to another officer. The court instructed the jury that these admissions were evidence only against the defendants who made them.

Pimentel testified that all of the defendants participated in the installation and operation of the still. While this testimony stands uncontradicted, Pimentel was clearly an accomplice. Appellants contend that there is no corroboration of his testimony as against Arnold. Pimentel testified that the defendants operated the plant on the Alameda place during January, 1928, and then moved it to a place above Boyes Springs, in Sonoma county, where they operated it for a time, and thereafter moved it back to the Alameda place, where "at first we * * * were going to set them down in the creek, but the flood came and washed it away," and that two of the stills were in operation in the shed at the time the officers came, and "the third still was down the creek."

Eugene Potterton, a deputy sheriff of Napa county, testified that about the middle of January, 1928, he saw Arnold Calvert "operating the still" on the Alameda place; that he saw the plant in operation there several times during that month; that in the latter part of January or the 1st of February he (Potterton) hauled the equipment and several barrels of liquor down to the road where they were loaded on defendants' truck and taken away; that "around the middle of March" Carl A. Calvert and Pimentel returned to witness' place with a truck on which "they had a box of groceries * * * in the cab of it," and "then they had a lot of stuff covered with canvas that I did not see"; that they left the truck there for three days, and then took it away; that at the time he hauled the equipment down to the road he was a deputy sheriff of Napa county; that he did not "at any time tell any of the officers of the law that there were stills in operation" on the Alameda place, or "that the Calverts were running a still up on the Alameda place." The witness later testified as follows:

"Q. Who is the sheriff whom you served? A. Steckter now. * * *

"Q. Did you communicate to him what you saw on the ranch? A. I did.

"Q. When? A. December, January, March.

"Q. Not in February? A. It was the early part of February, if I did."

[1, 2] Counsel for defendants requested the court to instruct the jury that "the witness Potterton is an accomplice as to the crime charged against the defendants." The court refused to give the proposed instruction, but instructed the jury that, if "Potterton aided, assisted, abetted, or encouraged" the commission of the alleged crime, he "was an accomplice within the meaning of the law, and you cannot convict the defendant upon his testimony alone, unless it is corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendants with the commission of the offense, and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof," and that the testimony of an accomplice "cannot be corroborated by the testimony of another accomplice." An instruction to the same effect was given relative to the testimony of Pimentel.

In his argument to the jury, the district attorney contended that the witness Potterton was not an accomplice, but that his acts were merely those of an officer in an honest effort to secure evidence of the offenses being committed by the defendants. Under the evidence, the question whether Potterton was an accomplice was exclusively for the jury to determine. People v. Spaulding, 81 Cal.

App. 615, 618, 254 P. 614; People v. Swoape, 75 Cal. App. 404, 413, 242 P. 1067; People v. Demera, 64 Cal. App. 121, 123, 220 P. 673. An officer who feigns complicity in the commission of a crime for the mere purpose of securing evidence upon which to prosecute the offender is not an accomplice. People v. Spaulding, supra; People v. Lanzit, 70 Cal. App. 498, 509, 233 P. 816; People v. Heusers, 58 Cal. App. 103, 104, 207 P. 908; People v. Keseling, 35 Cal. App. 501, 504, 170 P. 627.

[3] Appellants contend that the court should have instructed the jury that Pimentel was an accomplice. The record fails to show that the defendants requested the court to give such an instruction. The proposed instruction, which appellants contend should have been given, did not contain Pimentel's name; but his name was inserted therein after the trial. Pimentel's own testimony shows so clearly and certainly that he was an accomplice that no juror could have had any doubt that he was such. It was shown at the trial that he had entered a plea of guilty to the very charge upon which the other defendants were being tried. Since the only possible inference to be drawn from the evidence is that he was an accomplice, and it is inconceivable that the jury did not so find, the rights of the other defendants were not prejudiced by the failure to instruct that he was an accomplice. People v. McDermott, 75 Cal. App. 718, 720, 243 P. 485.

[4] The jury found the appellants "guilty as charged in the information, with recommendation for leniency of the court." The court stated that "the leniency of the court is something with which the jury have nothing to do," and directed the jury to retire for further consideration of the case, giving them forms of verdict containing no recommendation as to punishment. Thereafter the jury returned a verdict finding the appellants guilty as charged in the information. There was no error in the court's action in this regard. People v. Pyler (Cal. App.) 267 P. 370.

[5] In support of their motion for a new trial, appellants filed the affidavits of some of the jurors in which they stated they were guilty of misconduct in arriving at their verdict. The court made an order striking out these affidavits. Counsel for appellants say:

"Counsel does not contend that the verdicts were decided by lot. But we do contend that they were decided by means other than a fair expression of opinion on the part of all the jurors."

In People v. Reid, 195 Cal. 249, 261, 232 P. 457, 462 (36 A. L. R. 1435), it is said:

"Upon well-grounded considerations of public policy, jurors are legally disabled to impeach their verdict by any means, whether it be by affidavit, or by testimony, or by extrajudicial statements. * * * The only exception * * * is in the case of so-called 'chance verdicts.' Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 2."

[6] Affidavits were presented to the effect that three of the jurors were permitted, during their deliberations, to telephone to their homes. This was in direct violation of the provisions of section 1128 of the Penal Code. Counter affidavits, however, show that in these telephone conversations no reference was made to the case on trial, or to any matter which could have influenced any of the jurors. The counter showing was sufficient to warrant the denial of the motion for a new trial on the ground of such misconduct. People v. Cord, 157 Cal. 562, 571, 108 P. 511; People v. Page (Cal. App.) 260 P. 591; People v. Murphy (Cal. App.) 268 P. 927.

[7] Appellants contend that the information does not state a public offense, "in that it failed to allege that still charged in the information was 'knowingly' possessed." The information charges that the defendants "unlawfully, willfully, and feloniously" possessed the still. "To do a thing willfully is to do it by design with set purpose." People v. Sheldon, 68 Cal. 434, 437, 9 P. 457, 459. To do a thing willfully is to do it knowingly. People v. Swiggy, 69 Cal. App. 574, 581, 232 P. 174; 4 Words and Phrases, Second Series, p. 1304; Pen. Code, § 7, subs. 1 and 5.

[8, 9] Appellants contend that the evidence shows they had possession of three stills, if any, constituting three separate offenses, and that the district attorney should have been required to elect upon which he relied for a conviction. It is true that the witnesses refer to two stills in operation at the time of the arrest, and another incomplete still near the same place. The liquors from what they termed two stills were being discharged into a single receiver, a wash boiler. In discussing the subject of distillation in Cyclopedia Americana it is said:

"The essential features in a simple distillatory apparatus are: (1) The still, pot, or retort, that is, the receptacle for the material to be distilled. * * * (2) The condenser, by means of which the distillates are condensed. (3) The receiver, which collects the products of distillation in a liquid state."

Webster's New International Dictionary defines a still as follows:

"A vessel, boiler, or copper used in distilling liquids, esp. alcoholic liquors; a retort. Sometimes, the whole apparatus used in vaporization and condensation."

A still, in the broader meaning, includes the receiver into which the distilled liquor is discharged, as clearly appears from the illustration accompanying the definition. It is clear that the word "still" is used in this broader sense in the statute under which the defendants were prosecuted. It makes it unlawful to knowingly have the possession or control of "any still, still worm, still cap, still condenser or stilling device of any kind, designed, used or intended for use in the manufacture or production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes," with stated exceptions not material here. Stats. 1927, p. 497. The information charges that the defendants had the possession and control of "a still," meaning a complete still, not merely some of the parts thereof. The evidence shows that there was but one receiver, the wash boiler, and therefore, but one complete still, in the possession and control of the defendants. In view of this conclusion, it is unnecessary to discuss the question whether the possession and control of two or more stills in a single room, operated as a single plant, would constitute more than one crime. What the appellants term three stills are so intimately connected together by the evidence that, if they were in possession of one, they were in possession of all of them.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

BALLOS v. NATURAL. (Civ. 6269.)★

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 22, 1928.

1. Trial $\S$ 194(16)—Instruction that automobile driver's recklessness is not excused by not knowing others were on highway held not erroneous as charging upon facts.

Instruction that automobile driver cannot assume road is clear, and fact that he does not so know is no excuse for conduct that would have amounted to recklessness had he known of presence of others on road, held not erroneous as a charge upon the facts.

2. Automobiles $\S$ 246(2, 3)—Instruction that automobile driver cannot assume road clear, and that recklessness is not excused by not knowing others were thereon, held not misleading.

Instruction that automobile driver cannot assume road is clear, and fact that he does not so know is no excuse for conduct that would have amounted to recklessness had he known of presence of others thereon, held not misleading.

3. Automobiles $\S$ 160(1)—It is automobile driver's duty to anticipate presence of pedestrians on highway.

It is the duty of the driver of an automobile to anticipate the presence of pedestrians on the highway.

4. Automobiles $\S$ 246(4)—Expression "proper care," in instruction setting out automobile driver's duty, held not misleading.

Use of expression "proper care" in instruction to effect that automobile driver must have machine under such control as will enable him to avoid collision with other persons using proper care and caution, held not misleading; such phrase meaning only that degree of care which a prudent man should use under like circumstances.

5. Trial $\S$ 243—Instruction stating care pedestrians should use, held not conflicting with instructions stating care vehicle drivers should exercise, when all instructions are read together.

Plaintiff's instruction that law does not require pedestrians using highway to look in every direction every instant of progress, but only to use such caution as a prudent person would use under like circumstances, held not, when read with other instructions, to conflict with defendant's instruction that pedestrians as well as drivers of automobiles using highway must exercise constant care and caution commensurate with special hazards, exercising ordinary care at all times, and not to assume that street is clear.

6. Trial $\S$ 296(3)—Instruction that motor vehicle operator must always have machine under control, avoiding collisions with others, held not erroneous, where read with other instructions.

Instruction that it is duty of operator of a motor vehicle to always keep machine under control so as to avoid collisions with pedestrians and other persons using the highway held not erroneous as prescribing a higher degree of care than required by law, when read together with other instructions on which it was dependent.

7. Trial $\S$ 140(2)—It was for jury to determine weight to give plaintiff's testimony on second trial, in view of contradictory testimony at first trial.

Where action to recover for personal injuries received in automobile collision was twice tried, held it was for the jury to determine what weight would be given to plaintiff's testimony, in view of his contradictory testimony at the first trial.

8. Trial $\S$ 90—No motion being made to strike evidence apparently admissible, when contrary is shown, objection to its admissibility is deemed waived.

Where evidence is apparently admissible, and no motion is made to strike it when the contrary is shown, an objection to its admissibility is deemed to have been waived.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Henry Ballos against Don Natural. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. M. Abbott, K. W. Cannon, and J. E. Reardon, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Keyes & Erskine, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. The plaintiff, while a pedestrian crossing Third street in the city and county of San Francisco at its intersection with Thornton avenue, was injured by an automobile operated by the defendant. The injuries were found by a jury to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant, who appeals from a judgment for damages entered upon the verdict.

It is claimed that certain instructions given the jury were prejudicially erroneous, and that the verdict on the issue of contributory negligence is unsupported.

[1, 2] The jury, at the request of the plaintiff was instructed that—

"The operator of a motor vehicle has no right to assume that a road is clear, but must under all circumstances and at all times be vigilant, and must anticipate and expect the presence of others. Accordingly, the fact that the operator of the motor vehicle did not know that any one was on the highway is no excuse for conduct which would have amounted to recklessness if he had known that another person or vehicle was on the highway."

It is contended that the instruction charged with respect to matters of fact, assumed facts not proven, and incorrectly stated the law as to the duty of the operator of a motor vehicle.

[3, 4] The record discloses no evidence that the defendant had knowledge of conditions on the highway, but the instruction reasonably construed was but the declaration of a rule of law and not a charge upon the facts, and, in view of the record, was not misleading, nor could it have been misunderstood by the jury. Furthermore, the trial court was careful to instruct the jury that—

"In considering the instructions you will understand that the court does not assume the existence of any facts for, as stated, you are the sole and exclusive judges of the facts."

The jury was also instructed that—

"The operator of an automobile is not necessarily exempt from liability for injuries occurring in a public street or highway by showing simply that at the time of the accident he was running at a rate of speed allowed by law. He still remains bound to anticipate that he may meet persons at any point on the street or highway, and he must, in order to avoid the charge of negligence, keep a proper lookout for them and keep his machine under such control as will enable him to avoid a collision with other persons using proper care and caution, and, if the situation requires it, he must slow up and stop."

It is urged by the defendant that this, with the first instruction quoted, placed upon the automobile driver the duty to exercise a higher degree of care than that which the law requires, and that the use of the expression "proper care" was misleading.

We cannot agree with this contention. It is the duty of the driver of an automobile to anticipate the presence of pedestrians on the highway (Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A. L. R. 1027), and each of the instructions criticized was approved in Nichols v. Nelson, 80 Cal. App. 590, 252 P. 739. Moreover, the jury was elsewhere fully and correctly instructed as to the relative rights of pedestrians and those operating vehicles on the highway. As held in the case last cited, the employment of the word "proper" to indicate the care required of a defendant means only the exercise of that degree of care which a prudent man should use under like circumstances, and which is the degree of care which the law imposes on the other. Ramsbottom v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 138 N. C. 38, 50 S. E. 448; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Flood, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 197, 79 S. W. 1106. As the court said:

"Where a court has used words or phrases in their customary and conventional sense, no complaint can be made, * * * the jury are presumed to possess ordinary intelligence and to understand the meaning and use of words in their common and ordinary application"—citing Hutson v. Southern California Ry., 150 Cal. 701, 89 P. 1093.

As stated, the jury was fully and fairly instructed in the present case as to the degree of care required of both parties; and, where this has been done, a subsequent charge to find for one or other of the parties if proper care had not been exercised is not prejudicial. Nichols v. Nelson, supra; St. Louis S. W. R. v. Parks, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 480, 90 S. W. 343.

[5] The following instruction was also given at the request of the plaintiff:

"You are further instructed that the law does not require of a pedestrian that he must look in every direction every instant of his progress. It does require that he must look at least in those directions from which danger may be easily apprehended as often and as carefully as would a person of ordinary prudence under like circumstances."

Subsequently there were given two instructions offered by the defendant, which he claims were in conflict with the above, these being as follows:

"In the exercise of a common right to the use of the public highways, all persons, pedestrians as well as drivers of automobiles, using the same, must exercise constant care and caution for the conservation of their correlative rights commensurate with the special hazard which is peculiar to and nowadays is ever present in the use of the public highways."

And "the law imposed upon the plaintiff, Henry Ballos, the duty of exercising ordinary care at all times. It was his duty to exercise his faculties of sight and hearing to ascertain whether an automobile was approaching immediately before going or attempting to go in front thereof. If he went or attempted to go in front of said automobile, and if at that time he could, by exercising his senses of sight and hearing, with ordinary care have ascertained the approach of said automobile and its proximity to the point at which he was crossing, and if he failed to do so, and if his failure to do so was a proximate cause of his injuries, then and in that event the plaintiff cannot recover, and your verdict must be in favor of the defendant, Don Natural."

The jury was further instructed that—

"A pedestrian has no right to assume that a street is clear, but under all circumstances and at all times he must be vigilant and must anticipate the presence of vehicles traveling in the street."

The above instructions create no conflict in any material particular. Read together, they fairly state the law; and, as the jury was admonished by the court not to select a single sentence or a single instruction and base their verdict solely upon that, and told that they were to consider the instructions together as a whole, it cannot reasonably be said that the jury was led to believe that one measure of care should be applied to pedestrians and another to drivers of vehicles.

[6] The jury was also instructed that—

"It is part of the duty of the operator of a motor vehicle to keep his machine always under control so as to avoid collisions with pedestrians and other persons using the highway."

As claimed by appellant, it is the duty of a driver to use ordinary care to keep his vehicle under control and to avoid collisions, and, to the extent that a higher degree of care was prescribed, the instruction was erroneous. This instruction, however, did not stand alone, but was preceded and followed by others in which the court fully and correctly stated the degree of care required in the management of vehicles on public streets, thus removing the misleading effect, if any, of the instruction quoted.

It is further contended that the court by its instructions taken as a whole unduly enlarged the duties and obligations of the defendant and minimized those of the plaintiff. A reading of the instructions negatives this contention, and shows that the charge as a whole fully and fairly stated the law of the case.

[7] The action was twice tried, and there appears some contradiction between the testimony of the plaintiff given at the first trial and that given by him at the second on the issue of contributory negligence. Appellant contends that the plaintiff should be bound by that given on the first trial of the action, which testimony, it is claimed, shows that he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

The jury were the exclusive judges of the credibility of the plaintiff, and it was for them to determine, in view of the contradictory testimony given at the first trial, the extent to which his testimony was entitled to belief. Code Civ. Proc. § 1847; Welch v. Alcott, 185 Cal. 732, 198 P. 626; Withers v. Massengill, 148 Cal. 769, 84 P. 153; People v. Raich, 26 Cal. App. 286, 146 P. 907; People v. Chesney, 72 Cal. App. 570, 237 P. 793.

[8] Appellant in his closing brief claims that the admission of evidence of his acts and oral statements shortly after the accident was prejudicially erroneous. Before this testimony was admitted, there was introduced a writing signed by him, stating that he knew at the time of the collision that some person had been struck by his automobile; that the occurrence caused him to faint, and the machine after the collision continued on its course for some distance; that after his recovery he left the automobile in the street and went to the house of a friend, who later accompanied him to the police station. The statement was objected to on the ground that it was not shown to have been voluntarily made, whereupon the plaintiff introduced evidence tending to prove the fact. The oral statements in question were testified to by the person who accompanied him to the police station and by a police officer. According to the testimony of the former, appellant came to his house shortly after the accident and requested assistance in removing his automobile from the street. The witness, accompanied by appellant, thereupon drove in an automobile to the place where appellant's car had been left, but, not finding it, appellant then requested to be taken home. After several questions by the witness, appellant admitted that some person had been struck by his automobile, whereupon the witness urged him to report the matter to the police, which was accordingly done. The officer testified to a statement made by appellant after his arrival at the police station in which he made the same admission, stating further, according to the officer, that he "kept on going, and that his machine stopped, and, when he came to himself, he took a street car down to a friend of his on Leland avenue."

It is urged that evidence of appellant's conduct after the accident, in particular his visit to the police station and his statement to the officer that after the accident he kept on going, was incompetent. In support of this contention, appellant cites Henderson v. Northam, 176 Cal. 493, 168 P. 1044, where it is held that, while the failure to perform a duty imposed by statute is evidence of negligence, the act or omission in order to warrant a recovery must have contributed to the injury, and that the failure to stop after the accident, since it in no wise contributed to the injury, was not a subject for consideration by the jury. This rule, however, has no application here, as the testimony of the witness was offered for another purpose. Appellant having denied in his answer that his automobile struck the plaintiff, and the fact not having been admitted at the trial, it was incumbent upon plaintiff to prove it. The testimony was admitted for this purpose; but appellant contends that his written statement was sufficient proof of the fact, and that other evidence thereof was improper. At the trial he also objected, on the ground of its irrelevancy, to any evidence of his acts or statements after the accident, with the exception of the writing mentioned. Although the admissions contained in his written statement were not denied by appellant, who offered no evidence at the trial other than the deposition of the plaintiff, the latter was not apprised of his intention in that regard, and was in any event entitled to introduce any competent evidence tending to prove a material issue in the case. The greater portion, if not all, of the testimony of the two witnesses was relevant to the issue mentioned, and, if parts were inadmissible, the same should have been called to the attention of the court by an objection and a motion to strike, specifying the portions of the testimony to which objection was made. Shatto v. Crocker, 87 Cal. 630, 25 P. 921; Hellman v. McWilliams, 70 Cal. 449, 11 P. 659. This appellant failed to do, relying on his general objection to the admissibility of the testimony as a whole. Where evidence is apparently admissible, and no motion is made to strike it when the contrary is shown, an objection to its admissibility is deemed to have been waived. City of Venice v. Short Line Beach Land Co., 180 Cal. 447, 453, 181 P. 658; People v. Lawrence, 143 Cal. 148, 76 P. 893, 68 L. R. A. 193; De Bock v. De Bock, 43 Cal. App. 283, 299, 184 P. 890.

After a review of the whole record, including the evidence, we are satisfied that the conclusions of the jury on all the issues were fully supported, and that no error is shown which would justify a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

KOLBERG v. SHERWIN-WILLIAMS CO.★
(Civ. 6324.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 23, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 22, 1928.

I. Fraud ⚡(1)—Statement of manufacturer's agents that spray compound would not injure plaintiff's orchard, and had been used in same vicinity without injury, held one of fact.

In an action to recover for injuries to orange orchard caused by use of product as a spray to destroy scale on the trees, statement by manufacturer's agents that the compound would destroy the pests without injury to the trees, leaves, or fruit, and had been used on other orange groves in same vicinity without injury, held one of fact, and not merely an opinion.

2. Negligence ⚡27—Manufacturer of inherently dangerous spray compound, sold through middleman to plaintiff, held liable for injuries to orange orchard.

Manufacturer of compound inherently dangerous to orange trees held liable to plaintiff for injuries to orchard from use of such compound purchased through a middleman.

3. Negligence ⚡27—Manufacturer could not claim benefits of dealer's contract with consumer whereby dealer was not liable for injuries from use of compound for spraying orchard.

Defendant manufacturer could not claim benefits of contract executed by its dealer, with plaintiff, whereby the dealer was agreed not to be liable for any injury from plaintiff's use on orange orchard of compound manufactured by defendant to destroy scale on trees.

4. Damages ⚡139—$1,900 for loss to orange crop from spraying trees with defendant's compound, sale bringing $1,981 less than average, held not excessive.

Damages of $1,900 for loss to plaintiff's orange crop from use of spray compound manufactured by defendant, where evidence showed plaintiff received from sale of 2,340 boxes of oranges picked from sprayed trees $1,981 less than average price received from oranges picked from trees not sprayed, and that 700 boxes which fell to ground from sprayed trees were total loss, held not excessive.

5. Damages ⚡138—$4,200 for injury to 480 orange trees, covering six acres, from using defendant's spray compound, or $700 per acre, held not excessive.

Damage of $4,200 for injury to orchard from use of defendant's compound for spraying trees, where evidence showed that 480 trees, covering six acres, were injured, and the trial court estimated total damage by allowing $700 an acre, held not excessive.

6. Damages ⚡222—Trial court having found damage to "six acres of orchard and trees thereon," held, that damages awarded covered damage to land, and not to separate trees.

In an action to recover damages for loss and injuries from use on orange orchard of a spray to destroy scale, where trial court, in findings of fact, found "injury and damage to orchard and the trees thereon," and in its conclusions of law found "damage to six acres of orchard," held, that word "orchard" was intended to cover the tract of land planted to orange trees, and that damages were intended to cover damage to the land, and not to separate trees.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Herman Kolberg against the Sherwin-Williams Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John W. Hart and Albert M. Cross, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Head, Wellington, Jacobs & Scovel, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for damages for loss and injury sustained by him from the use upon his orange orchard of a product manufactured and sold by the defendant, known as "Citromulsion," and used for the purpose of spraying orange and other citrus trees to destroy scale. Plaintiff had judgment for $6,100, from which the defendant has appealed on a bill of exceptions.

The manufactured article was sold by the agents of defendant to the plaintiff through a dealer under an agreement that the dealer would apply the spray to plaintiff's orange trees under the direction and control of defendant's agents. The spray was applied under this arrangement, and resulted in serious injury to the trees sprayed, and in loss of a large portion of the crop of oranges. Plaintiff sued upon the theory that the manufactured article was inherently dangerous to citrus fruit trees, that this fact was known to the defendant, and that the plaintiff was induced to purchase it and have it applied to his trees through the false representations of defendant's agents. The cause was tried before the court sitting without a jury, and the court made findings of fact in accordance with the allegations of the complaint. The burden of appellant's case on appeal is that these findings are not supported by the evidence.

[1] It is argued that there is no evidence to support the finding that "Citromulsion" contained an oil or ingredient that was essentially or inherently dangerous to and destructive of the leaves, wood, and fruit of citrus trees, or the finding that defendant knew it contained any such essentially and inherently dangerous element. The point is wholly without merit, as the evidence is all one way. It is admitted that the compound contained about 73 per cent. of heavy gravity hydrocarbon oil and about 27 per cent. of inert ingredients. The horticultural commissioner of Orange county testified that hydrocarbon oil "is of itself injurious to citrus groves when applied straight—I have seen lots of groves injured by being sprayed with hydrocarbon oil." Other witnesses testified from their experience that this oil was injurious to orange trees; that they had seen orange groves, where it had been used, lose leaves, buds, and fruit. Counsel for appellant really confess the point when they say that:

"It was merely a question of finding the proper dosage under different weather conditions, and conditions of the trees which would do the work of killing the pests with the greatest degree of safety to the trees."

It might as well be said that arsenic is not in itself a dangerous poison because, if taken in a specially small dose, it would not cause injury. The matter of dosage was not an issue in the case. The finding under attack was responsive to the allegations of the complaint that the defendant's agents falsely and fraudulently represented to plaintiff that the compound would destroy the pests without injury to the orange trees, or to the leaves, wood, or fruit, that it had been used on a number of other orange groves in the vicinity without any injurious effects, and that, though it would destroy the scale, it would not injure the orange trees, or the growth, buds, or fruit thereon. These representations were found to be untrue—that, in fact, the compound had been used on a number of other orange groves, and had resulted in serious damage to the trees, causing the leaves, buds, and fruit to fall.

The finding that the defendant knew of the injurious qualities of the compound is supported by the evidence that their agents had been actively engaged in spraying other orange groves, and that their attention had been called to the damage done within a month prior to the time these representations were made to the plaintiff. Counsel for defendant concede that the injurious qualities of the spray were well known to the defendant, and that these activities in other groves were in the line of "experiments," for the purpose of determining how far the oil should be diluted to make it effective in destroying the scale without injury to the trees. But they argue that the representations that the compound would not injure the orange trees were mere expressions of opinion and not actionable. The representations were based upon statements of what had occurred when the spray was used on other orange groves in the vicinity, "and it is well established that a statement of what might otherwise be an opinion, if based on alleged facts, is a statement of fact and not a statement merely of an opinion." French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, 586, 217 P. 515, 517; Tracy v. Smith, 175 Cal. 161, 165, 165 P. 535.

Here the representations made to plaintiff were that the spray would kill the scale and that it would not injure the trees or the fruit or the buds. These representations were supplemented by the positive statement that the spray had been used in other groves with "good results" and without injury. The fact is that in some of these "experiments" in other groves defendant's compound was used diluted as follows: 4 per cent. (4 gallons of citromulsion to 100 gallons of water); 5 per cent., with 20 pounds of sulphur added; 6 per cent.; and 8 per cent. The results were: With the 4 per cent. mixture, 75 per cent. defoliation; with the 5 per cent. mixture, 25 per cent. defoliation; with the 6 per cent. mixture, 80 per cent. defoliation; and with the 8 per cent. mixture, 90 per cent. defoliation. These facts were not disclosed to plaintiff, but, with full knowledge of the disastrous results of these experiments, the defendant's agents represented that the spray had been used with "good results," and that it would not injure the trees, the foliage, or the fruit.

[2, 3] The defendant directed its agents to solicit persons to purchase citromulsion from Chidlaw Bros. and to have the same applied by Chidlaw Bros. under the direction of defendant's agents. When the sale was made to plaintiff, he signed with Chidlaw Bros. a written order for a barrel of the spray, under which it was agreed that Chidlaw Bros. assumed no responsibility for any injury that might occur from the use of the spray. This contract was set up as a special defense in the answer, wherein the defendant alleged that it was not a party to the contract. The trial court found this to be true. The defendant now argues that Chidlaw Bros. were agents of the defendant, and that their exemption from liability inured to the benefit of defendant. At the trial the defendant took the position that Chidlaw Bros. were not its agents, but dealers purchasing its product. The liability of the defendant rests upon the sound rule that a manufacturer or seller of an article inherently dangerous to life or property is liable for injuries to the ultimate consumer who has purchased through a middleman. 17 A. L. R. 674, 683. Here the written contract expressly exempted the middleman from liability. It did not pretend to cover the liability of the defendant, which was not a party to the contract, and had no knowledge of its execution. The rule in this state is clear that a third party cannot claim the benefits of a contract executed by others, unless it appears from the contract itself that it was executed for his benefit. Ferguson v. Marsh, 37 Cal. App. 484, 485, 174 P. 678; Wilson v. Shea, 29 Cal. App. 788, 790, 157 P. 543.

[4, 5] The defendant insists that the damages awarded are excessive. The trial court allowed the plaintiff $1,900 as loss to his orange crop for the 1924 season and $4,200 as damage to the orchard. The evidence upon the $1,900 item was that the plaintiff received from 2,340 boxes of oranges picked from sprayed trees the sum of $1,981 less than the average price which he received for oranges picked from trees which had not been sprayed and which were sold at the same time. In addition it was shown that more than 700 boxes had fallen to the ground from the sprayed trees and were a total loss. The evidence would have supported an award greater than that given by the trial court. As to the $4,200 item, the evidence was that 480 trees, covering six acres, were injured and the trial court estimated the total damage by allowing $700 an acre. Plaintiff's evidence would have justified a greater award, while that offered by the defendant showed the damage to be much less. The trial court had the duty of resolving the conflict and we see no error in its finding.

[6] But the defendant argues that the measure of damages adopted by the trial court was on the basis of the damage per tree rather than per acre, and that the damages were therefore allowed for injuries to the trees alone and not for injury to the land. In its findings of fact, the trial court found "injury and damage to his orchard and to the trees thereon in the average sum of $700 an acre on six acres thereof," and, in its conclusions of law, the court found "damage to six acres of his orchard in the sum of $4,200." It is plain that, in both instances, the trial court used the word "orchard" as covering the tract of land planted to orange trees, and that the damages awarded were intended to cover the damage to the land, and not that suffered by the separate trees. The judgment is within the rule of Shearer v. Park Nursery Co., 103 Cal. 415, 420, 37 P. 412, 42 Am. St. Rep. 125, and Truman v. Sutter, etc., Co., 76 Cal. App. 293, 308, 244 P. 923.

Other points raised do not require consideration. We find no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

McCARRON v. GOODWIN, City Manager.*

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 22, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 21, 1928. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 18, 1928.

I. Municipal corporations § 185(1)—Police officer held removable by city manager, for releasing offender from custody without filing complaint or reporting transaction (San Jose City Charter, art. 7, § 53; art. 8, § 57; art. 16, § 112).

Under San Jose City Charter, art. 7, § 53, and article 8, § 57 (St. 1915, p. 1869), providing that appointive officers shall be appointed and removed by city manager, and specifying the appointive officers, police officer held removable by city manager on charges of having released an offender, without filing complaint against him or reporting transaction to his superior officers, as against contention that only penalty which city manager was authorized to inflict was such as civil service commission might have determined, under article 16, § 112, and that, none having been fixed by commission, city manager was without power of removal; violation of civil service provisions not being involved.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨185(4)—Charter requirement that city manager file statement of grounds for removing officer held not to refer to method of removal (San Jose City Charter, art. 8, § 57).

San Jose City Charter, art. 8, § 57 (St. 1915, p. 1869), authorizing city manager to remove any person appointed by him, providing that he must file with council and civil service commission a statement of grounds of removal, does not refer to the method of removal, but provides for a subsequent notice and record of the fact, with reasons therefor.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨185(5)—City manager's power to dismiss police officer held not dependent on proof to any degree of certainty of truth of charges (San Jose City Charter, art. 8, § 57).

Power of city manager to dismiss police officer under San Jose City Charter, art. 8, § 57 (St. 1915, p. 1869), for failing to file complaint against offender released by him, or to report transaction to his superior officers, did not depend on proof to any degree of certainty of the truth of the charges, but it was sufficient that evidence tending to their support was adduced.

4. Pleading ⇨8(9)—Allegation that evidence was insufficient to support finding and order removing police officer held mere legal conclusion.

Allegation, in certiorari petition to review dismissal of police officer that evidence was insufficient to support finding of city manager on charges against petitioner or order of dismissal held mere legal conclusion.

5. Municipal corporations ⇨185(13)—Petition for certiorari to review removal of police officer held insufficient to show that no evidence tending to support charges filed was presented (San Jose City Charter, art. 8, § 57; Code Civ. Proc. § 452).

Petition for certiorari to review removal of police officer by city manager, under San Jose City Charter, art. 8, § 57 (St. 1915, p. 1869), which alleged that, in addition to evidence in support of written charges filed, city manager received evidence of other acts, and erred in finding petitioner guilty of such and other acts, held insufficient, taken as a whole, to show that no evidence tending to support charges filed was presented, even though liberally construed as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 452.

6. Municipal corporations ⇨185(13)—Finding on charges against police officer originally filed, being sufficient to support dismissal, any error in entertaining subsequent charges held not subject to certiorari review (San Jose City Charter, art. 8, § 57).

Where finding of city manager on charges originally filed against police officer was sufficient to support order of dismissal, under San Jose City Charter, art. 8, § 57 (St. 1915, p. 1869), any error in entertaining oral charges subsequently made was not subject to review in certiorari proceeding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Certiorari proceeding by Andrew McCarron against C. B. Goodwin, as City Manager of the City of San Jose, to review an order of defendant removing plaintiff from the position of police officer. From a judgment dismissing the petition, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Owen D. Richardson and William H. Johnson, both of San Jose, for appellant.

Archer Bowden, City Atty., of San Jose, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. Appellant was a police officer of the city of San Jose, from which position he was removed by an order made by respondent, who is the city manager of the municipality. A petition for a writ of certiorari to review the order was filed, and, after having been twice amended, a general demurrer thereto was sustained, without leave to amend further, and from a judgment dismissing the petition the appeal was taken.

[1] The petition alleged that appellant ever since December 29, 1913, had been a patrolman; that on October 26, 1926, J. N. Black, the chief of police of the city, filed charges against him, a copy thereof, together with copies of a notice of hearing, the order of dismissal complained of, and a petition for rehearing with the order denying the same, being annexed to the petition. The charges, as shown by the exhibits, were in substance that an intoxicated automobile driver, who had been placed under arrest by two police officers of the city, was released from custody by petitioner and another officer, without filing a complaint against the offender or reporting the transaction to their superior officers. On November 2, 1926, a copy of the charges, with a notice fixing the time for a public hearing thereon, and stating that appellant would be entitled to the aid of counsel, was served. He appeared at the hearing, and at its conclusion the order of dismissal was made, this being followed by a petition for a rehearing, which was denied.

It is claimed that, neither under the provisions of the charter of the city nor by the proceedings had, as shown by the petition, did respondent have power to dismiss appellant, and that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer. The charter, which was approved by the Legislature of 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 1869), provides that the city council shall appoint the city manager, city clerk, civil service commission, and city planning commission (section 53, art. 7), and by the same section that all other appointive officers shall be appointed and removed by the city manager. Section 57 provides that the city manager "shall appoint the following officers [naming them] and all other officers of the city, subject to the provisions of article 16 of this charter, except where this charter expressly provides otherwise," and, further:

"The city manager may remove any person appointed by him, provided that he must file with the council and the civil service commission a statement of the grounds of the removal and give to the person sought to be removed an opportunity to be heard in his own defense at a public hearing."

Article 16 of the charter prescribes the duties of the civil service commission, divides the civil service of the city into an unclassified and a classified service, and provides that "positions in the classified service shall be filled by the city manager" (section 105) from an eligible list of persons who have passed examinations in accordance with the regulations of the civil service commission. The same article (section 112) of the charter provides that the civil service commission, subject to the approval of the council, shall determine the penalties for the violation of the civil service provisions of the charter.

The position held by appellant, who was appointed thereto before the charter was adopted, was within the classified service as defined by the charter, which provided that:

"All persons in the employ of the city holding positions in the classified service, as established by this charter at the time it takes effect, shall, unless their positions be abolished, retain the same until discharged, reduced, promoted, or transferred in accordance with the terms of this charter." Section 108.

Appellant claims that the only penalty for neglect of duty which the city manager was authorized to inflict was such as the civil service commission might have determined, as provided by section 112, and that, none having been fixed by the commission, respondent, who proceeded under section 57 of the charter, was without the power of removal. It is also claimed that the latter section requires as a condition precedent to such removal that the grounds therefor be filed with the commission before the hearing, it not being alleged, however, that this was not done.

[2] It will be sufficient to say that appellant was not charged with a violation of the civil service provisions of the charter, but with violations of duty as an appointive officer who, under sections 53 and 57, was expressly made subject to removal by the city manager in the manner provided by the last section. Furthermore, it is manifest from a reading of the section that the requirement that a statement of the ground of removal be filed with the council and commission does not refer to the method of removal, but provides for a subsequent notice and record of the fact with the reasons therefor. Bannerman v. Boyle, 160 Cal. 197, 116 P. 732. The proceedings before respondent are contained in the exhibits referred to above. The complaint filed by the chief of police, the substance of which has been stated, together with the notice, show a compliance with the charter requirements, were sufficient to authorize respondent to hear and determine the charges so made, and require no further discussion.

Appellant contends, however, that the allegations of the petition show that no evidence was adduced in support of the charges filed, the only evidence adduced being in support of other and different charges made at the hearing, and that the order of dismissal was based upon the latter charges and was for that reason void. The petition, after alleging the service of a copy of the charges and notice of hearing and appellant's appearance thereat, avers:

That "thereupon said respondent purported to hear said purported charges, and assumed jurisdiction to hear the same and to admit and receive evidence against this petitioner upon other and entirely different charges than said purported charges, of which this petitioner did not have even a pretense of notice, to wit, upon oral, unwritten, unpreferred charges of drinking intoxicating liquors while on duty and in uniform in bootleg joints and on the streets; and petitioner avers that he never at any time herein mentioned had any opportunity to be heard in his own defense against said other or different or any of said charges before said respondent;" that on November 5, 1926, "respondent purported to give and make an order finding your petitioner guilty of said charges preferred in said written charges or said oral charges, a copy of which order is hereunto annexed; * * *" and, further, "that no evidence was offered nor received by said respondent to substantiate or support the said finding or order by said respondent dismissing your petitioner. * * *"

[3-5] Due service of a copy of the charges, with notice of the time fixed for the hearing, being admitted in the petition, the power to dismiss petitioner did not depend upon proof to any degree of certainty of the truth of the charges. It was sufficient that evidence tending to their support be adduced; and to sustain an attack upon the order of dismissal it was necessary to allege a want of such evidence. Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 P. 35. The petition contains no such allegation; its whole tenor being that in addition to evidence in support of the charges filed respondent received evidence of other acts, and, according to the application for rehearing, erred in finding petitioner "guilty of such and other acts." Nor does the last-quoted paragraph of the petition supply the omission or contradict the preceding paragraphs therein; this allegation in form and effect implying that such evidence was received, but alleging the same to be insufficient to support the finding or order. This was but the averment of a legal conclusion (Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 229, 53 P. 651; Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, supra), which tendered no issue and must be disregarded (Callahan v. Broderick, 124 Cal. 80, 56 P. 782).

The further allegation that petitioner was not afforded an opportunity to defend against any of the charges is also contradicted by the allegations above quoted and the fact, which the pleading admits, that he was present at the hearing. The averments of the petition are contradictory and their meaning obscure; and while the allegations of a pleading must be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice (Code Civ. Proc. § 452), those in the present case, taken as a whole, fail to show that no evidence tending to support the charges filed was presented.

[6] Moreover, the exhibits attached thereto, which contain the record of the proceedings before respondent, affirmatively show a hearing on the original charges and that the order of dismissal was based thereon. Whether such an order, resting alone upon additional charges preferred at the time of the hearing, might be sustained, it is unnecessary to determine, as it appears from the order, and is averred in the petition, that petitioner was found guilty upon all the charges. The finding upon those originally filed was sufficient to support the order of dismissal, and any error in entertaining those subsequently made is not subject to review in this proceeding. Paddon v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. App. 3d, 223 P. 91.

We are satisfied that the petition failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and that the demurrer was properly sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. REVENKO. (Cr. 1473.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 25, 1928.

1. Criminal law § 1144(1/2)—On appeal, matters not required to be entered on minutes will be presumed to have complied with law.

On appeal in criminal cases, matters not required by law to be entered on the minutes will be presumed, in absence of anything in the record to the contrary, to have complied with the law.

2. Criminal law § 1144(15)—Informing jury it would be locked up for night if unable to agree on verdict will be presumed on appeal to have been done by bailiff on court's direction (Pen. Code, § 1128).

On appeal in criminal case, act of court bailiff, who had been sworn to take charge of jury, in entering jury room after knocking at door and informing jury that, if it was unable to agree on verdict within 15 minutes, judge would order jury locked up for the night, will be presumed to have been authorized by the trial court, as required by Pen. Code, § 1128, since there is no legal requirement that directions which court may give bailiff after retirement of jury as to its custody and care should be made a matter of record; burden being on defendant to show irregularity in the proceeding.

3. Criminal law § 1163(1)—Burden of showing prejudicial effect of irregularity is on defendant (Pen. Code, § 1404).

Burden of showing prejudicial effect of irregularity, so as to entitle defendant to reversal of judgment of conviction under Pen. Code, § 1404, is on defendant.

4. Criminal law § 1174(7)—Any irregularity in bailiff's informing jury that, if they did not reach verdict in 15 minutes, they would be locked up for night, held not prejudicial (Pen. Code, § 1404).

Any irregularity in act of court bailiff in informing jury that, if they were unable to agree on verdict within 15 minutes, judge would order them locked up for the night, held not prejudicial, and did not require reversal under Pen. Code, § 1404, in absence of showing that communication influenced jury or verdict.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Harold Louderback, Judge.

Ivan Revenko was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Harry S. Whitthorne and Twain Michelsen, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the State.

KNIGHT, J. Appellant was charged with the crime of rape, alleged to have been committed upon a girl 12 years of age, and upon trial was found guilty. Pursuant to the authority granted under section 264 of the Penal Code, the jury recommended that he be punished by imprisonment in the state prison, and he was sentenced accordingly. The appeal is taken from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

No briefs have been filed by either party to the appeal, and only one point was urged by appellant as ground for reversal at the time the appeal was argued orally before this court. It was to the effect that an irregularity occurred after the jury had retired to the jury room to deliberate upon its verdict, which amounted to a violation of section 1128 of the Penal Code. The point was raised by an affidavit made by appellant's counsel and presented to the trial court at the time the motion for new trial was heard, in which it was averred, in substance, that he was advised by several members of the jury that, while the jury was deliberating upon its verdict, and about the hour of 10:45 o'clock p. m., the bailiff of the court, who had been sworn to take charge of the jury, entered the jury room, after knocking at the door, and informed the jury of the hour and that, if it was unable to agree upon a verdict within fifteen minutes, the judge would order the jury locked up for the night.

Said section 1128 of the Penal Code provides in part that, if the jury does not agree upon a verdict before retiring from the courtroom to deliberate, "an officer must be sworn to keep them together in some private and convenient place, and not to permit any person to speak to or communicate with them, nor to do so himself, unless by order of court, or to ask them whether they have agreed upon a verdict; * * *" and appellant concedes that, if the bailiff, in thus communicating with the jury, acted under instructions from the court, there was no irregularity in the proceeding. But, basing his contention upon the assumption that the action of the bailiff was not authorized by the court, he argues that the proceeding constituted a violation of the provisions of said Code section, and therefore entitled him to a new trial, citing People v. Brannigan, 21 Cal. 337.

[1, 2] We find no merit in the point for the following reasons: It is a well-settled rule on appeal in criminal cases that, as to matters not required by law to be entered upon the minutes, it will be presumed, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, that the law has been complied with. People v. Russell, 156 Cal. 450, 105 P. 416; 8 Cal. Jur. 570. In other words, error will not be presumed; it being incumbent upon the appellant to produce a record affirmatively showing the same. 8 Cal. Jur. 569. There is no legal requirement that the directions which the court may give to the bailiff after the retirement of the jury as to its custody and care shall be made a matter of record, because such directions are usually given when court is not in session. Therefore, if appellant desired to avail himself of the point now urged, it was incumbent upon him to make some affirmative showing of record at the time the motion for new trial was heard to establish the fact that the action of the bailiff herein complained of was unauthorized by the court. This he has failed to do, because neither in the affidavit of his counsel nor elsewhere in the record is it indicated that the communication in question was not made under the court's direction. We must presume, therefore, that it was.

[3, 4] Moreover, before a judgment of conviction may be reversed for an irregularity, it must affirmatively appear that the substantial rights of the defendant have been prejudicially affected thereby (Pen. Code, § 1404; People v. Watts, 198 Cal. 776, 247 P. 884; 8 Cal. Jur. 599); and the burden of showing such prejudicial tendency is also upon the defendant. In the present case appellant does not claim, nor is there anything in the record before us from which the fair inference could be drawn, that the communication complained of influenced the jury in the slightest degree in its deliberations or that by reason of the communication its verdict did not truly represent its unanimous conclusion, fairly and honestly arrived at. It would seem, therefore, that, whatever irregularity there may have been in the proceeding, it did not operate to appellant's injury.

The case of People v. Brannigan, supra, cited and relied upon by appellant, is essentially different in its facts from the present one, the reversal there being placed upon the ground that the officer who had been sworn to keep the jury together, in violation of his oath, allowed the members thereof to separate; and furthermore, that case was decided in the year 1863, at which time it was the law of this state that substantial error being shown was presumed to be injurious unless the contrary was made to appear, and no such contrary showing was made; whereas in the present state of the law, before a reversal may be ordered, substantial injury as well as error must be made affirmatively to appear. People v. Merritt, 18 Cal. App. 58, 122 P. 839, 844.

Owing to the nature of the crime involved, and the penalties fixed by law as a punishment for its commission, we have examined the evidence, notwithstanding its sufficiency has not been challenged, and find it to be legally sufficient to sustain the conviction.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

4. Pleading ⚡22—Complaint to quiet title, setting forth deraignment of title and also alleging ownership, held not redundant.

Complaint to quiet title to mining property, which set forth location of mining claim, posting of notices, recording of notices that plaintiffs were citizens of United States, and also alleged that plaintiffs owned property, held not redundant because setting forth deraignment of title in addition to alleging ownership.

5. Quieting title ⚡35(2)—Allegations in complaint to quiet title, setting forth deraignment of title held not to limit or control allegation of ownership.

In action to quiet title to mining property, allegations showing deraignment of title by setting forth location of mining claim, posting of notices, and recording of notices that plaintiffs were citizens of United States, held not to limit or control further allegation that plaintiffs owned property.

6. Appeal and error ⚡1041(5)—Permitting filing of supplemental complaint, if error, held harmless, where matters set forth could have been properly set up by amendment to complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 464; Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Permitting filing of supplemental complaint setting up judgment rendered before action commenced, if error under Code Civ. Appeal from Superior Court, Nevada County; J. B. Landis, Judge.

Action to quiet title to mining property by J. H. Stark and others against Eleonore E. Hoeft, who alleged ownership. From a judgment on the pleadings in favor of plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 260 P. 316.

John T. Hennessy and Lynne Kelly, both of Grass Valley, for appellant.

Dozier, Kimball & Dozier, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In this action, the trial court gave judgment upon the pleadings in favor of the plaintiffs, and the defendant appealed from the judgment. The judgment was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, Plummer, J., writing the opinion. Because of the earnest insistence of appellant, in her petition for a hearing by this court, that the District Court of Appeal had failed to notice certain allegations of her answer, the cause was ordered transferred to this court for further consideration. Upon a careful examination of the entire record, however, we adopt the opinion of the learned justice of the District Court of Appeal heretofore filed herein, as follows:

Appellant filed an application for a United States patent to certain mining ground situate in Washington mining district, Nevada county, state of California, located and known as Lucky Strike and Lucky Strike Extension mining claims. To this application the respondents filed a protest within the time as provided by law. In pursuance of said protest and in compliance with the law relating thereto, the plaintiffs began this action to quiet title to certain mining property claimed by the respondents and included within the exterior boundaries of the mining premises claimed by the appellant under her application for patent as the Lucky Strike and Lucky Strike Extension mining claims. The mining premises or claims alleged to be owned by the respondents bear the following names: Quartz and Asbestos, January Quartz, The Cotton King Asbestos Quartz, Asbestos Quartz, and Lent Asbestos and Gold mining claims. The right of possession to this mining ground appears to have been determined adversely to the appellant on January 2, 1920, by a judgment then entered in the superior court of Nevada county in an action where the respondents and their predecessors in interest were defendants, and where the appellant in this action was plaintiff. After the filing of the complaint in this action and the answer of the defendant thereto, the plaintiffs, by leave of the court, in a pleading called a supplemental complaint, set forth the fact of the entry of the judgment herein referred to, and that all proceedings relating to the settlement of a bill of exceptions to be used on appeal from said judgment, had been dismissed. To this supplemental complaint the appellant filed a motion to strike out the whole thereof, and also certain paragraphs thereof, and also demurred thereto. Appellant's motion was denied, and her demurrer overruled. Thereupon an answer was filed by the appellant to the supplemental complaint. After appellant's answer to respondents' supplemental complaint had been filed in this action, the respondents moved the court, upon notice for judgment on pleadings. The trial court granted judgment upon the pleadings in favor of the respondents herein. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

The supplemental complaint sets forth the fact: That a complaint in this action was filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court of Nevada county, on the 19th day of January, 1924. That at the time of the filing of said complaint there was pending in the above-entitled court the action to which we have herein referred, where the defendant in this action was plaintiff and the plaintiffs in this action were defendants. That said action was numbered 4726. That on the 19th day of January, 1924, there was pending and undetermined a proceeding instituted by the plaintiff therein to obtain a bill of exceptions on her appeal from the judgment theretofore duly rendered and entered in said action No. 4726. That since the filing of the complaint in the above-entitled action, and on the 26th day of February, 1924, an order was duly made and entered in said action No. 4726 that the said proceedings of the said plaintiff to obtain a bill of exceptions on appeal from said judgment in said action No. 4726, be dismissed. That no appeal has been taken from said last-mentioned order dismissing said proceeding for bill of exceptions, and the said order has become, since the filing of the complaint herein, final, and is now a final order. The supplemental complaint then proceeds to allege the entry of judgment in action No. 4726, wherein it is adjudged and decreed that the defendant in this action possessed no title or interest in and to the mining premises described therein which are alleged to be the same premises set forth and described in the defendant's answer in this action, and also set forth the fact that the defendant in this action was not entitled to have her claim or title to said premises quieted as against the plaintiffs in this action, and that the rights of the plaintiffs in this action to said premises are and were superior to the claim of the defendant herein, and that by reason of said judgment the defendant in this action is estopped from claiming or asserting any right, title or interest in or to said mining property.

[1] As stated herein, the defendant interposed a motion to strike out said supplemental complaint, and also certain portions thereof. This motion was denied. The defendant also demurred to said complaint, which demurrer was overruled. Thereupon the appellant herein filed her answer to said supplemental complaint. Upon this appeal it is first argued that the court erred in denying the appellant's motion to strike out the supplemental complaint filed by the respondents, as herein stated. An examination of the record, however, shows that no exception was taken by the defendant to the order of the court denying the defendant's motion to strike, and for this reason, if for no other, the alleged error of the court is not before us for determination.

[2] Section 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure specifies what action on the part of the trial court is excepted to. It may be further stated that the petition for leave to file a supplemental complaint and the order of the court granting leave to file a supplemental complaint, are not set forth in the transcript, and therefore cannot be considered herein. By a reference to section 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which it is not necessary to set forth herein, it will be seen that, in order to avail herself of any error upon the part of the court in relation to the order refusing to strike out the supplemental complaint, an exception should have been taken thereto. This matter was before the court in the case of Davies v. Ramsdell, 40 Cal. App. 424, 181 P. 94. It was there held, quoting from the syllabus:

"An order refusing to strike out a pleading, or a portion thereof, is not an order deemed excepted to under section 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure, therefore, in order that the objection may be urged on appeal, an exception must be taken at the time the decision is made."

[3] Appellant, in relation to the demurrers interposed by her, sets forth the following: Neither the demurrer to the original complaint nor the demurrer to the so-called supplemental complaint, was waived by appellant's filing answers thereto, and the sufficiency of respondents' said pleading is now before this court for determination—citing

Reynolds v. Lincoln, 71 Cal. 183, 9 P. 176, 12 P. 449, to the effect that a demurrer is not waived by filing an answer. Appellant then continues:

"This applies to the special grounds of demurrer as well as to the general demurrer to the supplemental complaint, which cannot, of course, be waived."

[4, 5] It has been frequently held that assignments of errors of law committed in rulings made during the progress of the trial, which are not discussed in appellant's brief, will not be examined or considered upon appeal, but it must be presumed that no error exists under such rulings. Bell v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 144 Cal. 560, 77 P. 1124; Pigeon v. Fuller, 156 Cal. 691, 105 P. 976; Born v. Castle, 175 Cal. 680, 167 P. 138; Frazier v. David, 187 Cal. 724, 204 P. 17. Notwithstanding that there has been no discussion of the alleged errors and no reasons pointed out showing merit in appellants' demurrer, we have examined this complaint in this action and also the supplemental complaint, or the paper called the supplemental complaint. It satisfactorily appears from the plaintiffs' complaint that the complaint in this action substantially follows and sets forth all the facts necessary to constitute a cause of action entitling the plaintiffs to maintain the same in an action to determine their title thereto and any adverse claims of the defendant. The complaint sets forth the location of the mining claim, posting notices, recording notices that the plaintiffs are citizens of the United States, and also alleges ownership of the property. None of these matters are subject to a motion to strike out for redundancy, nor does their presence in the complaint limit or control the allegation of ownership. The objection is made that the plaintiffs have in their pleading set forth their deraignment of title, and that the deraignment of title so set forth is contrary to the allegation of ownership. Some of the cases cited by appellant, such as Altoona Q. M. Co. v. Integral Q. M. Co., 114 Cal. 166, 45 P. 1047, do state that in an action to quiet title plaintiff is not bound to show the source of his title in the complaint, but, as respondents herein say, such a holding is far from deciding that such special facts should be stricken out from the complaint or that such facts limit or controvert an allegation of ownership. It would serve no useful purpose to set forth extensively the allegations of the complaint herein, and we will content ourselves with saying that the complaint complies with the text found in Lindley on Mines (3d Ed.) § 754, p. 833, and the cases there cited.

[6] It is next urged that under section 464, Code of Civil Procedure, a supplemental complaint is improper herein and must be disregarded; that the facts set forth in the supplemental complaint should have been pleaded in the original complaint. We are inclined to the opinion that the paper styled a supplemental complaint should have been filed as and named an amendment to the original complaint. It is not quite certain from the pleadings as to whether there was or was not any appeal pending in action No. 4726 referred to in the pleadings; the supplemental complaint simply shows that the proceedings to dismiss the application for a bill of exceptions culminated after the filing of the original complaint. But whether the court erred or did not err in permitting the plaintiff to file the pleading called a supplemental complaint, we think that there has been no miscarriage of justice by reason of the ruling of the court granting permission to the respondents to file the pleading called the supplemental complaint, rather than filing the pleading as and named an amendment to the complaint on file in the action. There is no question in our minds that the matters set forth in the pleading called the supplemental complaint would constitute a proper amendment to the complaint in this action. It therefore follows that under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution the error of the court, if any, has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The plaintiffs in this action had a final judgment against the defendant determining the rights of the parties to the premises involved, and therefore, no matter what name might be given to the pleading as filed, it did not result in a miscarriage of justice.

[7] It is next argued that, by reason of the failure of the respondents to include in their original complaint herein allegations in relation to the judgment obtained by them in action No. 4726, whatever rights they had thereunder were waived. To support this, our attention is called particularly to section 2326 of the United States Revised Statutes (30 USCA § 30) which, in relation to this subject, reads as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the adverse claimant, within thirty days after filing his claim, to commence proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction, to determine the question of the right of possession, and prosecute the same, with reasonable diligence, to final judgment; and a failure so to do shall be a waiver of his adverse claim."

There is no mention in this section which bears upon or has any relevancy to what constitutes, or the different facts or right or title to be set forth as an adverse claim. Had no reference been made to the judgment mentioned in the respondents' supplemental complaint in any of the pleadings, the former judgment obtained by the plaintiffs would nevertheless have been admissible in evidence. In Kipp v. Reed, 183 Cal. 49, 190 P. 363, which was an action to quiet title, it was held, quoting from the syllabus:

"A person who brings an action to quiet title to certain lands, the title to which has been adjudicated to be in him in a former action against the same defendant, is not estopped from offering in evidence the judgment roll in the former action as a muniment in his chain of title, because he did not plead or rely upon such judgment."

Other citations supporting this statement of the law seem unnecessary. Was it error on the part of the trial court to enter judgment for the plaintiffs upon the pleadings?

[8] As we have stated, paragraph III of the supplemental complaint set forth the judgment favorable to the plaintiffs in this action entered in the same court in which this action was pending, in an action numbered 4726; that in that action it was determined that the mining premises described therein did not belong to the defendant in this action, but that the plaintiffs in this action and their predecessors in interest had a superior right thereto; that the premises described in the defendant's answer in this action as being mining property belonging to her were the same premises involved in action No. 4726, wherein it was determined that appellant had no interest therein. We need not follow further the particular statements contained in paragraph III of the supplemental complaint, further than to state that it shows the entry of such judgment and the finality thereof. The only question to be determined is to ascertain whether the allegations of paragraph III and the other allegations of the plaintiffs' complaint have been denied. The denial of the defendant, as set forth in the transcript, is as follows:

"Denies that the property referred to in the said judgment in said action No. 4726 is the same property described in paragraph I of the answer of defendant, Eleonore E. Hoeft, now on file in the above-entitled action; and in this behalf this defendant alleges that a portion only of the property described in paragraph I of the answer of this defendant now on file in the above-entitled action is a portion only of the property described and referred to in said judgment in said action No. 4726; that the other property described in paragraph I of said answer of this defendant is not described or referred to in nor affected in any way in said judgment in said action No. 4726; and that the other property described in said action No. 4726 and not described in paragraph I of said answer of this defendant is not claimed by defendant."

The answer then contains the further allegation:

"Denies that the property referred to in the said judgment in said action No. 4726 is the same property described in paragraph I of the answer of defendant Eleonore E. Hoeft, now on file in the above-entitled action; and in this behalf this defendant alleges that a portion only of the property described in paragraph I of the answer of this defendant now on file in the above-entitled action, is a portion only of the property described and referred to in said judgment in said action No. 4726; that the other property described in paragraph I of said answer of this defendant is not described or referred to in, nor affected in any way by, said judgment in said action No. 4726, and not described in paragraph I of said answer of this defendant is not claimed by this defendant. Except as hereinbefore expressly admitted, denied, and alleged by this defendant, this defendant admits all the other allegations in paragraph III of said supplemental complaint."

[9, 10] A reading of the answer as we have set forth herein shows clearly that no denial is made of the respondents' title to the disputed premises, as determined by the judgment entered in action No. 4726. The affirmative matter contained in the answer to the original complaint alleging that the appellant is the owner thereof must be wholly disregarded, in view of the appellant's admissions of the right and title of the respondents set forth in the supplemental complaint founded upon the judgment just referred to. The force, effect, and conclusiveness of the judgment not being denied, wherein it was determined that the respondents in this action possessed the superior right to the premises involved, the trial court could not do otherwise than grant the motion for judgment on the pleadings. After this judgment had been entered, the appellant made a motion to set aside the judgment, and asked leave to file an amended answer to the plaintiffs' supplemental complaint. This was denied. The record does not show compliance with section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under such circumstances we cannot say that the trial court abused its discretion. And especially is this true when the granting of appellant's motion to set aside the judgment theretofore entered herein and permitting the filing of an amended answer, would only serve to prolong litigation after a judgment had already been entered in a previous action determining the rights of the parties to the premises involved.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 31, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 27, 1928.

1. Statutes §181(2)—Statute capable of reasonable and certain interpretation without straining will not be given unreasonable and uncertain interpretation.

A statute capable of a reasonable and certain interpretation without being strained will not be given an unreasonable and uncertain interpretation.

2. Landlord and tenant §290(1)—Statute held to authorize action in unlawful detainer for possession of building leased for "term" exceeding tenant's life expectancy (Code Civ. Proc. § 1161; Civ. Code, § 761).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, providing that "tenant of real property, for a term less than life, is guilty of unlawful detainer," held applicable to estates for years and at will, which are classified in Civ. Code, § 761, as estates for less than life, so as to authorize action in unlawful detainer for possession of building leased for 99 years, as against contention that act applies only to tenancy for term of years less than tenant's life expectancy, as word "term" may well refer to "duration of enjoyment" of estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Term.]

3. Constitutional law §249—Landlord and tenant §289—Unlawful detainer statute held not unconstitutional as depriving lessee of equal protection in denying right to set-off, counterclaim, or cross-complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 1161).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, which provides uniform, though special and summary, proceeding in unlawful detainer for quick and ready determination of forfeiture of lease, is not unconstitutional as depriving lessee of equal protection of law in denying him right to set-off, counterclaim, or cross-complaint; classification being based on natural and reasonable distinction between such cases, which require prompt hearing and particular form of judgment, and ordinary cases at law or in equity.

4. Landlord and tenant §291(8)—Complaint in unlawful detainer held not demurrable for failure to plead service of notice to pay rent or quit on subtenants not shown to be in default.

Lessor's failure to plead in unlawful detainer that it had served notice to pay rent or quit on all subtenants, who were not shown to be in default, held not ground for demurrer.

5. Landlord and tenant §291(6)—Subtenants not in default need not be made defendants in unlawful detainer against tenant.

Subtenants not shown to be in default need not be joined as parties defendant in lessor's action of unlawful detainer against tenant.

6. Landlord and tenant §291(1)—Premature service of notice to pay rent or quit premises did not affect lessor's right to proceed in unlawful detainer under later notice.

That notice to pay July rent or quit premises was served on same day as notice of default, whereas lease authorized lessor to claim forfeiture if rent was not paid within 5 days from service of notice on lessee and 20 days after service of notice on leasehold mortgagee, and another claim of forfeiture for nonpayment of August rent was later served, did not affect lessor's right to proceed in unlawful detainer under subsequent notice served over 20 days after service of claim of default for nonpayment of July rent.

7. Landlord and tenant §291(1)—Validity of lessor's notice to pay rent or quit held not affected by disputed claim of offset for amount owed by lessor as subtenant.

Validity of landlord's notice to pay rent or quit premises was not affected by lessee's disputed claim of offset, based on theory that lessor owed amount, remitted by it, as lessee's subtenant under another name, in absence of showing of reason for remission.

3. Continuance $\Leftrightarrow$ 26(3)—Refusal of continuance for absence of available witness held not abuse of discretion.

Refusal of continuance for absence of witness, who was available and could have been called by defendant during trial, held not abuse of discretion.

9. Landlord and tenant $\Leftrightarrow$ 190(1)—Appointment of receiver in unlawful detainer, who assumes full possession and control of premises, is "eviction," relieving tenant from paying rent during receiver's occupancy.

Appointment of receiver in unlawful detainer, who assumes full possession and control of premises and collects rents from subtenants or removes them from possession, is eviction of tenant, and relieves him from payment of rent during receiver's occupancy; receiver being receiver of landlord as party entitled to possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Eviction (Of Tenant).]

10. Landlord and tenant $\Leftrightarrow$ 190(1)—Any act of landlord dispossessing tenant amounts to "eviction," relieving him from paying "rent."

Any act of landlord which results in dispossessing tenant and depriving him of use, occupancy, and enjoyment of premises amounts to eviction, relieving tenant from payment of "rent," which is landlord's right to receive compensation from tenant for benefits accruing to him from his possession and enjoyment of land.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Rent.]

11. Landlord and tenant $\Leftrightarrow$ 314—Defendants' right to redeem by depositing in court amount of judgment in unlawful detainer within five days is substantial one, of which they cannot be deprived by trial court (Code Civ. Proc. § 1174).

Privilege granted every defendant in unlawful detainer proceedings by Code Civ. Proc. § 1174, to redeem by depositing in court amount found due within five days from entry of judgment, is a substantial right, of which he cannot be deprived by any action of trial court.

12. Appeal and error $\Leftrightarrow$ 1073(7)—Inclusion of rentals, accruing during receiver's occupancy, in unlawful detainer judgment, held not reversible error, where defendant failed to pay clerk of court sum admitted to be due (Code Civ. Proc. § 1174).

Erroneous inclusion of rentals accruing during receiver's occupancy of premises in judgment for lessor in unlawful detainer held not prejudicial, so as to justify reversal, where defendant did not pay to clerk of court sum admitted to be due under proper judgment, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1174.

PER CURIAM. The petition of appellant for hearing by this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division 2, was granted because of the importance and novelty of the questions involved upon the appeal, and to enable this court to make a further study of the points so earnestly argued in the briefs. Upon careful consideration, we are satisfied with the solution of these matters in the opinion heretofore filed herein by the District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J., and adopt said opinion as and for the opinion of this court, as follows:

Plaintiff sued in unlawful detainer to recover possession of a block of property located in the city of Oakland. Trial was had before the court sitting without a jury and resulted in a judgment canceling the lease under which the property was held, awarding possession to the plaintiff and a money judgment against the defendant Raentsch in the sum of $38,583.35. This defendant has appealed from the judgment upon a typewritten record.

The lease in question was executed under date of December 31, 1923, and covered a term of 99 years which specified monthly rentals graduating from $2,475 to $5,000 each month. The lease specified, among other things, that in the event of a default in the payment of rent, continuing for a period of 5 days after written notice thereof served upon the lessee, and continuing for a period of 20 days after written notice thereof served upon any mortgagee of the lease who had given written notice of his mortgage, the lessor might, at his option, declare the term of the lease ended and re-enter the premises.

After the lessee had entered into possession under the lease he executed a mortgage of the lease to the defendant Bird and a second mortgage to the defendant Jensen. The latter gave written notice of his mortgage to the lessor entitling him to notice of nonpayment of rent within the provisions of the lease above noted. The premises were occupied as a public market and sublet to some 50 subtenants. On July 30, 1925, the lessor served upon the lessee and mortgagees a notice declaring a default in the payment of the July rent, amounting to $3,850, and at the same time served upon them the statutory notice to pay the rent alleged to be due or to quit the premises within 3 days. On August 7, 1925, similar notices were served by the lessor touching the nonpayment of rent due for the month of August. On September 1, 1925, notice to pay the rentals for July and August or to quit the premises were served upon the lessee, the mortgagees, and eight of the subtenants. On September 10, 1925, this action was commenced against all these parties who had been served with the notice just mentioned. On September 18, 1925, at the instigation of the plaintiff in the action, a receiver was appointed ex parte who took possession and control of the premises, collected all rents from subtenants which were paid by them and remained in possession until the entry of judgment. After numerous delays the cause was brought to trial on April 19, 1926, and this resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff as above stated. The money judgment represented the sum of $40,700, total rent claimed to have been due, less the sum of $2,116.65, which was voluntarily remitted by plaintiff on defendant's claim that this was not due under a separate defense, which was stricken from the answer during the early course of the trial. Of the sum awarded $29,150 represented the rent which accrued during the occupancy of the receiver.

[1, 2] On this appeal the lessee, who is the only defendant appealing, advances the argument that the court was without jurisdiction to try the action because the Code section relating to proceedings of this nature does not include a tenancy for a 99-year period. The argument is that section 1161, Code of Civil Procedure, providing that "a tenant of real property, for a term less than life, is guilty of unlawful detainer," etc., uses the expression, "term less than life," as applying to a term of years less than the usual expectancy of a man's life. In support of the point it is argued that the expectancy of life being less than 61 years at all events for any male person at any age and less than 45 years for any male person capable of entering into a leasing contract, we must assume that the Legislature intended to apply the provisions of the unlawful detainer act to a tenancy for a term of years less than this term of expectancy. The argument is not sound, because it requires an unreasonable and uncertain interpretation of a statute which without being strained at all is capable of a reasonable and certain interpretation. The word "term" as applied to estates is frequently used as referring to the character of the estate as well as to the time or period of enjoyment. Blackstone, vol. 2, p. 144, says: "Thus the word term does not merely signify the time specified in the lease, but the estate also and the interest that passes by the lease; and therefore the term may expire during the continuance of the time." Lang v. Pacific Brewing Co., 44 Cal. App. 618, 187 P. 81. Section 761 of the Civil Code defines estates in real property in respect to "the duration of their enjoyment" as including estates of inheritance, for life, for years, and at will. The word "term" as used in section 1161, Code of Civil Procedure, might well refer to the "duration of enjoyment" of the estate, and as so interpreted the section would become applicable to estates for years and estates at will, which are expressly classified in section 761 of the Civil Code as estates less than life. As so interpreted the section would have a reasonable and certain meaning and it is such an interpretation which should be put upon it.

[3] The argument is made that section 1161, Code of Civil Procedure, is unconstitutional because it deprives the lessee of equal protection of the law in that, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in Arnold v. Krigbaum, 169 Cal. 143, 146 P. 423, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 370, it denies a defendant in an unlawful detainer action to a set-off, counterclaim, or cross-complaint. The trend of the argument is that this is inequitable and unfair to defendants in proceedings of this character because, in an action by the landlord against the tenant for rent, as well as in an action by the tenant against the landlord for breach of covenant, the defendant may plead a set-off, counterclaim, or cross-complaint and that such defenses may be pleaded in other actions in equity and at law. The argument is without merit because the Code sections relating to unlawful detainer provide a uniform, though special and summary, proceeding for a quick and ready determination of the forfeiture of the lease, and these provisions relate to all actions brought for that purpose. The classification which the Legislature has made cannot be said to be arbitrary or made for the mere purpose of classification, but it is based upon a natural and reasonable distinction between cases of this character, which require prompt hearing and a particular form of judgment, and the ordinary cases at law or in equity.

[4, 5] Failure of the respondent to plead that it had served notice on all the subtenants and to join them as parties to the action was raised by demurrer going to the sufficiency of the complaint. It does not appear that the subtenants were in default, and, if they were not, it would certainly have been futile to have given them notice to pay the rent or quit, and it would likewise have been unnecessary to join them as parties defendant in this action. Tujague v. Superior Court, 69 Cal. App. 35, 39, 230 P. 198.

[6, 7] It is argued that the notices given by the respondent to pay rent or to quit the premises were premature because they were served upon the same day as notice of default of the rent; that these were ineffective because they did not take into account a claim for money due the appellant from the respondent and therefore demanded the payment of rent in excess of the amount due; and that there was no proof that the individual who served the notices was authorized to act for the respondent in that particular. The argument is that inasmuch as the lease provided that the lessor might claim a forfeiture if the rent was not paid within 5 days from the service of notice upon the lessee and within 20 days after service of notice upon the mortgagee, that the lessor could not institute proceedings under the unlawful detainer statute until these respective periods had passed. There is little merit in the argument because, if we should assume that the notice to pay rent or quit served on July 23, 1925, was premature, the same could not be said as to the notice to the same purpose served on September 1, 1925. The claim of default for nonpayment of the July rent was sufficient in itself to justify a claim of forfeiture of the lease, and this was served more than 20 days before the service on September 1st of the notice to pay rent or quit the premises. The fact that in the interim another claim of forfeiture because of nonpayment of the August rent was served cannot affect the lessor's right to proceed under the September notice. It is equally clear that the validity of the notice to pay rent or quit the premises is not affected by the claim of offset against the lessor. The notice specified the rent which was due under the terms of the lease. The claim of offset was a disputed claim based upon appellant's theory that the respondent was in fact interested under another name as one of his subtenants and as such owed the appellant the sum of $2,000. The validity of this claim was not tried because the trial court properly ruled that a counterclaim was improper in an action of this nature, but the respondent voluntarily remitted from the judgment the sum of $2,000 in addition to interest thereon. There is nothing, however, in the record to show the reason for the remission of this portion of the judgment, and it does not therefore appear that it should have been deducted from either the July or August rent due from the lessee.

[8] Criticism is made of the action of the trial court in refusing to give the appellant a continuance of the trial of the case on his motion made in open court on the day which had been set for the trial. The ground for the motion was the absence of a witness which appellant claimed to be material in the proof of his case, but it appears that this witness was available and could have been called by the appellant during the course of the trial. No effort was made to call the witness and we are satisfied that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing appellant's motion.

[9] The more serious question is the propriety of that portion of the judgment which awarded to the respondent the full amount of rental claimed to be due under the lease during the period of occupancy by the receiver. The receiver was appointed upon the application of the respondent. The trial court found "that on the 18th day of September, 1925, said receiver did * * * enter into the control and possession of said premises as such receiver and ever since said date has been and now is in control of said premises, as such receiver, and has collected the rents from subtenants of said premises, but no part of said rents has been paid to either plaintiff or defendant. * * *" On the part of the appellant it is claimed that the action of the court in giving the receiver the sole possession and control of the premises was in effect an eviction of the tenant at the instance of the landlord, which automatically stopped the accrual of rental from the tenant under the lease. The facts are undisputed that the receiver did take and hold exclusive possession during the period found by the trial court and that he collected all rents that were paid by subtenants during that period and that he ousted or dispossessed other subtenants from the premises.

It is conceded by all parties that there is no liability on the part of the lessee to pay rent if he is evicted. 36 C. J. § 1113. The respondent argues that the appointment of the receiver was for the benefit of all parties and did not in itself oust the tenant from his right to possession, but the facts of this case, as found by the trial court, do not support the respondent. The jurisdiction of the court to appoint a receiver in proceedings of this nature was added to section 564, Code of Civil Procedure, by an amendment in 1919 (St. 1919, p. 251). There are no California cases which have come to our attention interpreting this amendment to the Code in so far as it relates to the question before us. The great weight of authority from other jurisdictions uniformly supports the doctrine that the appointment of a receiver who assumes full possession and control of the premises in a proceeding of this nature is an eviction of the tenant and relieves him from payment of the rent called for by the lease during the period of the receiver's occupancy. The respondent has not called to our attention any authorities in opposition to this rule, and our own examination satisfies us that the rule is practically uniform.

[10] The rule follows the general principle that any act of the landlord which results in dispossessing the tenant and which deprives him of the use, occupancy, and enjoyment of the premises amounts to an eviction. The reason for the rule is that rent is the landlord's right to receive from the tenant compensation for the benefits that are accruing to the tenant from his possession and enjoyment of the land, and that when the tenant is deprived of this right of possession and enjoyment by the action of the landlord, the right of the landlord to receive compensation automatically ceases. Gilbert, Treatise on Rent, p. 145; Hoeveler v. Fleming, 91 Pa. 322; Palmtag v. Doutrick, 59 Cal. 154, 167, 43 Am. Rep. 245; Veysey v. Moriyama, 184 Cal. 802, 805, 195 P. 662; 16 R. C. L. pp. 684, 948; 36 C. J. 255; 15 Cal. Jur. 679.

It is, of course, true that the appointment of a receiver is not in every instance an ousting of possession of the property over which the receiver exercises control, but where, as here, a receiver is appointed at the instance of the plaintiff in an action in unlawful detainer, the very nature of which is to terminate the tenancy and to place the plaintiff in possession of the property, the receiver in such a case must be treated as the receiver of the party entitled to the possession (Sturgis v. Knapp, 33 Vt. 487, 528), and where, as here, this receiver takes exclusive control and possession of the premises, all of which were occupied by subtenants under separate tenancies, and either collects the rents from such subtenants or removes them from possession, he must be treated as a receiver for the landlord, whose entry into possession is an eviction of the lessee. Mariner v. Chamberlain, 21 Wis. 253, 256.

[11, 12] It follows from what has been said that that portion of the judgment awarding the respondent the sum of $29,150 rentals becoming due under the lease during the receiver's occupancy of the premises was error. The appellant insists that because of section 1174, Code of Civil Procedure, the error demands a reversal of the judgment. The Code section permits the tenant, after judgment adverse to him, to redeem by depositing in court the amount found in the judgment to be due within 5 days from the entry of the judgment, and the same privilege is accorded to any subtenant, mortgagee of the term, or other party interested. This is, of course, a privilege granted to every defendant brought in under proceedings of this nature, and it is a substantial right of which he cannot be deprived by any action of the trial court, but it does not follow from this that because the judgment was excessive in this respect it must be reversed. The appellant might have paid to the clerk of the court the sum which he admitted to be due and owing under a proper judgment, and respondent would then have been called upon to confess the error or take the consequences. Nothing of this kind was done, and it seems evident from an examination of the entire record that the appellant was not concerned in any stage of the proceedings with the protection of his rights under the lease, but that his entire course of action was to delay and hamper the respondent in the conduct of the proceedings. We are satisfied from our examination of the record that the judgment should be modified by striking therefrom the sum of $29,150 and that the inclusion of this sum in the judgment, though error of a substantial kind, would not justify a reversal of the judgment under the facts of this case, because it appears from appellant's conduct that this error did not prejudice his rights in this litigation.

The judgment is modified, by striking $29,150 therefrom, and, as so modified, affirmed, with costs to appellant.

SUGARMAN IRON & METAL CO. v. MILLER & LUX, Inc. (S. F. 12398.)★

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 1, 1928.

Hearing Denied in Bank Oct. 1, 1928.

Sales 68—Seller of scrap iron authorized to reserve materials for new plant held not liable for boilers reserved, though new plant was abandoned.

Under contract for sale of scrap iron from building destroyed by fire, providing seller's engineers could reserve whatever material they deemed necessary for equipment of contemplated new plant, purpose for which reserved material should be used was incidental to sale of junk material, and, when boilers were reserved by seller in good faith for new plant contemplated at time of reservation, and plaintiff was immediately notified thereof, boilers were removed from operation of contract, and value thereof could not be recovered by purchaser of scrap iron, regardless of delay or abandonment of construction of new plant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action for damages for breach of contract for sale of scrap iron by the Sugarman Iron & Metal Company against Miller & Lux, Inc. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. E. Woolley, of San Francisco (Vincent McGovern, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Brownstone & Goodman, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for $5,000 in favor of the plaintiff, in an action for damages for the breach of a contract to sell certain scrap or salvage material.

Prior to June, 1925, the defendant maintained and operated a meat packing plant in South San Francisco. The plant was destroyed by fire during that month. At that time the plaintiff was a dealer in scrap iron and metals, with offices in San Francisco. Shortly after the fire, and on June 20, 1925, the plaintiff sent to the defendant a letter submitting an offer to buy "all of the scrap iron, metal, pipe, and machinery, boilers, etc.," which had gone through the fire at the price of $7.50 per ton. This letter also contained the following clause:

"We also agree to permit your engineers to reserve whatever material they may deem necessary for the equipment of your contemplated new plant."

On the same day the defendant replied by letter accepting the offer. Pursuant to the terms of this contract, the plaintiff, during the months of July, August, and December, 1925, removed from the premises 991,770 pounds of scrap iron, and paid therefor the sum of $5,275.49. In addition to this material, there were five boilers on the premises which were of a value of $5,000 in excess of their value as junk. The engineers of the defendant reserved these five boilers, together with certain other material not involved herein, but the new plant was not built. The plaintiff made demand for the possession of the boilers, and, the demand having been refused, commenced this action on March 16, 1926. The court found that subsequent to the execution of said agreement, and prior to the filing of the complaint herein, the engineers of the defendant reserved the boilers in question and notified the plaintiff of their intention so to reserve the same; that preliminary plans for said then contemplated plant of the defendant were prepared by the engineers and architects of said defendant prior to the filing of the complaint.

The court found that eight months was a reasonable time to allow the defendant to build the new plant and thus avoid its obligation to deliver the boilers to the plaintiff. An interlocutory judgment was entered on November 9, 1926, wherein it was provided that, unless the defendant actually installed the boilers in a meat-packing plant within eight months from the date of the interlocutory judgment, the plaintiff would be entitled to judgment against the defendant for the sum of $5,000. As the boilers were not installed in a new plant within the time required, and as it further appeared that the defendant had disposed of its packing plant equipment, including said boilers, a final judgment was entered against the defendant on June 8, 1927. This is an appeal from the final judgment.

It is first contended that the judgment is not supported by the findings of fact. It is urged that, when it was found on undisputed evidence that the engineers of the defendant had reserved the boilers, that at the time such reservation was made a new packing plant was in the contemplation of the defendant, and that prior to the commencement of the action preliminary plans for the new plant had been prepared by the engineers and architects of the defendant, judgment should have been entered for the defendant.

We think the defendant's position must be sustained. When the finding is considered in the light of the contract between the parties and the evidence in support of the finding, it would seem to follow that, when the engineers of the defendant set apart the boilers for its then contemplated new plant, the boilers were removed from the operation of the contract the same to all intents and purposes as if they had never been included therein. The good faith of the defendant in making the reservation of the boilers is not questioned. It was in evidence and undisputed that up to the time of the trial the construction of the new plant had not been abandoned, but that the new enterprise had been delayed on advice of the defendant's bankers. The main purpose of the contract of sale of the damaged material was to permit the plaintiff to purchase the material not usable, in the judgment of the defendant's engineers, for packing plant purposes, it would be entirely unreasonable, to assume that the defendant intended to sell as junk material at $7.50 per ton valuable boilers worth $5,000 over and above the junk price. This doubtless would have been the effect of the contract, in the absence of the provision for the reservation of the usable material. The recited purpose for which the reserved material should be used was plainly incidental to the main feature of the contract, to wit, the sale of junk material. When the boilers were reserved in good faith for a new packing plant in contemplation at the time the reservation was made and the plaintiff was, as here, immediately notified of the reservation, we are unable to conclude that it was any concern of the plaintiff as to what later caused a delay or abandonment of the contemplated new plant.

The judgment is reversed.

KENNARD v. KEELER. (Civ. 6338.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 30, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 26, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 29, 1928.

1. Contracts $\S$ 319(1)—Judgment allowing partial recovery for constructing plant held error, where contract was entire, and court found plaintiff abandoned plant after performing 80 per cent. of work.

In action to recover for services rendered under written contract of employment by plaintiff, agreeing to take charge of construction of plant for percentage of total cost, judgment allowing plaintiff partial recovery was error, where court found that plaintiff abandoned plant after performing 80 per cent. of work, and where contract on its face was entire, and not separate as to any part, and plaintiff declared on contract as entire and completely executed agreement.

2. Trial $\S$ 404(2)—Finding that contract sued on was severable held conclusion of law, not finding of fact.

In action on contract of employment, finding that contract was severable was not finding of fact, but conclusion of law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by E. H. Kennard, doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of the Kennard Engineering Company, against Frederick E. Keeler, individually and doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of the American Grinding Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court: RICHARDS and SHENK, JJ., voting for a transfer.

Ben S. Hunter, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John L. Flynn, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STROTHER, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment for money found to be due plaintiff for services rendered to defendant under a written contract of employment for the construction of a grinding plant. The appeal is taken upon the judgment roll alone, on the ground that the judgment is not supported by the findings.

Plaintiff agreed to "take charge of all construction, supervising the installation of all machines and other equipment, employ the men, attend to the purchasing of material, equipment, and supplies in accord with your wishes, and, in general, direct construction of your plant, for a fee of 5 per cent. of the total cost of the plant; it being understood that the cost will include all labor, material, equipment, and supplies used in the plant." The agreement also provided that all bills and wages should be paid by defendant, and payments made on account of plaintiff's fee at the end of each month on total expenditures.

The complaint alleges complete performance of plaintiff's agreement, that the total cost was $80,000, that the fee was $4,000, of which $1,000 had been paid, and asks judgment for the balance of $3,000. The defendant answered that plaintiff did not complete the work contracted for, but abandoned it when only partially completed, and before the installation of the machinery. The answer also set up a counterclaim which it is not necessary to consider here.

[1] The court found that the total cost of the plant was $80,000, and that plaintiff had abandoned it after performing 80 per cent. of the work, or $64,000 worth; that a payment of $1,000 on account of the fee had been made by defendant. As a conclusion of law the court found that plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum of $2,200, and judgment was ordered accordingly and thereupon entered.

The contract, upon its face, was entire. There is nothing in it to indicate that the parties considered any part or parts of its performance as a separate item or items which might be considered apart from the completely equipped structure. "All" of the various classes of work that went to the making of the completed plant were to be taken charge of and supervised by plaintiff, and his compensation was based upon the "total cost" of the plant. Plaintiff declared upon it as an entire and completely executed agreement.

[2] The court in its findings of fact recited merely, "that the contract herein referred to as Exhibit A and the basis of plaintiff's action against these defendants is severable." This is not a finding of fact, but a conclusion of law. The court found no facts from which that conclusion could be drawn, and there is nothing in the pleadings from which it might be assumed that evidence of such facts was before the court.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is reversed.

CASTRIOTIS v. CUMMINS. (Civ. 5817.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 25, 1928.

1. Action $\S$ 48(1)—Causes of action for breach of promise to marry and to recover damages for fraud arose out of same transaction, and were properly joined (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 427).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 427, authorizing joinder of claims arising out of same transactions or transactions connected with same subject of action, causes of action for breach of promise to marry and to recover damages for fraud, whereby defendant obtained property from plaintiff, held to arise out of same transaction, and were properly joined in complaint.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 768—Date of commencement of action, stated in appellant's brief and not denied, will be assumed to be conceded fact on appeal.

Date of commencement of action, as stated by appellant in brief and not denied by statement of counsel for respondent, will be assumed on appeal to be conceded fact.

3. Pleading $\S$ 18—Complaint for breach of marriage promise, alleging oral and written promises and renewal thereof, held sufficiently certain as regards renewal.

Complaint for breach of promise to marry, alleging promises were made both orally and by way of written communications, and that same promise was renewed at subsequent dates, held in effect to allege that defendant repeated previous statement of promises, and was sufficiently certain as regards renewal of promise to marry; contract not being required to be in writing.

4. Pleading $\S$ 18—Complaint for breach of marriage promise should be considered in light of defendant's knowledge of allegations in determining uncertainty.

Complaint for breach of promise to marry should be considered in light of nature of allegations referring to facts which necessarily would be within knowledge of defendant, as respects objection of ambiguity or uncertainty.

5. Limitation of actions $\Rightarrow$ 141—Action for breach of marriage promise, commenced within year and three months of last renewal of marriage promise, held not barred by limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1; § 338, subds. 3, 4; § 339, subd. 1; § 343).

Where complaint for breach of promise to marry alleged mutual promise to marry made in December, 1917, which promise was renewed on certain specified dates, the latest of which was July 22, 1923, action commenced September 8, 1924, was not barred by limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1, section 338, subds. 3, 4, section 339, subd. 1, and section 343.

6. Limitation of actions $\Rightarrow$ 100(1)—Complaint for fraud in promises to marry, commenced within year after discovering fraud and last renewal of marriage promise, held not barred by limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1; § 338, subds. 3, 4; § 339, subd. 1; § 343).

Where complaint to recover damages for fraud whereby defendant obtained property from plaintiff by promises of marriage, alleged mutual promises to marry in December, 1917, and renewal thereof from time to time until September, 1923, and that plaintiff did not discover defendant's fraud until September 13, 1923, action commenced September 8, 1924, was not barred by limitations, under Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1, section 338, subds. 3, 4, section 339, subd. 1, and section 343.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Action by Alexander Castriotis against Margaret Cummins, sometimes known as Madge Cummins. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Samuel A. Rosenthal and Benjamin Chipkin, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Porter & Sutton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, pursuant to an order sustaining demurrer to sixth amended complaint without leave to amend. The plaintiff appeals.

The first count is upon a cause of action to recover damages for breach of promise of marriage. The second count is upon a cause of action to recover damages for fraud and deceit through and by means of which the defendant obtained from the plaintiff certain large sums of money and other personal property.

The demurrer to the first count of the complaint was made upon the ground that said count did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that several causes of action were improperly united in the complaint; that the alleged cause of action is barred by the provisions of certain stated sections of the Code of Civil Procedure; that the said count is ambiguous for certain stated reasons; likewise that said count is uncertain for the same reasons. The demurrer to the second count of the complaint is like the first, except that additional grounds of ambiguity and of uncertainty are stated.

In the brief filed on behalf of appellant the various phases of the action as stated in the complaint are discussed, under ten different points, for the purpose of showing that the complaint was not properly subject to any of the objections contained in the demurrer. In answer thereto, respondent has been content to rely upon these two propositions: First, that there is in the complaint a misjoinder of causes of action, in that an action ex contractu has been improperly united with an action ex delicto; and, second, that the second cause of action is barred by the following provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure: Section 337, subd. 1, section 338, subds. 3 and 4, section 339, subd. 1, and section 343.

[1] It is provided by section 427, Code of Civil Procedure, that—

"The plaintiff may unite several causes of action in the same complaint where they all arise out of: * * * 8. Claims arising out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action, and not included within one of the foregoing subdivisions of this section."

The causes of action stated in the two counts of this complaint manifestly arose out of one and the same transaction, and they were not both included within any one of the other subdivisions of the section. We are satisfied there was no improper joinder of the two causes of action.

[2-4] The transcript does not show the date of commencement of the action. But, since counsel for appellant in their brief state that the action was commenced in the year 1924 and do not deny the statement of counsel for respondent that the date of commencement of the action was September 8, 1924, we assume that this last statement is a conceded fact. According to the first count of the complaint, the first alleged mutual promise to marry between plaintiff and defendant was made in July, 1919, and the defendant "renewed her promise to marry" the plaintiff from time to time, and particularly upon certain specified dates, of which the latest was July 22, 1923. According to the second count of the complaint, the first of the alleged mutual promises to marry was made in December, 1917, and the same were likewise renewed from time to time until September, 1923. It is alleged in the first count that on September 13, 1923, plaintiff demanded that the defendant "live up to her promise to marry him," and that the defendant refused to marry him, and that this was his first knowledge of her refusal to marry him. The second count alleges that, at the time when defendant made her first and original promise to marry the plaintiff, to wit, in December, 1917, and continuously thereafter, she had no intention of marrying plaintiff, but that the plaintiff first discovered this fact on September 13, 1923, that prior thereto plaintiff was unable to discover said fraud, and particularly that defendant concealed her fraud until said 13th day of September, 1923. It is alleged that, during the period of time covered by said engagement to marry, plaintiff, relying upon said promise of defendant, gave to her the several large sums in money and jewelry, etc., as set forth in detail in the complaint.

One of the grounds of demurrer for ambiguity and for uncertainty, as stated in the demurrer, is that it is not shown in what manner or by what words, whether written or oral, the defendant "renewed" her said promise to marry. The statement in the complaint is that said promises were made "both orally and by way of written communications." We think that this was sufficiently certain. The contract was not one which the law required to be in writing. Where it was alleged in a pleading that, at the time of the renewal of certain notes, the agents of a bank holding the notes "then and there ratified and confirmed" certain statements and representations, it was held that this was not merely an allegation of a conclusion, but was an allegation, that the agent of the bank, in effect, repeated the previous false statements of the other agents to whom reference had been made. Edmonds v. Wilcox, 178 Cal. 222, 224, 172 P. 1101. So here, where it was alleged that a certain promise was made, and was then alleged that the same promise was renewed at the subsequent dates named in the complaint, this was in effect an allegation that the defendant repeated the previous statements of promises which had been made by her. Likewise we think that the complaint should be considered in the light of the nature of the allegations, which all refer to facts which necessarily would be within the knowledge of the defendant, and therefore the uncertainty, if any there was, in the form of the allegations would create no difficulty for defendant in the making or verification of her answer. Harvey v. Meigs, 17 Cal. App. 353, 365, 119 P. 941.

[5, 6] We are satisfied that the plaintiff's action as pleaded is not barred by any of the provisions of the statute of limitations.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. Victorino MADRANO, Defendant and Appellant. (Cr. 1039.) District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 30, 1928. Appeal by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court of Tuolumne County, J. T. B. Warne, Judge, of conviction of murder of the second degree and from an order denying motion for new trial. J. C. Webster, of Sonora, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was convicted in the superior court of Tuolumne county of a felony, to wit, the crime of murder of the second degree. The transcript on appeal was filed in this court May 26, 1928. No brief has been filed in behalf of appellant. The cause was regularly placed on the calendar for oral argument on July 30, 1928. No appearance was made for appellant at the time the case was called for hearing. Pursuant to the provisions of section 1253 of the Penal Code, the judgment and the order are affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. John MANNERSTAN, Defendant and Appellant. (Cr. 1477.) District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 4, 1928. Appeal by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court of Alameda County, Leon E. Gray, Judge, of conviction under the firearms act, and from an order denying motion for new trial. Affirmed. Harris & Sullivan, of Oakland, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. The defendant was tried before a jury upon an information charging a violation of chapter 552 of the Statutes of 1927 (Deering's Codes and General Laws 1925-1927, act 1971). This act proscribes as a felony the possession of a firearm of the kind commonly known as a machine gun, excepting by a member of the police department or other public official, possessing such firearm for official use in the discharge of his duties. The jury returned a verdict of guilty as charged in the information, and from the judgment on the verdict, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, the defendant has appealed upon a typewritten record. The transcript on appeal was filed in this court April 17, 1928, and the cause placed upon the regular term calendar for argument May 21, 1928. At that time, no brief having been filed on behalf of the appellant, his counsel was given five days' additional time to file a brief, and, though this time has long since expired, no brief has been filed. Notwithstanding this failure of appellant to prosecute his appeal, we have examined the typewritten record, and find the evidence of guilt to be convincing and without conflict, that the defendant was given a fair and impartial trial, and that the record is free from error. Judgment and order are affirmed.

In the Matter of the Application of Merrell E. THOMAS for a Writ of Review. Merrell E. THOMAS, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. BOARD OF OSTEOPATHIC EXAMINERS OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA and W. W. Vanderburgh, Lester R. Daniels, Albert V. Kalt, Henry F. Miles, and Charles H. Spencer, Defendants and Respondents. (Civ. 6355.) District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 15, 1928. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, George H. Cabaniss, Judge, in an action to review an order of the Board of Osteopathic Examiners revoking petitioner's license to practice. Affirmed. Clarence W. Morris and Hugh F. Keon, Jr., both of San Francisco, for appellant. Otis D. Babcock, of Sacramento, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. A proceeding was commenced before the Board of Osteopathic Examiners to obtain a judgment revoking the certificate and license of the petitioner authorizing him to practice osteopathy. It was alleged that the petitioner had violated the provisions of subdivision 12, section 14, chapter 354, of the Statutes of 1913. Thereafter the Board of Osteopathic Examiners held a trial. Evidence, both oral and documentary, was introduced, and the matter was submitted to the board for its determination. The board made findings against this petitioner and caused to be entered in its records an order revoking the license of the petitioner. Thereafter the petitioner applied to the superior court for a writ of review. An alternative writ was issued and thereafter a full hearing was had on said application. The trial court denied the petitioner a peremptory writ and affirmed the proceedings had before the Board of Osteopathic Examiners. From the judgment of the trial court the petitioner has appealed. In his brief he has set forth apparently a transcript of the proceedings had before the Board of Osteopathic Examiners. Having done so, he argues that the evidence is not such testimony as would be received in a court of law, that one of the witnesses had made inconsistent statements, and that apparently adverse evidence was fully explained. Thereupon the petitioner claims that the trial court erred. The record shows no error whatever on the part of the trial court. The petitioner contends that there was no evidence before the Board of Osteopathic Examiners supporting the jurisdictional facts, that the trial court should have so held, and that there is no evidence in the record upholding the implied finding by the trial court that there was such evidence before the Board of Osteopathic Examiners. The contention cannot be sustained. The basic statute is chapter 354 of the Statutes of 1913. Section 14 was amended by chapter 598 of the Statutes of 1921. Among other things, section 14 deals with what is unprofessional conduct and authorizes the revocation of a license for the violation of the provisions of the statute. Subdivision 12 of section 14, as so amended, is as follows: "The employment of 'cappers' or 'steerers' or other persons in procuring practice for a practitioner for a system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted provided for in this act." The provisions of that statute were carefully pleaded in a complaint filed before the Board of Osteopathic Examiners. A reading of the transcript of proceedings shows that there was an abundance of evidence before the board sustaining every allegation contained in the complaint. The findings made by the trial court are sustained by the evidence. The judgment is affirmed.

LEWIS v. GRUNBERG et al. (Sac. 3886.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 4, 1928.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 519—Stipulation and order relative to submission of case to referee, not embodied in bill of exceptions or transcript, cannot be considered (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 650, 953a).

Where neither stipulation nor order that case be submitted to referee to try all issues and report finding and judgment thereon were embodied in bill of exceptions as provided by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 650, nor in transcript as provided by section 953a, reviewing court cannot consider either stipulation or order.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 967(1)—Reference is presumed special unless it may be inferred from recitals in findings of referee and court that it was general (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 638-645).

Unless it may be properly inferred from recitals in findings of referee and those of court that reference to referee was general in character, it must be presumed that it was special reference for benefit of court under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 638-645.

3. Reference $\S$ 99(2)—Reference held general, in view of its recitals and fact that court had no evidence before it.

Reference held general, where referee recited as part of findings that he was appointed to find upon both questions of law and fact, and it was clear from court's findings that there was no trial held by court and no evidence taken by it and that court did not have before it evidence submitted to referee.

4. Reference $\S$ 99(2)—Where reference was general, judgment must be entered in accordance with referee's findings; aggrieved party's remedy for referee's error being motion for new trial (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 644).

Where reference was general in nature, judgment should be entered on findings of referee filed in cause, in accordance with such findings, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 644, and, for any error committed by referee, remedy of aggrieved party was by motion for new trial or other appropriate proceeding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by J. A. Lewis against A. W. Grunberg and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Grunberg & Anderson, to recover money due under a contract for the purchase of merchandise. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified, and, as so modified, affirmed.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 262 P. 1103.

J. Oscar Goldstein, of Chico, for appellants.
Bond & Deirup, of Chico, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petition of respondent for a hearing by this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal in and for the Third Appellate District, reversing the judgment of the trial court, with directions, was granted, and this court has considered the points and authorities presented by petitioner in support of his position, and has reached the conclusion arrived at by the said District Court of Appeal, Burroughs, Justice pro tem., writing the opinion, which opinion is hereby adopted as and for the opinion of this court, as follows:

January 10, 1922, plaintiff and defendants entered into a written contract whereby the plaintiff agreed to sell and defendants agreed to buy a stock of merchandise. February 1, 1922, the parties entered into a supplemental contract concerning the same subject-matter. A dispute having arisen between the parties as to the proper construction to be given the contracts as to the price to be paid for the merchandise, and being unable to reach an adjustment of the controversy, this action was commenced by the plaintiff to recover the sum of $5,265.40, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 15th day of February, 1922, being the amount claimed by the plaintiff as due under the terms of said contract.

Defendants admit by their answer that there is due the plaintiff the sum of $3,814.23, and no more.

By its judgment, the court awarded the plaintiff the sum of $4,857.74, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from April 1, 1922, and from the judgment so entered the defendants appeal.

The appeal is upon the judgment roll alone. As a part of the judgment roll there appears a report and findings of fact by a referee, which, among other matters, recites:

"Pursuant to order of reference duly made and filed in the above-entitled action, wherein the undersigned, L. G. Faulkner, Esq., was duly appointed referee with direction to find upon matters of both law and fact, and, after hearings duly held under and by authority of said reference at the city of Chico, county of Butte, state of California, before said referee and all matters and things having been presented in due form and according to law by Bond & Deirup, Esqs., attorneys for plaintiff, and by J. Oscar Goldstein, Esq., attorney for defendants, and all witnesses having been called were duly sworn and testified. Now therefore, the evidence submitted to your referee having been duly considered by him, the said referee begs leave to submit his report as follows: Findings of law and facts upon trial of the issues involved."

While the said findings and conclusions of law therefrom are inartistically drawn, still they respond to the issues raised by the pleadings and the referee recommends a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants in the sum of $3,439.76, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 15th day of February, 1922, together with their costs of suit.

June 30, 1922, the court filed its findings and conclusions of law in this cause, in which it finds that the defendants are indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $4,857.74, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from April 1, 1922, and for his costs of suit.

Judgment was accordingly entered by the clerk on July 6, 1922, in favor of the plaintiff for said last-mentioned amount. In its findings the court recites:

"The above-entitled action came on regularly for hearing before the above-entitled court sitting without a jury, a jury having been waived by the respective parties hereto. Plaintiff was represented by Messrs. Bond & Deirup, his attorneys, and defendants by J. Oscar Goldstein, Esq., their attorney. The cause was heard upon the amended complaint, as amended, and the answer thereto, as amended, and upon the report of L. G. Faulkner, Esq., the referee heretofore appointed herein, the exceptions filed by the plaintiff, and the motion of the defendants to confirm the report, which motion was based and made upon the said report and upon all the files, records, pleadings, proceedings, exhibits, and all other matters pertaining to this cause, and the matter having been argued and submitted to the court for consideration and decision, and the court being fully advised in the premises, now finds."

The appellants complain that, the order of reference having been that the referee find upon questions of both law and fact, and the referee having done so, the court was without authority to set aside the findings of said referee and substitute its own therefor. In other words, it is their contention that the findings and conclusions of the referee have the same force and effect as though made by the court and judgment should have been entered in accordance therewith.

Respondent contends that there is nothing legally before the court from which it may determine the character of the order of reference, and that it must be presumed, in the absence of an affirmative showing of error, that the court acted within its authority, and that the said order of reference was special and not general in its nature.

There appears in the clerk's transcript a stipulation signed by all the attorneys that the cause be ordered to a referee "to try all of the issues in the above-entitled action, whether of fact or of law, and to report a finding and judgment thereon."

In pursuance of said stipulation there appears in said transcript an order signed by the judge of the court appointing L. G. Faulkner, Esq., a referee "to try all of the issues in this action, whether of fact or of law, and to report a finding and judgment thereon."

[1, 2] As neither the stipulation nor the order is embodied in a bill of exceptions, as provided by section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, nor in a transcript, as provided by section 953a of said Code, this court cannot consider either said stipulation or order (Totten v. Barlow, 165 Cal. 378, 132 P. 749; Richmond v. Julian Con. Min. Co., 176 Cal. 600, 169 P. 356), and, unless it may be properly inferred by the court from the recitals in the findings of the referee and those of the court that the reference was general in its character, it must be presumed that it was a special reference for the benefit of the court (sections 638 to 645, inclusive, Code Civ. Proc.; Tyson v. Wells, 2 Cal. 122; Faulkner v. Hendy, 103 Cal. 15, 36 P. 1021).

[3] The referee recites as a part of his findings that he was appointed to find upon both questions of law and fact. The court in its findings recites the proceedings had before it, the various documents presented and considered, and it is clear therefrom that there was no trial held by the court and no evidence taken by it, and also that the court did not have before it the evidence submitted to the referee. The court finds as a fact that the wholesale price of certain merchandise that had been damaged by fire, and concerning which there was a dispute between the parties, was the sum of $2,126.74, being the amount which the referee fixes by his findings as the wholesale price of said merchandise, but the referee finds that the actual value of said merchandise was the sum of $708.98, the latter amount being found by the court to be erroneous. With this exception the court adopted the findings of the referee and ordered a judgment for an amount in excess of that found due by the referee.

[4] We are satisfied from the foregoing recitals contained in the findings of the referee, and also from the recitals in the findings of the court, that the order of reference was general in its nature, and, under the provisions of section 644 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "the finding of the referee or commissioner upon the whole issue must stand as the finding of the court, and upon filing of the finding with the clerk of the court, judgment may be entered thereon in the same manner as if the action had been tried by the court." This holding is supported by the following authorities: In re Riccardi (Cal. App.) 251 P. 650, Weaver v. Schneider, 52 Cal. App. 182, 198 P. 418, and Clark v. Millsap, 197 Cal. 765, 242 P. 918. In these cases the distinction is pointed out between findings by a referee where the reference is general or special, and holding the findings conclusive where the reference is general, as in the case at bar.

Upon the filing of the findings of the referee in this cause, judgment should have been entered thereon in accordance with the findings, and, for any error committed by the referee, the remedy of the aggrieved party was by motion for a new trial, or other appropriate proceeding. Faulkner v. Hendy, supra.

Having reached the foregoing conclusion, it becomes unnecessary to consider any other question presented by counsel for either party.

The judgment, therefore, should be reduced in the sum of $1,417.98, and the interest should run from February 15, 1922, as found by the referee. The judgment is modified, accordingly, to read as follows:

"It is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiff recover from the defendants, A. W. Grunberg and Homer B. Anderson, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Grunberg & Anderson, the sum of $3,439.76, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 15th day of February, 1922, together with costs of suit in the sum of $262.60."

As so modified, the judgment is affirmed, the appellants to recover their costs on appeal.

GOULD v. WOOD. (S. F. 12392.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 1, 1928.

Limitation of actions § 54(2)—Account between plaintiff and defendant's testator held "mutual, open, and current" within statute, and action thereon was timely (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337, 339, subd. 1; § 344).

In action to recover upon a rejected claim for legal services rendered, for which defendant was acting as executrix, where undisputed evidence showed that plaintiff rendered legal services to testator during the years 1914 to 1921 of which he kept an itemized account, that testator during same period was a storekeeper of whom plaintiff purchased items of merchandise, such being embraced in book account kept by testator, and that neither party made any payments of consequence to the other, but attempted settlement of accounts prior to testator's death, held that such constituted a "mutual, open, and current" account within the four-year limitation of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337 and 344, and was not barred under section 339, subd. 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Action by Kitt Gould against Helen G. Wood, as executrix of the estate of R. E. L. Goode, deceased. From the judgment plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

C. K. Bonestell, of San Francisco, and Frank Kauke, of Fresno, for appellant.

Johnson, Gibbs & Backlund, of Fresno, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiff herein brought an action against the executrix of the estate of Robert E. L. Goode to recover upon a rejected claim upon an account for legal services of various sorts alleged to have been performed for and on account of the decedent during the years from 1914 to 1923, and aggregating the sum of $2,962.82, and which the plaintiff in his complaint alleges to have been an open, mutual, and current book account between plaintiff and said decedent because of the fact that during said years the plaintiff from time to time purchased merchandise from said decedent aggregating the sum of $227.51, and which, when applied as an offset to the plaintiff's said account, left a balance due and unpaid to said plaintiff of $2,735.31. The plaintiff presented an itemized claim for this balance to the executrix of the estate of said decedent, who rejected the same, whereupon this action was commenced within the statutory period to recover judgment upon said claim. The defendant, in her answer, for want of information and belief, denied the averments of the plaintiff's complaint with reference to the performance of said legal services and existence of said account or of any balance alleged to be due thereon; and for a further separate and distinct defense defendant pleaded that plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The question thus presented to the trial court was twofold: First, as to whether reciprocal accounts existed between the plaintiff and the decedent during the aforesaid years; and, second, whether, if such accounts existed, they amounted in law to such a mutual, open, and current account between the parties as would entitle the plaintiff to the benefit of the provisions of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which places a limitation of four years within which an action may be brought to recover a balance due upon a mutual, open, and current account.

As to the first of these issues, the undisputed evidence shows that during the years above referred to the plaintiff was an attorney at law, practicing in the town of Clovis, and that during the years between 1914 and 1921 he performed legal services of various sorts for and on behalf of the decedent, Robert E. L. Goode, of the detail of which services he kept a regular and itemized account, that during all of said period the decedent was a storekeeper in that region, and that during said period the plaintiff from time to time purchased groceries and other goods at the decedent's store, the items of which were embraced in a book account kept by the latter, and which aggregated the sum of $227.51. So far as the evidence discloses, neither of the parties made payments of any consequence upon the accounts of the other. It appears, however, that during the lifetime of said Goode, and in the year 1920, an effort was made at an accounting and settlement between the parties, in the course of which each in person or by their representatives examined the accounts of the other, and various propositions passed between them as to a settlement, which ran along for some time, but which were apparently interrupted before fulfillment by the death of Goode, which occurred on April 23, 1923. The plaintiff commenced this action upon his rejected claim on September 14, 1923. The trial court upon the foregoing evidence made a finding to the effect that the account between the said parties was not such as would constitute an open, mutual, and current account, and hence, as a conclusion of law, that the plaintiff's cause of action was barred as to all except the last two items thereof, aggregating the sum of $52.50, by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff appealed from the judgment rendered and entered in his favor for the latter amount, and the only question presented upon his appeal is as to whether, upon the foregoing undisputed facts, the account sued upon amounted to an open, mutual, and current account within the meaning of that phrase as employed in sections 337 and 344 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We are satisfied that this question must be answered in the affirmative.

An examination into the origin of the aforesaid sections of the Code of Civil Procedure shows that, as to the use of the phrase, "a mutual, open, and current account," these sections of the Code, and particularly this clause therein, were derived from the New York law as it existed in the revised statutes thereof long prior to its incorporation in the so-called Field Code of New York, which formed, in substance, the basis of our own Code of Civil Procedure adopted in 1872. The history of the New York legislation upon this subject is to be found in the case of Green v. Disbrow, 79 N. Y. 1, 35 Am. Rep. 496, from which it appears that a mutual, open, and current account arises between parties whenever, through a course of dealing, reciprocal demands exist which would give to each an offset against the other in an action by either. Green v. Disbrow, supra, became the leading case in New York, to which later decisions of the courts of that state referred with approval. In the case of Miller v. Longshore, 147 App. Div. 214, 131 N. Y. S. 1041, the principles laid down in the former decision were given application to a case wherein the plaintiff's testator was a miller and furnished food and other supplies for use upon the farm of the defendant's testator, who was the family physician of the miller, and who kept a running account of professional services rendered and medicines furnished for the miller and his family. It appeared that neither the miller nor the physician kept any account of the supplies furnished or services rendered by the other, but the court held this to be immaterial, and decided that the accounts between the parties, when taken together, amounted to a mutual, open, and current account within the intent and meaning of the statutes of New York as interpreted in the earlier decision. We are satisfied that no distinction in principle can be found between the foregoing cases and the case at bar, and that, under the authority thereof, the account upon which the plaintiff sues in this action must be held to have been a mutual, open, and current account. This being so, the trial court was in error in its finding to the contrary upon the undisputed facts of the case and its conclusion drawn from such finding, that the action of the plaintiff, except as to the two minor items above referred to, was barred by the statute of limitations.

The judgment is reversed.

UNITED SECURITY BANK & TRUST CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR ORANGE COUNTY et al. (S. F. 12980.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 5, 1928.

1. Corporations $\S$ 49(1)—Generally corporation's right to use its name will be protected by equity court so far as necessary to safeguard property rights and to protect against fraud (Const. art. 6, § 5).

The name of a corporation is a necessary element of its existence, and generally, even aside from statute, the right to use its name will be protected by the courts having equitable jurisdiction, under Const. art. 6, § 5, so far as may be necessary to safeguard property rights developed under it and to protect against fraud, actual or constructive.

2. Prohibition $\S$ 10(2)—Banking superintendent's approval of bank's corporate name held no limitation on superior court's jurisdiction of action to enjoin use of such name justifying prohibition (Code Civ. Proc. § 1102).

Even if the approval and certificate of superintendent of banks gave bank the absolute right to use of word "security" as part of its corporate name and amounted to an adjudication, this would not affect jurisdiction of superior court to entertain action to enjoin such bank from transacting banking business under such name, and writ of prohibition could therefore not issue to prevent court from proceeding with trial, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1102; matter being one of defense to be decided by trial court.

3. Prohibition ⇨5(1)—Action of judicial tribunal having jurisdiction may not be controlled by prohibition.

Appellate court may not interfere by writ of prohibition with exercise of jurisdiction actually possessed by a judicial tribunal whose conduct is sought to be controlled.

4. Prohibition ⇨3(5), 10(1)—Court is not deprived of jurisdiction by fact that issue is res judicata; remedy by appeal in case of error being adequate in case of error.

That question arising in suit is res judicata does not deprive court of jurisdiction, but court may pass on that issue and dispose of case accordingly, and, in case of error, remedy by appeal is available and adequate.

5. Prohibition ⇨5(1)—Prohibition does not lie to prevent erroneous decision or to control procedure, where former judgment is relied on as bar.

Where former judgment is relied on as a bar, writ of prohibition may not be utilized for the purpose of preventing the court from deciding the case erroneously or for the purpose of regulating or controlling its procedure.

6. Prohibition ⇨28—Merits of action may not be inquired into in prohibition proceeding; question being whether respondent court has "jurisdiction" to entertain controversy.

Whether plaintiff in action sought to be controlled by writ of prohibition should prevail in whole or in part or not at all may not be inquired into in the prohibition proceeding, but question is, Has the respondent court jurisdiction to entertain the controversy? "jurisdiction" being the power to hear and determine the cause.

WASTE, C. J. Application for writ of prohibition. By this proceeding the petitioner, United Security Bank & Trust Company, seeks to restrain and prohibit the respondent superior court and the Honorable James L. Allen, as judge thereof, from further proceeding with the trial of that certain action entitled Security Trust & Savings Bank v. Security Bank & Trust Company and United Security Bank & Trust Company. In that action the plaintiff prays the respondent court to enter its decree restraining the defendants from engaging in, carrying on or transacting any banking business in this state under the names of "Security Bank & Trust Company" or "United Security Bank & Trust Company," from acquiring, establishing, or maintaining any branch or office under either of said names, and from further prosecuting a proceeding theretofore commenced in the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and having for its purpose the entry of a decree changing the original defendant's name from "Security Bank & Trust Company" to "United Security Bank & Trust Company." Examination of the complaint filed in the respondent court and praying the foregoing injunctive relief discloses that the action, the trial of which it is now sought to prohibit, has for its purpose a judicial determination of the respective rights of the parties thereto in and to the use of the word "Security" in their respective titles. This has led petitioner to aver with much of detail a series of transactions and events pointing to the history and development of the opposing institutions.

For the purposes of this proceeding it will suffice to indicate in a general way the salient features brought to light by these allegations. It appears that the Security Trust & Savings Bank, plaintiff in the respondent court, has for a period in excess of 35 years carried on in this state a general banking business with the word "Security" appearing in and constituting part of its name. This institution, while it now maintains some 53 branch offices under and by virtue of permits issued to it by the superintendent of banks, has continuously up to the present time confined its activities, with one exception, to the county of Los Angeles, the exception referred to being the maintenance of a branch office at La Habra in Orange county. The Security Bank & Trust Company, original and sole defendant in the action sought to be prohibited, traces its development to a policy of expansion and consolidation which culminated on October 1, 1927, with the merger of several smaller banking institutions. At least three of the institutions brought within the merger had for many years prior to their amalgamation employed the word "Security" in and as a part of their respective titles. These several consolidations and mergers were, of course, with the prior consent and approval of the superintendent of banks, and resulted in the maintenance by the Security Bank & Trust Company from the date of its inception, in addition to its head office, of approximately 51 branches in 22 counties of the state.

Petitioner, United Security Bank & Trust Company, came into being on March 31, 1928, at which time the Security Bank & Trust Company, with the approval of the superintendent of banks, consolidated with the Humboldt Bank of San Francisco. Since its creation, petitioner has maintained 54 branches in 22 counties of the state. Shortly after the creation of the Security Bank & Trust Company, and at divers other times, the Security Trust & Savings Bank protested both orally and in writing to the superintendent of banks against the use of the word "Security" in the name of the former institution, and to the granting of any further branches to it or to any other banking institution having the word "Security" as a part of its name. At or about this time, Security Bank & Trust Company filed applications with the superintendent of banks requesting authority and permission for the establishment of several new branches in different counties, including one at La Habra, Orange county, where, as already stated, the Security Trust & Savings Bank maintained a branch office. Upon the hearing of these applications, the Security Trust & Savings Bank appeared and opposed the granting thereof on the ground that there has of recent years been introduced into this state a new era of branch banking which in time may result in public loss and economic strife should there be any confusion or possibility of confusion in the names of rival and competing banking institutions. On December 10, 1927, and over the protest of the Security Trust & Savings Bank, the superintendent of banks issued to the Security Bank & Trust Company permits and licenses to establish and maintain the several requested branches. Thereafter, and on February 10, 1928, the Security Trust & Savings Bank instituted the action above referred to, the trial of which petitioner herein seeks to prevent, naming the Security Bank & Trust Company as defendant therein. Service of summons was had upon the manager of the La Habra, Orange county, branch of said defendant. An extension of time within which to plead to the complaint was requested by and granted to the defendant, and thereafter its demurrer to said complaint was overruled. On March 31, 1928, prior to the expiration of the time within which Security Bank & Trust Company was required to file its answer to the complaint, it consolidated, as above indicated, with the Humboldt Bank; the new institution being known as the United Security Bank & Trust Company, petitioner herein. This change of status and name by the Security Bank & Trust Company prompted the Security Trust & Savings Bank to file, over the defendant's objections, an amended and supplemental complaint in its action then pending before the respondent court; the primary purpose of the amendment being to bring the new institution, United Security Bank & Trust Company, into the action as a party defendant. The defendants then before the respondent court objected to and opposed the filing of such amended and supplemental complaint upon the ground that the court was without jurisdiction both as to the subject-matter of the action and the parties defendant. The ground upon which it is sought to prohibit the respondent court from proceeding with the trial of the suit in equity now pending is that the plaintiff there is estopped to maintain the action because of the decision of the superintendent of banks in permitting the use of the name "Security" by the amalgamated banks represented by petitioner, which ruling is claimed to be conclusive. Subsequent to the filing of its petition here, the United Security Bank & Trust Company filed in the respondent court a demurrer to the amended and supplemental complaint, together with notices of motion to dismiss and for change of place of trial, all of which were to be pressed if, and only if, this court should deny relief by way of prohibition.

In response to the alternative writ issued by this court, the respondents on the return date thereof filed their verified return, which, by way of answer to the allegations of the petition, fully covered all matters and proceedings relating to the action. Concurrently with the filing of respondents' return, the Security Trust & Savings Bank, plaintiff in the action in the respondent court, filed herein an application for leave to intervene, on the ground that it is the real party in interest in opposition to the application for prohibition. The request being granted, a complaint in intervention was filed. The intervenor thereupon demurred, both generally and specially, to the petition, and also moved to strike out certain portions thereof. Among other matters alleged in the complaint in intervention, it is averred that, should petitioner prevail here in its application for the writ, the intervenor will be deprived of its property and property rights, to wit, its business and good will, without due process of law, and will be denied the equal protection of the law. Without waiving, but, on the contrary, expressly reserving, the right to insist upon its demurrer to the petition and its motion to strike portions thereof, the intervenor further alleges, upon information and belief, that petitioner and its predecessor, Security Bank & Trust Company, with the design, purpose, and intention of wrongfully taking and appropriating intervenor's business and good will, and with the design and purpose of creating and causing confusion on the part of the public, adopted and used a name or title so similar to that of intervenor's as to inevitably give rise to such confusion, and that intervenor, in order to prevent and preclude the threatened destruction of its property and business and the confusion that would have resulted from the similarity of names, instituted the action, the trial of which is herein sought to be prohibited.

[1] The conclusion we have reached upon the main question of law presented by intervener's general demurrer to the petition, as we see it, renders it unnecessary for us to consider or to determine the many other points raised by the pleadings and the arguments of counsel. As we view this proceeding, the important and the sole question we need consider is whether or not the intervener is conclusively estopped to maintain the action in the superior court of Orange county by reason of the finding and action of the superintendent of banks in the matter of the name of the petitioner. In deciding that question, it is not necessary for us to consider at this time whether the action of the superintendent of banks was, or was not, conclusive, for, in either event, the respondent court has jurisdiction to proceed to a final determination of the issues presented by the action, for the name of a corporation is a necessary element of its existence, and, generally speaking, even aside from statutory provision, the right to its use will be protected by the court sitting in equity, so far as may be necessary to safeguard property rights developed under it and to protect against fraud, actual or constructive. Italian Swiss Colony v. Italian Vineyard Co., 158 Cal. 252, 256, 110 P. 913, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 439; Dodge Stationery Co. v. Dodge, 145 Cal. 380, 78 P. 879; Hainque v. Cyclops Iron Works, 136 Cal. 351, 68 P. 1014; 24 Cal. Jur. pp. 631, 633.

[2] The contention of the petitioner that the action of the superintendent of banks was conclusive is, when reduced to its lowest terms, based on a doctrine analogous to that of res adjudicata in a judicial proceeding. Its theory is that its right to take and use the word "Security" as part of its corporate name has been finally and conclusively established by the action of the superintendent of banks. Assuming, only for the purpose of the decision, that the action of the superintendent of banks was not only conclusive but amounted to an adjudication, that fact does not affect the jurisdiction of the superior court to maintain the action, but enters only into its determination of the question before it. If, as claimed by the petitioner, the approval and certificate of the superintendent of banks gave to it the absolute right to its name, notwithstanding that confusion and injury might ensue from its use, that would operate as a defense upon the issues to be decided by the court on the trial of the cause. The finality of the action would not operate as a limitation upon the court's jurisdiction to entertain the action. Consequently a writ of prohibition cannot issue to prevent the respondent court from proceeding with the cause now before it. Code Civ. Proc. § 1102; Granger v. Superior Court, 159 Cal. 1, 5, 112 P. 854. As it has jurisdiction of the cause, it would be exempt from control by a writ of prohibition, even though it were proceeding erroneously. Dowdall v. Superior Court, 183 Cal. 348, 352, 191 P. 685. If the petitioner is correct in the view that the question involved in the action pending in the respondent court has been concluded, it is its duty to present such objection to that court in the first instance. Grinbaum v. Superior Court, 189 Cal. 741, 209 P. 1005.

[3-5] The settled law of this state on the question we are now deciding is well expressed in a quotation from a very recent decision of the District Court of Appeal, in a case in which it was sought to prohibit the superior court from proceeding with a pending action on the ground that the question before it was res adjudicata:

"As this question ordinarily arises, the trial court is not necessarily divested of jurisdiction of an action by a judgment which is res adjudicata. It has jurisdiction in the first instance to pass upon that very question and make disposition of the cause accordingly. If it determines the matter erroneously, the injured party has his remedy by an appeal, which has been uniformly held is an available and adequate remedy. Burge v. Justice Court, 11 Cal. App. 213, 104 P. 581; Conlan v. Superior Court, 12 Cal. App. 420, 107 P. 577; So. Pac. M. Co. v. Superior Court, 14 Cal. App. 240, 111 P. 625. In the ordinary case where a judgment is relied upon as a bar, the prohibitive writ could not be utilized for the purpose of preventing the court from deciding erroneously or for the purpose of regulating or controlling its procedure. Van Hooscar v. Railroad Com., 189 Cal. 228, 207 P. 903; Apartment etc., Financing Co. v. Will, 69 Cal. App. 276, 231 P. 349, and cases there cited. In this regard we find nothing to distinguish this from the ordinary case. Undoubtedly, if the respondent court determines that the judgment rendered is a bar to the pending case, it will enter the proper judgment, but, until it shall have rendered some judgment, we are not free to interfere." City of Pasadena v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 268 P. 664.

[6] Our conclusion in this matter may, therefore, be briefly stated as follows: The pending action is equitable in its nature, and respondent court has original jurisdiction in such cases under section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution. It is well settled that the court in such an action has the power to grant relief against unfair competition by enjoining the use of a name by one who seeks by imitation or other artifice or device to induce persons to deal with him in the belief that they are dealing with another. Such is the purpose of the plaintiff in the pending action. Whether the plaintiff therein should prevail in whole or in part or at all may not be inquired into in a proceeding in prohibition. The question is, has the respondent court jurisdiction to entertain the controversy? Jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine the cause. Having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter of the action, the respondent court has the power to determine all questions of law and fact properly presentable under the issues tendered. One of the issues of law tendered by the defendants in said action is the proper construction of certain provisions of the Bank Act (St. 1909, p. 87). The respondent court has jurisdiction to construe the provisions of the statute and the effect of the action of the superintendent taken thereunder, and that jurisdiction in the first instance is full and complete. If the court's determination as to that matter, or as to any other issue of law or fact, presented in the case, be erroneous, the remedy of the petitioner, under the record here presented, is by appeal.

The application for a peremptory writ of prohibition is denied.

FOSTER v. FERNANDES et al. (Sac. 4015.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 1, 1928.

1. Action $\S$ 50(6)—Complaint in action to recover dairy cattle held not demurrable for misjoinder of causes of action or defendants; "affect all parties to action" (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 427).

Where allegations in complaint in action for possession of dairy stock were sufficient to support proof of a relationship between all defendants, either of principal and agent, or of coactors in unlawfully taking possession of cattle, there was no misjoinder of causes of action or of parties defendant, as against objection that, because each defendant was alleged to have possession of a certain number of cattle, the cause of action as to each did not "affect all the parties to the action," as required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 427.

2. Limitation of actions $\S$ 127(3)—Amending complaint, alleging certain defendants claimed interest in cattle, without right, to allege unlawful possession as to all, held germane to original cause, as respects tolling statute.

Where original complaint in action for possession of dairy stock alleged that certain defendants claimed without right some interest in the cattle, and as to other defendants unlawful possession was alleged, and amended complaint, filed thereafter, alleged unlawful possession as to all defendants, held, that filing of original complaint tolled statute of limitations, because amendments were germane to original cause of action.

3. Judgment $\S$ 683—Foreclosure judgment for plaintiff, assignee of chattel mortgage, held binding on defendants in mortgagee's suit for chattels.

Judgment in suit to foreclose chattel mortgage on cattle, in which it was determined in the trial court and on appeal that certain defendants had no interest in cattle, held admissible, in evidence against said defendants in subsequent action by chattel mortgagee to recover possession of cattle, in which said defendants set up same claim, notwithstanding plaintiff in foreclosure action was bank to which mortgage was assigned for security; there being such privity between bank and mortgagee as to render parties the same.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 1056(1)—Refusing to admit default judgment involving other cattle, recovered by defendants against another, held not prejudicial.

In action to recover possession of dairy cattle, exclusion from evidence of default judgment recovered in another action by defendants against a third person held not prejudicial error, where such other action involved other cattle.

5. Replevin $\S$ 71(2)—Evidence that defendants paid judgment in foreclosure action held properly rejected in subsequent possessory action where foreclosure judgment determined defendants had no interest in cattle.

In action for possession of dairy stock, evidence that defendants paid judgment in previous mortgage foreclosure action involving same cattle held properly excluded, on ground that said defendants were strangers to the title under the judgment in the foreclosure action, and that they could not acquire title by payment of the judgment, which determined that they had no interest in cattle.

6. Replevin $\S$ 72—Evidence that certain defendants were good-faith purchasers from codefendant previously taking possession under claim and delivery process warranted judgment for them as against prior oral transferee (Civ. Code, $\S$ 3440).

Purchasers in good faith from one who took possession of cattle under process in claim and delivery action, in which no redelivery bond was filed by defendant, who subsequently suffered default and went into bankruptcy, held entitled to protection in their purchases, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 3440, against one claiming under prior oral transfer from defendant in such action, not followed by any delivery or change of possession.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by M. Elma Foster against J. V. Fernandes and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed in part, and in part modified and affirmed.

See, also, 200 Cal. 274, 252 P. 726; 201 Cal. 450, 257 P. 503.

G. W. Zartman and Russell & Heid, all of Tulare, and Farnsworth, Burke & Maddox, of Visalia, for appellants.

Feemster & Cleary, of Visalia, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action for the possession of certain dairy stock. The cause was tried before a jury, which rendered a verdict fixing the value of the stock at $2,250 and $500 damages for detention. Judgment was entered against the several defendants for possession, or, if delivery could not be had, for the value and damages against the defendants Fernandes only.

[1] In support of the appeal it is contended by the defendants that their demurrer to the second amended complaint for misjoinder of causes of action and of parties defendant should have been sustained. Each defendant was alleged to have possession of a certain number of the cattle, and it is insisted that the cause of action as to each defendant did not "affect all the parties to the action," as required by section 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The allegations of control of the cattle by the defendants Fernandes were sufficient, we think, to support proof of a relationship, either of principal and agent, or of coactors in unlawfully taking possession of the cattle, between the defendants Fernandes and their codefendants. There was, therefore, no defect of misjoinder. More v. Finger, 128 Cal. 313, 60 P. 933; Costello v. Bell, 27 Cal. App. 102, 148 P. 948; 5 Cal. Jur. p. 175.

[2] It is next contended that the plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations. The original complaint was filed February 20, 1926. The proof was sufficient to support the implied finding of the jury that the cattle came into the possession of the Fernandes not earlier than February 21, 1923. All of the defendants were made parties to the original complaint. As to all of them, except the Fernandes, it was alleged that they claimed without right some interest in the cattle. As to the Fernandes unlawful possession was alleged. An amended complaint, filed some two weeks later, alleged unlawful possession as to all of the defendants. The filing of the original complaint tolled the statute, for the reason that the amendments were germane to the original cause of action.

[3] It is next contended that the court erred in admitting in evidence the judgment in a foreclosure suit involving the title to the same cattle found by the jury to be involved in this action. That action was filed in April, 1923. The plaintiff herein was the mortgagee under the chattel mortgage, and the assignor for purposes of security of the plaintiff bank in the action to foreclose the mortgage. The Fernandes were parties defendant in the foreclosure suit. It was determined therein, both in the trial court and on appeal, that the Fernandes had no interest in said cattle. Trust & Sav. Bk. v. Tulleo, Fernandes et al., 74 Cal. App. 629.¹ The subject-matter of interest of the Fernandes in the cattle was the same in that action as in this action, and it is clear from the record that there was such privity between the bank and Mrs. Foster in that action as to render the parties the same. The judgment was therefore admissible as against the defendants Fernandes.

[4] The next point made by the defendants is that the court erred in refusing to admit in evidence a default judgment in the case of Fernandes v. Tulleo. That was an action commenced in January, 1923, to recover possession of certain cattle sold by the Fernandes to Tulleo under a contract of conditional sale which the Fernandes claimed Tulleo had breached, a portion of which cattle the Fernandes claimed were the cattle involved in the present action. The jury in the present action impliedly found that the cattle involved herein were not included within the cattle conditionally sold to Tulleo under said contract. As the action of Fernandes v. Tulleo involved cattle which were found not to be involved in the present action, we find no prejudicial error in refusing to admit said judgment in evidence.

[5] The defendants Fernandes offered to prove that on the going down of the remittitur in the foreclosure case they paid the judgment in that case, amounting to a balance due on the secured note of $1,578.41. The court refused to admit this evidence, on the ground that the Fernandes were strangers to the title under the judgment in the foreclosure action, and that they could not acquire title by payment of the judgment, which determined that they had no interest in the cattle. We find no error in the ruling.

[6] The plaintiff herein asserts title to and right of possession of said cattle under an oral transfer thereof from Tulleo in November, 1922. The Fernandes claim under the judgment against Tulleo. The other defendants claim as purchasers in good faith from the Fernandes. The evidence shows that the Fernandes took possession of the cattle involved herein in February, 1923, under process in their claim and delivery action against Tulleo. No redelivery bond was filed by Tulleo, and he subsequently suffered default and went into bankruptcy. After the Fernandes thus took possession of said cattle, and before the commencement of this action, they sold them in separate portions to the other defendants herein. The record shows that these purchases were made in good faith. We think they should be protected in their purchases under section 3440 of the Civil Code, for the reason that it is established without conflict in the evidence that the oral transfer of title to Mrs. Foster in November, 1922, was not followed by any delivery or change of possession from Tulleo, who was then and for months thereafter continued to remain in possession of the cattle. We are satisfied that the contentions of the defendants, other than the Fernandes, that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment for possession as against them, should be sustained.

As to the defendants Fernandes the evidence showed that the cause of action proved against them was one in conversion. They retained possession of 4 head out of the 46 head claimed by the plaintiff, but we treat this as a negligible quantity and unimportant, in view of the relief to which the plaintiff is otherwise entitled. The evidence is abundantly sufficient to support the finding that the Fernandes had no interest in the cattle; that they unlawfully took possession of the same, and disposed of them to innocent parties prior to the commencement of this action. Under the proof, the court should have granted the relief which the evidence called for, by entering a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants Fernandes for the value of the cattle, in the amount found by the jury to be their value at the time of the conversion, to wit, $2,250, with interest from the date of the conversion (section 3336, Civ. Code), but without damages for detention.

The judgment for possession as to all of the defendants is reversed. The judgment as to the defendants Fernandes is modified to read as follows:

"It is adjudged that plaintiff do have and recover from the defendants J. V. Fernandes and Mary V. Fernandes the sum of $2,250, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from February 27, 1922," —with costs against said defendants as taxed in the trial court. As so modified, the judgment against the defendants Fernandes is affirmed; the appellants to recover costs on appeal.

H. K. McCANN CO. v. DENNY et al.★

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 1, 1923.

Hearing Denied in Bank Oct. 1, 1923.

1. Limitation of actions $\S$ 58(4)—Liability of corporation for reimbursement of agent accruing on agent's disbursement for corporation, action on stockholders' liability within three years thereafter was timely (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 359).

Where advertising contract provided that plaintiff, as agent of corporation, would pay advertising bills, charging such amount to corporation's account, no liability arose until such bills were paid by the agent for the corporation, and hence action against stockholders of corporation, after it became insolvent, commenced within three years after corporation incurred liability to the agent for reimbursement, was timely, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 359.

2. Limitations of actions $\S$ 46(2)—Action against corporation's stockholders on contract, more than three years after date held barred, notwithstanding canceling contingency which did not occur (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 359).

Action to recover from stockholders of insolvent corporation on advertising contract, terms of which provided for a monthly service charge of \$250, not commenced within three years after date, notwithstanding provision that such service charge was to be credited with certain commissions earned by plaintiff in course of advertising campaign, which, amounting to certain sum, would extinguish said fee, such contingency, however, not occurring, held barred by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 359; a present liability on part of corporation arising as of date of agreement.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by the H. K. McCann Company against O. Denny and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

Winfield Dorn and A. L. Shannon, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Dunne, Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison and Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS J. In this action the plaintiff sought to recover certain sums alleged to be due to it from the defendants upon the stockholders' liability of said defendants and each of them as stockholders of the Luthy Company, a California corporation, which had been organized for the purpose of manufacturing a certain automobile storage battery, and which had entered into certain agreements with the plaintiff, a national advertising agency, for the performance of certain services by the latter in conducting an advertising campaign and in preparing and placing the advertising to be done by the Luthy Company, in the course of marketing its products, in periodicals and upon signboards throughout the country.

The complaint is in two counts, in the first of which the plaintiff seeks to recover from said defendants the proportionate sums claimed to be due from each under their aforesaid stockholders' liability on account of certain payments of money which were made by the plaintiff to various periodicals with which it had placed the advertising of its principal, the Luthy Company, from time to time, and the bills for which the plaintiff had paid under the terms of its arrangement with its principal; wherein it was in substance agreed that the bills for advertising were to be sent by the publishers thereof to said advertising agency, and when paid by it were to be charged to the account of its principal. The evidence in the case shows, and the court finds, that while the aforesaid agreement between the plaintiff and the Luthy Company was entered into in April, 1921, the first advertising contracts placed by said agency thereunder bore a date not earlier than August 22, 1921, and such advertising thereafter continued to be placed with various publications up to April 6, 1922, when the Luthy Company, having become involved in financial difficulties, ceased advertising. Between the two foregoing dates the plaintiff, as shown by its bill of particulars, paid on account of its principal the several advertising bills, the sum of which furnishes the basis of recovery sought by the first count of plaintiff's complaint herein.

The main defense urged by the defendants herein is that of the statute of limitations embodied in section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to the liability of stockholders of corporations. The trial court sustained the defendants' plea in that regard, and by its judgment determined that as to the plaintiff's first alleged cause of action it should take nothing, but that said defendants were entitled to have judgment in their favor for their costs.

As to the plaintiff's second count or cause of action, it is also based upon the terms of its aforesaid agreement with the Luthy Company, made and entered into on or about April 6, 1921, by the terms of which it was agreed and understood that, beginning from the date thereof, the plaintiff would be entitled to charge a service fee of $250 a month against its said principal for its services in planning and handling the latter's advertising campaign. This initial fee, however, was to be credited with certain commissions which might be earned by said plaintiff in the course of said campaign, and which, when the same amounted to a certain sum, were to extinguish said service fee. It appears from the plaintiff's bill of particulars that at the time of the commencement of this action on May 8, 1924, there was due to said plaintiff from said corporation on account of its aforesaid service fee the sum of $2,934.67 for the proportionate share of which, claimed to be due from said defendants upon their aforesaid stockholders' liability, plaintiff sues in its second count or cause of action.

As to this cause of action the defendants also pleaded the statute of limitations as embodied in section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and as to this count also the trial court by its judgment determined that the plaintiff was entitled to take nothing, but that said defendants were entitled to a judgment in their favor for their costs. From the judgment of the trial court upon both causes of action, the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

[1] Upon the plaintiff's first alleged cause of action we are of the opinion that the trial court was in error in holding that it was subject to the plea of the statute of limitations relating to the commencement of an action upon the liability of stockholders of a corporation. It sufficiently appears from the record herein that in entering into and carrying out its agreement with the Luthy Company for the placing of its advertising, the plaintiff was acting throughout as the agent of said corporation and not otherwise; that the advertising which, beginning in the month of August, 1921, it placed for and on account of its said principal, was advertising for which the Luthy Company was primarily liable to the various publications wherein such advertising was published; and that, in providing in its agreement with said corporation that the bills for such advertising were to be sent primarily to the plaintiff for payment, it was to act as the agent of said corporation, and not otherwise, in the payment of these bills, and upon payment of the same was entitled to charge the amount thereof against the account of its said principal. It would seem to be clear that, until such advertising began to be placed and published, no liability of any kind had been created as to such corporation, and it would further seem to be clear that, after the aforesaid date of the placing of such advertising and of the creation for the first time of any liability on the part of the Luthy Company on account of the publication thereof, no liability arose on its part to reimburse the plaintiff for any sums expended by it by virtue solely of its aforesaid agency, until in that capacity the plaintiff had made payment on account of its principal's bills.

The case as thus presented, while not precisely analogous to the cases presently to be discussed, is not distinguishable in principle from these cases as to the rule applicable to the liability of stockholders. In the case of Yule v. Bishop, 133 Cal. 574, 62 P. 68, 65 P. 1094, it was held that the liability of the stockholders of a corporation to one who had become an indorser upon the promissory note of said corporation, and who as such indorser had been required to pay said note and thus extinguish the same, did not arise until the payment of said note by such indorser, and hence that the liability of the stockholders to such indorser would not be barred by the statute of limitations until three years after the date of such payment. In the case of Ryland v. Commercial Savings Bank, 127 Cal. 525, 59 P. 989, which was an action by a surety upon the note of a corporation to recover from the stockholders thereof upon their liability as such upon the payment by said surety of the note of said corporation, it was held that the statute of limitations was not set in motion until the payment by the surety of the corporate note. In the case of Wills v. Woolner, 21 Cal. App. 528, 132 P. 283, the rule laid down in the foregoing cases was followed and distinguished from a line of cases presently to be commented upon.

In the later case of Finch v. Finch, 68 Cal. App. 72, 228 P. 553, the line of cases above referred to, beginning with the case of Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 612, 34 P. 335, 37 Am. St. Rep. 87, was reviewed and followed, and it was held that the liability of the stockholders of a corporation for their proportionate share of its indebtedness took its rise as of the date of the contract creating such indebtedness and that the action upon such stockholders' liability must be commenced within three years from such date. The decision in that case has been consistently followed by this court and the appellate courts in a line of cases depending upon a similar state of facts. Santa Rosa Nat. Bank v. Barnett, 125 Cal. 407, 58 P. 85; Gardiner v. Royer, 167 Cal. 238, 139 P. 75; Pidgeon v. San Diego, etc., Co., 47 Cal. App. 676, 190 P. 1048, Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, 171 Cal. 500, 153 P. 939; Chambers v. Farnham, 182 Cal. 191, 194, 187 P. 732. In each of the two cases last above cited it has been pointed out by this court that the conclusions arrived at by it in the line of cases last above cited are in no wise inconsistent with the decisions of this court in the case of Yule v. Bishop, supra, and the cases which have followed it, and the distinction which is therein drawn between these two lines of decisions is this: That, in the payment by a guarantor or surety of the indebtedness of the corporation the obligation of the corporation was thereby extinguished, and that the right of the guarantor or surety to reimbursement from the stockholders of the corporation was a new liability arising at the time of the payment of the corporate note by the indorser or surety.

The distinction thus drawn between these two lines of decision has its exact application in principle to the plaintiff's first cause of action herein, since the obligation of the Luthy Company to reimburse the plaintiff for the payment, in the capacity of its agents, of its advertising bills could not arise until such bills had been paid and the obligation of its principal thereby extinguished; whereupon, for the first time, the liability of the stockholders of the corporation to the plaintiff by reason of such payment would arise. We are thus of the opinion that as to the first cause of action the case of Yule v. Bishop, supra, and the decisions which have followed it, have full application, and hence that the trial court was in error in holding that as to said first cause of action the statute of limitations had run in favor of the defendants.

[2] As to the second cause of action, however, it would seem to be equally clear that the principles announced in the case of Hunt v. Ward, supra, and in the decisions of this court and the appellate courts which have followed it, should be given full application to the state of facts shown to exist as the basis for said second cause of action. By the terms of the agreement between the plaintiff and the Luthy Company, the former was entitled to charge a service fee of $250 a month for its services in planning and carrying forward the advertising campaign of said corporation. A present liability on the part of said corporation for the payment of such service fee thus arose as of the date of such agreement, and hence, of necessity, the liability of the stockholders of said corporation by reason of the obligation thus incurred also took its rise as of the date thereof. The fact that the obligation of the corporation for the payment of such service fee was subject to a contingency in the nature of a condition subsequent which might result in its extinction could in no wise affect the stockholders' liability of these defendants, since such contingency never arose. Under the foregoing decisions applicable to such a situation, the action of the plaintiff against the defendants as such stockholders must have been commenced within three years from and after the date of the creation of their aforesaid liability, and, not having been so commenced, the trial court was correct in sustaining the plea of the statute of limitations as to such second cause of action.

It follows, from the foregoing, that the judgment of the trial court must be reversed in so far as it relates to the plaintiff's first cause of action, and must be affirmed in so far as it affects the plaintiff's second cause of action. It is so ordered.

CHADWICK v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (L. A. 10787.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 4, 1928.

1. Judgment $\Leftarrow$ 306—It is court's duty to remedy clerical errors, though carried into judgment.

It is duty of court to remedy clerical errors, even though carried into judgment, by amendment, without vacating judgment, the performance of which will be enforced in the furtherance of justice.

2. Mandamus $\Leftarrow$ 52—Mandamus lies to correct clerical mistake in judgment in amount of damages stated for condemnation of property.

Where findings of fact and conclusions of law in condemnation proceedings approved and confirmed referee's award of damages of $1,190 for land and $1,746 for improvements, but total damage was carried into judgment at $1,190, instead of $2,936, as referees reported, in absence of mention of change or modification of such report and no showing otherwise, held an obvious clerical error, which court may be compelled by mandamus to remedy, by amending findings and conclusions, without vacating the judgment.

In Bank.

Application by Elizabeth K. Chadwick for a writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County and others, to compel respondents to amend findings of fact, conclusions of law, and interlocutory judgment in suit condemning petitioner's property. Writ granted.

Superseding opinion of the District Court of Appeal, 268 P. 918.

Allan Frankel, Sidney A. Wilson, and A. V. Kaufman, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., Herman Mohr, Deputy City Atty., and E. H. Delorey, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. Petitioner seeks through this proceeding the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandamus, directing that respondent superior court amend the findings of fact, conclusions of law and interlocutory judgment entered in a certain condemnation suit in which petitioner was a defendant.

The complaint in said condemnation action was filed in September, 1925. In October, 1926, the referees appointed to make the award of damages filed their report, which with reference to the property here in question read as follows:

"That the referees, having viewed said property, have ascertained, assessed, and found the compensation proper to be paid to the persons owning or having an interest in each parcel of land sought to be taken, and they respectfully report as follows:

Parcel 67: Value of land taken.....	$1,190
Severance damages	—
Value of improvements.....	1,746
Total compensation proper to be paid to the defendant, Elizabeth K. Chadwick, successor in interest to the defendant Herbert Kaufman, as the owner of said parcel of land	$2,936"

At the hearing upon said referees' report the superior court approved "the said award of $2,936 to the defendant Elizabeth K. Chadwick" as above set forth. The findings of fact and conclusions of law likewise approved and confirmed said report in toto, but the value of petitioner's property was therein listed at the sum of $1,190, instead of $2,936, and later petitioner was notified that a check for said amount, covering her award, was ready for delivery to her. She thereupon moved respondent court to amend said findings of fact and conclusions of law, and also the interlocutory judgment, for the purpose of correcting the amount of the award due her to conform to the sum recommended by said referees, to wit, $2,936, as approved and confirmed by the court. Said motion was predicated upon the affidavit of her attorney, in which he averred that he had never received a copy of said findings of fact and conclusions of law as prepared in said condemnation action; that, when petitioner advised him of the deficiency of $1,746 in the amount of the check tendered to her, he immediately investigated the matter and found that, although said findings stated, " * * * The awards, as set forth in the report of the referees, are proper and correct, and said report should be approved and confirmed, * * *" nevertheless the sum of $1,190 only, instead of $2,936, as awarded by said report, was set forth therein as the total sum due petitioner, and no reference was made to said omitted item of $1,746. Affiant further averred that said discrepancy in the figures "appears to be an error of computation or omission on the part of the clerk or stenographer who transcribed such findings of fact and conclusions of law. * * *"

It was stipulated upon hearing of the motion, as was likewise again stipulated upon the oral arguments before the District Court of Appeal, that the facts contained in said affidavit were true. At the suggestion of the court the motion was then submitted without evidence; that is, the court had before it only the judgment roll and said affidavit, the facts of which were stipulated to be true. It was denied, and petitioner immediately thereafter instituted this proceeding to compel correction of said findings and judgment.

It is the contention of respondents that there was no evidence before the superior court upon hearing of the motion to prove that a clerical or any error was made in stating the sum due petitioner in said findings and judgment; furthermore, assuming that a clerical error was made, there was no abuse of discretion by the court in denying the motion, because of the intervention of rights of third parties. Petitioner, on the contrary, argues that the question of abuse of discretion does not enter into the case; that the error was purely clerical, and it was therefore the duty of the court to amend the findings and judgment to conform to the general finding of approval and confirmation of the referees' award.

[1, 2] Not only has the court power to remedy clerical errors, as distinguished from judicial errors, which may be corrected only through motion for new trial or by appeal, but it is a plain duty to remedy them, the performance of which will be enforced in the furtherance of justice. In other words, a mistake purely clerical, such as one with respect to the computation or statement of a sum, is an obvious error, and, though it appears in the findings and conclusions and is carried into the judgment, it may and should be corrected by amendment without vacating the judgment (Erickson v. Stockton, etc., Co., 148 Cal. 206, 82 P. 961, and cases there cited), and the performance of this duty may be compelled by mandamus (Boust v. Superior Court, 162 Cal. 343, 122 P. 956); hence if the error here before us was purely clerical, it must follow that the relief sought by petitioner should be afforded her.

To our mind the facts of this case are conclusive, and support the contention of petitioner, for it was at the time the motion was heard, and is now, demonstrable from the record that said item of $1,746 was omitted through a clerical misprision. The findings expressly "approved and confirmed" as "proper and correct" the award set forth in the referees' report, which as to the property here involved was $2,936. There is no mention of any change or modification of said report; the findings approve and confirm it as a whole. In incorporating from the report into the findings the specific awards, there was made an obvious error in the omission of said item of $1,746, plainly due to inadvertence of clerk or copyist. What other possible explanation of it could there be? Respondents offer none.

Under this situation we can see no room for the operation of the contention that the status of the parties has so changed that petitioner must surrender her property for public use without compensation, because not to do so would work an inconvenience to the city of Los Angeles or other parties. Likewise, there is nothing to be found in the cases of McKannay v. McKannay, 68 Cal. App. 709, 230 P. 218, and County of Los Angeles v. Rindge, 69 Cal. App. 72, 230 P. 468, opposed to the holding here made.

Let the writ issue.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

Action by Lillian Borland against the Key System Transit Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, and Donahue, Hynes & Hamilton, of Oakland (Frank S. Richards, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Albert J. O'Brien, Thomas J. Halpin and Langton A. Madden and Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. In this action to recover damages for personal injuries received by plaintiff as a result of a collision between an automobile in which she was riding and a street car operated by defendant transit company, defendant has appealed from judgment in her favor upon three grounds, to wit: In-sufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict and judgment, errors in instructions, and prejudicial misconduct of counsel for plaintiff.

[1] The collision occurred August 14, 1924, about 8 p. m., at the intersection of Fifty-Eighth street and Telegraph avenue, a heavily traveled main thoroughfare between Oakland and Berkeley, Cal. Plaintiff and her husband, in their Ford coupé, were proceeding westerly on Fifty-Eighth street. Reaching said intersection, the husband, who was driving, brought the automobile to a complete stop, allowing north-bound vehicular traffic on Telegraph avenue to pass. He then looked to his right and saw a street car southbound on Telegraph avenue. Judging, however, that it was far enough away to permit him to cross in safety, he started up; but, as he was about to pull across onto the south-bound track, his wife screamed "that car is right on top of us," whereupon he immediately swung around to the left to avoid being hit, if possible. He succeeded to such an extent that the street car merely hit the right rear side of the automobile, dragging it some distance. As a result, however, plaintiff sustained injuries of a painful and serious nature.

Although the evidence is to a certain extent conflicting, yet there is ample testimony in support of plaintiff's contention that, when they first saw the street car, it was such a distance away as should and would have allowed them to cross Telegraph avenue in perfect safety, had not said street car borne down upon them at a high and unusual rate of speed, and traversed more than a block without any warning of its approach. Appellant's contention of insufficiency of the evidence is predicated upon the claim that the testimony of the driver of the automobile conclusively shows contributory negligence on his part, which negligence is imputable to plaintiff, his wife, and under the established facts becomes solely a question of law. In other words, seeking to invoke the rule that, where the facts are settled and it clearly appears that the injured party did not exercise ordinary care, the question of contributory negligence is a question of law (Green v. Southern California Railway Co., 138 Cal. 1, 70 P. 926), appellant contends that said driver, according to his own testimony, did not look in the direction of the south-bound street car between the time he determined to start up and the time he reached the south-bound car track; whereas, had he but glanced in that direction again, he would have seen the rate of speed at which the car was bearing down upon them and could have avoided the accident, and that such facts establish his contributory negligence as a matter of law.

There is no merit in the contention. Here the question was clearly one of fact, upon which the verdict of the jury is conclusive. The jurors were entitled to weigh the evidence in the light of all inferences favorable to plaintiff and to defendant fairly deducible therefrom, and to finally adopt the view that said driver did in fact use due care, in that he first came to a complete stop, and, before proceeding across the tracks, carefully looked to the right and left; that he then rightfully assumed that he need fear no danger from the street car, which he observed some distance away, and accordingly he operated the automobile slowly across the intervening space.

"In Davis v. Pacific Power Co., 107 Cal. 563, 575, 40 P. 952, 48 Am. St. Rep. 156, it is said: 'It is only where the undisputed facts are such as to leave but one reasonable inference, and that of negligence, that the court is justified in taking the question from the jury.' Where either negligence is set up as a cause of action or contributory negligence pleaded as a defense, it seldom happens that the question is so clear from doubt that the court can undertake to say as a matter of law how the jury should find upon such issues. * * * Whether an inference of negligence on the part of the plaintiff in not further watching the approach of the automobile was justified depended upon whether she was justified in this reasoning. As said in Johnson v. Thomas, 5 Cal. Unrep. 256, 43 P. 578: 'It was certainly an inference upon which minds might well differ, and hence proper to be submitted to a jury, under proper instructions.'"

"Contributory negligence is a question of law only when the court is impelled to say that from the facts reasonable men can draw but one inference, and that an inference pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his injury. Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513; Wing v. Western Pacific, 41 Cal. App. 251, 182 P. 969; Bailey v. Market St. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 320, 328, 42 P. 914." Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 343, 208 P. 125, 129.

[2] So numerous are the California cases holding that, as with the negligence of defendant, so the question of contributory negligence of plaintiff is ordinarily one of fact for the jury, it is almost unnecessary to cite authority to this effect. See 19 Cal. Jur. § 141, p. 735, and many cases there cited; Lawrence v. S. P. Co., 189 Cal. 434, 208 P. 966; Morris v. Standard Oil Co., 188 Cal. 468, 205 P. 1073. Clark v. Bennett, 123 Cal. 275, 55 P. 908, which presents facts analogous to those of the instant case, is directly in point, and upholds our conclusion above announced. The same is true of the case of Campbell v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 137 Cal. 565, 70 P. 624. See, also, Scott v. San Bernardino Valley, etc., Co., 152 Cal. 604, 93 P. 677; Commonwealth Bonding Co. v. Pacific Electric Co., 42 Cal. App. 573, 184 P. 29; Smith v. Southern Pacific Co., 201 Cal. 57, 255 P. 500; and Dawson v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co. (Cal. App.) 255 P. 215.

The instruction which is the subject of appellant's chief attack correctly states the law. It contains the identical language of an instruction, the correctness of which was upheld on appeal in the case of Commonwealth Bonding Co. v. Pacific Electric Co., supra. The other instructions touching the same subject, criticized by appellant, either considered as a whole or standing alone, likewise state the law as set forth in said authority, and are fully sustained by it and by the other cases last hereinabove cited.

[3] The remaining ground urged for reversal, that of alleged misconduct of counsel for plaintiff in the making of a certain remark in his closing argument to the jury, may also be dismissed from consideration. In the first place, counsel did not even finish the sentence which he started and which was immaterial to any issue in this case. He promptly admitted his error, stating he would never have thought of going outside of the record, had not counsel for appellant, by having first done so himself, invited such action. He asked the court to instruct the jury to disregard it on both sides. The jury was so instructed by the court, and the harm done, if in fact there was any, was thus cured by the prompt admonition of the court.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MALONE. (Cr. 3122.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 17, 1928.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 1133—Points urged for first time in petitions for rehearing of causes on appeal may be considered in capital cases.

Though ordinarily Supreme Court will not consider points urged for first time in petitions for rehearing of causes on appeal, rule may be relaxed in capital cases, and new point considered on rehearing.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 823(4)—Instruction on murder, held erroneous, where not bringing homicidal act within Code definition of murder, was not prejudicial, in view of other instructions.

Instruction to convict defendant of murder as charged, if jury believed beyond reasonable doubt that defendant killed deceased, was error for failing to bring homicidal act within terms of earlier instruction containing Code definition of murder, but was not misleading or injurious, in view of instruction defining killing of human being which would constitute murder, and principal instruction stating law defining crime of murder.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Douglas L. Edmonds, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied. For former opinion, see 269 P. 628.

Ernest Spagnoli and Walter F. Lynch, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, of Los Angeles, and John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] The appellant herein, upon petition for rehearing herein, for the first time urges that the trial court committed prejudicial error in giving to the jury the instruction presently to be considered. While ordinarily this court will not consider points urged for the first time in petitions for the rehearing of causes upon appeal, this rule has been relaxed in capital cases, and will be so in the instant case. The instruction complained of reads as follows:

"All murder which is perpetrated by means of poison, or lying in wait, torture, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which is committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery, burglary, or mayhem, is murder of the first degree; all other kinds of murder are of the second degree.

"If you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, John Joseph Malone, on or about the 7th day of December, 1927, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, killed Ruth Velda Malone, you should find the defendant guilty of murder as charged in the information, and fix the degree of the crime, and also, if you find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, the penalty thereof."

This instruction is erroneous as to that portion thereof which states:

"If you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, John Joseph Malone, on or about the 7th day of December, 1927, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, killed Ruth Velda Malone, you should find the defendant guilty of murder as charged in the information."

The instruction should have contained, after the word "killed," some apt phrase bringing the homicidal act within the terms of the earlier portion of the instruction, which contains the Code definition of murder. We are, however, of the opinion that the jury could not have been misled thereby, for the reason that the killing of a human being which would constitute murder had just been stated in the body of this very instruction, and for the further reason that, in the main body of the instructions already given, the whole law defining and governing the crime of murder and the duty of the jury with relation thereto had been fully, clearly, and correctly set forth. Taken in the light of the circumstances of this particular case, we have concluded that no miscarriage of justice has occurred through the error thus complained of.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

RICE v. DUNLAP. (Sac. 4054.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 1, 1928.

1. Usury $\S$ 26—Transaction whereby plaintiff discounted defendant's note through agent, retaining half of agent's commission for sale represented by note, in addition to interest on note, held usurious.

Where defendant, executing note for lumber purchased, appointed as agent to discount note salesman of seller, who was entitled to 15 per cent. commission on payment represented by note, and salesman transferred notes to plaintiff under agreement to pay plaintiff $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of face value of note, finding that transaction relating to discounting of note was directly between plaintiff and defendant through medium of salesman, and that retention of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in addition to interest provided by note was usurious, held valid.

2. Usury $\S$ 146—Plaintiff, discounting defendant's note under usurious transaction, could recover principal loaned, together with costs and attorney's fees provided in note.

Where court found that transaction whereby plaintiff discounted defendant's note through agent was usurious, by reason of plaintiff's retention of part of agent's commission in addition to interest, judgment denying plaintiff all recovery was erroneous; plaintiff being entitled to recover amount of principal loaned to defendant, together with costs and attorney's fees provided for in note, since only illegal portion of contract relating to interest charged was void.

3. Usury §142(2)—Right to recover treble amount of usurious interest must be asserted within year (Gen. Laws, Act 3757, subd. 3).

Under Gen. Laws, Act 3757, subd. 3, authorizing person paying usurious interest for loan to recover treble amount of interest paid, right to interest must be asserted within one year, as provided by statute.

4. Statutes §270—Parties to action reversed for new trial are entitled to benefit of changes in procedural law made up to time of new trial.

Parties to action reversed on appeal are entitled to benefit of any changes in adjective or procedural law which have been made by Legislature up to time of new trial.

5. Usury §143—Defendant, sued on note containing usurious interest provision, may counterclaim for treble interest paid, instead of bringing separate action (Code Civ. Proc. § 438, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1620).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 438, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1620, enlarging scope of counterclaim, defendant, sued on note containing usurious interest, may counterclaim for treble amount of interest paid on debt, instead of bringing independent action therefor.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; K. Van Zante, Judge.

Action by J. Clarence Rice, doing business under the firm name and style of the Rice Securities Company, against J. T. Dunlap, in which plaintiff filed a counterclaim. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. C. C. Russell, of Hanford, for appellant.
John G. Covert, of Hanford, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment against it in an action to recover upon two promissory notes executed and delivered by the defendant in the sum of $4,020 each, due in six months from the date thereof (September 13, 1923), with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum. The action was tried upon the complaint and the answer and counterclaim of defendant, which set up the alleged usurious character of the transaction evidenced by the notes. Upon this defense the trial court held with the defendant, and gave judgment that plaintiff take nothing.

The record shows that the defendant, J. T. Dunlap, had purchased from the Mitchell Virden Lumber Company $20,000 worth of stock; that it was necessary to pay 40 per cent. of the purchase price in cash. Not having cash, said defendant signed the two notes, payable to himself and aggregating $8,040, which amount represented 40 per cent. of the purchase price of the stock, and gave these notes to Samuel E. Whiting, the stock salesman and agent of the Mitchell Virden Lumber Company. Whiting was expressly made the agent of defendant Dunlap to sell and discount these notes, the notes containing the following provision:

"The maker or makers hereof hereby severally irrevocably appoint and authorize Samuel E. Whiting as agent to sell and discount this note for value, and hereby consent to, ratify, and confirm any sale or discounting hereof by the said agent, and hereby represent and guarantee to any purchaser hereof that there are no offsets, conditions, or equities in their favor in respect hereto."

It is alleged in the complaint that, by virtue of the aforementioned agreement, said Samuel E. Whiting sold said note to plaintiff herein, and said J. T. Dunlap, defendant, indorsed said note, and said note was delivered by Samuel E. Whiting, agent of said defendant, to plaintiff herein, and that plaintiff is still the owner and holder of said note, and the whole thereof, and entitled to the money due thereon.

It appears that Whiting acted as sales agent for the stock of the lumber company under an agreement whereby he was to receive 15 per cent. commission upon the initial cash payment for 40 per cent. of the purchase price of said stock sold. The plaintiff agreed with Whiting, as agent of defendant, that plaintiff would give cash for defendant's notes, provided Whiting would give to plaintiff one-half of his commission, or 7½ per cent. of the face value of the notes out of their proceeds. Accordingly plaintiff gave a net total of $7,437 cash for the notes, which was their face value, less 7½ per cent. Presumably, and inferable from the record, Whiting took the $7,437 cash to the lumber company and had it credited, together with the portion of his commission retained by the plaintiff, upon the purchase price of the stock bought by defendant. Defendant executed a note for $11,960 directly to the lumber company for the balance of the $20,000 purchase price of the stock.

[1] It is maintained that, as the transaction relating to the discounting of the notes was directly between plaintiff and defendant, through the medium of defendant's agent, Whiting, that the retention of 7½ per cent. of the face value of the notes, in addition to the interest provided therein, was usurious. The trial court so found, and with this finding we agree. As was said in the case of Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., 200 Cal. 609, 625, 255 P. 805, 807 (53 A. L. R. 725):

"Commissions and bonuses may be charged by the lender, but all such charges must, when added to the interest specified and spread over the whole period of forbearance, be kept within the limit set by law."

[2] This conclusion, however, does not support the judgment in this case, which denied all recovery to the plaintiff. The plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount of the principal loaned to the defendant (Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., supra), together with costs and attorney's fees provided for in the note. It is only the illegal portion of the contract—i. e., the portion relative to the interest charge—which is void and unenforceable. Because of the error in denying any recovery to plaintiff, the judgment must be reversed.

The answer alleged that defendant was entitled to a set-off or counterclaim in the sum of $2,894.40, representing treble the amount of interest alleged to have been paid by him upon said notes. The trial court made no finding upon this counterclaim, but merely denied to plaintiff the right to recover anything upon the notes. However, in view of our conclusion that the plaintiff may recover the amount actually loaned to defendant, and the reversal of the judgment upon that ground, it becomes pertinent to consider the right of the defendant to set up a counterclaim for treble the amount of interest alleged to have been paid by him to the defendant. The right to recover treble the amount of usurious interest paid is a statutory right, arising out of the following language:

"Every person * * * who for any loan * * * shall have paid or delivered any greater sum or value than is allowed to be received under the preceding sections * * * may * * * recover in an action at law against the person * * * who shall have taken or received the same * * * treble the amount of the money so paid or value delivered in violation of said sections, providing such action shall be brought within one year after such payment or delivery." Gen. Laws, Act 3757, subd. 3.

[3] The appellant contends, first, that the right to treble damages must be asserted by independent action, and not by way of counterclaim; and, second, that it must be asserted within the period prescribed by the statute—i. e., one year. About the correctness of the latter contention there can be no doubt, and defendant must show that the right has been asserted within the time prescribed. As to the right to enforce this claim by way of counterclaim, appellant relies upon the case of Farmers' National Bank v. Stover, 60 Cal. 387, holding that, under the federal statute against usury and the construction placed thereon by the Supreme Court of the United States, the right to recover double the amount of usurious interest may be asserted exclusively by way of separate and independent action. However, in the case of Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., supra, it was intimated that a different construction was to be placed upon our state statute, for it was said therein:

"So, also, in this case if the principal obligation is found to be due and on this account, when taken in connection with other charges, it exceeds the amount of the interest paid when trebled, it would be the duty of the court, as above noted, to state the account between the parties and to credit the offset of the interest trebled and generally to dispose of the whole issue presented by the cause."

It is true that this language was unnecessary to the decision of the questions involved in that case, but it expresses a view in harmony with the general policy of our courts to dispose of all phases of litigation in one action, whenever possible to do so.

[4, 5] However, whether or not, at the time of the trial of this action, it was permissible to offset the claim for treble the amount of usurious interest paid as against the principal amount of the debt, we need not decide, because the case is disposed of upon the appeal upon other grounds; however, since the action will probably be retried, and undoubtedly the defendant will then seek to assert a claim for treble the amount of interest paid, he will be entitled to the benefit of any changes in the adjective or procedural law which have been made by the Legislature up to the time of the new trial. This leads us to a consideration of the amendment of 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1620) to section 438, Code of Civil Procedure, enlarging the scope of the counterclaim in this state. It would appear that the section, as amended, covers the cause of action given by statute to the defendant herein against the plaintiff herein for treble the amount of interest paid upon the debt, provided such cause of action be asserted within the time prescribed by the statute of its creation.

The judgment is reversed.

RICE v. DUNLAP et ux. (Sac. 4055.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 1, 1928.

1. Usury ☞143—Plaintiff, suing on usurious note, could recover amount of original note, plus costs and attorney's fees, subject to defendant's right to recover treble interest by way of counterclaim (Gen. Laws, Act 3757, subd. 3).

In action on note, in which bonus was given by defendant for renewal of prior note, making note sued on usurious, judgment denying any recovery on note was erroneous, but plaintiff was entitled to recover amount of original note, plus costs and attorney's fees provided therein, subject to defendant's right to recover treble interest by way of counterclaim and set-off, under Gen. Laws, Act 3757, subd. 3.

2. Usury ☞142(2)—Party, paying usurious interest for loan, must exercise right to recover treble damages within year after payment (Gen. Laws, Act 3757, subd. 3).

Under Gen. Laws, Act 3757, subd. 3, authorizing person paying usurious interest for loan to recover treble interest, aggrieved party must exercise statutory right within one year after payment or delivery.

3. Usury ☞143—Right to recover treble interest paid on usurious loan may be asserted by way of counterclaim to action on loan (Gen. Laws, Act 3757, subd. 3).

Under Gen. Laws, Act 3757, subd. 3, right of aggrieved party to recover treble interest paid on usurious loan may be asserted by way of counterclaim to action to recover loan, and need not be asserted by separate action.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; K. Van Zante, Judge.

Action by J. Clarence Rice, doing business under the firm name and style of the Rice Securities Company, against J. T. Dunlap and wife, in which defendant filed a counterclaim. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. C. C. Russell, of Hanford, for appellant.

John G. Covert, of Hanford, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment denying recovery upon a promissory note signed by the defendants. The complaint is the usual one upon a promissory note, and sets forth the note, dated Hanford, Cal., January 30, 1924, payable one year from date, in the sum of $5,550, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and providing for the payment of attorney's fees in the event legal action became necessary to enforce payment.

In the answer it is alleged that the consideration for said note was only $5,000, but the due execution and delivery of the note and its nonpayment are admitted; but it is asserted that $3,251.75 is due upon the note, and no more. This amount is arrived at because of the further allegations of the answer to the effect that the defendants had originally given a note to plaintiff for $5,000, which had become due at the time of the execution of the note involved in this action; that defendants could not pay the same, and that plaintiffs exacted an additional $550 as a bonus for the renewal of this note for one year, and added such bonus to the face of the renewal note, and that interest aggregating $582.75 had been paid upon said renewal note, which interest was usurious because of the inclusion in the principal of the additional $550. The answer prays that treble the amount of said usurious interest so paid by defendants, or the sum of $1,748.25 be allowed as a credit upon the $5,000 note.

The trial court found that the note had been executed by defendants; that the consideration therefor was $5,000 and no more; that the note was unpaid, and that no part of the said note or interest thereon remains due, owing, or payable. The court concluded that the consideration exacted by plaintiff for the execution of said note was usurious, and that plaintiff should recover nothing in the action, and that defendants should recover their costs.

The plaintiff demurred to the answer upon numerous grounds, among which are: That the defense is barred by the provisions of subdivision 3 of Act 3757 of the General Laws of California and by subdivision 1 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The demurrer was sustained as to the first and second counterclaims seeking to set-off treble the amount of interest paid on July 31, 1924, and on January 30, 1925, and overruled as to the counterclaim for treble the amount of interest paid on July 30, 1925. The complaint was filed in March, 1926.

[1] The judgment is erroneous under the rule laid down in the case of Haines et al. v. Commercial Mortgage Co. et al., 200 Cal. 609, 622, 255 P. 805, 806 (53 A. L. R. 725), wherein it was said:

"Even a casual reading of the statute itself shows that the legislative intent was not to declare the whole contract void, but only the portion thereof relating to interest."

Judgment should have been entered for plaintiff for the amount of the original note, $5,000, plus attorney's fees and costs, unless it is permissible for the defendants to recover treble the amount of interest paid by way of counterclaim or set-off. The objections made by plaintiff and appellant to this procedure upon the part of defendants are two-fold and arise out of the provisions of the statute relating to usurious interest. Subdivision 3 of Act 3757, General Laws of California, reads, in part, as follows:

"Every person * * * who for any loan or forbearance of money * * * shall have paid or delivered any greater sum or value than is allowed to be received under the preceding sections, one and two, may * * * recover in an action at law against the person * * * who shall have taken or received the same * * * treble the amount of the money so paid or value delivered in violation of said sections, providing such action shall be brought within one year after such payment or delivery."

[2, 3] It is contended, first, that since the statute creates a new right and also provides a remedy for its enforcement, that remedy is exclusive and the position is taken that the aggrieved party must bring a separate and independent action in order to recover the penalty. The second contention is that the aggrieved party must exercise his statutory right within one year. We think the position of appellant is well taken as to the second objection, and the trial court so concluded in sustaining the demurrers to the first and second counterclaims of defendant.

As to the third counterclaim, which sets up a claim for treble the amount of interest paid within the period of one year, the demurrer was properly overruled. The objection that such claim might only be asserted in a separate action, and not by way of counterclaim, has been considered and answered by us, contrary to the contention of the appellant herein, in an opinion filed this day in the case of J. Clarence Rice, etc., v. J. T. Dunlap (No.) 4053, of the records of this court), 270 P. 196, involving the plaintiff herein and one of the defendants herein, and concerning another transaction between said parties, also held to be usurious. For the reasons stated in that opinion, we hold in the instant case that the assertion of the counterclaim for treble the amount of interest paid is proper, provided it is so asserted within the prescribed period of one year.

The judgment is reversed.

GREAT WESTERN SYNDICATE, a Corporation, et al., Petitioners, v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, and Hon. Walter Perry Johnson, as Judge Thereof, Respondents, et al. (S. F. 13134.) *

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 12, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 4, 1928.

In Bank.

Application for writ of mandate, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Walter Perry Johnson, Judge, to require settlement of bill of exceptions. Writ granted.

J. L. Smith, of San Francisco, for petitioners.
C. A. Linn, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This matter having come on regularly for hearing before this court upon the petition of the appellants for a writ of mandate to be directed to the superior court and the judge thereof, respondents herein, requiring the respondents to settle and approve the bill of exceptions of the appellants and petitioners herein in the case of Una Margaret Locke Paddon v. William Locke Paddon et al., now upon appeal in this court, and which is attached to the petition herein, and the respondents having appeared herein and presented certain specific objections to said bill of exceptions and to the settlement and approval thereof, wherein they have specifically directed the attention of this court and also of these petitioners to certain deficiencies and omissions in said bill of exceptions, and which the petitioners herein, having thus had their attention specifically directed thereto, may, if given a reasonable opportunity, be able to remedy in a revised, amplified, or amended bill of exceptions; and it appearing proper to this court that such reasonable opportunity should be by the respondents herein afforded to the petitioners herein so to do, and good cause appearing therefor:

It is ordered that the petitioners' aforesaid proposed bill of exceptions be and the same is hereby returned and presented to the respondents herein for further proceedings thereon, with a view to the revision, amendment, and eventual settlement thereof; that the order of the respondents, heretofore made and entered, disallowing and striking out said proposed bill of exceptions, be by said respondents so far modified as to permit the petitioners herein a reasonable time, hereby fixed at 60 days from and after the date of said modified order, within which to prepare and present such further revised or amended proposed bill of exceptions as would entitle the petitioners herein to have the same presented and treated as their proposed bill of exceptions in said cause, and to have the same considered amended and settled as provided by law, and as and for the appellants' bill of exceptions in said cause now on appeal in this court.

WASTE, C. J. I dissent. The matter comes here on a petition by the appellants for an order directing the respondent court and the judge thereof to settle and approve a bill of exceptions. There is attached to the petition a copy of a motion made in the lower court to dismiss all proceedings taken by the defendants (appellants) touching or concerning the preparation or settlement of the proposed bill of exceptions and to strike the same from the files. From the answer to the petition for this writ, verified by the trial judge, it appears that at the time of the hearing of the motion to strike the bill of exceptions from the files the petitioners represented to respondents that their proposed bill of exceptions contained all the material matters which should be set forth; that at that time the trial judge pointed out many material and important matters which were omitted from the proposed bill, that the testimony of many witnesses was omitted therefrom, and that the testimony of other witnesses was garbled or fabricated. The trial court and counsel for the plaintiff below pointed out, and now specify, some 33 particulars in that regard.

The petitioners contended that said matters were not proper matters to be contained in the bill, and petitioners failed and neglected to redraft the bill or embody therein the suggestions of court and counsel, or to make the same conform to the truth, but persisted and insisted that the draft as proposed by them was sufficient for all purposes. Thereupon the court made an order "finding that defendants' proposed bill of exceptions is entirely inadequate to explain the specifications of insufficiency of evidence to justify the decision or the exceptions or proceedings relied upon by defendants, and that it presented such a one-sided and garbled statement of but a small portion of the evidence as to be a sham, and that it is not susceptible of amendment or revision, so as to conform to the truth except by means of a complete new draft, the settlement of defendants' proposed bill of exceptions is disallowed, and the motion to strike out the same is granted."

From the verified return it appears that "then and only then did petitioners offer to amend or redraft their bill, and at that time petitioners did not state the particulars in which they would amend or redraft their bill, nor have they ever at any time prepared a proposed bill of exceptions other than the one annexed to their petition on file herein."

For these reasons, in my judgment, the writ of mandate should be denied.

TULARE COUNTY v. CITY OF DINUBA et al. (S. F. 11781.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 31, 1928.

1. Counties ⇨153½—Court cannot award part of public fund paid for use of county for legal services rendered county without contract or statute or equitable reason (Pol. Code, § 470, subd. 5; §§ 4000, 4001; § 4003, subd. 1; § 4041, subd. 16; § 4151; § 4153, subd. 3; § 4154; Const. 1879, art. 11).

In view of Pol. Code, § 470, subd. 5, sections 4000, 4001, section 4003, subd. 1, section 4041, subd. 16, section 4151, section 4153, subd. 3, and section 4154, power to award for legal services rendered county part of public fund paid into court for use of political subdivision of state, such as county, cannot be exercised, in absence of contract authorizing statute, or some exceptional equitable reason, without violating act creating scheme of county and township government in accordance with Const. 1879, art. 11.

2. Counties ⇨1—Counties are governmental agencies of state, whose property is public property.

Counties are governmental agencies of state, and property intrusted to their governmental management is public property.

3. Evidence ⇨83(1)—Official duty will be presumed performed, in absence of contrary showing.

In absence of contrary showing, it must be presumed that official duty will be performed.

4. Counties ⇨196(9)—Necessity of private citizen or public subdivision of state to sue to preserve rights of county, sufficient to justify allowance of attorney's fees against county, held not shown.

Where county, sought to be charged for attorney's fees, had filed suit prior in time to accomplish same general purpose as suit subsequently filed, and had refused to employ attorney seeking to charge it with attorney's fees, necessity for private citizen or political subdivision to bring suit to preserve rights of another county, or save it from loss, so as to justify allowance of attorney's fees, did not appear.

5. Attorney and client ⇨166(3)—Claim that attorney for counties rendered service of great value held not sustained by evidence showing case was settled by rules formulated by opposing party's representatives (St. 1905, p. 777).

Claim that service rendered by attorney for several counties in actions prosecuted against public utility companies, franchised under St. 1905, p. 777, were of greater value than those performed by others interested in formulating rules for settlement of action in determining amount due by utility corporations to counties, held not sustained by evidence showing case was settled on rules formulated by technical and legal representatives of public utility companies, and not rules suggested by attorney.

6. Counties ⇨126—Counties and municipalities hiring attorney held bound by contracts made, and award to attorney for services payable out of fund recovered for use of several counties would afford counties no relief.

Counties and municipalities hiring attorney to prosecute action in their behalf are bound by contracts made with attorney, and any award made to attorney payable out of fund recovered in court for use of several counties, would afford them no relief.

7. Counties ⇨125—Counties contracting for payment of attorney fees could not recoup against county not party to contract.

Where various counties contracted for payment of fees to attorney, to be paid out of funds recovered, such counties could not recoup amount payable to attorney against county not party to contract.

8. Costs ⇨103—Recovery of compensation out of common fund for services rendered common interest is based on agency, and requires contract expressly made, or superimposed by law.

Compensation is allowable to one out of common fund belonging to others for expenses incurred and services rendered on behalf of common interest on basis of representation or agency, and requires contract of employment expressly made, or superimposed by law on facts.

9. Liens ⇨7—Party preserving fund from waste arising from neglect of trustees is entitled to compensation payable from fund.

Where party rendering services for common interest has sought to preserve fund from waste and destruction arising from neglect and misconduct of trustees, such party may recover compensation for services payable out of fund.

10. Costs ☞99—Party profiting by action cannot thereby be charged with costs to party bringing action, in absence of contractual relation or equitable reason.

That person may be benefited by action brought by another is not of itself sufficient to justify court in assessing costs against person, who also profits by such action, in absence of some contractual relation or equitable reason sufficient to support allowance of costs.

11. Counties ☞125—County, prosecuting action against utility companies through own agencies, could not be compelled to pay part of fund recovered to attorney employed by other counties having no power to bind it (Broughton Act).

Where county was conducting litigation first brought to test validity of Broughton Act (St. 1905, p. 777), in good faith for benefit of state, until action was intercepted by another county, and first county was willing to go forward in action to reduce to possession funds to which it was entitled, it would not be equitable under evidence to compel such county, having district attorney of its own actively engaged in prosecuting action, and also employing special counsel, to pay substantial part of funds it is entitled to receive from public utilities company to attorney employed by other counties, brought into action, whose fee was fixed by other counties having no power to bind first county in employing such attorney.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal was taken from that part of a judgment entered in the superior court of the county of Fresno, to which court the questions involved in this appeal had been transferred by the superior court of the county of Tulare for decision, wherein said superior court of the county of Fresno refused to tax as costs of suit an attorney fee in favor of W. W. Middlecoff, Esq., in the sum of $11,980.47 against the share of a fund allocated to the county of Tulare and paid into court by the defendant San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation for the use and benefit of said county, on account of an action brought in the superior court of the county of Merced, in the name of the counties of Kings, Merced, and Madera and several municipalities situate within said counties, or within counties contiguous to one or more of said counties, to compel defendant San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation, a public utility engaged in the business of furnishing and transmitting to the public electricity for purposes of light, heat, and power by means of poles and wires placed upon public highways in the counties and municipalities herein named, to account to said counties and municipalities for the grant and use of said franchise privileges as provided by an act commonly designated the "Broughton Act," entitled "An act providing for the sale of street railroad and other franchises in counties and municipalities, and providing conditions for the granting of such franchises," etc. Chapter dlxxviii, Stats. 1905, p. 777. The refusal of the court to set aside and vacate that portion of said judgment decreeing that Attorney Middlecoff was not entitled to the allowance of an attorney's fee from the fund allocated to the county of Tulare, and its further refusal to enter a decree upon the findings made by the court that he was entitled to said attorney's fee, is made an additional ground of appeal.

Appellant Middlecoff in his individual capacity and the city of Dinuba gave notice of intention to move for a new trial, and also notice of intention to move for an order vacating the judgment as entered and for the entry of a different judgment on the findings. No other parties were joined with Mr. Middlecoff and said city in either notice of motion. On August 20, 1925, the motion for a new trial was withdrawn and dismissed. On the same day, August 20, 1925, the motion to vacate said judgment and enter a different judgment was denied. On August 28, 1925, W. W. Middlecoff, in his individual capacity and as the attorney for said city of Dinuba, gave notice of appeal and a notice to the clerk to prepare the transcript on appeal as provided by sections 953a, 953b and 953c, Code of Civil Procedure. In the notice of appeal and the notice to the clerk to prepare the transcript, other parties consisting of counties and cities, interested in the main question of an accounting to them under the interpretation given to said act in County of Tulare v. City of Dinuba, 188 Cal. 604, 206 P. 983, were also joined as appellants. It is perfectly obvious from the records before us that none of the other parties to the action, except Mr. Middlecoff, the county of Tulare, and the city of Dinuba were concerned or interested in the question as to what portion, if any, of the fund allocated to the county of Tulare properly belonged to the city of Dinuba, or whether Middlecoff was legally entitled to a fee to be paid out of the fund allocated to said county of Tulare. The amounts which all of the appellants, except the city of Dinuba, were indebted to Middlecoff by their respective contracts of employment, had been definitely fixed by a decree of court from which no appeal was taken, and none of said appellants, but the city of Dinuba and Middlecoff, could in any wise be benefited or injured by the result of this appeal. The presence of said parties to the record has no bearing whatever on the merits of the questions presented for decision, and they will receive no further consideration as appellants.

The cause comes to us on a petition for hearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division 2; Koford, P. J., writing the opinion. The order of transfer to this court was made mainly because of appellants' challenge to that portion of the opinion which expressed doubt as to "whether the principles of the equitable rule contended for can be applied to any county of the state of California where the Political Code has made a complete scheme providing when and by whom the county shall be represented. The scheme includes only the district attorneys, Attorney General, and special counsel employed in a designated way in certain cases." While it is true that this question was raised by counsel and responded to by the court as above set out, we nevertheless do not regard a decision on that single point to be absolutely necessary to an affirmation of the judgment, which will abundantly appear from our subsequent brief résumé of the early actions instituted by the County of Tulare against the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation, and its continuous efforts to make effective the Broughton Act and compel the public utility corporations of the state doing business within its borders to comply with its provisions, considered with respect to the part taken in the later stages of said litigation by Mr. Middlecoff. There is, however, much force in the observation made by the District Court of Appeal.

fees were taxed as costs of suit against a common fund reduced to a judgment as the result of an action brought by a private citizen on behalf of and for the benefit of a county, municipality or other branch of government, as authorities which should rule the decision in the instant case. We think none of the cases cited by appellants can be applied to governmental affairs in this state, in view of the very complete system which prevails in this state in the form of township and county government acts and general laws prescribing the powers and duties of state, township, and county officers, and which laws reserve to certain other public officers and boards supervisory control of the acts and conduct of its said ministerial and administrative officers in the performance of official duties.

[1] The power of the court to make an award or allocation of a part of a public fund paid into court for the use and benefit of a political subdivision of the state, such as a county, without the consent of and in the absence of any contractual agreement on the part of said county through its authorized agents to do so, and which county is by statute expressly provided with a law department charged with the exclusive duty of prosecuting and defending against all actions that should be brought in its behalf or defended against, subject only to the control and direction of its governing board and the supervisory control of the Attorney General of the state, may not only be doubted, but we may take a forward step into the field of assurance and say that an attempt to exercise such power in the absence of an authorizing statute or some exceptional and pressing equitable reason for so doing, which does not appear in the instant case, would be to violate the implied if not express language, meaning, and intent of the act creating our system or scheme of county and township government and general administrative laws in accordance with a policy that was adopted and which has been continuously followed since the adoption of our present Constitution of 1879.

Section 4000, Political Code, provides:

"Every county is a body corporate and politic, and as such has the powers specified in this title, [title II] and such other powers as are necessarily implied from those expressed."

Section 4001:

"Their powers can only be exercised by the board of supervisors, or by agents and officers acting under their authority, or authority of law."

A county has power to sue and be sued. Section 4003, subd. 1, Pol. Code. Section 4041, subd. 16, of said Code, provides that the board of supervisors has jurisdiction and power "to direct and control the prosecution and defense of all suits to which the county is a party and by a two-thirds vote of all the members, may employ counsel to assist the district attorney in conducting the same."

The general permanent powers of the board of supervisors are many and plenary in the exercise of its exclusive executive and legislative jurisdiction and power. It is given power to supervise the official conduct of all county officers and it is held to strict accounting in its duty of conserving and caring for the revenues and guarding the rights of the county. It is made the duty of the judge of the superior court of each county annually to call the attention of the grand jury to the provisions of law prescribing the duties of boards of supervisors and all county officers charged with protecting the interests and rights of the people to ascertain by a careful and diligent investigation whether the provisions of the law have been complied with and to note the result of the same in their report. Section 4151, Pol. Code.

Turning to the duties of district attorneys, we find by section 4153 and its subdivisions that the district attorney is the public prosecutor, and must attend the courts and conduct on behalf of the people all prosecutions for public offenses, and when not engaged in criminal proceedings in the superior court or in civil cases on behalf of the people must attend upon the magistrates, when requested by them, and perform other specific duties.

Subdivision 3, said section 4153, provides that the district attorney must "draw all indictments and informations, defend all suits brought in his county against the state or his county wherever brought, prosecute all recognizances forfeited in the courts of record, and all actions for the recovery of debts, fines, penalties, and forfeitures accruing to the state or his county." He is expressly made the legal adviser of the board of supervisors. Section 4154, Pol. Code.

By section 470, subd. 5, Political Code, it is made the duty of the Attorney General "to exercise supervisory powers over district attorneys in all matters pertaining to the duties of their offices, and perform any of such duties when, in his judgment, such action is advisable, and, from time to time require of them reports as to the condition of public business intrusted to their charge. * * *

[2-4] We have set out the foregoing sections of the Political Code as illustrative of the complete system of state, county, and township government under which the public business of the state is conducted. The counties are governmental agencies of the state and the property intrusted to their governmental management is public property. Reclamation District v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 672, 154 P. 845. The statute casts upon boards of supervisors and district attorneys the duty of protecting the public's interests, and to the end that there may not be a failure of performance of said duties the law subjects their official acts and duties to review, inspection, and supervision by still higher powers. Under such a scheme as is provided by our system for the transaction of public business the necessity for a private citizen or another public subdivision of the state of equal rank, such as a county, to bring a suit in order to preserve the rights of another county or to save it from a loss, such as would justify the allowance of attorney's fees against the latter, could scarcely arise; certainly not in a case such as this, in which the county sought to be charged had filed a suit prior in time and designed to accomplish the same general purpose as the suit last filed and which was pending, and had refused before the later case was filed to employ the attorney here seeking to charge it with an attorney's fee. In the absence of a contrary showing, it must be presumed that official duty will be performed.

The authorities cited by appellants do not deal with a system of county government such as we have briefly outlined. Doubtless no such complete systems existed in the jurisdictions where the actions arose. The cases relied upon by appellants present three conditions upon which an attorney's fee has been allowed to the party instituting and prosecuting to a finality the suit. One is where an action is brought by a party who has created or discovered a fund which inures to the common benefit of several persons and has borne the expense of the litigation that established the rights of all. In the instant case appellant Middlecoff neither created nor discovered the fund in suit, as will appear from the facts hereafter stated.

The second class of cases turns upon questions of fraud, corruption or the willful neglect of public officers, such as ruled State ex rel. Bonner v. Andrews, 131 Tenn. 554, 175 S. W. 563, a case cited by appellants. In that case Judge Dillon is quoted as announcing the equitable rule that, when a municipal or other public corporation has a cause of action which should be prosecuted for its use, whether that cause of action be legal or equitable, and its governing body or other proper officers wrongfully neglect or wrongfully refuse to commence an action thereon, a taxpayer may, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, commence an action in equity to redress the wrong to the corporation, making the corporation a defendant as trustee for all its members. In the Andrews Case the municipal authorities willfully refused to take any steps to collect a tax which the Supreme Court of Tennessee had held to be valid. A taxpayer by writ of mandate caused the taxes to be collected, and he was allowed his expenses and counsel fees. Doubtless the writ of mandate was the only remedy available to compel a compliance with the law, as the court in its opinion remarked that, but for the activity of the taxpayer, the money would not have reached the treasury. A similar situation did not exist as to the county of Tulare. In the instant case neither willful neglect, fraud, nor corruption can be urged as a reason for the institution of suits in the county of Merced which involved the same questions in the large sense that were involved in the causes pending in the county of Tulare.

The third class of cases in which attorney's fees have been allowed to a party who institutes and prosecutes a cause to judgment at his own expense for the benefit of a municipality and its inhabitants are those in which there is express statutory authority for such allowance. Kimble v. Board of Commissioners of Franklin County, 32 Ind. App. 377, 66 N. E. 1023, a case cited and seemingly relied upon by appellants, cannot be regarded as authority on any principle of the case. A few cases in bankruptcy are also cited, but there is no analogy between those cases and the case made by the record before us.

The case of Fox v. Hale & Norcross S. M. Co., 108 Cal. 475, 41 P. 328, is relied upon to support the contention that a court of equity can compel the payment of attorney's fees out of a common fund collected and paid into court in an action brought by one on behalf of others. The question of the allowance of an attorney's fee was dismissed from a consideration of the case upon appeal. This court, in passing upon the questions before it, said that the receiver was entitled to an allowance out of the moneys collected of his reasonable expenses, including counsel fees. The receiver was an officer of the court. The main case is reported in the same volume at page 369 (41 P. 308). It was an action involving the corrupt and fraudulent acts of the board of directors of a mining corporation engaged in a conspiracy to defraud the corporation, and, as there were no officers authorized to maintain the action willing to bring it, suit was commenced by a stockholder. The corporation was a private corporation, and not a county or municipality, which can act only through its governing board, and in strict compliance with the prescribed provisions of law. Fraud, corruption, and conspiracy were the gravamen of the charge made against the governing body of the private corporation by a defrauded stockholder. His action was sustained after long, vexatious, and expensive litigation. The costs properly incurred by him were allowed.

In the more recent case of Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank, etc., v. Ward, 197 Cal. 103, 239 P. 847, supported by an array of authorities, the rule is announced that attorney's fees are not recoverable by a successful party to an action, either at law or in equity, except in the instances where they are expressly allowed by statute. It is further noted in 7 Cal. Jur. 287, that in an action for the preservation or distribution of a fund, where all the parties have a common interest, courts of equity in some cases, where justice requires it, allow attorney's fees as a part of the relief granted.

This brings us to a consideration of Attorney Middlecoff's claim as urged upon solely equitable grounds. The Broughton Act was approved March 22, 1905. By its provisions no percentage of the total gross receipts of utility corporations was to be paid for the first five years succeeding the date of each franchise granted by the respective counties, but thereafter said percentage became payable annually. On May 4, 1914, the county of Tulare commenced an action in the superior court of that county against the city of Dinuba, a municipality situate within said county and which claimed a portion of the fund sued for, and the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation. The purpose of the action was to bring to the treasury of said county the gross receipts due it as provided by the Broughton Act. The nature of the action as against the utility corporation was for an accounting and for general relief. Frank Lamberson, Esq., and James M. Burk, respectively district attorney and deputy district attorney of said county, were the attorneys for plaintiff county. This was the first action commenced, and the only action ever carried forward to a finality, by any of the group of counties or municipalities affected by the Broughton Act. The case was delayed in the trial court on account of an order made reopening the cause for the taking of further evidence, and because of the importance of the cause and the difficulty encountered in interpreting the exact meaning and scope of the Broughton Act. Judgment was rendered in favor of the county of Tulare and against the city of Dinuba and said utility corporation. In 1917 another case was filed by Mr. Lamberson and his deputy to preserve the rights of the county of Tulare to accruing annual gross receipts arising under said Broughton Act. A third suit was filed for the same reasons in 1919 by Mr. Scott, district attorney and successor in office to Mr. Lamberson. Mr. Middlecoff appeared in this action as deputy district attorney.

Upon coming into the office of district attorney in January, 1919, as the successor of Mr. Lamberson, Mr. Scott appointed his law associates or copartners, Mr. Middlecoff and Mr. I. H. Ham, as deputy district attorneys. The trial of the first case, begun under the régime of Mr. Lamberson, was brought to a conclusion, and judgment went for plaintiff and against both defendants. An appeal was taken by the utility corporation to this court. Mr. Middlecoff, as deputy district attorney, was the principal attorney in said cause, as well as upon appeal, having at all times the advice and assistance of his superior and his fellow deputy, Mr. Ham. Upon appeal the cause of County of Tulare v. City of Dinuba and San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation, 188 Cal. 664, 206 P. 983, was reversed, but this court sustained the act against the assaults made on constitutional grounds, and against the claim that it was void on grounds of uncertainty and that it was not capable of practical application.

Mr. Middlecoff served as deputy district attorney of Tulare county commencing with January, 1919, to December 31, 1921, when he resigned. At the time of his resignation the test case, reported in 188 Cal. at page 664, 206 P. 983, had not been finally submitted to this court. He was upon his resignation immediately employed by the county of Tulare as its special counsel in conducting and presenting said cause to this court at a salary of $250 per month. On March 16, 1922, he was dismissed from employment by said county of Tulare. On May 4, 1922, this court filed its opinion in said cause, reported in 188 Cal. 664, 206 P. 983, entitled "County of Tulare v. City of Dinuba, defendant, and San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation, defendant and appellant." This court in that case went to great pains to point out a plan by which the Broughton Act could be applied in a practical way to a difficult situation. In so doing it advised that all counties and municipalities claiming the benefits of said act should join in one action or be made parties defendant. The important question decided was that the 2 per cent. charge on the gross receipts for the use of the highway was neither a tax nor a license, but a toll, which the holder of the franchise undertakes to pay for the privilege of using the highway, and therefore it was not repealed by the provisions of section 14, article 13, of the Constitution, adopted since the Broughton Act.

The above decision settled every material question raised against the validity of the act and it became the law of the case. There was nothing further to be done, but to determine a just basis on which the gross revenues should be computed. The remittitur from the Supreme Court was filed June 7, 1922. Mr. Middlecoff applied to the county of Tulare to be specially employed to prosecute its claim, but his services were rejected. With unusual expedition he negotiated contracts with several counties and municipalities to represent them specially in prosecuting their claims against the defendant San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation for an accounting in accordance with the plan announced by this court. On June 19, 1922, 11 days after the filing of the remittitur, he filed suit in the county of Merced, in which he named Kings, Merced, and Madera counties and the city of Dinuba plaintiffs, "suing for the benefit of all counties and municipalities interested in moneys due from the defendant under the Broughton Act franchises," and prayed for an accounting as outlined in the Tulare County decision. The complaint seems to have been amended so as to include in its caption the county of Mariposa and a number of municipalities situate in Tulare, Kern, and other counties. The county of Kern afterwards came in as an intervenor. Nowhere did the appellant assume directly to represent Tulare county. He alleged that Tulare county was beneficially interested in the litigation, but that is all. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and it waived its right to answer, as it had protected itself by stipulation as to the rule that would be observed in fixing its liability.

Many of the municipalities named as beneficially interested in the result of the suit, which were not originally represented by appellant, afterwards entered into contracts of employment with Mr. Middlecoff, agreeing to pay him such fee as the court might allow. Tulare county, which had initiated the suit that settled the law of the case, and which had two other suits as well as the original proceeding pending in its superior court, had had but 11 days from the filing of the remittitur to determine its future course at the time Mr. Middlecoff filed the Merced county action. Tulare county's district attorney and Mr. Lamberson, the former district attorney of Tulare county, who was employed by said county as special counsel to assist in the prosecution of said cases, found themselves embarrassed by the recent suit filed in Merced county, which was framed for the accomplishment of the same object which Tulare county for a number of years had been endeavoring to accomplish at its own cost, and which it would doubtless have accomplished, but for the interference with its plan by the filing of the Merced county case. A simple amendment of the Tulare county complaint, bringing in, either as plaintiffs or defendants, all the counties and cities interested in the subject-matter, as pointed out by this court upon the appeal of the Tulare county case, which course would doubtless have been adopted, but for the action filed in Merced county, would have rendered it unnecessary to bring a new action in the latter county, and the contention as to the allowance of attorney's fees against Tulare county would not have arisen. Under such procedure it is quite likely that the other counties and cities would not have deemed it necessary to employ special counsel for the performance of a service which the statute of the state imposed upon its law officers. The county of Tulare refused to join in the Merced county suit at the request of Mr. Middlecoff. Finally he caused it to be served with summons, and in obedience to that command said county came in as an intervenor. After considerable negotiation, the utility corporation paid into court a fund allocated to the several counties and cities interested, which was accepted by all as a fair settlement of the controversy.

The complaint in intervention by the county of Tulare was filed by the district attorney and its special counsel, Frank Lamberson, January 3, 1924. It prayed for a judgment commanding said utility corporation to pay into court, for the benefit of Tulare county and all other counties and municipalities, the gross receipts found to be due each, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, for costs, and general relief. By a stipulation dated February 13, 1924, and filed in court March 24, 1924, the Merced county action as to the county of Tulare and city of Dinuba was dismissed without prejudice to the right of the county of Tulare and city of Dinuba, and saving to them "the right to have all their rights in the matter involved in the action determined and adjudged and decreed in those certain actions now pending in the superior court of the county of Tulare [three in number], in each of said actions said county of Tulare is plaintiff and said city of Dinuba and the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation, a corporation, are defendants, as fully as such rights could be determined and adjudged and decreed in this action, and the joinder of said county of Tulare and city of Dinuba in this action is hereby waived." The rules for the computation of the gross revenues due to all said counties were settled in the Merced county action.

The judgment, entered May 7, 1924, adjudged the amount then due from said utility corporation (not including gross revenues which would annually accrue during the life of the franchises, unless repealed by subsequent legislation, and which revenues would yield a considerable net sum to said counties and cities) to be $30,748.53, and fixed the attorney's fees under the various contracts of employment made with attorney Middlecoff at something more than $36,000, not including the city of Dinuba's share, which sum was assessed against the several counties and cities in proportion to the benefits received by each. Said judgment did not conclude the rights of either the county of Tulare or the city of Dinuba, in their controversy as to the division of the fund between the county of Tulare and the city of Dinuba, nor the right of the former to contest the claim made by Mr. Middlecoff as to attorney's fees against said county. He held a contract of employment with the city of Dinuba, the amount of his compensation being dependent upon the amount that would be awarded to said city in its controversy with the county of Tulare as to that issue. By stipulation the instant case was transferred to the superior court of Tulare county and by further stipulation to the superior court of the county of Fresno, where the issues were tried.

A number of irrelevant recitals appear in the findings of fact made by the superior court in the Fresno case, which could have no bearing on the judgment, so far as the question of the attorney's fee is concerned. The court found, however, that Attorney W. W. Middlecoff was paid in full for all services rendered by him in the main case, reported in 188 Cal. 664, 206 P. 983, while he was deputy district attorney of Tulare county, and for services rendered thereafter as special counsel, and that nothing further was due him from said county. It also found that the Merced county suit was important, and the questions of law and fact involved therein were difficult, and the services extended over a period of practically two years and were of the value of $50,000; that all the counties and municipalities interested in said fund, except the county of Tulare, stipulated and agreed that the counsel fees of said W. W. Middlecoff should be fixed at the sum of $50,000, and should be paid out of said fund by deducting from the fund payable to each respective party a sum proportionate to the benefits received, and then proceeded to assess the same amount against each party as is set out in the Merced county judgment. The amount of $1,405.53 was allowed against the city of Dinuba, as a reasonable fee to be paid by that city, which was specially represented by Mr. Middlecoff.

Under the rules adopted as the basis of computation, it was found that there was due to the county of Tulare from the utility corporation, ending December 31, 1924, the sum of $17,561.04 and to the city of Dinuba $2,064.24. From the latter fund Mr. Middlecoff, as special counsel for said city, under his contract was allowed $1,405.53. The court found that the services which he rendered in said original cases as deputy district attorney of Tulare county and thereafter as special counsel had been fully paid for, and therefore nothing was due him for services from Tulare county. It further found that at the time the action was commenced in Merced county the three actions heretofore mentioned were pending in the superior court of Tulare county, which was represented by the district attorney and special counsel, all of which was known to Mr. Middlecoff. Further, that said county of Tulare did not at any time during the pending of the Merced proceedings, by resolution of its board of supervisors or otherwise, employ Mr. Middlecoff as its attorney, and did not, by resolution or otherwise, agree to pay him anything for any services rendered by him as attorney at law or otherwise. His demand for an attorney's fee to be taken out of Tulare county's allotment was therefore denied.

Appellant Middlecoff insists that an exceptionally important work was done by him in bringing about the settlement made by the utility corporation with all counties and cities in or through which its power lines passed and that his compensation should be great. The work of first and prime importance was the bringing of the suit by Tulare county before Mr. Middlecoff was connected with the litigation and carrying it forward at its own cost to a finality. That Mr. Middlecoff, with others, rendered valuable services in the later days of that suit, we have no reason to doubt. For those services he has been paid. That he rendered service in the action which he brought to compel an accounting there is no room for doubt. His services, however, were rendered under a contract made in the first instance with several certain counties and cities, in the expectation that others would make like contracts of employment. Practically all but Tulare county did make similar contracts.

[5] As to the claim that the services rendered by him were greater in value than those performed by others interested in formulating the rules which should be acceptable to all as the basis upon which computations should be made in determining the amount due from said utility corporation to the claimants, it is not sustained by the record. The law of the case having been settled, the only task left was the devising of a plan that would be fair to all. The testimony of Mr. Carl E. Lindsay, chief counsel of the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation, was to the effect that the set of rules which was finally adopted as furnishing a fair and just method of adjustment as between the contending parties, and one which also was a compliance with the plan or scheme outlined by this court in County of Tulare v. City of Dinuba, 188 Cal. 664, 206 P. 983, was the result of the study and investigation given to the subject by the technicians and the legal representatives of a number of public service corporations of this state and their auditing departments, including the Southern California Edison Company, Southern Sierras Power Company, Pacific Electric Railway Company, Southern Counties Gas Company, and the San Joaquin Light & Power Company, at a conference held at the city of Los Angeles for the special purpose of devising a plan that would be fair and just, as between the counties and municipalities, on the one hand, and the public utility corporations, on the other hand. These rules were submitted to Mr. Middlecoff and the other interested parties, and afterwards, by consent of all, they were adopted by the trial court as furnishing the basis on which the settlement of the whole question was to be made. Mr. Middlecoff submitted his views as to what the rules should be, and the county of Tulare had its notion on the subject, but the set of rules as worked out by said experts at the Los Angeles conference was the one that was adopted. He testified that Mr. Middlecoff's difficulties were not as to the rules, but largely with those whom he represented. No doubt he, as well as the attorneys for the county of Tulare, assisted in composing differences and bringing together disaffected claimants. For his services, however, he was, in our view, well compensated by the counties and cities which employed him.

[6, 7] There was some conflict existing between the interests of Tulare county and the city of Dinuba, specially represented by Mr. Middlecoff. This conflict did not go to the main question involved, but it did go to the question as to what portion of the fund allocated to Tulare county the city of Dinuba was entitled to possess. This same question was involved in all cases in which the municipalities were situate within Tulare county. There was also a difference of opinion between Mr. Middlecoff and Tulare county's attorneys as to whether that county was entitled to interest on installments, which, whether disqualifying or not, would, in a court of equity, constitute a sufficient answer to bar an action to compel an acceptance of his services by said county. Again, this case differs from all the cases cited, in that this is an action maintained in the interests of the attorney in which the litigants cannot possibly be benefited. Such actions as this are countenanced as affording relief to the litigant, who has disbursed moneys for which a return should be made by the parties benefited by the action. The counties and municipalities in this action are bound by the contracts made by them, and any award that might be made to Mr. Middlecoff would afford them no relief whatsoever. The payment of the fee of $50,000, which all the counties and municipalities represented by Mr. Middlecoff agreed or stipulated was a reasonable amount, was to be paid out of the funds recoverable by the parties who brought the Merced county action and those who afterwards joined them and obligated themselves by contract. But the county of Tulare was not one of them. Therefore they cannot recoup from Tulare county's share.

[8-10] The underlying principle in all the cases, where one has been allowed compensation out of a common fund belonging to others for expenses incurred and services rendered on behalf of the common interest, is the principle of representation or agency. There must be a contract of employment expressly made or superimposed by the law upon the facts. Hand v. Railway Co., 21 S. C. 162. This has been done where the moving party has sought to preserve a fund from waste and destruction arising from the neglect and misconduct of trustees. Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, 26 L. Ed. 1157. The fact that one may be benefited by an action brought by another is not of itself sufficient to justify a court in assessing costs against the one who also profits by said action. Some contractual relation or some equitable reason sufficient to support an allowance of costs must be shown to exist to justify a court of equity in making such assessment.

[11] In the instant case there is no principle of equity upon which a judgment against the county of Tulare can be sustained. It was conducting its actions, the first brought in the state to test the validity of the Broughton Act, in good faith and for the benefit of the state of California, until its actions were intercepted by the Merced county action. It has borne the brunt of the litigation to establish the law, and it was at all times willing to go forward in an orderly manner and in its own way to reduce to possession that which this court said, in the decision of the case made by it, it was entitled to possess. It would be most inequitable, in the light of the history of this action, to compel the county of Tulare, which not only has had its district attorney actively engaged in representing it through a series of years in litigating the questions out of which this action springs, but which has also specially employed counsel to assist said district attorney, to pay a substantial part of all that it is entitled to receive as compensation to the attorney whose fee was fixed by others, who had no power or right to bind it or direct it as to the course it should take in pursuing its remedies.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

BOUST v. BOUST. (S. F. 12667.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 13, 1928.

Divorce § 165 (1)—Trial court had jurisdiction to vacate order setting aside interlocutory divorce, under petition alleging fraud on court in procuring order.

Petition to vacate order setting aside interlocutory decree of divorce, based on fraudulent procurement of plaintiff's consent to setting aside of interlocutory decree and dismissal of action, through fraudulent misrepresentations and promises by plaintiff's husband, without intention of performing same, but made solely to mislead plaintiff into signing stipulation for dismissal, presented case of extrinsic fraud practiced on trial court, inducing it to dismiss action, and hence court possessed inherent power to vacate order made, predicated on stipulation fraudulently procured.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Petition by Mary Boust against E. J. Boust for an order vacating order dismissing divorce action and restoring interlocutory decree. From an order denying the motion to vacate an order setting aside an interlocutory decree of divorce, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Lindsay & Gearhart and B. W. Gearhart, all of Fresno, for appellant.

E. J. Boust, in pro. per.

RICHARDS, J. This was an action for divorce. The defendant, being served with process, failed to appear. His default being entered, the cause was tried on September 17, 1926, and an interlocutory decree entered in plaintiff's favor, to the effect that she was entitled to a divorce and the custody of the minor child of the parties, and further entitled to an award of a monthly sum of $30, to be paid by the defendant for the support and maintenance of said child. On May 19, 1927, a written stipulation and agreement of the parties was presented to the court, requesting that the interlocutory decree be vacated and the action dismissed. It was recited therein that the parties had become reconciled, and were living and cohabiting together as husband and wife, and that it would be for the best interest of both parties and their child that the interlocutory decree should be vacated and set aside and the action dismissed. Upon the presentation of said stipulation and agreement the trial court made and entered an order vacating and setting aside the interlocutory decree and directing a dismissal of the action.

Thereafter, and on the 17th day of June, 1927, the plaintiff presented and filed with said court her petition for an order vacating the order dismissing said action, and reviving and restoring said interlocutory decree. The basis of her petition consisted in her verified statement as set forth therein that the aforesaid stipulation and agreement entered into between her husband and herself had been procured by the latter through false and fraudulent misrepresentations, and through promises made with no intention on the part of the plaintiff's husband of performing the same, but made solely for the purpose of deceiving and misleading the plaintiff into making and signing said stipulation and agreement. The plaintiff's petition was duly served upon the defendant, who failed to appear or respond thereto. The matter came on regularly for hearing before the trial court, but upon such hearing the court ruled that it was without jurisdiction to entertain said petition, or to hear any evidence, or take any action thereon, except to dismiss the same, and upon that ground it made its order denying said petition, from which order this appeal has been taken.

We have examined the record herein, and are satisfied from such examination that the trial court was in error in the making and entry of its order. The basis of the appellant's seasonable application for relief was the alleged fraudulent procurement of her consent to the setting aside of the interlocutory judgment and to the dismissal of said action. Assuming the facts stated in her petition to be true, it would seem to be clear that the fraudulent acts of the defendant whereby the consent of plaintiff was procured to the setting aside of the interlocutory decree and the dismissal of the action amounted also to a fraud practiced upon the trial court, and by which it was induced to set aside its said order and to enter a dismissal of said action. This being so, we are entirely satisfied that the trial court possessed inherent power to vacate and set aside whatever orders it had made in the premises, and which were predicated upon the stipulation and agreement of the parties thus fraudulently procured and presented to said court as a basis for its order, which would not otherwise have been made. The fraud in this case was extrinsic, and amounted to an imposition practiced upon the trial court resulting in the procurement of its said order.

In the recent case of McGuinness v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 222, 237 P. 42, 40 A. L. R. 1110, it was held, upon a somewhat similar state of facts, that the trial court had jurisdiction to set aside its judgments and orders thus fraudulently procured. It is not necessary to review all of the authorities cited by the appellant in support of her position herein, and her application to the trial court having been seasonably made, we are satisfied that said court possesses and should have exercised its jurisdiction to hear and determine the appellant's said petition, and upon a proper showing grant the relief prayed for therein.

The order is reversed.

LA COUNT v. PASARICH et al. (S. F. 11801.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 13, 1928.

1. Automobiles ⇨245(82)—Contributory negligence of bicyclist, colliding with truck, in failing to have proper light, held for jury, under evidence of attempted compliance with law and accident on lighted street (Motor Vehicle Act).

Where plaintiff, riding bicycle colliding with truck, was carrying flashlight in endeavor to comply with Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1913, p. 639, as amended), requiring light, and accident occurred at point on street which was so lighted as to render presence of plaintiff visible to approaching driver of truck, and as to make presence or absence of light on plaintiff's bicycle probably inconsequential, contributory negligence by plaintiff in failing to have proper light was for jury.

2. Trial ⇨260(1)—Requested instructions, covered by instructions given, held properly refused.

Requested instructions, sufficiently covered by instructions given, held properly refused.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Denver Sevier, Judge.

Action for damages for personal injuries by A. La Count against Mateo Pasarich and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henry L. Ford and J. T. Fraser, both of Eureka, for appellants.

Metzler & Mitchell, of Eureka, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor in an action for damages for injuries received by him through a collision between the delivery truck of the defendants and the bicycle upon which the plaintiff was riding, upon one of the public streets of the city of Eureka. The defendants, in their answer, denied any negligence on the part of the driver of their truck, and alleged contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, consisting in the alleged failure of the plaintiff to have his bicycle equipped with the sort of lamp or light required by the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act, St. 1913, p. 639, as amended. The cause was tried before a jury. The evidence as to how the accident occurred was conflicting, and an examination of the record shows the existence of a substantial conflict, which would have justified the jury in finding that the driver of the defendants' truck was guilty of negligence proximately causing the collision.

[1, 2] Upon the issue of the plaintiff's contributory negligence in failing to have his bicycle equipped with a lamp or light, as required by the Motor Vehicle Act, the evidence discloses that the plaintiff's bicycle was not provided with such lamp or light in strict compliance with the Motor Vehicle Act, but that plaintiff, at the time of the accident in question, was carrying a flashlight in an apparent endeavor to comply with the law. The evidence further sufficiently discloses that the accident occurred at a point upon said street or crossing which was at the time so flooded with the light of a street lamp as to render the presence of the plaintiff so far visible to the approaching driver of the truck as to render the presence or absence upon the plaintiff's bicycle of the lamp or light required by the Motor Vehicle Act probably inconsequential. Under such conditions, it was the province of the jury to determine whether any negligence on the part of the plaintiff in the respect above indicated in any degree contributed to the accident, or was an approximate cause thereof. The jury resolved this issue against the defendants. Under proper instructions of the trial court, it was its province so to do.

The appellants, however, contend that the trial court was in error in giving and refusing to give certain instructions pertinent to this issue. We have examined the instructions which the trial court gave, and are satisfied that they correctly state the law. We have also examined the instructions which were requested by the defendants, and which the trial court refused to give, and we find that each and all of said instructions were either sufficiently covered by the instructions already given or that said requested instructions incorrectly stated the law, and were for that reason properly refused.

The respondent filed no brief herein, but in lieu thereof submitted an affidavit setting forth that he was the father of 14 children and was too poor to pay the cost of printing a brief, but that upon the face of the appellants' brief herein no sufficient error was shown to justify a reversal of the judgment. We have carefully examined the record, in view of the foregoing facts, and are satisfied that the respondent is correct in so stating, and for that reason the judgment should be and the same is hereby affirmed.

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 13, 1928.

1. Courts §472(4)—Probate court held without jurisdiction over action to quiet title against tenants in common, including estate being probated, brought by tenant not interested in estate.

In action by tenant in common against other tenants in common to quiet title, in which one defendant was an estate, probate court, in which estate was being administered, did not have jurisdiction to determine adverse rights of plaintiff, who was not administrator or executor of estate, or otherwise connected with estate, except in capacity as tenant in common of decedent, and hence probate court did not have sole jurisdiction to quiet title to property, because defendant estate was in course of probate.

2. Appeal and error §187(2)—Administrator, answering complaint without alleging misjoinder of parties, could not, on appeal, object that heir was not made party.

Administrator of estate, made defendant in action by tenant in common to quiet title to property, who appeared and both demurred and answered in action, without setting up misjoinder of parties defendant, and without insisting on presence of heir as party to action, held bound by judgment, and could not, on appeal, raise issue whether heir of estate was necessary party or was bound by judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Fred A. Treat, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Mary J. McCarthy against D. E. McCarthy and others. Judgment for plaintiff.

Motion by Thomas C. Butler, as administrator of the estate of Anna Butler, deceased, to vacate and set aside judgment was overruled, and such defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas C. Butler, of Watsonville Junction, in pro. per.

Chas. B. Rosendale and Albert E. Warth, both of Salinas, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This cause was placed upon a special calendar upon order to show cause, it appearing that no respondents' brief has been filed herein, and was thereafter ordered submitted.

[1] An examination of the appellant's brief convinces us that the appeal is without merit. The action was one instituted in the superior court in and for the county of Monterey by one tenant in common of a piece of real estate against other tenants in common thereof to quiet title. One of said defendants in common was the estate of one Anna Butler, of which the appellant herein, Thomas C. Butler, was the administrator. All the parties who were made defendants were served with process and either appeared or defaulted. Among those appearing and answering was the appellant herein. Upon the hearing the trial court rendered its judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants, quieting title to said property. Thereafter the appellant moved the court for an order vacating and setting aside such judgment, upon the ground, apparently, that the trial court was without jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action and of the person of the appellant. The basis of said motion seems to be that, since the estate of said decedent was in the course of probate and since the property involved in this action was a portion of her estate, the sole jurisdiction to quiet title to said property was in the probate court. The plaintiff herein was not an administrator or executor of the estate of said decedent, and was not otherwise connected with said estate, except in her capacity as a tenant in common of the decedent. The probate court, therefore, was without jurisdiction to determine her adverse rights in the property in question. Bauer v. Bauer, 201 Cal. 267, 256 P. 820.

[2] The only other point presented by the appellant is that a certain heir or devisee of the decedent was not made a party to this action. This point, however, was not available to this appellant, for, if such heir or devisee was not a party to the action the judgment herein might not be binding as to him. But with that matter the appellant is not concerned. The record shows that the appellant, in his capacity as administrator of the estate of said decedent, appeared and both demurred and answered herein, without setting up any misjoinder of parties defendant, and without, either before the trial or upon the motion to vacate the judgment, insisting upon the presence of said heir or devisee as a party to this action. Having thus submitted himself and whatever interest he may have, officially or otherwise, in said estate, he is bound by the judgment and cannot bring in question upon this appeal the issue as to whether the heir or devisee of said estate is either bound or affected thereby.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

LAKE et al. v. DOWD et al. (L. A. 9476.)★

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 7, 1923.

Hearing Granted in Bank Oct. 5, 1923.

1. Cancellation of Instruments $\S$ 35(1)—All owners of undivided interests in tract joining in agreement to convey to trustee held necessary parties in action to set aside agreement (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 378).

Where plaintiffs and other owners of undivided interests in tract of land conveyed property to trustee, to carry out their written contract to convey to defendant, held that, in action by plaintiffs against trustee and defendant to set aside trust agreement, and for cancellation of deed as to them, owners of other undivided interests were necessary parties under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 378; section 369, authorizing trustee of express trust to sue without joining beneficiaries, being inapplicable.

2. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 89—After purchaser made at least two payments, owners of certain undivided interests held not entitled to withdraw for delay in perfecting contract.

Where plaintiffs and other owners of undivided interests in tract of land conveyed property to trustee to carry out their written contract to convey tract to defendant, held, that plaintiffs, having actively participated in proceedings to remedy defects in title, were not entitled to withdraw from agreement for alleged delay in perfecting contract of sale, due to such defects in title, after at least two payments had been made by defendant and two deeds delivered to him by trustee.

3. Trusts $\S$ 11(2)—Written agreement between owners of undivided interests to convey to trustee to carry out sale contract held valid trust (Civ. Code, $\S$ 857).

Written agreement by owners of undivided interests in tract of land to convey property to trustee, for purpose of having him convey tract to purchaser, held valid trust, within Civ. Code, $\S$ 857.

Appeals from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Fred W. Lake and another against Mervyn R. Dowd and others. From the judgment, both parties appeal. Reversed, and plaintiff's appeal dismissed.

Henry C. McPike and Fred W. Lake, both of Oakland, for plaintiffs.

Charles Reagh, of San Francisco, for defendants.

PRESTON, J. By stipulation cross-appeals are submitted on one bill of exceptions. Defendants appeal from the whole judgment. Plaintiffs appeal from that portion of the judgment only which withholds the full relief prayed for by them. If the defendants prevail upon their appeal, the whole judgment must be reversed, and the appeal by plaintiffs becomes abortive.

[1] A careful consideration of this cause, together with independent search of the authorities, convinces us that the appeal of defendants must be sustained, and the whole judgment reversed. Plaintiffs and some 10 other persons owned in undivided interests 240 acres of a half section of 320 acres of land in the county of Kern. The remaining 80 acres were held in a like undivided interest by one C. T. Dunkle. Dunkle desired to purchase in 10-acre blocks the interests of the other owners. On December 14, 1923, plaintiffs and their associates, binding themselves together by mutual covenants, entered into a written contract wherein they constituted Mervyn R. Dowd as a trustee for the purpose of selling their said property to said C. T. Dunkle, and to that end and for that purpose agreed to and did execute and deliver to the said Dowd, as grantee, an ordinary grant, bargain, and sale deed of their respective interests in said property. The written agreement above mentioned contained the terms and conditions of sale, and rested upon the mutual covenants therein contained, the last and most significant of which was as follows:

"Upon receipt by the said trustee of the first payment of one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars, each of the grantors hereby agrees with all of the other grantors that his or her interest in said lands shall thereupon be converted into and deemed to be and held as an interest in common in said entire half section with all other owners and not in severalty."

Acting under said contract and the deed made pursuant thereto, said trustee Dowd transferred and conveyed certain portions of said land to the said Dunkle and received certain moneys from him on account thereof. Plaintiffs brought this action against the said Dowd as trustee and against the said Dunkle to have said trust agreement declared void as to them, to have the deed canceled as to them, and to have their title to their former interest in said lands declared and quieted against the claims of said defendants. The defendant Dunkle, it is claimed, was a purchaser with notice of their rights, and further plaintiffs alleged that they had been damaged in the premises in the sum of $5,000. Defendants answered, denying the grounds set up for the cancellation of said deed and for the quieting of plaintiff's title to said land, and in addition thereto filed their cross-complaint, asking that said underlying agreement be declared valid, and that the title of said trustee be quieted as to said real property as against said plaintiffs and cross-defendants Fred W. Lake and Fannie D. Lake, and that said plaintiffs be estopped, enjoined, and forbidden from asserting any right, title, or interest in and to the premises, save such interest as they might have under the written contract above described.

The court made findings and gave judgment in favor of the plaintiffs quieting their title to five-twelfths, or 180 acres, of said tract, and restraining and enjoining defendants from claiming or asserting any interest therein adverse to them, but refused to give plaintiffs judgment for the sum of $5,000, or any other sum, as damages. Defendants, as above stated, appealed from the whole of said judgment, and plaintiffs appealed from so much thereof as refused their prayer for damages.

It will be noted from the above description of the pleadings that the 10 other persons who joined with plaintiffs in the agreement between themselves to sell said lands through said defendant trustee were not made parties to the suit by plaintiffs, nor were they made parties to said suit by defendants under their cross-complaint. Defendants, at the opening of plaintiffs' case, objected to the introduction of any evidence, upon the ground that the other signatories to said contract had not been joined as parties defendant, and were not before the court, and at the close of plaintiffs' case said defendants moved for nonsuit upon the same grounds, taking the position that all the parties to said contract were necessary to a full determination of the issues, and the court could make no decree in the premises, unless said parties were before it. This motion was denied.

Defendants' position is well taken. Plaintiffs seem to overlook the fact that the mutual covenants between the signers of said contract were sufficient to give to each of said signers a joint interest in the whole subject-matter. The contributing of the several interests of the parties signing said contract and the surrender to a common agent or trustee of their rights and interests therein were a sufficient consideration to make said contract binding as between themselves and the contract is in reality as though it were made between them for the direct sale of the property, instead of the sale through a trustee. Each party to said contract is, therefore, a proper and necessary party for a determination of any rights in said property held by the trustee under said deed. Code Civ. Proc., § 378.

A case not cited by either counsel and determinative of this question is Mitau v. Rod- dan, 149 Cal. 1, 6, 7, 84 P. 145, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275. There a debtor executed a deed of trust to secure debts to two persons. The trustees brought a suit to have the court declare the interests of the respective parties under the deed of trust and to foreclose same. But one of the persons for whose benefit the trust was created was not made a party thereto, and the point was made that a court of equity could not properly dispose of the case until such party was before it, and that the trustee could not properly represent such absent creditor or beneficiary. Lengthy quotations from this case are unnecessary; a reference thereto will reveal the rule, the reason for it, and the equitable principles upon which it is founded. The cases of McPherson v. Parker, 30 Cal. 455, 89 Am. Dec. 129, and O'Connor v. Irvine, 74 Cal. 444, 16 P. 236, cited in the above-mentioned case, also fully sustain the holding here announced.

It will be noted that section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which authorizes a trustee of an express trust to sue without joining the beneficiaries, is inapplicable to this case, as this is not a controversy between a trustee and strangers to the trust. Said section is for the same reason inapplicable to the cross-complainants, who undertook to try their title against the claims of said plaintiffs without joining the other beneficiaries.

[2] This position determines the issues involved in this appeal. We have, however, in view of a probable retrial of the cause, examined the record on the merits as to the other questions presented. It is our conclusion that in this aspect also the cause must be reversed, upon the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings and judgment. The judgment is predicated upon the asserted right of the plaintiffs to withdraw from said agreement at any time because of the delay or failure of the trustee to complete the sales contract with Dunkle so long as the withdrawal was prior to the actual consummation of any such binding contract; the theory being doubtless that, the trustee having paid no consideration to plaintiffs, they could withdraw at any time prior to action on his part under the trust. The assertion is that such withdrawal occurred in this manner and at such time.

This argument is, as above stated, a misconception of the relation of the parties to said agreement. The question is not, May plaintiffs withdraw because of the failure of the trustee to act? But the true question is, Do plaintiffs show grounds upon which to withdraw from the agreement for failure of consideration, or other cause, as against all of the cosigners of said agreement? The trustee is but the agent upon whom authority has been conferred. The real contract is between the parties of the first part thereto. The delay in perfecting a contract of sale was a defect in the title of said parties of the first part to the said lands to be conveyed. In other words, the delay was in perfecting their title, and such defect affected the owners alike. Plaintiffs actively advocated the remedying of this defect, participated in the proceedings necessary therefor, and paid a large portion of the expense thereof from moneys paid to the trustee by Dunkle. The formal notice of withdrawal of May 17, 1924, was nullified by their own admitted conduct. The attempted withdrawal of November 17, 1924, was after the consummation of the contract with Dunkle, and after at least two payments by him, and after at least two deeds to him had been made by the trustee.

There is no substantial conflict in any of the evidence material to this issue. The evidence shows no ground whatever to cancel this agreement as against any one, and particularly as against the coparties to same. The contention that plaintiffs did what they did upon an understanding that Dunkle would complete at once a cash purchase of the whole tract does not, under the admitted facts and under the circumstances then obtaining, raise a conflict in the evidence.

[3] Neither do we discern any ground upon which it may be said that said trust is invalid or void upon its face. The instrument is clearly a trust to convey, and the powers conferred are succinctly and clearly set forth. Section 857, Civ. Code.

The judgment is reversed and the appeal of plaintiffs is dismissed.

v. FIREMAN et al. (S. F. 12385.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 7, 1928.

1. Mechanics' liens ⚡281(1)—Evidence held to warrant finding that materials furnished contractor were actually used on defendant's building.

In action to foreclose mechanic's lien for materials furnished general contractor, evidence held sufficient to warrant finding that all of materials furnished to contractor were actually used on defendant owner's building, and finding as to value of such material.

2. Accord and satisfaction ⚡26(3)—Evidence held to establish that there was no accord and satisfaction between owner and plaintiff, claiming lien for materials furnished.

In an action to foreclose mechanic's lien for materials furnished general contractor, evidence held to establish that there was no accord and satisfaction between plaintiff and defendant owner as claimed by latter.

3. Mechanics' liens ⚡304(3)—Furnisher of material at contractor's instance is not entitled to personal or deficiency judgment against owner, in absence of contract, express or implied, with owner.

Lien claimant, who has furnished material at instance of contractor, is entitled to a personal or deficiency judgment against contractor, but not against owner, unless complaint shows existence of a contract, express or implied, between owner and claimant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Action by the Golden Gate Building Materials Company against Benjamin Fireman and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants Fireman appeal. Modified and affirmed.

A. P. Dessouslavy and P. A. Bergerot, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Philip B. Beggs and Frank L. Hatch, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Appeal by defendants Benjamin and Helen Fireman from judgment for plaintiff in an action to foreclose on certain real property owned by them, a mechanic's lien for building materials furnished to defendant Sexton, the general contractor employed by his said codefendants to repair, alter, and add to the building situate on said premises. The facts, as shown by the evidence and found by the court, are in substance as follows:

That in April, 1925, defendants Fireman, the owners of said real property, employed defendant Sexton to furnish materials and perform labor in plastering a building situate thereon; that while so engaged said defendant Sexton "employed plaintiff to furnish for use, and which actually were used, in said building for the alterations, addition to and repair thereof, materials" consisting of mortar and other plastering materials, and agreed to pay plaintiff $1,232.68, the reasonable value thereof; that plaintiff performed all the conditions of its contract on its part to be performed, but said defendants failed to pay any part of said sum, save the amount of $687.60, thus leaving a balance of $545.08 due plaintiff. The court further found that, although no notice of completion or cessation from labor as provided by section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure was filed, said labor was duly completed on June 15, 1925; that defendant, as a lien claimant, at an expense of $1.70 duly perfected and filed for record its claim of lien. Complaint and summons were not served upon defendant Sexton, and he made no appearance in the case. Judgment in accordance with said findings was duly entered for plaintiff for said sums of $545.08, $1.70, interest and costs, which sums the sheriff was directed to pay from the proceeds of sale of said real property, and it was further adjudged that in case said property should not sell for enough to satisfy the amount in said decree provided, plaintiff have a deficiency judgment for the balance against defendants Benjamin and Helen Fireman.

Said defendants, in prosecuting this appeal, urge four grounds for reversal of said judgment, to wit: (1) Admission, over objection, of hearsay, evidence as to amount and value of said building materials; (2) lack of evidence that said materials were used in appellants' building; (3) failure of the court to find upon an alleged accord and satisfaction; (4) error in directing a deficiency judgment against appellants.

[1] The first three contentions we find to be without merit. The only witness for plaintiff was J. D. Murphy, its salesman; nevertheless he testified that he was the very person who solicited the order from defendant Sexton and got the job, and that he knew of his own knowledge that goods and materials of the amount and value specified in the itemized statement rendered the buyer, which was made an exhibit in the case, were actually delivered on the job, signed for, and that he was on the job at times and actually saw and knew that they were used in the work. In other words, the testimony of this witness, considered with the other evidence, amply supports the conclusion of the trial court. His position with plaintiff apparently was, and the court believed it to be, such that it was possible for him to speak of his own knowledge, and not through hearsay, as to the various matters which were the subject of his testimony, and that testimony, being believed, was amply sufficient to establish plaintiff's case.

[2] With respect to the alleged accord and satisfaction, defendant Benjamin Fireman testified that on April 16, 1925, Mr. Murphy, plaintiff's said salesman, came to him and stated that he would be satisfied with a payment of $500 to cover materials for the whole job, all of which had been delivered and that the empty sacks would take care of the small balance; that accordingly defendant gave Mr. Murphy his check for that amount, saying he would not be responsible for any more materials, and received in return a receipt, introduced in evidence, which was partially torn and reads in part, "Received $500.20 from B. Fireman covering (tear) in full for plastering materials. * * *" He further testified that defendant Sexton abandoned the job and on several mornings thereafter a truck came and carried away plaster and other materials. Another witness also stated that he had seen materials removed by a truck from the job. In conflict with the above evidence is further testimony of Mr. Murphy to the effect that he received said

$500 payment on account and gave therefor a receipt "to date in full"; that the portion torn from said receipt had contained the words "to date"; that some materials were returned to plaintiff by truck, because they were unsatisfactory, but that they were replaced by other goods suitable to defendants' need, as shown by credits appearing on the statement of account. Under such conflicting evidence support is found for the decision of the trial court that there was no accord and satisfaction, but a finding to this effect was not required. If made, it would have been adverse to appellants and its omission was immaterial as the findings made fully determine the cause. Hertel v. Emireck, 178 Cal. 534, 174 P. 30; Alberti v. Jubb (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 1085.

[3] The contention that the decree errs in directing a deficiency judgment against appellants must be sustained. Said decree, as to any deficiency shown by the sheriff's return on the sale of the property, constitutes a personal judgment against the owners thereof (Hines v. Miller, 126 Cal. 683, 59 P. 142; 17 Cal. Jur. § 157, p. 219), and under the pleadings here a personal judgment against said property owners is not justified. A lien claimant who has furnished material at the instance of a contractor is entitled to a personal or deficiency judgment against the contractor, but not against the owner, unless the complaint shows the existence of a contract, express or implied, between said owner and the claimant. Gibson v. Wheeler, 110 Cal. 243, 42 P. 810; Beard v. Lancaster, 72 Cal. App. 148, 150, 236 P. 970; Roberts v. Security T. & S. Bank, 196 Cal. 557, 574, 238 P. 673; 17 Cal. Jur. § 156, p. 217. The complaint in this case is predicated solely upon the employment of plaintiff by the contractor, alleging that, "while so engaged in the plastering of said building, * * * defendant Sexton employed plaintiff" to furnish said material and "agreed to pay plaintiff therefor the reasonable value thereof." There is no allegation in any way indicating the existence of an express or implied contract between plaintiff and defendant owners. The claim of lien likewise alleges that said Sexton was "the contractor employed by said owners * * * and is the person who employed claimant to furnish materials. * * *" Under such pleadings, the evidence as to the subsequent dealings of said owners direct with plaintiff is ineffective as a basis for a deficiency judgment against the owners. The case of Gibson v. Wheeler, supra, is directly in point and determinative of this issue.

The portion of said decree providing for said deficiency judgment, which reads, "That in case said real property should not sell for enough to pay and satisfy said sums in this decree above provided, that plaintiff have a deficiency judgment for the balance against defendants Benjamin and Helen Fireman, his wife," is hereby stricken out, but, as otherwise rendered, said decree is affirmed.

MIDSTATE OIL CO. v. OCEAN SHORE R. CO. et al. (Civ. 6300.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 29, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 26, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 25, 1928.

1. Railroads ⇨69—Fee-simple land title may vest in railroad company.

Title in fee simple to land purchased directly from owner may vest in a railroad company.

2. Railroads ⇨67(1)—Deed of land to railroad company, containing no provision limiting use thereof, held, that it conveyed the fee title.

In action to quiet title, where deed of land to defendant railroad company contained no provision limiting the use thereof, held, that it conveyed the fee title.

3. Railroads ⇨82(5)—Land owned in fee simple by railroad company, used in operation of railroad, did not revert to grantors or their successors, on terminating operation of road, as authorized by Railroad Commission (Civ. Code, §§ 354, 465, and 468).

In action to quiet title, where railroad company, under Civ. Code, §§ 354, 465, had the power to receive title in fee simple to land directly purchased, held, that land so purchased and used in operation of railroad did not revert to original owners thereof, or their successors in interest, on railroad's company's successor ceasing to operate its railroad as authorized by Railroad Commission, in accordance with section 468, which thereby did not work a forfeiture of defendant railroad's franchise.

4. Estoppel ⇨27(2)—Successor of grantors who deeded land in fee to railroad company held estopped, in action to quiet title after railroad ceased operation, to deny company's power to take fee.

Where railroad company was deeded fee-simple title to land to be used as a right of way, and grantors were succeeded in interest by plaintiff, held, that plaintiff, in action to quiet title, on defendant railroad company ceasing to operate its road and conveying such land by deed to purchasers thereof, was estopped, the same as the grantors of the land, to deny such company's power to take title in fee simple to the land.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by the Midstate Oil Company against the Ocean Shore Railroad Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Fred L. Dreher, of San Francisco, and Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, for appellants.

Thomas R. White, of San Francisco, and Charles W. White, of Hayward, for respondent.

WARNE, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment quieting plaintiff's title to a strip of land 60 feet in width and running on a curve for approximately a mile through a tract of land owned by the respondent. Said strip of land was formerly a part of said tract of land. The lands are situate in San Mateo county, and said strip of land was formerly used by appellant for a roadbed for its railroad. Both the appellant and the respondent claim title in fee simple to the property under mesne conveyances from Henry J. F. Butts, Herman F. J. Butts, and Annie S. K. Butts.

The cause was submitted to the trial court upon an agreed statement of facts which are substantially as follows:

In May, 1905, the Ocean Shore Railway Company was incorporated to build and operate a railroad from Army street in San Francisco to the city of Santa Cruz, along the shore line of the Pacific Ocean. By its articles of incorporation it was empowered to acquire such real estate as it might need. Thereafter, on November 15, 1906, Henry J. F. Butts, Herman F. J. Butts, and Annie S. K. Butts, then the owners in fee simple of the lands in controversy, executed and delivered to the Ocean Shore Railway Company, for a valuable and substantial consideration, a grant, bargain, and sale deed to said strip of land. The recitals and words of conveyance in said deed are as follows:

"That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of ten dollars, ($10.00), gold coin of the United States of America, to them in hand paid by the said party of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, have granted, bargained, and sold, conveyed, and confirmed, and by these presents do grant, bargain, and sell, convey, and confirm, unto the said party of the second part, and to its successors and assigns, forever, all that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, situate, lying, and being in the county of San Mateo, state of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit: A strip of ground sixty feet in width through property of Henry J. F. Butts, Herman F. J. Butts, and Annie S. K. Butts, situate in the county of San Mateo, state of California, bounded on the north and south by property of Henry Cowell; said right of way being bounded by the northerly and southerly boundaries of said property of Henry J. F. Butts, Herman F. J. Butts, and Annie Butts, and by lines drawn parallel to and twenty-four (24) feet on the westerly and thirty-six (36) feet on the easterly side of a line described as follows: * * * To have and to hold all and singular the said premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part, and to its successors and assigns, forever."

Thereafter, during the month of October, 1911, the Ocean Shore Railway Company, for a valuable and substantial consideration, conveyed to the Ocean Shore Railroad Company, a corporation, all its "right, title, and interest" in and to the land involved. The Ocean Shore Railroad Company has been organized to take over the property and privileges of the Ocean Shore Railway Company, and was duly authorized to acquire such property and privileges, and to own and hold real property in San Mateo county. Soon after the conveyances from Henry J. F. Butts et al. to the Ocean Shore Railway Company, the company constructed a railroad over the strip of land, and thereafter the Ocean Shore Railway Company and its successor, the Ocean Shore Railroad Company, operated the railroad until February, 1921. The operation of the railroad, however, did not yield income sufficient to pay the expenses of maintaining and operating it, and the Railroad Commission of the state of California so determined, in proceedings duly had and taken before it, and on October 9, 1920, authorized the Ocean Shore Railroad Company to discontinue its service as a common carrier on the railroad. And the Railroad Commission, in so far as authority was necessary, authorized the Ocean Shore Railroad Company to dismantle and dispose of its property. In February, 1921, the railroad company discontinued its operations, and on May 28, 1924, for a valuable and substantial consideration said Ocean Shore Railroad Company, in good faith, made, executed, and delivered to the defendants Giovanni Pera and Frank B. Russi a deed of all its "right, title, and interest" in and to the lands in question.

From the agreed statement of facts the trial court found in part that on November 15, 1906, Henry J. F. Butts, Herman F. J. Butts, and Annie S. K. Butts conveyed the strip of land in question to the Ocean Shore Railway Company "only for a right of way for its railroad"; that the respondent is the successor in interest of Henry J. F. Butts et al.; that pursuant to the permit issued to it by the Railroad Commission the railroad company ceased operating the railroad, removed the railroad tracks and other equipment from the strip of land, and discontinued permanently its service as a common carrier on the railroad and abandoned the use of the strip of land for any and every railroad purpose, and has ever since continued to abandon the land for railroad purposes; that the appellant railroad company on May 28, 1924, conveyed by quitclaim deed any interest it then had in said strip of land to the appellants Pera and Russi. The trial court concluded as a matter of law that respondent is the owner in fee simple of the land in question, and that appellants have no estate, right, title, claim, or interest in or to said lands.

[1] It is contended by appellants that the deed from Henry J. F. Butts et al. to the Ocean Shore Railway Company conveyed title in fee simple absolute, and that, where a railroad company takes title in fee, it does not revert to the original grantors or their successors on abandonment or nonuser by the railroad company. Title in fee simple to land may vest in a railroad company. Behlow v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 130 Cal. 16, 62 P. 295; Hannah v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 48 Cal. App. 517, 192 P. 304; Palmer v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 55 Cal. App. 519, 203 P. 1012. And in the case of City of Oakland v. Schenck, 197 Cal. 456, 241 P. 545, Mr. Justice Waste, speaking for the court, said:

"In Illinois, a railroad company can acquire land, whether by voluntary purchase or otherwise, for railroad purposes as defined in its charter. It does not hold land, as does the ordinary owner, with the right of using it for any purpose to which it may be adapted. * * * In this state there is no such restriction on the right of a railroad company. It may acquire the fee in land by direct purchase, although it may obtain only an easement for railroad purposes if it resort to proceedings in eminent domain."

[2] The deed from Henry J. F. Butts et al. to the Ocean Shore Railway Company must be measured by its own terms. There is nothing in the deed which in any way limited the company in the use that it might make of the land. The fact that the deed makes use of the words "right of way" in one of its calls in the description does not limit the use to which the lands may be put. We must hold that the deed conveyed the fee. Such being the case, did the railroad company lose its fee to the lands by nonuser or abandonment? The question is one of first impression in this state.

In 33 Cyc. at page 221, the general rule concerning loss of lands or right by a railroad company by reason of forfeiture or abandonment is stated as follows:

"A railroad company's easement in its right of way or other land may be lost by abandonment or surrendered (citing McLemore v. Charleston, etc., R. Co., 111 Tenn. 636 [639] 69 S. W. 338); but where the land is conveyed to the railroad company in fee its title thereto is not lost by nonuser or abandonment (citing Watkins v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 123 Iowa, 390, 98 N. W. 910; Enfield Mfg. Co. v. Ward, 190 Mass. 314, 76 N. E. 1053)."

As opposed to this rule, respondent relies principally on the case of Abercrombie v. Simmons, 71 Kan. 538, 81 P. 208, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 806, and note, 114 Am. St. Rep. 509. In that case the court, in holding a railroad company takes a mere easement, and not a title in fee, under a deed conveying to it land for purposes of right of way, and that the title reverts to the grantor upon the abandonment of the road, even though the deed contains covenants of warranty, confined its decision to cases where the contract of conveyance shows that it "was sold and received for use as a right of way," and did not pass upon the power generally of railroads to purchase land in fee. The decision as thus restricted is supported by the authorities. There is nothing in the deed, in the case at bar, however, showing that the land was "sold and received for use as a right of way."

[3] Respondent says that it bases its right to prevail in this action upon sections 465 and 468 of the Civil Code of California, relating to the powers of railroad companies. Respondent argues that under section 465 of the Civil Code a railroad company cannot acquire a fee in land acquired for a right of way, although the deed may be absolute in form, and upon abandonment of the land so conveyed for right of way purposes it reverts to the original owners or their successors in interest. We have already pointed out that a railroad company may acquire the fee to lands by direct purchase, and we cannot construe section 465 of the Civil Code, when read as a whole, so as to change the rule when the land is acquired for right of way purposes. Subdivision 7 of the section specifically provides that railroad companies have—

"power * * * to purchase lands, timber, stone, gravel or other materials to be used in the construction and maintenance of its road, and all necessary appendages and adjuncts, or acquire them in the manner provided in title 7, part 3, Code of Civil Procedure, for the condemnation of lands. * * *

And section 354 of the Civil Code provides that:

"Every corporation, as such, has power: * * * to purchase, hold, and convey such real and personal estate as the purposes of the corporation may require, not exceeding the amount limited in this part."

Section 468 of the Civil Code provides that:

"After the completion of any railroad, or any part thereof, capable of being operated, its owner must operate it, and upon his failure to keep it, or any part thereof, in full operation for the period of six months, his right to operate it in whole or in part, as the case may be,

is forfeited, and the lands occupied for the purposes of the road, so far as the same is not operated, revert to the original owners or their successors in interest. * * * This section must not be construed to require the operation of a road * * * when the operation of the road, together with its branch and trunk lines, does not yield income sufficient to defray the expenses of maintaining and operating it in connection with its branch and trunk lines. The railroad commission of California has the power to examine and determine whether a railroad, together with its branch and trunk lines, yields income sufficient to operate the same."

There could be no forfeiture of the railroad company's right to its franchise in the case at bar for the reason that the Railroad Commission of California expressly authorized the Ocean Shore Railroad Company to terminate its service as a common carrier and likewise we do not think there was a forfeiture of the right to the lands by the railroad company under this section. Assuming that there could be a forfeiture by virtue of this section it would not apply in this case because the Ocean Shore Railroad Company brought itself within the exception.

"Forfeitures are not favored in law, and conditions providing for the forfeiture of an estate are to be construed liberally in favor of the holder of the estate, and strictly against an enforcement of the forfeiture." Hannah v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 48 Cal. App. 521, 192 P. 306.

"Statutes and contracts are construed strictly against forfeitures, or as liberally as possible to prevent them. A statute declaring a forfeiture is not to be extended beyond its direct meaning by implication, unless such implication is imperatively necessary by reason of the subject matter or terms of the statute." 12 Cal. Jur. p. 634.

[4] We are also of the opinion that the respondent is estopped to deny the power of the Ocean Shore Railway Company to receive the title purported to be conveyed by Henry J. F. Butts et al. The general rule is that a grantor is estopped by his deed to question the power of his grantee to take fee simple title. And the case of Palmer v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 55 Cal. App. 519, 203 P. 1012, is authority for the proposition that one who conveys to a railroad company by grant deed, for the purposes of a roadbed, cannot thereafter deny the power of the railroad company to receive the title in fee.

We are of the opinion that the trial court was in error in concluding that the respondent is the owner in fee simple of the land in question and that the defendants "have no estate, right, title, claim, or interest in or to said lands."

The motion for a new trial should have been granted.

The judgment is reversed.

HUTCHINS v. SECURITY TRUST & SAVINGS BANK et al. (Civ. 6281.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 31, 1923.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 28, 1923. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 29, 1923.

1. Trusts $\S$ 54—Wife's acceptance of benefits of deed of trust, after all alleged undue influence causing her execution thereof ceased, constituted ratification of trust (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1566).

Wife's acceptance of benefits of trust executed by her and her husband for four years after husband's death, when all alleged coercion and undue influence exercised by husband ceased, constituted a waiver of the alleged fraud or undue influence, and ratified her written consent; deed of trust, even if result of undue influence, not being absolutely void, but subject to rescission or ratification, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1566.

2. Perpetuities $\S$ 9(2)—Trust provision, directing application of trust income to pay mortgage on trust realty before paying income to beneficiaries, held void as unlawful accumulation (Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 723, 724).

Where deed of trust executed by husband and wife directed trustee to pay certain sum from income of trust realty to wife for life, to apply balance of income in payment of mortgage on trust realty, and after trustors' death to pay all income therefrom on mortgage, before paying any part thereof to beneficiaries, who were trustors' three adult sons and minor grandchild, held, that direction to pay income on mortgage indebtedness was void, under Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 723, 724, as directing unlawful accumulation, in view of section 743.

3. Trusts $\S$ 52—Invalidity of trust deed provision directing application of income to pay mortgage held to render entire trust void (Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 723, 724).

Invalidity, under Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 723, 724, of trust provision of deed of trust directing application of income from trust realty to pay on mortgage before any part of income should be paid to beneficiaries, held to render entire trust, at least from death of one of trustors, who was entitled to part of income, void; such provision being essential part of trust scheme.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Crail, Judge.

Action by Burtis L. Hutchins, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Caroline L. Hutchins, deceased, against the Security Trust & Savings Bank and others. From the judgment, both parties appeal. Reversed.

W. W. Middlecoff and Milton K. Young, both of Los Angeles, for plaintiff.

Lucius K. Chase, of Los Angeles (Alan Nichols, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for defendant Security Trust & Savings Bank.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. In this action there are cross-appeals, included in one record, prepared under the alternative method. The plaintiff recovered judgment for one-half of the property sued for, and defendant Security Trust & Savings Bank, the only real defendant in this action, has appealed from this judgment in favor of plaintiff, while plaintiff has appealed from the part of the judgment in favor of defendant, and from the order of the court refusing to give plaintiff possession of the other half of the property. The action is one in which plaintiff seeks to quiet title to a one-half interest in certain real property, to recover possession thereof, and to obtain an injunction restraining defendant Security Trust & Savings Bank from asserting any claim to the real property in question, and for equitable relief.

The complaint alleges that Caroline L. Hutchins died testate in the county of Los Angeles on June 26, 1923, and letters of administration with the will annexed were issued to Burtis L. Hutchins; that at the time of her death Caroline L. Hutchins was the owner and entitled to the possession of an undivided one-half interest in certain real property described in the complaint, and referred to as the "Hotel Spokane property," and, as against defendant Security Trust & Savings Bank, was entitled to the possession thereof; that the estate of Caroline L. Hutchins is still the owner of such undivided one-half interest in the real property; that Security Trust & Savings Bank is in the exclusive possession thereof, and claims an estate therein adverse to the estate of Caroline L. Hutchins; and alleging that the claim of defendant Security Trust & Savings Bank is without any right whatever. The answer denies ownership in plaintiff, puts in issue the material allegations of the complaint, admits that it is in the exclusive possession of the real property, and claims ownership of the whole thereof under and by virtue of a deed of trust, dated December 24, 1913, executed by Caroline L. Hutchins and John S. Hutchins, her husband, whereby and whereunder it holds the property in trust. A copy of the deed of trust is set out in the answer, which is duly verified.

The case was tried before a jury. When the case was called, defendant objected to a trial by jury, contending that the case was one of equitable cognizance, and that it was entitled to findings by the court on the issues raised by the pleadings. The objection of defendant was overruled, and the case was determined by the jury.

Counsel for plaintiff offered in evidence a deed executed March 30, 1905, by which the property in question was acquired by John S. Hutchins, being then the husband of Caroline L. Hutchins, and proved that John S. Hutchins and Caroline L. Hutchins moved to California in 1886, and lived in California ever since that time until the death of John S. Hutchins on May 7, 1919, and that at the time the deed of trust was signed they had surviving three children, Day Hutchins, Ray Hutchins, and Burtis L. Hutchins, and that the property was community property. Plaintiff's counsel then stated that he would claim in rebuttal, as a defense to the deed of trust set up in the answer, that it was obtained from Caroline L. Hutchins by the undue influence of her husband, John S. Hutchins, and was signed by her through mistake and without adequate consideration; that on account of being the wife, and of the fiduciary relationship existing, the deed of trust was invalid and subject to rescission; and that she had served upon the defendant trustee a written rescission and offer to restore.

Defendant moved for a nonsuit, contending that the genuineness and due execution of the deed of trust were admitted by the pleadings, by reason of plaintiff having failed to file his affidavit under section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that J. S. Hutchins and Caroline L. Hutchins had conveyed the entire fee to defendant bank. The motion for nonsuit was denied, and thereupon defendant introduced in evidence the deed of trust, by the terms of which John S. Hutchins and Caroline L. Hutchins conveyed to the defendant bank the Spokane Hotel property, reserving, however, to the grantors during their joint lives, and to John S. Hutchins in case he should survive his wife, the possession, occupation, rents, and profits of the aforesaid premises, such conveyance being in trust, nevertheless, for the purposes set forth in the deed.

The deed of trust in substance provides that the bank shall have the custody, control, and management of the property conveyed, shall lease and release the property and collect all rents, issues, profits, and income accruing therefrom, and from such income shall first pay all costs and charges of administration of the trust, and thereafter apply the net income as follows: Unto Caroline L. Hutchins, if still living, quarterly on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October of each year, to and until the end or termination of the trust, or until her death, whichever shall happen first, the sum of $900, or such lesser sum as she may by writing delivered to the trustee elect to accept, and the balance of the net income at the end of such quarters shall be applied and paid as rapidly as allowable in discharge and satisfaction, in whole or in part, of any and all mortgages or like incumbrances affecting such trust estate. After the discharge of the incumbrances and the demise of Caroline L. Hutchins, the whole quarterly income shall be by the trustee paid to their sons in the following parts or shares: Day S. Hutchins five-twentieths, Ray Hutchins eight-twentieths, Burtis L. Hutchins sixtwentieths, and to their grandson, Reason D. Hutchins, one-twentieth. The trust deed further contains the provision for the distribution of the property at the termination of the trust to the grandchildren of Caroline L. Hutchins, the termination thereof to take place at the death of the last survivor of the grantors' three sons.

It was then shown by defendant, and not contradicted, that Mr. and Mrs. Hutchins signed a written authorization for the delivery of the deed of trust; that John S. Hutchins paid out of his personal funds $5,000 on the note secured by mortgage on the Spokane Hotel property; that subsequent to the execution of the deed of trust Mrs. Hutchins joined with her husband in a joint account at the Security Trust & Savings Bank; that she joined with him in a declaration, dated June 14, 1916, stating that all deeds of trust to the defendant bank had been voluntarily executed; joined with him in the letter of April 2, 1919, in which the bank was directed during the remainder of his lifetime to pay to her all the rentals from the trust property, and that she accepted such rentals; that subsequent to the death of her husband on May 7, 1919, until the time of her death, June 26, 1923, a period of four years, she accepted the entire fruits of the trust; that at various times in writing she directed the bank as to the manner and method in which it should pay the moneys payable to her under the trust; that after the notice of rescission was served upon defendant bank she accepted the entire fruits of the trust, and continued to do so up to the time of her death.

In rebuttal plaintiff read in evidence the deposition of Caroline L. Hutchins, in which she testified that she signed the deed of trust with her husband, John S. Hutchins, because he threatened that, if she did not do so, he would sell the property, give her one-half of the proceeds thereof, and give the balance to charity; that her husband made her life so miserable that she did not care what became of the property; that she did not deserve to be treated the way she was treated; that when she signed the ratification on January 14, 1916, she was sick in bed, and she had gotten to a pass where she did not care; that the ratification was all lies, but she signed it, and said she was signing it of her own accord and without any compulsion on the part of her husband.

The jury rendered a general verdict in favor of plaintiff, and in response to special interrogatories the jury found that Caroline L. Hutchins, under the document of April 2, 1919, received from defendant the balance of the funds remaining in its hands; that under the letter of August 1, 1919, she received from defendant $150 a month from the trust; that under the letter of June 8, 1921, she received $250 a month from the trust; that under the letter of November 25,

1922, she received $300 a month from the trust; but also found that she did not execute these respective letters "without coercion or fraud practiced upon her."

[1] Defendant urges a number of objections, several of which present serious questions; but, as the determination of assignments 6 and 7, "Assuming the evidence of undue influence, the deed of trust was not void, but merely voidable," and "The undisputed evidence shows that subsequent to the execution of the deed of trust it was confirmed and ratified," is determinative of defendant's appeal, we deem it unnecessary to discuss the other points urged by it.

Assuming that plaintiff's contention is correct, and that the execution of the deed of trust by Caroline L. Hutchins was procured by the coercion and undue influence of her husband, John S. Hutchins, and that he continued his coercion of and undue influence over her until the day of his death, there is no evidence in the record that any coercion or undue influence, or any influence of any character, was exercised over her during the four years that intervened between her husband's death and her passing, or that the acceptance of the entire fruits of the trust during that period was other than free and voluntary on her part. Plaintiff has directed our attention to no evidence of coercion or undue influence during such period, nor have we by a perusal of the entire record found any. On the contrary, the record shows that, subsequent to the death of her husband, Caroline L. Hutchins accepted the entire fruits of the trust, covering the entire fee, for four years, receiving the sum of $10,895.68; that she accepted these payments, even after she had consulted an attorney and served the notice of rescission prepared for her, and up to the time of her death.

The deed of trust, if not executed freely, is nevertheless not absolutely void, and was subject to rescission by the parties (Civ. Code, § 1566), and was also subject to ratification. Mrs. Hutchins not only did not rescind within the time and in the manner prescribed by the chapter of the Code on rescission, but she waived the alleged fraud or undue influence and ratified the trust by treating the consent as existing and binding. The acceptance of the fruits of the trust and benefits thereunder, after all coercion and undue influence ceased, constituted a waiver and ratification of the written consent. Bancroft v. Woodward, 183 Cal. 99, 190 P. 445; Harlington v. Paterson, 124 Cal. 542, 57 P. 476; Nounnan v. Sutter Land Co., 81 Cal. 7, 22 P. 515, 6 L. R. A. 219; Marten v. Burns Wine Co., 99 Cal. 355, 33 P. 1107. Acts evincive of an intent to abide by the contract, with knowledge of its invalidity, constitute an affirmation thereof, and a waiver of the right of rescission (Matteson v. Waggoner, 147 Cal. 739, 82 P. 436; Montgomery v. McLaury, 143 Cal. 83, 76 P. 964; Ruhl

v. Mott, 120 Cal. 668, 53 P. 304); as, for instance, where a party, after discovering the facts which give the right to rescind, proceeds to deal with the property involved as if the contract were valid (4 Cal. Jur. 803; Greene v. Locke-Paddon Co., 36 Cal. App. 372, 172 P. 168).

The disposal of this point renders discussion of the remaining points urged by defendant unnecessary.

[2] The objection urged by plaintiff on his cross-appeal that the trust for the receipt of rents and the payment thereof upon the mortgage indebtedness was in violation of the law forbidding accumulations, and therefore void, presents an important question, not only as it affects this particular case, but from the standpoint of public policy. While the question seems to be one of first impression, in this state the statute concerning accumulations is clear, and the laws concerning accumulations, perpetuities, and suspension of the power of alienation of property have been before the courts in numerous cases, and the public policy on these questions is well established.

It appears from the face of the deed of trust that it was executed December 24, 1913, and from the uncontradicted evidence it appears that at such time the defendant Security Trust & Savings Bank was the holder of a mortgage on the property described in the deed of trust for the sum of $21,000, dated December 31, 1912, due in ten years; that when the deed of trust was executed $19,000 remained unpaid; that the three sons of the testator were then all over the age of majority, in fact, over 40 years of age, and that the trustee, according to the deed, was to apply the rents on the payment of this mortgage, after the death of the trustors, until it was fully paid, before payment of any of the income to the beneficiaries. John S. Hutchins died in May, 1919, and Caroline L. Hutchins died in June, 1923, and the evidence shows that at the time of the death of John S. Hutchins there was still unpaid on the mortgage $14,000, and at the death of Caroline L. Hutchins there was $12,000 unpaid. By the payment of this mortgage out of the income to accrue after the death of the trustors, the trust estate out of which the beneficiaries were to be paid was to be established. The trust estate would then consist of the original real property, augmented by and mingled with the accumulated income to the extent of the amount paid on the mortgage.

Section 723 of the Civil Code provides:

"All directions for the accumulation of the income of property, except such as are allowed by this title, are void."

Section 724 of the same Code declares:

"An accumulation of the income of property, for the benefit of one or more persons, may be directed by any will or transfer in writing sufficient to pass the property out of which the fund is to arise, as follows: 1. If such accumulation is directed to commence on the creation of the interest out of which the income is to arise, it must be made for the benefit of one or more minors then in being, and terminate at the expiration of their minority; or, 2. If such accumulation is directed to commence at any time subsequent to the creation of the interest out of which the income is to arise, it must commence within the time in this title permitted for the vesting of future interests, and during the minority of the beneficiaries, and terminate at the expiration of such minority."

Rents and profits of real property are income. Civ. Code, § 748; Estate of Whitney, 176 Cal. 12, 167 P. 399. A trust to receive rents and profits and apply them on the payment of a mortgage, other than during the minority of the beneficiary, violates the provisions of the statute, and is void. Hascall v. King, 162 N. Y. 134, 56 N. E. 515, 76 Am. St. Rep. 302; Mann-Vynne v. Equitable Trust Co., 201 App. Div. 149, 194 N. Y. S. 52; In re Lutz Estate, 27 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 403; Pray v. Hegeman, 92 N. Y. 508; Hawley v. James, 5 Paige [N. Y.] 318. The law relating to trusts was never intended to permit accumulations forbidden by the Code. Minnesota Loan & Trust Co. v. Douglas, 135 Minn. 413, 161 N. W. 158.

In Hascall v. King, supra, the leading New York case, in which this question is exhaustively discussed and all previously decided cases reviewed, from Hawley v. James, 16 Wend. 62, the first case decided after the adoption of the New York statute (which statute formed the basis of our own statute and from which our statute is practically copied), the court says:

"Since 1828 the Revised Statutes have in terms prohibited the accumulation of the rents and profits of real estate and of the income of personal property, except during the minority and for the sole benefit of minors. 1 Rev. St. §§ 37, 38, p. 726. The last sentence of section 38 establishes the penalty to be visited upon all attempts to offend against these provisions, and reads as follows: 'And all directions for the accumulation of the rents and profits of real estate, except such as are herein allowed, shall be void.' The revisers, in their report, assigned as a reason for limiting the power of accumulation to one of the three cases specified in St. 39 and 40 George III, c. 98, namely, 'during the minority of any person or persons who, under the deed or will directing the accumulation, would, if then of full age, be entitled to such rents and profits,' that 'it is to the period last indicated that the revisers propose to confine the power of accumulation, conceiving that this restriction furnishes the most effectual means of guarding against the abuses to which directions of this nature are admitted to be liable, and believing that it embraces the only case in which the purpose of the accumulation is such as ought to be sanctioned, namely, for the benefit of infants entitled to the next eventual estate.' * * * 'The general policy of our law favors the greatest freedom of alienation of property consistent with the necessities of families, and the making of reasonable provision for the various contingencies which may be expected to arise, requiring the postponement of the vesting of estates, and the suspension of the power of alienating the corpus of property is permitted only within narrow limits. But the right to direct the accumulation of the fruits and profits of property is much more restricted than the right to control the property itself. It is permitted only in a single case and for a single purpose, viz., during minority, and for the benefit of the minor during whose minority the accumulation is directed."

In Re Lutz's Estate, supra, the court makes use of this illustration:

"The estate which a testator has the power to give away, without restriction, consists only of what remains after payment of his debts. If, for example, the gross value of his assets is $100,000, and his liabilities $25,000, the sum available for the purposes of his will is $75,000, and if he should give legacies amounting to $100,000, it is apparent there would have to be an abatement of 25 per cent. But if the estate can be withheld from distribution until the debts have been paid with income, say for ten years, it will then be large enough to pay the legacies in full. Thus, rents and income might be withheld from beneficial enjoyment and made to do the duty of principal for a period measured only by the rule against perpetuities; and the owner of an estate worth $1,000,000 desiring to increase it for posterity to $2,000,000, need only borrow $500,000, on mortgage or collaterals, and leave everything to his executors in trust, during any number of well-selected lives in being at the time of his death, to apply the rents and income to the payment of debts and incumbrances, and then to sell and distribute the proceeds among such of his descendants as might have the good fortune to be living when that has been accomplished. If this can be done, the enactments regulating and restraining accumulations have been to very little purpose."

In Re Dolan, 79 Cal. 65, 21 P. 545, cited by appellant, touches on this question; and while it is true that in that case the court says:

"As we read the will, it gave the property to Michael Dolan in trust to collect and receive the rents and profits thereof, and to use them (1) to pay the mortgage on the property; (2) to pay the legacies to Celia Jordan and Margaret Platt; (3) to pay the legacy to Sister Frances McEnnis; and (4) to pay all the residue thereof to James Dolan during his natural life. This was an express trust, and was authorized by law,"

—the question here presented was not before the court, and therefore not adjudicated. In the briefs on appeal and in the decision in that case it is said:

"From this decree Michael Dolan has appealed, and the only questions presented relate to that part of the decree which gives to his brother, James P., a life estate in and a right to the possession of the said property."

And with respect to this question the court held that there existed an express trust as authorized by section 857 of the Civil Code, subdivision 3:

"To receive the rents and profits of real property, and pay them to or apply them to the use of any person, whether ascertained at the time of the creation of the trust or not, for himself or for his family during the life of such person, or for any shorter term, subject to the rules of title 2 of this chapter."

Defendant contends that, at the time of the adoption of the Codes in California, it was the law of New York that a trust to lease lands and apply the proceeds of the rents in the payment of the principal of a mortgage then upon the property was valid, and cites us to Parks v. Parks, 9 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 111, as so holding, and to Estate of Potter, 188 Cal. 68, 204 P. 826, as holding that, when a statute is borrowed from another state, it is to be given the construction placed upon it at the time it is borrowed, and that hence the subsequent authorities overruling Parks v. Parks do not concern us. It was some eight years after the case of Hawley v. James, supra, was decided that the chancellor in the Parks Case, without reference to the Hawley Case, held that the authority of a trustee to pay the interest of the incumbrances out of the rents and profits of lots of lands in the first place, and to apply so much of those rents and profits as might be spared from the support of cestui que trust to the payment of the incumbrance, was valid and should be carried into effect according to the intention of the testator. In commenting upon the Parks Case in Hascall v. King, supra, the court says:

"The subject was not otherwise considered, and, in view of the elaborate discussion of the question when it was before the court in Hawley v. James, 16 Wend. 62, it would seem as if that question had not been the subject of debate by the counsel who appeared before the chancellor and that his disposition of it was one of first impression. * * * In Cowen v. Rinaldo, 82 Hun, 479-485 [31 N. Y. S. 554] the very question now before us was under consideration, and the court, upon the authority of Hawley v. James, 16 Wend. 62, and in a very careful opinion by the presiding justice of the court, holds that a trust providing for the collection of rents, income, and profits of real estate, and, after the payment of certain legacies and the interest on mortgages, the applying of the remainder of the rents, together with the income and principal of the personal estate, to the paying off and discharging of the principal of mortgages on the real estate, was void."

[3] In the present case the first object in paying off the mortgage is to increase the trust estate, then the income so created is to be paid to adult sons except one-twentieth, which is payable to the minor grandson, Reason D. Hutchins, not during his minority, but until the termination of the trust, which occurs at the death of the last survivor of the three sons, irrespective of the age then of the now minor grandson. As the trusts in the deed of trust, subsequent to the trust to pay off the mortgage, are wholly dependent upon its full performance, and could not be carried out until that trust has been performed, they are void, and, at least from the death of Caroline L. Hutchins, the trust became extinguished and ceased to exist. Furthermore:

"It is a familiar principle, that if several trusts are so inextricably interwoven, so mutually interdependent, that the destruction of one mutilates and maims in essential particulars the trust scheme, the whole must fall." Carpenter v. Cook, 132 Cal. 621, 625, 64 P. 997, 999 (84 Am. St. Rep. 118).

The intention of the trustors was to make a complete scheme of trust. There is no declaration in the instrument that any part of it is to survive, if other parts were destroyed. If the complete scheme cannot be carried out, according to the intent of the trustors as expressed in the deed of trust, then the whole trust fails. Estate of Maltman, 195 Cal. 643, 234 P. 898.

The deed of trust here is different from the one considered in Sacramento Bank v. Alcorn, 121 Cal. 379, 53 P. 813, cited, and cases where the contract involves good faith and value. This trust is testamentary in character, and neither the trustee nor any of the beneficiaries are purchasers or incumbrances for value, nor has the rule become—as contended by defendant—a rule of property involving the application of the doctrine of stare decisis.

The judgment is reversed. Appellant in each appeal prevailing, each is entitled to costs.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

MILLS et al. v. CITY OF ELSINORE et al.
(Civ. 6280.) *

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 6, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court. Nov. 1, 1928.

1. Municipal corporations $\S$ 271—City trustees held empowered to construct necessary buildings in connection with waterworks system (Improvement Act 1911, $\S$ 2, as amended by St. 1923, p. 104).

Under Improvement Act 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730) $\S$ 2, as amended by St. 1923, p. 104, authorizing the ordering, on any street, public property, or right of way, of wells, pumps, dams, reservoirs, storage tanks, tunnels, conduits, pipes, hydrants, meters, or other appurtenances for distributing domestic water supply, and in subdivisions (j) and (k), providing for general incidental powers with reference to improvement of streets and public property, and for all other work auxiliary thereto, city trustees had power to construct necessary buildings required for waterworks system, notwithstanding buildings are not specifically mentioned in statute.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 304(1)—Resolution of intention to construct water supply system held sufficient as "brief description" of work (Improvement Act 1911; Improvement Bond Act 1915).

In resolution of city trustees declaring intention to construct water supply and distributing system, recital that well and pumping plant at certain location should include construction of pipe line from station on straight line across an alley over certain property belonging to city, and along a right of way therefor across specified street to point adjacent to the east line of certain lot held sufficient as "brief description" of work, within Improvement Act 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730) and Improvement Bond Act 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1441).

3. Municipal corporations $\S$ 304(13)—That plan for water supply system provided for "overload relay," while resolution of intention provided for "overload relays," held not to create inconsistency.

That plan for city water supply system provided for "overload relay," while resolution of intention to construction system provided for "overload relays," without definitely specifying that there were to be more or less than one, held not to create inconsistency, since it is a rule of construction that the plural may mean a singular, or the singular may mean a plural, wherever from the context the definite meaning is clearly ascertainable.

4. Municipal corporations $\S$ 314(1)—Specification that water pump should be of "underground discharge type" merely required that it be constructed so that water could be conveyed to underground line.

Specifications for construction of city water supply system, providing that certain pump should be of "underground discharge type," held merely to mean that pump should be so constructed that, with its appurtenances and connections, water could be conveyed directly from immediate vicinity of pump to underground line.

5. Municipal corporations $\S$ 314(1)—Plans involving intricate construction work must be considered together, in determining work to be done.

Where intricate construction work in installing city water supply system is indicated, plans must all be considered together, to determine what the work to be done consists of.

6. Words and phrases—"Screw pipe" means that threads are placed on ends of each pipe, to permit it to be screwed to next connecting pipe.

A wrought steel "screw pipe" means that on the ends of each pipe threads are placed, to permit it to be screwed to the next connecting pipe to be laid.

7. Words and phrases—"Wrought steel welded pipe" means that longitudinal break formed in center of pipe in rolling steel plate forming it is welded.

"Wrought steel welded pipe" does not mean that it is to be welded to next connecting pipe but that in manufacture of pipe longitudinal break, which is formed in the center of the pipe in the rolling of the steel plate forming it, is welded, instead of being joined in some other manner.

8. Municipal corporations $\S$ 304(1), 314(1)—Plans, specifications, and resolution of intention calling for particular type of water pump manufactured by certain company, or "equivalent," held sufficient.

Where plans, specifications, and resolution of intention for construction of water supply system indicate that certain type of pump manufactured by certain company, or its "equivalent," is to be used, it is not necessary to show cross-sections and specifications of foundry make, manufacturers' details, and patterns, where pump named is a standard article and can be supplied in general market; word "equivalent," in mechanical matters, having distinctive meaning indicating a device of practical equivalence in value and effect and of substantially same design, performing same functions in practically same manner.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases First and Second Series, Equivalent.]

9. Municipal corporations $\S$ 314(1)—Discretionary power, by which materials or extent of improvement may be varied, cannot be delegated, but specification must definitely describe work, except where details do not permit.

The law requiring certainty and definiteness in special assessment proceedings prohibits delegation of any discretionary power by which the materials or extent or costs of improvement may be varied, and rule requiring that specifications must definitely and with certainty describe extent of the work to be done, is subject only to exception in cases where details of construction do not permit.

10. Municipal corporations ⚡314(1)—Specifications requiring refilling of trenches and removal of excavated earth to satisfaction of engineer and street superintendent held not invalid.

In specifications for construction of city water supply system, provisions that filling of trenches should be settled with water at not more than two intermediate depths, to be determined by street superintendent, and that no excavating material should be removed from street until back-filling is completed in manner satisfactory to engineer, held not invalid, since matters concern things which could not with reasonable diligence and cost be ascertained in advance, and would be disclosed only in the doing of the work.

11. Municipal corporations ⚡438—Test of right to create public improvement by special assessment is existence of special benefit to property assessed.

A test of the right to create a public improvement by special assessment does not resolve itself on the point whether there exists some general public benefit, but test is: Does there exist, with relation to the work, a special and peculiar benefit to the property assessed?

12. Municipal corporations ⚡438—Where no part of city, except part included in improvement district, received benefits of water supply system, requiring payment from general funds would be unreasonable (Improvement Act 1911; Improvement Bond Act 1915).

Where there was no evidence that any part of city could be benefited by construction of city water supply system, under Improvement Act 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730) and Improvement Bond Act 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1441), except that part of city which was included within the improvement district, it would be unreasonable to require payment for improvement to be made from general funds, or by bond issue over whole city.

13. Municipal corporations ⚡303(1), 314(1)—Discrepancies in specifications and resolution, not increasing cost of constructing water system, held not to vitiate proceedings (Improvement Act 1911; Improvement Bond Act 1915).

Where variances and discrepancies in plans, specifications, and resolution of intention, relating to construction of city water supply system, were slight, and cost of work was not shown to be materially increased or decreased because thereof, or on account of discretion vested in engineer, they did not vitiate proceedings under Improvement Act 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730) and Improvement Bond Act 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1441).

14. Municipal corporations ⚡304(1), 314(1)—Resolution of intention, plans, and specifications, if sufficiently definite to enable bidders to know outlay with reasonable accuracy, are sufficient (Improvement Act 1911; Improvement Bond Act 1915).

Under Improvement Act 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730) and Improvement Bond Act 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1441), purpose of resolution of intention of city trustees to construct improvement, and plans and specifications therefor, is for the benefit of property owners and contractors who are to bid on the work, and, if they are sufficiently definite on details of work materially affecting its cost to apprise bidders of all essential parts of work and enable them to know with reasonable accuracy the outlay they will have to make in performing the work, they are sufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; George R. Freeman, Judge.

Action by J. E. Mills and another against the City of Elsinore and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Saran & Thompson, of Riverside, and Swing & Wilson, of San Bernardino, for appellants.

George W. Crouch, City Atty., of Los Angeles, Wm. G. Irving, of Riverside, Wm. M. Brown, of Los Angeles, and Loyal C. Kelley, of Riverside, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. The board of trustees of the city of Elsinore, a city of the sixth class, on March 12, 1925, passed resolution of intention No. 117, declaring its intention to construct a water supply and distributing system for fire protection and domestic water supply; it being declared therein that the proceedings were being taken pursuant to the "Improvement Act of 1911" (St. 1911, p. 730) and the "Improvement Bond Act of 1915" (St. 1915, p. 1441). Steps were subsequently taken, resulting in the acceptance of the bid of the defendant Claude Fisher for the performance of the work, and a resolution was adopted by the board awarding the contract therefor to defendant Fisher. Within 10 days from the first publication of the notice of award of the contract to defendant Fisher, the plaintiffs, J. E. Mills and Mabel A. Mills, with others, all owners of land liable to assessment, filed with the clerk of the board a written notice and protest, claiming that the previous acts and proceedings relating to the improvement were irregular, defective, erroneous, and faulty, which notice stated that it was given and the protest made pursuant to the provisions of section 16 of the Improvement Act of 1911, and specified that the acts and proceedings were irregular, defective, erroneous, and faulty in a number of respects, the following being set forth in appellants' brief, to which our attention is directed:

"(1) That the resolution of intention does not correctly describe the location of the work and improvement; (2) that the character and dimensions of the reservoirs to be constructed are not delineated upon the plans and profiles; * * * (4) that the specifications unlawfully delegate discretion to the superintendent of streets; (5) that neither the materials, nor the character nor quality thereof, to be used in making said improvements, are described with any degree of certainty; * * * (10) that the resolution of intention does not refer to the streets to be improved by their lawful or official names; (11) that the property and rights of way upon which a portion of said improvement is to be constructed are not described in the resolution of intention; (12) that the resolution of intention does not briefly describe the work to be done; (13) that the resolution of intention does not give the location of the proposed improvement; (14) that the plans, profiles, and specifications do not give a full and detailed description of said work and improvement; (15) that no detailed description of said work or improvement is set forth in said proceedings; * * * (21) that authority is illegally and improperly vested in the city engineer."

Curt Miller, superintendent of streets, entered into the contract with defendant Fisher, who entered upon the execution of the work. Plaintiffs thereupon brought this action against the city of Elsinore, the five persons constituting its board of trustees, the clerk, treasurer, and street superintendent, and the contractor, Claude Fisher, praying for an injunction pendente lite, as well as a permanent injunction, restraining the performance of the work and improvement, the making of any assessments or the issuing of any bonds to cover the cost thereof, and restraining the imposing or creating of any cloud, lien, or assessment upon the land of the plaintiffs, and praying for a decree adjudging that the contract is invalid, and that the proceedings leading up to the execution of the contract were irregular, defective, erroneous, and faulty. The application for an injunction pendente lite was denied, and upon the trial on the merits judgment was rendered for defendants, and from this judgment plaintiffs have appealed.

It is contended that the judgment should be reversed for the following reasons: (a) That the board of trustees have no power under the act to construct buildings, or purchase or install motors and electrical apparatus; (b) that because of defects in the resolution of intention the board never acquired jurisdiction to order the improvement; (c) that variance and ambiguities invalidate the proceedings and the contract; (d) that the work and improvement is not sufficiently described; and (e) that unlawful discretion and power is delegated to the superintendent of streets and the city engineer.

[1] We shall discuss the points in the rotation in which they are urged. As to assignment (a), that the board of trustees has no power under the act to construct buildings or install motors and electrical apparatus, it may be said that authority to do such is contained in section 2 of the Improvement Act of 1911, as amended (St. 1923, p. 104), which provides for the ordering upon any street, public property or right of way of a city "wells, pumps, dams, reservoirs, storage tanks, tunnels, conduits, pipes, hydrants, meters or other appurtenances for supplying or distributing a domestic water supply." In addition to the general power, subdivision (j) of section 2 provides for general incidental powers with reference to the improvement of streets, public property, etc., and subdivision (k) of section 2 provides for all other work auxiliary to any of the above which may be required to carry out the same.

Appellants contend that, because the resolution of intention provided for certain buildings, and electric motors to operate the pumps, the power granted by the Legislature has been exceeded, and in support of their contention cite Thompson v. Hance, 174 Cal. 572, 163 P. 1021, Federal Construction Co. v. Ensign, 59 Cal. App. 200, 210 P. 536, and Spring Street Co. v. Los Angeles, 170 Cal. 24, 148 P. 217, L. R. A. 1918E, 197. In the Thompson Case it is held that work of an entirely different and independent character from that specified in the act could not be justified by virtue of a blanket provision in the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147, as amended by St. 1911, p. 626), corresponding to subdivision (j) of section 2 of the Improvement Act of 1911, and the Federal Construction Company and Spring Street Cases hold that under our system of government no assessment can be made upon any land on any principle other than that of special benefits actually or presumptively received.

The manifest intention of the Improvement Act and of the language used with relation to appurtenances and auxiliary work make it apparent that the Legislature, not only intended to provide for the installing of wells and pumps, conduits and pipes, but whatever may be reasonably necessary for supplying and distributing the water to its consumers. The act itself characterizes the general power, and then uses this language:

All "other appurtenances for supplying or distributing a domestic water supply;" and further on, "All other work auxiliary to any of the above, which may be required to carry out the same."

The Legislature certainly did not intend that wells might be drilled and pumps installed, but that they must be left in the broad outdoors unprotected from the elements. To adopt the interpretation urged by appellants would be to create a system which would be useless until some foreign or intervening agency intervened to convey the water into the lines and to the pipes of the consumers and to the fire hydrants. We think the Legislature meant to create a water supply, distributing, and development system. It could not be expected to specify in the act all of the details of appurtenances and auxiliaries necessary to a perfect system.

[2] Under specification (b), that because of defects in the resolution of intention the board never acquired jurisdiction to order the improvement, appellants claim that the resolution of intention does not briefly describe the work, in that it does not define and locate the right of way for the discharge pipe from the pumping station. The language used in the resolution in this respect is:

"And such water well and pumping plant construction work shall include the construction of a wrought steel discharge pipe from said pumping station and on a straight line, across an alley, over certain property belonging to said city and along a right of way therefor, across Langstaff street to a point adjacent to the east line of lot 23, block 87, of said tract."

The language immediately preceding had dealt with and defined the location of the pumping plant, namely, upon lot 13, block 80, Heald's Subdivision of Elsinore, and the entire resolution of intention is tied up to the plans and specifications. The location of the pumping plant having been specified, and the resolution of intention stating that this pipe line runs in a straight line from this pumping plant across the alley and across Langstaff street to a point adjacent to the east line of lot 87, furnishes a brief description of the work, and the plans referred to, indicating exactly where the pipe line is to be laid, sufficiently complies with the law. Richmond v. Growney, 29 Cal. App. 427, 155 P. 1008. From the plans it appears that the line in question runs straight from the lot on which the pumping plant is located, which is lot 13, block 86, to a point on the east line of lot 23, block 87. The exact point on the east line of lot 23, block 87, is not shown upon the plans by the number of feet at that particular point, but it does appear that the pipe line intersects a point on the north line of lot 13, block 87, 50 feet from the northeast corner of such lot, and also intersects the east line of lot 23, block 87, a 60-foot lot; hence the exact location is easily ascertained.

Again, it appears that the pipe line continues in a straight line to the center of the pumphouse located on lot 13, block 86, which point is 44 feet from the east line of such lot and 12 feet from the north line thereof. Therefore, if a line as shown on the drawings starts from a point on the lot mentioned, which point is 44 feet west of the east line and 12 feet south of the north line of such lot, and then reaches a point on the north line of such lot, which is 50 feet west of the northeast corner, as shown by the drawings, and the line running in a "straight line," as defined in the resolution of intention, it could only intersect lot 23, block 87, at one definite point.

Referring to appellants' further objection under this heading that the extent of the right of way, its termini, width, etc., is not sufficiently located, it may be said that plan No. 117 (Defendants' Exhibit No. 14-D) shows the notation with respect to this line as follows: "Trench one foot west of west line of lot 12 of block 5." The clause "over a certain right of way belonging to the city adjacent to the westerly lines" of certain lots, taken in connection with this plan, sufficiently locates the right of way, as it adjoins the west line of certain given numbered lots, at the most farthest in one direction and ends at the end of the lot most farthest in the other direction, which sufficiently fixes the termini of the right of way. The same objection is made with relation to the reservoir. The resolution of intention states upon what particular lots of a given tract of land the reservoir is to be located and refers to the plans for further particulars.

The plans show that the reservoir is located upon a parcel of land, one corner of which is the north corner of lot 25, block 14, Country Club Heights unit No. 3; another corner of which is the east corner of lot 25, block 14, of the same tract; the third corner is the southerly corner of lot 39, block 14, of the same tract; and the fourth corner is the westerly corner of lot 39, block 14, Country Club Heights unit No. 3; that the reservoir extends to within five feet of the outside property lines of this parcel of land. On the bottom of Exhibit 14-N appears the cross-sections of the reservoir given in each direction, and on the plan also appears the lot numbers. It is true that in the specifications there is an error, in that one of the lots upon which the reservoir is to be located has been omitted. This lot, however, which is lot 33, would fall in the center of the parcel of land, and the error, therefore, would mislead no one. Furthermore, paragraph 52 of the specifications provides:

"Any work, material, or apparatus appurtenant to the work of making a complete job, which shall be specified in these specifications and omitted from plans, or which is shown on plans or drawings and omitted from the specifications, shall be considered as both part of plans and specifications, and the contractor shall furnish said work, material, or apparatus."

Appellants urge, under assignment (c), "that variances and ambiguities invalidate the proceedings and the contract," that where, as here, the description of the work is partly in the plans and partly in the specifications, a variance or conflict in the description with respect to the extent of the improvements, materials to be used, etc., constitutes a fatal defect and invalidates the proceedings; that the resolution of intention provides for the improvement of Poe street, where no pipe line is to be laid, and therefore that this constitutes a conflict; but an inspection of plan No. 115 (Defendants' Exhibit 14-B) shows that at this particular block Poe street is "vacated" and is so marked, and therefore it is not Poe street at all. The same applies to the objection as to two pipe lines on Graham avenue, where the discrepancy exists as to whether there is to be one or two pipe lines.

The next objection which the appellants present relates to the fittings indicated in part by plan No. 117 (Defendants' Exhibit 14-D), particularly referring to intersections designated as intersections 1 and 6, and they urge that by reference to plan No. 114 (Defendants' Exhibit 14-A), which is connected up with plan No. 117, it appears that intersections Nos. 1 and 6 are outside the city. Appellants, however, overlook the notation of explanation appearing on plan No. 114 and also on plan No. 117, reading as follows:

"The profiles referred to are often more extensive than the plans and are to be disregarded except in so far as they relate to the lines indicated on plans and mentioned in resolution of intention."

This makes it clear that, where an intersection is shown extending beyond the lines indicated in the resolution of intention and shown upon the major plans, it has no reference to the work to be done. Plan No. 114 (Exhibit 14-A) is one of the major plans. In the southwesterly corner of this plan is a rectangular portion, wherein the city limits line is indicated by a dotted line, and wherein is noted on each pipe line indicated that it "is not a portion of the improvement." The figures 1 and 6 referred to by appellants, and which figures appear in circles, relate to a detail plan of the intersection. On this major plan No. 114 (Exhibit 14-A) appears also the explanation: "Figures in circles correspond to enlarged detail." With this explanation that appears upon these two plans, we cannot see how any person could understand that it was his duty to construct fittings on a pipe line not to be laid, not described in the resolution of intention, which lies outside the city limits, and which is especially excluded by appropriate notations made upon the major plans.

Again, appellants complain that there is a discrepancy between plan 116 (Defendants' Exhibit 14-C) and plan 123 (Defendants' Exhibit 14-J) in that the latter shows an 8-inch pipe line, both north and south of the intersection with Flint street, while the former shows the 8-inch pipe line on Main street to extend from a point 15 feet from the north line of Flint street, in a southerly line to the north line of Mountain View avenue, and a 6-inch pipe line to extend from the last-named point in the intersection of Flint street northerly to Minthorn street. Plans 115 and 116 (Defendants' Exhibits 14-B and 14-C) are major plans, as distinguished from special detail plans of appurtenances and accessories. Plan 123 (Defendants' Exhibit 14-J) is one of the detail plans. We do not understand that there is any conflict here. The intersection on the last plan, shown as F-1, may well be reasonably construed to indicate only the 8-inch pipe in the immediate vicinity of the fire hydrant. This latter plan is not a plan of the pipe lines, but is a plan of the fire hydrant details. The following notation and instruction appears on plan No. 116 (Defendants' Exhibit 14-C):

"For detail of pipe fittings at intersections, see plan No. 118. Figures in circles correspond to enlarged detail. For fire hydrant details, see plan No. 123. Profiles referred to are often more extensive than the plans, and are to be disregarded, except in so far as they relate to the lines indicated on the plans and mentioned in the resolution of intention."

It would not be expected, therefore, that reference be had to plan No. 123, except for information respecting the fire hydrants and their appurtenant details. Therefore there is no necessity or purpose of showing the size of the pipe lines except in the immediate vicinity of the fire hydrant connection. This fire hydrant connection is indicated by letter "T" placed horizontally, and appears upon plan No. 123 (detail F-1) to be upon the pipe line situated on Main street at a point 5 feet south of the south line of Flint street. Since it is an 8-inch pipe at that place, and continues to be an 8-inch pipe until it reaches a point within 15 feet of the north line of Flint street, there is no conflict. The entire purpose of these drawings in plan No. 123 being to show the hydrant details, they are made so as to embrace only the points of intersection where the fire hydrant is to be placed; it is a reasonable interpretation to say that the size of the pipe as placed upon these intersection drawings has particular reference only to the point of juncture of the pipe line with the fire hydrant and its fittings. Furthermore, the lines showing the pipe lines, as appears upon these detail drawings, indicate definitely no point of beginning and no point of ending. The drawing does, however, definitely indicate the fire hydrant, its location and appurtenances, and that, as a matter of fact, as otherwise affirmatively appears from the quotation we have just made, and which is noted on the other plan, is all the information that this plan No. 123 was ever intended to convey.

Again, complaint is made that plan No. 118 provides for the construction of certain fittings at intersections Nos. 30 and 35, but that plan No. 116 recites that intersections 30 and 35 are not part of the drawings. This is the same character of objection we have already considered as to the work noted on major plan No. 114, as being outside of the city limits and which work is to be omitted. Major plan 116 shows that the pipe line situated at the southerly end of block 504, and lying between Granite street and East Hill street, bears the notation, "Not a part of proceedings." Also on the same map, and immediately south of the line just above noted, and situated at the northerly termination of Dutton street, shows another line extending eastward to East Hill street, which bears a similar designation. On this same plan and appearing in circles are the figures "30" and "35" and written in between these circles is the notation, "Not a portion of proceedings." There is also an explanation on this plan reading as follows:

"For detail of pipe fitting at intersections, see plan No. 118. Figures in circle correspond to enlarged detail. For fire hydrant details, see plan No. 123. The profiles referred to are often more extensive than the plans, and are to be disregarded, except in so far as they relate to the lines indicated on the plans and mentioned in the resolution of intention."

Plan No. 116 being a major plan, and plan No. 118 being a detail plan of pipe fitting, no one, with these explanations appearing on the major plan, would conclude that the pipe fittings at intersections 30 and 35 were to be constructed under these proceedings. To adopt such a construction would be to disregard the notations and explanations appearing upon the major plans, and to ignore the descriptions set forth in the resolution of intention, which specifically omit these particular pipe lines, and to adopt a conclusion that pipe fittings are to be established at points and in places where there is no pipe line whatever to be constructed.

The next point made is that plan No. 120 (Defendants' Exhibit 14-C) with respect to one of the vertical motors provides that it shall have 20 horse power and that the specifications provide that the motors "shall be of ample H. P. to satisfactorily carry the maximum load under which they will be required to operate without overheating." If there were no further explanations appearing in the proceedings, such a point would not be of any particular merit, unless in conjunction therewith it is shown that 20 horse power was either not ample to carry the load or was in excess of that needed. It must be remembered that this provision of the specifications does not have reference in particular to any one motor shown upon the plans, but was a general specification with relation to a number of different motors.

There is another explanation to be adopted, and that is that these motors are for the purpose of operating the pumps. The specifications provide, with respect to the different pumps, that they shall be of a certain design or equivalent. In this particular instance the Kimball type pump is designated on the plan. The specifications for the different pumps provide the capacity each pump must deliver; that is, speaking of pump at station No. 1, "the pump shall have a capacity of between 260 and 280 gallons per minute operating against a head of 125 feet." If the construction be adopted that the contractor was at liberty to furnish an equivalent type of pump, and that an equivalent pump would require a motor of horse power exceeding twenty horse power, then, it would be his duty to supply the type of motor demanding a greater horse power.

There is no merit in the objection that plan No. 120 provides that the pump at station No. 2 is of a 450-gallon per minute capacity, while the specifications relating to the capacity of the pump say that it shall be "between 440 and 460 gallons per M. operating against a head of 125 feet." The notation appearing upon the plan is necessarily the "rated" capacity of the pump. In actual working conditions, pumps of a given definite capacity will perform differently, according to whether they lift in hot or cold water, or are operating at different elevations above sea level. The proper explanation of the plans and specifications is that they are to supply a pump of theoretical rated capacity of "450 G P M" (which is a technical pumping engineering term), capable, at the conditions existing in the city of Elsinore, of delivering between 440 and 460 gallons per minute, operating against a head of 125 feet. In actual practice, even a layman knows that a pump of rated capacity frequently varies somewhat in its actual performance under varying conditions.

[3] The next objection made is that plan No. 120 provides for "overload relay," and that the resolution of intention provides, in general terms, for "overload relays," without definitely specifying that there are more or less than one. It is a rule of construction that the plural may mean a singular, or a singular may mean a plural, wherever from the context the definite meaning is clearly ascertainable. The "overload relay" is composed of a magnetic control coil on each of two of the leads leading from the source of power to the motor. Each one of these coils is an "overload relay" in itself, but in construction two of them exist, and are also considered as a unit by itself, and therefore, in engineering terms, may be variously referred to as "overload relay" or "the overload relays." The same sort of an objection is made with regard to the resolution of intention, where, after providing for the construction of the pump, it says, "together with the necessary steel suction pipe, strainers," etc. The plan indicates only one strainer is necessary. An error of this kind, in using the singular instead of the plural, taken in connection with the context, becomes immaterial.

[4] Again, appellants complain that the specifications with relation to the pump at station No. 3 provide that it shall be of the underground discharge type. That merely means that it is so constructed that with its appurtenances and connections water can be conveyed directly from the immediate vicinity of the pump to the underground line. The pump could still be of the underground discharge type. If we take plan No. 121 (Defendants' Exhibit 14-H), of which they complain, and compare it with plan No. 117 (Exhibit 14-D), we will see that 15 feet from the center of the well and immediately to the south of it is located the concrete receiving tank; again, if we refer to plan No. 119 (Defendants' Exhibit 14-F), we will perceive that the discharge pipe from the pump to this receiving tank, which is 15 feet distant therefrom, enters the receiving tank at a point 1 foot and 10 inches below the ground line. For practical purposes, therefore, it sufficiently appears that the discharge would be elbowed down to meet the underground pipe coming from the receiving tank, and this would be a sufficient compliance to cover the use of the term "underground discharge." Moreover, appellants have not shown that there is any radical difference of construction or of cost between this type of discharge pipe and some other method, or that it would tend in any wise to increase or lower the cost, or to have any effect whatever on the efficiency of the pumping plant.

[5] Again, appellants complain that plan No. 124 (Defendants' Exhibit 14-K) provides for the construction of two switchboards at station No. 3, while plan No. 117 calls for the construction of only one switchboard. This is not a conflict. Where intricate construction work is indicated, the plans must all be considered together, to determine what the work to be done consists of. Plan No. 117 is intended to show the general location of the pumping station with relation to the lot and street lines. In a plan of this kind, manifestly not all details could be shown on a single plan. It would be highly impractical to do so; many of the details would have to be drawn in such fine scale that they could not be seen with the naked eye. A switchboard is more or less of a generic term in electrical engineering and may consist of one, two, or more panels. When we refer to plan No. 124, we have disclosed to us the system of wiring which could not be possibly indicated on the plan, which was only intended to show the general outline.

[6, 7] Again, appellants complain that the resolution of intention provides that the pipe to be laid "shall be wrought steel screw pipe," and that the specifications provide that "all pipe is to be wrought steel welded pipe." This in itself is not a conflict. "A screw pipe" means that on the ends of each pipe threads are placed to permit it to be screwed to the next connecting pipe to be laid. A "welded pipe" does not have the significance that it is to be welded to the next connecting pipe, but merely means that in the manufacture of the pipe the longitudinal break, which is formed in the center of the pipe in the rolling of the steel plate which forms the pipe, is welded, instead of being joined in some other manner.

The next objection made is the claim that the proceedings are invalid, because on plan No. 117 there is a notation of two pieces of pipe, totaling 32 feet in length, extending from the pumping station to the concrete receiving tank, that bears the mark "W I" pipe and that the resolution of intention and specifications call for "wrought steel" pipe. There is no explanation of what the lettering "W I" means in any of the proceedings, but there are abundant notations on the plan and specific requirements in the specifications and the resolution of intention to the effect that the pipe to be laid shall be "wrought steel" pipe.

With respect to objections of this character as occurring on plan No. 123, it may be said that plan No. 123 is not intended to be a plan of the pipe lines, but is intended to show the fittings and fire hydrants at the intersections. The same observation applies with reference to the discharge pipe from the well as shown on plan No. 119.

The next objection is to the manner of describing the pumps, motors, and appurtenances. Objections are separately taken up as to each pump, but, inasmuch as the objections made are for the most part merely repetitions of objections made to each pump, we will consider the objection only as to one of the three different pumps.

[8] The description of the pumps and appurtenances at station No. 1 is set forth in the resolution of intention in subdivision D. The specifications provide, further, with reference to the pumps to be installed at that station, as is shown under the heading "Pumps," station No. 1. In general, the pump is to be the Kimball type, auger pump, or equivalent. Its capacity is to be between 260 and 280 gallons per minute operating against a head of 125 feet. The word "equivalent," in mechanical matters, has a distinctive meaning in the trade, which is a combination of the ordinary use of the word and the meaning of the word as used in the patent law, and indicates a device of practical equivalence in value and effect and of substantially the same design, performing the same functions in practically the same manner.

Water pumps of this character are now practically standard. It is necessary only to tie up the resolution of intention and plans to make a size and type of pump, and the plans be sufficient to indicate a particular design or number, and give a general outline such as will indicate the kind, size, and character of the pump wanted. If the plans, specifications, and resolution of intention are sufficient with respect to this particular pump to indicate the adoption of a certain Kimball type auger pump, as manufactured by the Frank J. Kimball Company, or equivalent, it is not then necessary to show cross-sections and specifications of foundry make, manufacturers' details, and patterns, because a particular thing has been identified and is a standard article, that can be supplied in the general market.

In order that these plans should receive the interpretation of the court as such interpretation would be given by a contractor familiar with the business, or by an engineer or manufacturer engaged in this line of duty, Mr. J. B. Griffin, an expert water and pump engineer, was called as a witness. From his testimony it seems that any person qualified to bid upon the work, or any person sufficiently familiar with plans of this character to draw the reasonable and ordinary conclusions therefrom, would understand the work required to be done, and that there are no serious uncertainties in the descriptions, and that the cost of the works was definitely ascertainable.

[9] This brings us to appellants' objection "that unlawful discretion and power is delegated to the superintendent of streets and the city engineer," and they urge that the law requiring certainty and definiteness in special assessment proceedings prohibits the delegation of any discretionary power by which the materials or extent or cost of improvement may be varied, and that the rule which requires that specifications must definitely and with certainty describe the extent of the work to be done, is subject only to an exception in cases where the details of the construction do not permit it, citing authorities in support of such contention. We are in accord with the law as stated, disagreeing with appellants only with relation to its application to the situation presented here.

[10] Appellants have set forth in their brief a number of paragraphs from the specifications. Among those having to do with the delegation of discretionary power to the officers named is the following:

"The nature of the work will necessitate leaving open considerable length of trenches, and the contractor shall have facilities for rapid back-filling, when so instructed by the engineer. If so directed by the superintendent of streets, the filling shall be settled with water at not more than two intermediate depths, to be determined by the street superintendent before it is brought to one foot from the surface. No excavating material shall be removed from the street until back-filling is completed, but as soon as the trenches are refilled, in a manner satisfactory to the engineer."

The remaining paragraphs reproduced by appellants in their brief have been sufficiently discussed. These objections, while being merely trivial, appear also to concern things which could not with reasonable diligence and cost be ascertained in advance, and which would be disclosed only in the doing of the work (City Street Imp. Co. v. Kroh, 158 Cal. 308, 110 P. 933), as for instance, whether the filling of the trench should be settled with water at one or two depths, or settled at all with water, would depend on the condition of the weather as well as the soil.

[11, 12] This brings us to appellants' final objection that no special or compensating benefit can arise from the construction of a municipal water system where only a portion of the city is assessed therefor. The test of the right to create a public improvement by special assessment does not resolve itself upon the point as to whether there exists some general public benefit, because every assessment proceeding contains an element of public benefit. The test is: Does there exist with relation to the work a special and peculiar benefit to the property to be assessed? In the present case, while not all the city is involved in the assessment district, there is no evidence showing that any part of the city could be benefited by the construction of any of the work, save that part which is included within the district. It would therefore be unreasonable to require the payment to be made from general funds, or by a bond issue over the whole city which is not benefited by the improvement. Furthermore, as is said in Kane v. Wedell, 54 Cal. App. 516, 521, 202 P. 340, 342:

"The statute undoubtedly was intended to authorize the city council to make whatever special improvement might be deemed necessary for the welfare of the city, or any part thereof, * * * a power to include the whole city in one district if necessary for an improvement which affected the whole, or to divide the city into smaller districts for other special improvements, which might affect only the particular sections so included."

[13] As the variances and discrepancies complained of are on the whole slight, and as it does not appear that the cost of the work, because of such variances or the discretion vested in the engineer, materially increased or decreased the cost of the work, they do not vitiate the proceedings. Mill Valley v. Bonding Co., 68 Cal. App. 372, 229 P. 891.

[14] The purpose of the resolution of intention and the plans and specifications, is for the benefit of the property owners and contractors who are to bid on the work. If they are sufficiently certain and definite, upon all the details of the work which materially affect its cost, to apprise bidders of all the essential and substantial parts of the work and enable them to know with reasonable accuracy the outlay they will have to make in performing the work to be contracted for, they are sufficient. City Imp. Co. v. Kroh, supra.

We think the proceedings sufficiently comply with the statute, and that the record contains no error calling for a reversal.

The judgment is affirmed.

JEDLICKA et ux. v. ATWELL LAND CO.
et al. (Civ. 5820.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 5, 1928.

Vendor and purchaser ⇨308(1)—Imperfection of vendor's title does not destroy validity of contract as respects vendor's right to compel payment of intermediate installments.

Where vendee contracts with one having none or an imperfect title, he contracts with hope or expectation that vendor may be able to perfect title, and in absence of fraud or misrepresentation, such imperfection of title does not destroy validity of contract as respects vendor's right to compel payment of intermediate installments of purchase price, though vendor must be prepared to convey good title when time arrives for making final payment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied. For former opinion, see 269 P. 665.

Miller & Casady, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Robert Brennan, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. On petition for rehearing. Petitioners are in error in their suggestion that this court held that at the date of the contract of August 16, 1921, R. M. Martin was not the owner of any stock in defendant corporation. Implicitly it was admitted by the pleadings that Martin remained the owner of one share; in other words, Martin had owned 9,998 shares and had reserved one share from his pledge to Childress. The testimony of Martin confirms this fact.

The fact that the vendors at the time of making their contract with defendant corporation did not own the land, but had only those rights referred to in the decision herein, has not that supreme importance which has been insisted upon by appellants. Where a vendee contracts with one having none or an imperfect title, he contracts in the hope or expectation that the vendor may be able to perfect the title. Brimmer v. Salisbury, 167 Cal. 522, 531, 140 P. 30; Kerr v. Reed, 39 Cal. App. 11, 16, 179 P. 399. In the absence of fraud or misrepresentation of any kind, such imperfection of title does not destroy the validity of the contract. Of course, it is true that on an installment contract, when the time arrives for making the final payment of consideration, the vendor must be prepared to convey a sufficient title. But under such a contract the vendor's right to compel payment of intermediate installments of the purchase price does not depend upon the present existence of a complete title in the vendor.

While the assignments of error made by appellant in relation to instructions to the jury were not discussed in the opinion of the court, the court did not fail to give to them what we deemed to be sufficient consideration. If there were any errors in said instructions, we are of the opinion that such errors were of minor importance in relation to the case and did not probably affect the verdict.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

KELLOGG v. SNELL. (Civ. 3535.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 30, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Judgment will not be reversed for merely conflicting evidence.

Judgment appealed from will not be reversed for a mere conflict in evidence.

2. Evidence ⇨441(6)—Parol evidence of contemporaneous oral agreement respecting plaintiff's employment as bank official at $250 per month, where written contract specified he would accept position under conditions otherwise agreed on, held competent.

Where written contract contained provision that plaintiff would accept position with bank under conditions otherwise agreed on, parol evidence of oral agreement contemporaneous with written contract, respecting employment of plaintiff as cashier and manager of bank at salary of $250 per month, held not incompetent, as varying or conflicting with specific provisions of the written instrument, which showed a contemporaneous agreement was contemplated.

3. Estoppel ⇨71—Defendant, having waived requirement that plaintiff stay in bank 60 days after resignation, was estopped to assert failure to remain as defense to later action.

In action for bank officer's breach of contract to repurchase bank stock sold plaintiff and procure his employment in bank as cashier and manager, defendant, having consented to plaintiff's resignation as teller, thereby waiving his right to require plaintiff to remain with bank for 60 days thereafter, as provided by terms of contract, held estopped to take advantage of plaintiff's failure to so remain, or to urge lack of consideration for waiver.

4. Appeal and error ⇨766—Judgment should be affirmed, where defendant's briefs on appeal failed to set out evidence in support of contention relied on for reversal (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

In action for breach of contract, where defendant's briefs on appeal did not include any evidence in support of contention that evidence in trial court proceeding did not support defendant's verbal promise to procure employment for plaintiff in bank as cashier and manager at $250 per month, and that it failed to support damages of $1,250 for breach thereof, such being relied on for reversal, and plaintiff's briefs on appeal setting out substantial evidence to support judgment and findings of lower court, held, that judgment should be affirmed, without resorting to examination of typewritten record, prepared in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, to ascertain merit of plaintiff's contention.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. C. Doran, Judge.

Action by G. B. Kellogg against Thomas T. Snell. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Person & Rodgers, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Clyde C. Shoemaker, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment for damages for failure to repurchase 50 shares of bank stock pursuant to contract. The appeal was perfected under the provisions of section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground that the findings are not supported by the evidence. No evidence or proceedings are printed in appellant's brief.

Upon trial the court found the following facts: That the appellant was president of the board of directors of the Hollywood State Bank, at Los Angeles, and that he owned 50 shares of the capital stock of said bank of the book value of $112.50 per share. August 21, 1924, appellant sold his entire block of stock to respondent for $200 per share, with an agreement in consideration thereof that respondent was to be immediately employed by said bank as cashier and manager at a salary of $250 per month. The written agreement of the parties, which accompanied this sale of stock, included the following provisions:

"* * * It is * * * agreed by the parties hereto that the second party [respondent] is to accept a position with said bank under conditions otherwise agreed upon and that this contract of purchase is made with the express understanding that, in the event either party is dissatisfied, or for any reason is desirous of severing the connection of the second party with the bank, he may, prior to March 1, 1925, by written notice, demand the repurchase and delivery of said 50 shares of stock at the price now being paid, namely, $10,000, and both parties hereby agree that, upon such demand by either party, payment for the stock and delivery will be made forthwith, provided however that if the demand is made by the second party, the first party may have sixty days in which to complete the purchase, during which time the second party will remain with the bank."

Pursuant to the provisions of said contract to the effect that respondent would accept a position in said bank "under conditions otherwise agreed upon," it was orally stipulated that respondent was to be immediately employed by said bank as cashier and manager at a salary of $250 per month. Immediately upon consummation of this sale, appellant resigned as director and president of said corporation bank, and severed his connections therewith. After the stock had been purchased and paid for by respondent, the bank declined to employ him as cashier or manager, but passed a resolution hiring him as a teller only at a salary of but $150 per month. Respondent protested against this action, but appellant persuaded him to accept the position as teller temporarily, promising to promptly secure his appointment as cashier and manager, and to have his salary increased to $250 per month, or himself pay the difference between this sum and the salary actually allowed. With this promise the respondent performed the duties of teller for the period of about a month, frequently interviewing the appellant and demanding that he fulfill his contract.

Becoming hopeless of securing the salary or position promised, the respondent told appellant that he intended to resign, and thereupon demanded the repurchase of the 50 shares of bank stock pursuant to contract. The appellant then agreed to immediately arrange to repurchase the stock and expressly waived the covenant on the part of respondent to remain with the bank for the period of 60 days. The respondent resigned his position as teller on October 15, 1924, and five days later served appellant with written notice to fulfill his contract and repurchase the stock, which he failed and refused to do. After due notice respondent sold said bank stock at public auction pursuant to sections 3049 and 3311, Civil Code, on December 31, 1924, for the net sum of $5,750, leaving a balance of $4,250 loss incurred by respondent on the purchase price of said stock. The court found that respondent had sustained damages in said sum of $4,250 on account of appellant's breach of contract, together with the further sum of $1,250 damages proximately caused by his failure to procure respondent's employment in the bank as cashier and manager at a salary of $250 per month, and rendered judgment accordingly.

The appellant contends that (1) the evidence fails to support the judgment; that (2) the written contract is presumed to have included all the conditions of the transaction, and that the verbal agreement to secure respondent's employment in the bank as cashier and manager at a salary of $250 per month was without consideration and void; and that (3) there is no evidence to support the judgment for the sum of $1,250 damages in addition to the loss sustained by respondent upon the public resale of the bank stock.

[1] While there is a conflict of evidence, particularly with respect to the alleged oral agreement to procure the employment of respondent in the bank as cashier and manager at a salary of $250 per month, there appears to be ample testimony to support the judgment in every particular. Appellant's contention that the findings and judgment are not supported by the evidence is without merit. No rule on appeal is better established than that a judgment will not be reversed for a mere conflict of evidence. 2 Cal. Jur. 921, § 543.

[2] Evidence of the oral agreement contemporaneous with the written contract respecting the employment of respondent as a cashier and manager of the bank at a salary of $250 per month was competent. The written contract itself specifically contemplates an agreement for this employment upon terms not included within this written document, for it is therein specified that respondent would "accept a position with said bank under conditions otherwise agreed upon." Parol evidence of terms or conditions is competent, which does not vary or conflict with the specific provisions of a written instrument, particularly when it is evident from the language of the written document that a distinct contemporaneous agreement is relied upon by the parties. Jones on Evidence (3d Ed.) 668, §§ 439, 440; Greathouse v. Daleno, 57 Cal. App. 187, 206 P. 1019; Wolters v. King, 119 Cal. 172, 51 P. 35; Whittier v. Home Savings Bank, 161 Cal. 311, 317, 119 P. 92.

[3] The appellant expressly waived his right to require the respondent to remain in the employment of the bank for 60 days as provided by the written contract. The conditions of a written contract may be orally waived by the party in whose behalf they were adopted. 6 Cal. Jur. 402, § 239; Cal. Raisin Growers v. Abbott, 160 Cal. 601, 117 P. 767; Hulen v. Stuart, 191 Cal. 562, 569, 217 P. 750; Walker v. Harbor Business Blocks Co., 181 Cal. 773, 780, 186 P. 356. Having advised or consented to respondent's resignation as teller of the bank, the appellant may not take advantage of respondent's failure to comply with the written contract to remain with the bank for a period of 60 days. The appellant is estopped by his conduct. Bidegaray v. Ormaca, 48 Cal. App. 665, 192 P. 176; Hulen v. Stuart, 191 Cal. 562, 217 P. 750. Nor may the appellant urge a lack of consideration for his waiver of the written requirement to remain with the bank for the period of 60 days, under such circumstances. Knarston v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 140 Cal. 57, 73 P. 740.

[4] The record on appeal in the present case is unique in this regard, that while appellant relies almost exclusively upon a conflict of evidence to secure a reversal, he has scarcely quoted a sentence of the testimony in his brief, nor has he cited a single authority. The burden of his brief is confined to an argument to show that the weight of evidence was favorable to his defense. It is chiefly claimed that the evidence does not support a finding to the effect that appellant verbally promised to procure employment in the bank for respondent as cashier and manager at $250 per month, and that the evidence fails to support the item for damages amounting to $1,250 for failure to comply with said agreement. The appeal was perfected pursuant to section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure. The transcript consists of over 200 typewritten pages, yet no portion of the evidence or proceedings are printed in appellant's brief. The appellate court has been left to wrestle with the record to determine whether there is substantial evidence to support the judgment. In Eddy v. Stowe, 43 Cal. App. 789, 792, 185 P. 1024, 1025, it is said:

"It is not a compliance with the procedure governing appeals, under the so-called alternative method, for an appellant to print in his opening brief, or in the supplement thereto, only the testimony in the case favorable to his contentions. All the evidence, material to the point made on appeal, should be presented in order that the court may consider its weight and sufficiency, and any conflict presented therein. Unless the record is thus prepared, the court cannot intelligently pass upon the appeal on its merits without imposing on counsel a further presentation of the record, or assuming the vexatious burden of an examination of the typewritten transcript." 2 Cal. Jur. 645; Scott v. Hollywood Park Co., 176 Cal. 680, 169 P. 379; McLaren v. Hards, 39 Cal. App. 104, 178 P. 332; Jones v. Express Publishing Co. (Cal. App.) 262 P. 78.

Where the brief of appellant utterly fails to print any evidence in support of the points relied upon for a reversal, and the respondent's brief sets out substantial evidence to support the judgment and findings, the judgment will be affirmed without resorting to the arduous task of examining the typewritten record to ascertain whether appellant's contentions are founded upon merit.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

GRACCHI et al. v. FRIEDLANDER, State Commissioner of Corporations.
(Civ. 6454.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 7, 1928.

1. Contracts ⇐164—All documents, signed and executed at same time and relating to same matter, are to be taken together (Civ. Code, § 1642).

Under Civ. Code, § 1642, all documents comprising contracts relating to orders for rabbits, note, and agency assignments, signed and executed at same time, and relating to same matter, are to be taken together.

2. Sales ⇐3—Contract consisting of orders for rabbits, and for sharing profits, without providing for separation or identification of rabbits, held not "sale."

Contract consisting of orders for certain number of rabbits and hutches, authorizing vendors to sell any rabbit and to replace it, and for division of profits between parties, without providing for the separation or identification of any specific rabbit or hutch, held not to constitute a "sale," until holder elected to give required 90-day notice, entitling him to receive three rabbits and their increase, and as many hutches as he shall have paid for.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Sale.]

3. Licenses ⇐18½—Contracts entitling holder to share in profits on basis of number of rabbits and hutches purchased held subject to Corporate Securities Act (Corporate Securities Act, § 2, subd. 7, par. d).

Contracts consisting of orders for certain number of rabbits and hutches, authorizing vendors to sell any rabbit and to replace it, and for division of profits between parties, without providing for the separation or identification of any specific rabbit or hutch, held subject to Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673, as amended by St. 1925, p. 962) § 2, subd. 7, par. (d).

Certiorari proceeding by M. J. Gracchi and another, copartners, against J. M. Friedlander, as Commissioner of Corporations of the State of California, to review an order of the Commissioner. Writ denied.

Athearn, Chandler & Farmer, Frank R. Devlin, Karl Brooks, and Philip H. Angell, all of San Francisco, for petitioners.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Robert W. Harrison, Chief Deputy Atty. Gen., and Donald A. Pearce, Deputy Com'r of Corporations, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. This is an application for a writ of review against the respondent, as commissioner of corporations of the state of California. The petitioners are copartners, and are doing business under two fictitious names: (1) The California Fur Rabbit Association; and (2) the California Fur Rabbit Farms. They are engaged in selling certain contracts. Each contract consists of two pieces of paper. One paper consists of three documents. The first one is an order for merchandise; the second is a promissory note; the third is a receipt for the first payment. The first and second documents are printed to receive the signature of the intending purchaser; the third document has printed thereon "The California Fur Rabbit Association," together with a blank line to be signed by the "sales representative." The second paper is an agency assignment, and is printed to receive the signature of the intending purchaser. The goods ordered in the first document are described as "three (3) pedigreed (Blue Ribbon strain) white giant does; two (2) compartment breeding hutches." The same description is repeated in the agency appointment. The order recites: "The title thereto shall remain with you." The receipt contains a covenant authorizing the vendors to sell any rabbit and to replace it. The agency appointment provides that the vendors shall have the control and possession, and shall care for, supervise, inspect, and market, said rabbits. It uses the expressions "deliver" and "redeliver," but no delivery or change of delivery is provided for, except in one paragraph:

"I reserve the right to cancel this agency at any time upon ninety (90) days' written notice to said Farms, and in the event of such cancellation I shall be entitled to redelivery, at the expiration of said ninety (90) days, of all my then existing rabbits and their increase and to hutches belonging to me, upon my payment to said Farms of any sums owing by me to them."

The same document provides: "Said rabbits shall be labeled and tattooed." However, no one of the documents contains a blank describing any rabbit by label or tattoo, or otherwise than we have noted above. The petition recites that the petitioners have 10 acres and are engaged in breeding and raising rabbits.

[1] The manner of transacting business was that all of said documents were signed and executed at the same time. As all relate to the same matter, they are to be taken together. Civ. Code, § 1642; Flinn & Treacy v. Mowry, 131 Cal. 481, 63 P. 724, 1006; Cobb v. Doggett, 142 Cal. 142, 75 P. 785; McAuliff v. McFadden, 42 Cal. App. 505, 183 P. 870.

[2] The facts stated in the petition and in the exhibits attached thereto show that, when a contract was sold, there was no identification of any certain rabbit or of any certain hutch. Under these circumstances, the transaction did not constitute a sale. The documents, taken all together, are not ambiguous as to when the title should pass. They show on their face that the title did not pass. Considered as a present sale, many documents containing language more favorable to the vendors have been held wanting as constituting a present sale. In the case of McLaughlin v. Piatti, 27 Cal. 451, it was held that the document did not show a present sale of cattle, but that the transaction was executory. At page 463 the court said:

"It is a fundamental principle, pervading everywhere the doctrine of the sales of chattels, that if goods be sold (while mingled with others) by number, weight, or measure, the sale is incomplete, and the title continues with the seller until the bargained property is separated and identified. The reason is that the sale cannot apply to any article until it is clearly designated and its identity ascertained. In the case under consideration, it could not be said with certainty that any particular 500 head of cattle belonged to Baker, or the plaintiff as his assignee, until a severance of that number from the herd from which they were to be taken. If a part of that herd had died, 500 head surviving, the loss would neither in whole nor in part have fallen upon Baker."

That rule has since been followed. Caruthers v. McGarvey, 41 Cal. 15; Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 76 Cal. 212, 18 P. 248, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199; Walti v. Gaba, 160 Cal. 324, 116 P. 963; Wanee v. Thomas, 75 Cal. App. 231, 242 P. 509. The rule is not altered by the fact that a contract holder may elect to give a 90-day notice, and then he will be, under the terms of the contract, entitled to receive three rabbits and their increase and as many hutches as he shall have paid for. Having duly exercised that right what was theretofore an agreement to buy and sell might then become a sale, but not until then. In the meantime the ownership in and to all properties remained vested in the petitioners.

[3] Counsel speak of three does and two hutches as constituting a unit. Looking at the papers before us, it is apparent that the business of the petitioners consisted of operating a plant harboring all of the units covered by each of the outstanding contracts and the units, or fractions of units, on hand and in excess of the calls of such outstanding contracts. There was no division or segregation of the property in any manner whatever. A most cursory reading of the contract shows that the petitioners are engaged in business for profit, and that each contract is bought and sold in expectation of gain to each party. The sales moneys received by the petitioners constitute the gross earnings of the petitioners from the business. The contract makes no provision for the division of those proceeds into two or more funds. Therefore, out of said gross earnings, $4 per head for breeding does at first breeding age, and 5 cents per pound live weight for all other rabbits, is the measure, and only the measure, of payments by the petitioners to the contract holders. The residue of the earnings is payable to and may be retained by the petitioners.

Of the earnings going to the contract holders, it is clear that a portion arises from the increase of the rabbits, a portion from the use of the hutches, and a portion from the use of every other part of the plant, real or personal. The respondent contends that the contract sold by the petitioners falls within the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673, as amended by St. 1925, p. 962), and he cites and relies on section 2, subdivision 7, paragraph (d), which, so far as pertinent, provides as follows:

"Any instrument offered for sale, * * * to the public by any company, evidencing or representing any right to participate or share in the profits, earnings or income, gross or net, derived from the assets, or any thereof, of any business carried on for profit or in the distribution of such assets. * * *"

We think he is clearly correct in this contention. The facts in the instant case are quite different from the facts in such cases as People v. Pace, 73 Cal. App. 548, 238 P. 1089; Creasy Corporation v. Enz Bros. Co., 177 Wis. 49, 187 N. W. 666; Lewis v. Creasey Corporation, 198 Ky. 409, 248 S. W. 1046. The case of People v. McCalla, 63 Cal. App. 783, 220 P. 436, is more nearly in point.

The writ is denied.

PEOPLE v. MADSEN et al. (Cr. 1446.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 29, 1928.

1. Homicide $\hookrightarrow$ 234(10)—Defendants' confessions supplied gap in evidence of identification in murder prosecution, where corpus delicti was shown by competent testimony.

Where corpus delicti was shown by competent testimony in prosecution for murder, confessions of defendants supplied gap in evidence as to their identification.

2. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 566—Defendant need not be identified positively by any number of witnesses.

Identification of defendant need not be made positively by any number of witnesses.

3. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 741(2)—Issue of defendants' identification is for jury to determine on all evidence in case.

In prosecution for murder, issue of identification of defendants is for jury to determine on all evidence in case.

4. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 739(2)—Issue of alibi held for jury, under evidence indicating defendant must have been elsewhere at time of assault, but not showing defendant was at any other place.

Where testimony was offered showing defendant could not have been telling the truth when confessing to alleged murder, but must have been elsewhere at time of assault, but no attempt was made to show that defendant was at any other place, issue of alibi was for jury.

5. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 532(2)—Under conflicting evidence whether confessions were obtained by force, question whether confessions were freely and voluntarily given was for trial court.

Where evidence that confessions were obtained by force and violence by police officers was categorically denied by officers, question whether confessions were freely and voluntarily given was one for trial court to determine.

6. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 532(2), 1153(6)—Trial court has wide discretion in determining whether confession was freely given, and ruling will not be disturbed in absence of abuse.

Trial court, in passing on question whether confession was freely or voluntarily given, is vested with wide discretion, and this rule will not be disturbed on appeal unless abuse is shown.

7. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 531(3)—Confession held not necessarily shown untrue and involuntary because defendant's account of participation in crime before grand jury varied from story of eyewitnesses.

Where defendant, in making confession, gave detailed account of participation in crime before grand jury, which differed from story of eyewitnesses and alibi witnesses, confession was not thereby shown to be untrue and involuntary.

8. Homicide $\hookrightarrow$ 286(1)—Requested instruction on abandonment of criminal design by one defendant held properly refused, under evidence merely showing flight from scene of crime.

In prosecution for murder, requested instruction relative to abandonment of criminal design by one party was properly refused, where there was no evidence of abandonment by either defendant, and only testimony thereof was confession by one defendant that, after receiving blow, he retreated, since evidence of flight from scene of crime does not require instruction on abandonment of criminal design.

9. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 814(16)—Requested instruction to consider deception or fraud in procuring confession in determining whether it was voluntary held properly refused, in absence of evidence of fraud.

Requested instruction in prosecution for murder that, if jury found from evidence, or had reasonable doubt of matter, that deception or fraud was used in procuring confessions, they were to take such facts into consideration in determining whether such confessions were freely given, was properly refused, in absence of evidence to prove either deception or fraud.

10. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 523—Deception or fraud does not exclude confession, unless used to procure untrue statement, and requested instruction to consider fraud in procuring confession on question whether it was voluntary was properly refused.

Requested instruction in prosecution for murder that jury could consider that deception or fraud was used in procuring confessions, in determining whether confessions were freely given, if they so found from evidence or had reasonable doubt thereon, was properly refused, since neither deception nor fraud excludes confession, unless they have been employed to procure untrue statement.

11. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 775(3)—Instruction on alibi defense held not error because using term "alibi."

Instruction covering defense of alibi and defining word "alibi" held not error because using term "alibi."

12. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 782(15)—Instruction on alibi defense, requiring consideration of all other evidence, held not error because not limiting jury to evidence concerning alibi.

Instruction on alibi defense, requiring jury to consider evidence on alibi, together with all other evidence, was not error because not limiting jury's consideration to evidence of alibi, since jury is required to consider all evidence.

13. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 549—Issues in criminal case are to be determined, not on testimony offered on issues only, but on all evidence relevant thereto.

Issues generally in criminal prosecution are to be determined, not on testimony offered on particular issues alone, but on all evidence and inferences relevant and pertinent to such issues.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, James G. Conlon, Judge.

Gus C. Madsen and another were convicted of manslaughter, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Nathan C. Coghlan and A. L. O'Grady, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Waldemar Augustine, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. The defendants were tried together on an indictment charging them, jointly with others, of the crime of murder. These two defendants were found guilty of manslaughter, and have both appealed from the judgment following the verdict and from the order denying their motions for a new trial. The appeal is presented on a type-written record.

The assault which resulted in the death of one Campbell occurred on October 21, 1926, at a place in Eureka street, between Twenty-Second and Twenty-Third streets in the city and county of San Francisco. The deceased and his associate, Coyle, who were "American plan" carpenters, were attacked while at work some time between 1:30 and 2 o'clock p. m. by a gang of men claimed to have been in the service of the carpenters' unions which were then on strike. The two appellants were admittedly union carpenters. The stories of the eyewitnesses differed as to the number of men engaged in the mêlée and the manner in which the assault was actually committed, but it seems to be agreed that these men drove to the place in two automobiles, and, in groups of two, attacked their victims with heavy clubs, or similar weapons, and then ran to their automobiles and were driven out of sight. The appellants were arrested a few days later, and both made complete confessions of their participation in the crime when interrogated by police officers and also when appearing before the grand jury.

[1-3] On this appeal they argue that the state failed to identify them as participants in the crime. The testimony of the eyewitnesses was not convincing, due, no doubt to the suddenness with which the assault was committed and the number of men involved, and due also to the reluctance of these witnesses to testify. The "corpus delicti" having been shown by competent testimony, the confessions of the appellants supplied the gap in the evidence as to their identification. It is not necessary that the identification of a defendant be made positively by any number of witnesses. This issue is one for the jury to determine upon all the evidence in the case. 8 Cor. Jur. p. 169. The record discloses that the jury made no mistake here.

[4] The second point argued seems to be that there was some testimony tending to prove the alibi of appellant Madsen. Testimony was offered to show that Madsen called upon a physician at about 2:30 p. m. of the day of the assault and was treated for a scalp wound, which the physician testified was more than an hour old; that two witnesses testified that Madsen was injured earlier in the day in a scuffle at union headquarters, and that when, after his arrest, Madsen confessed that he was injured in the assault on Eureka street and went to the physician for treatment thereafter, he could not have been telling the truth, but must have been some place else at the time of the assault. No attempt was made to show that either of the appellants were at any other place at the time of the assault, but, from the testimony recited, it is argued that the jury should have sustained the alibi defense. It is sufficient to say that this was a question of fact which the jury had to determine.

[5, 6] Appellants insist that their confessions should not have been received in evidence because they were obtained through force and violence on the part of the police officers. It would serve no purpose to cite the evidence on this issue. It is widely conflicting—all charges of the appellants being categorically denied by the police officers. In such a case the question whether the confessions were freely and voluntarily given was one for the trial court to determine. In passing upon this question, the trial court is vested with a wide discretion, and its ruling will not be disturbed unless an abuse is shown. People v. Perry, 195 Cal. 623, 636, 234 P. 890. This was the fourth trial these appellants had had on this indictment, and the ruling of the trial judge admitting the confessions was made only after a thorough and painstaking inquiry had been made of the circumstances under which the confessions were given. There was no error in the ruling.

[7] After these confessions were given to the police officers, the appellants voluntarily appeared before the grand jury and gave detailed accounts of their participation in the crime. In some respects these accounts differed from the story given by some of the eyewitnesses, and they were also at variance with appellants' alibi witnesses, in that Madsen stated that he received at that time the wound on the head for which he was treated by the physician later in the day. From this appellants argue that the confessions were untrue and hence must be held involuntary. No authority is cited for the proposition. This court has held to the contrary. People v. Costello (Cal. App.) 262 P. 75.

[8] Criticism is made of the refusal of the trial judge to give an instruction proposed by appellants relative to the abandonment of the criminal design by one of two parties

setting out on a joint design to commit a criminal act. The instruction had no part in the case. There was no evidence of abandonment by either appellant. The only testimony approaching the subject was the confession of Madsen, in which he stated that, after he had received the blow on the head, he retreated to the automobile. Flight from the scene of a crime and abandonment of the criminal design before a crime is committed are not the same, and evidence of the former does not call for an instruction covering the latter.

[9, 10] Appellants proposed an instruction advising the jury that, if they found from the evidence, "or if they have a reasonable doubt upon the matter," that deception or fraud was used in procuring the confessions, they were to take those facts into consideration in ascertaining whether the confessions were freely and voluntarily given. There was no evidence tending to prove either deception or fraud. But in any event the proposed instruction did not state the law, because neither deception nor fraud excludes a confession unless they have been employed to procure an untrue statement. People v. Castello, 194 Cal. 595, 602, 229 P. 855; People v. Connelly, 195 Cal. 584, 597, 234 P. 374. Here the trial judge fully instructed the jury on the question of the admissibility of the confessions, and appellants were not injured by the refusal to give the one proposed.

[11-13] The appellants tendered an instruction covering their alibi defense without using that term. The trial judge substituted his own instruction defining "alibi," and advising that:

"It is sufficient to justify an acquittal if the evidence on that point (alibi), considered with all the other evidence, raises a reasonable doubt," etc.

Appellants complain that the court should not have used the odious term "alibi," and that it should have limited the jury's consideration to the evidence on that point alone. The word "alibi" is in common use, and we can see no harm in talking to the jurymen in language they can understand. As to the latter point, the jury must, of course, take into consideration all the evidence and not that offered in support of the alibi defense alone. This is true of issues generally. They are to be determined, not upon the testimony offered upon them alone, but upon all the evidence, and the inferences, relevant and pertinent to such issues.

Appellants' briefs contain many proposed instructions refused by the trial judge and which they now state should have been given. No authorities are cited in support of their contentions, and no effort is made to disclose what instructions were actually given by the trial judge in lieu of those refused.

We have, however, examined the record with care, and are satisfied that the issues were all submitted to the jury through instructions which were clear, impartial, and comprehensive, and which were free from error. The judgment and order are affirmed.

MASTER BUILDERS' CO. v. CLINTON
CONST. CO. OF CALIFORNIA.★
(Civ. 6263.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 29, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 27, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 25, 1928.

1. Sales $\S$ 52(5)—Facts held to show meeting of minds of parties when buyer accepted price in telegram from seller to its agent.

Facts held to show meeting of minds between parties to oral contract for sale of Colormix when buyer accepted price contained in telegram from seller to its agent.

2. Frauds, statute of $\S$ 89(3)—Buyer's acceptance of part of Colormix ordered held sufficient to take oral sales agreement out of statute of frauds (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1739).

Where buyer orally agreed to buy 18,000 pounds of red Colormix and 3,500 pounds of gray Colormix, buyer's acceptance and use of gray Colormix was sufficient, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1739, to take oral agreement out of statute of frauds.

3. Sales $\S$ 181(11)—In action for breach of sales contract, facts held not to show that seller did not perform, nor offer to perform.

In action by seller for breach of contract to purchase Colormix, facts held not to show that seller did not perform, nor offer to perform, alleged contract.

4. Corporations $\S$ 410—Vice president and manager of corporation could bind corporation on oral contract to purchase.

Vice president and manager of corporation had authority to bind corporation by oral contract to purchase Colormix.

5. Sales $\S$ 377—In action for breach of contract to purchase Colormix, allegation on which damages were based held sufficient.

In action for breach of contract to purchase Colormix, allegation that defendant had failed and refused to take balance of Colormix, and that plaintiff had incurred liability for commissions on sale of same, and had lost profits arising from sale, and had thereby been damaged in sum of $3,060, on which damages were based, held sufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action for damages for breach of contract brought by the Master Builders' Company against the Clinton Construction Company of California. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding on rehearing 268 P. 443.

Ernest K. Little, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Willard P. Smith, of San Francisco (Walton C. Webb, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from the judgment awarding plaintiff $3,060 upon a contract found by the court to have been entered into between plaintiff, an Ohio corporation, and defendant, a California corporation, whereby plaintiff agreed to manufacture for and deliver to defendant 21,500 pounds of Colormix at 22 cents per pound, to be delivered f. o. b. Cleveland, Ohio, between January 21 and May 1, 1925, upon which contract plaintiff manufactured and delivered between January 21 and April 13, 1925, 3,550 pounds of the Colormix and was at all times ready and willing to deliver the balance, but that defendant refused to accept the same, and finding that, by reason of defendant refusing to accept the balance of the Colormix called for in the contract, plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $3,060, for which judgment was entered, and from such judgment defendant has instituted this appeal.

Appellant urges under general headings the following points on which he relies for a reversal of the judgment: (1) There was no meeting of the minds of the parties; (2) an oral order would have been within the statute of frauds; (3) plaintiff did not perform nor offer to perform the alleged contract on its part; (4) the vice president of defendant corporation had no authority to bind the corporation by an oral order; (5) the complaint does not set forth facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Under the first general heading appellant asserts:

"(a) Plaintiff communicated its acceptance of a written proposition, bearing the false signature of defendant and its vice president, but which was never submitted to defendant; (b) there was no acceptance by either party; (c) there was no acceptance communicated until February 3, 1925, while Mr. Rodgers admits that he knew, as early as January 30, 1925, that Mr. Huber desired to withhold the alleged order for redtile Colormix; and (d) the letter of January 21, 1925, from Mr. Rodgers was not a proposition from plaintiff, it was merely a suggestion from Mr. Rodgers as to the proposition which defendant should make to plaintiff."

These four contentions may be considered together.

[1] The record contains the following evidence relative to the transaction between the parties. In January, 1925, Joseph E. Rodgers, local agent of plaintiff, called upon A. Huber, vice president of defendant corporation, at defendant's place of business, and discussed the placing by defendant of the order for Colormix. Mr. Rodgers testified, "We figured up the quantity of material that would be required from the plans and specifications of the San Francisco Relief Home," and Mr. Huber then placed the order at 27 cents per pound. Mr. Huber stated that, "for the quantity involved, the price was, in his judgment, a little bit high," and, in an effort to secure a price that might be a little more favorable to defendant, he (Rodgers) wired to Cleveland and received a reply to his telegram by wire, which he showed Huber:

"Best price on eighteen thousand pounds Red Colormix twenty two cents per pound f. o. b. Cleveland."

Mr. Rodgers further testified as follows:

"Mr. Huber then told me to go ahead and write up the order on the basis of 18,000 pounds of one color and 3,500 pounds of another color, which I did. He requested if I could not make that price which was mentioned in the telegram the guaranty delivery price at San Francisco, and I said that that would be impossible, because it would—as the material was then requested for delivery later in the year, I didn't know definitely whether a carload of material would be coming forward at that time, in which this could be included, or whether it would have to come by itself, and, of course, it would take different rates of freight both ways. I then phoned in Mr. Huber's—I phoned the railroad—and told him the difference in the rates between the two materials and why it was impossible for me to give a guaranty delivery price at San Francisco. I told Mr. Huber then, if a full car was coming forward at the time when he would require his material, that the company would give him the benefit of the carload rate rather than L. C. L. (less carload lots) rate, but that I wanted it understood that, if we did not have a car coming forward, that he would have to pay the 22-cent price f. o. b. Cleveland plus whatever freight was involved."

Mr. Rodgers wrote and mailed a letter, which bears date January 21, 1925, to defendant, containing the following:

"Confirming our verbal agreement of to-day, we are entering your order for 18,000 lbs. Master Builders' tile red Colormix and 3,500 lbs. battleship gray Colormix, at the agreed price of 22c per pound, f. o. b. Cleveland, Ohio—same price both colors."

Mr. Rodgers received no reply to this letter. Prior to February 5, 1925, Rodgers received a phone message from Mr. Huber requesting that the red part of the order be held up, and Rodgers informed him that it would be impossible to hold up any part of the order originally given because the matter was entirely in the hands of the Master Builders' Company, and they would be the ones to come to any decision regarding the matter. On January 23, 1925, Rodgers filled out an order blank and forwarded it to plaintiff calling for 18,000 pounds of red Colormix and 3,500 pounds of battleship gray, and at the bottom wrote in the name under the signature of purchaser, "Clinton Const. Co., A. Huber." On February 5, 1925, defendant wrote J. E. Rodgers & Co.:

"Kindly enter our order for approximately 3,500 lbs. battleship gray Colormix. Price: 22 cents per pound, f. o. b. Cleveland, Ohio. Deliveries: 700 lbs. immediately. Balance April 1, 1925. Confirming our telephonic conversation of recent date, we wish to inform you that we have not made a decision on the type of red color hardner we intend to use. We will mail you a written order should we decide to use Master Builders' red tile Colormix."

Plaintiff wired to defendant February 5, 1925, as follows:

"Our representative Rodgers advises substitution for Colormix order being attempted Stop Be advised that order accepted manufactured for you and partly shipped Stop Can accept no change or cancellation See order signed by your Mr. Huber."

Sylvester W. Fleshelm, president of plaintiff corporation, testified that J. E. Rodgers & Co. of San Francisco acts as their sales agent in California; that J. E. Rodgers & Co. is authorized to solicit orders subject to their approval; that every order J. E. Rodgers & Co. receives must be sent to plaintiff at Cleveland for acceptance; that, when plaintiff received the telegram from Rodgers containing the order for 18,000 pounds of red Colormix and 3,500 pounds of gray Colormix, the order was immediately accepted and defendant notified accordingly; that tile red Colormix is not a product that has a ready market, and little is carried in stock; that 18,000 pounds is a very large order; and that, when the order was accepted, instructions were immediately given to the factory to manufacture the material.

There was clearly a meeting of minds when defendant accepted the price of 22 cents contained in the telegram from plaintiff and confirmed in Rodgers' telegram to plaintiff. The fact that plaintiff, in its telegram to defendant of February 5, 1924, stating that it would accept no cancellation or modification of the order, referred to the order signed by Huber, does not alter the situation, as the written order to which Rodgers attached Huber's name was merely an order reciting the terms of the verbal contract before entered into. If this were a case where it was agreed that the terms of the verbal contract were subsequently to be reduced to writing, there would be merit in defendant's contention (Las Palmas, etc., Distillery v. Garrett & Co., 167 Cal. 399, 139 P. 1077), but such is not the case here.

The conclusion reached in the present case is not, as claimed by appellant, in conflict with the rule announced in Harvey v. Duffey, 99 Cal. 401, 33 P. 897. In the Harvey Case, the defendants had in their possession a catalogue of the Griffing Iron Company in which was listed the goods in question (radiators), and upon the fly leaf thereof was the following statement:

"To enable us to fill our orders promptly, we carry at all times an enormous stock, comprising at all times every style as shown in our list."

On April 3, 1890, the defendants, acting upon the statement in the catalogue, sent to the Griffing Iron Company a telegram asking for the lowest price on radiators. The company did not reply to this telegram, but wired plaintiff to call upon defendants and quote the price. On receipt of the wire, Harvey called upon defendants and obtained the following order:

"A. A. Griffing Iron Co.: Please ship to us at San Francisco the following Bundy hot water standard radiators, 39 in. high: 145, 1x4; 16, 1x10; 1, 1x20. [Signed] Duffey Bros. A."

This order was delivered to Harvey and by him mailed to the A. A. Griffing Iron Company. Defendant Duffey testified that nothing was said to him about the necessity of manufacturing the radiators; that he did not know that they would have to be manufactured; they were catalogued, and he had the catalogue and acted accordingly; and that, when he revoked the order, he did not know that the company was manufacturing the goods for him. On April 18, 1890, the defendants, having received no reply whatever to the order sent through Harvey and being in entire ignorance as to whether it had been received, or if received whether it would be accepted, sent a telegram to the company countermanding the order. This telegram was received before the manufacture of the goods was completed, but notwithstanding that the company proceeded to complete the manufacture of them. The court held:

"That the minds of the parties never met on a contract to manufacture, for it is essential to the validity of a contract that the parties should have consented to the same subject-matter in the same sense." Breckinridge v. Crocker, 78 Cal. 529 [21 P. 179]. * * * But assuming that he [Harvey] was authorized to sell, he certainly, so far as the record shows, never exercised any such authority, but simply contented himself with receiving the order and transmitting it to the company, by whom it was never accepted, nor was anything said or done by it from which an acceptance could be inferred. In fact, neither the defendants, nor any one for them, ever received any reply or notice whatever of the receipt or acceptance of the order either from the company or Harvey, or anyone else, until after they had revoked it. As the order was merely an offer or proposal to buy, it was revocable by the defendants at any time before acceptance."

The facts in the case quoted from and in the present case are not analogous. Here Rodgers called upon Huber, the vice president and manager of defendant corporation, who placed the order with him for the Colormix at 27 cents per pound, but, as Huber thought a better price could be made for such a quantity of the material, Rodgers telegraphed plaintiff in an effort to secure for defendant a better price, and received a wire in reply, making the price 22 cents. Rodgers then, at the direction of defendant, wrote up the order. Flesheim, the president of plaintiff corporation, testified that, when he received the telegram from the agent Rodgers containing the order for 18,000 pounds of red Colormix and 3,500 pounds of battleship gray Colormix, he took the matter up with Mr. Bertsch and Mr. Krause of the Master Builders' immediately, and the order was then accepted and Mr. Krause instructed to write the Clinton Construction Company accordingly. On January 21, 1925, Rodgers wrote defendant confirming the verbal agreement of that date and notifying defendant that he was entering the order for 18,000 pounds of red Colormix and 3,500 pounds of battleship gray Colormix at the agreed price of 22 cents per pound, f. o. b. Cleveland, Ohio, and telegraphed the order to the plaintiff company on January 24th. While it is true that Rodgers in his letter advised defendant that it incorporate in its confirming order the request "if it is possible at the time of actual shipping date—approximately June 1st—this material will come forward in carload lots so that we can enjoy carload rate rather than L. C. L. rate," and concluded the letter by thanking defendant for "this very splendid business," this did not alter or affect the contract but merely the freight rate which defendant was obliged to pay.

It will be noted that in Harvey v. Duffey the defendants advertised in their catalogue that they had the radiators listed therein in stock for immediate delivery and therefore the manufacture thereof would not be necessary, and the court held there was no meeting of minds on a contract to manufacture, which fact was not an element here. It further appears in that case that the defendants never "received any reply or notice whatever of the receipt or acceptance of the order from the company or Harvey or any one else" before it was rescinded, while here the defendant was notified by Rodgers on January 21, 1925, of the fact that the order was entered and a portion of the material ordered was delivered to and accepted by defendant before the red Colormix portion of the order was attempted to be canceled or ordered held in abeyance by Huber's telephone of January 30th to Rodgers and his letter of February 5th.

[2] As to appellant's second point that the oral agreement is within the statute of frauds in that "(a) there is no evidence to sustain the finding of the court that there was a contract to manufacture, and (b) the gray Colormix was not accepted as and for a part performance of the alleged oral order," it may be said Mr. Huber in his testimony admitted that a part of the Colormix was received and used in the building for which it was ordered:

"Q. Is it not a fact that the gray Colormix was used on this job and part of the red? A. Yes. Q. Where was it used, on the sidewalks? A. No; on the floor. Q. But the gray was used first? A. Yes. Q. Is it not a fact that you got some shipment in January? A. Of the gray. Q. Of the gray? A. We might have; I think we did probably."

This is sufficient under section 1739 of the Civil Code to take the oral agreement out of the statute of frauds. The fact that the gray Colormix "and part of the red" was used on the job is sufficient to sustain the finding that the gray Colormix was accepted as a part performance of the oral contract.

[3] From the foregoing it is apparent that there is no merit in appellant's third contention "that plaintiff did not perform nor offer to perform the alleged contract on its part," nor that defendant, in accepting the offer of plaintiff, added a new stipulation to the acceptance and the acceptance was not therefore "absolute and unqualified" and that the stipulation in regard to freight rate constituted a new proposal. As has already been said, Rodgers' statement to Huber that, if a full car was coming forward at the time when he would require his material, the company would give him the benefit of the carload rate, but that he wanted it understood that if they did not have a car coming forward he would have to pay the 22 cents f. o. b. Cleveland, plus whatever freight was involved, did not alter the contract, but was merely an offer on the part of Rodgers to save defendant money on freight, if he could do so.

[4] It may likewise be said that appellant's fourth and fifth contentions, viz. that the vice president of defendant corporation had no authority to bind the corporation by an oral order, and that the complaint does not state a cause of action, are likewise without merit. It is true that Mr. Huber testified that he never did give any orders unless they were in writing, as it is against the rules of the company. He further stated that, as vice president of the company, he had charge of buying the materials for jobs. It appears that Mr. Huber was vice president and manager of the corporation, and therefore, as such, could bind the corporation. Bells v. Gray Bros., etc., 13 Cal. App. 33, 108 P. 735; Fowler Gas Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 180 Cal. 471, 181 P. 663; Davis v. Pacific Studios Corp. (Cal. App.) 258 P. 440. The court, having determined that Mr. Huber did enter into the oral agreement here, evidently did not place credence in his statement that he never gave verbal orders.

[5] The objection to the complaint is that the allegation on which damages are based is insufficient. The paragraph objected to is:

"That defendant has wholly failed and refused to take the balance of said Colormix, and that plaintiff had incurred liability for commissions on the sale of the same, and has lost the profits arising from said sale, and has thereby been damaged in the premises in the sum of $3,060."

This allegation is sufficient. Ahlers v. Smiley, 163 Cal. 200, 124 P. 827; Tahoe Ice Co. v. Union Ice Co., 109 Cal. 242, 41 P. 1020.

We have examined the authorities cited by appellant, and do not question the principles they announce, but merely their application to the facts in the present case.

The judgment is affirmed.

93 Cal. App. 658

GRIMMESEY et al. v. KIRTLAN et al.
(Civ. 6282.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 27, 1928.

1. Easements ⇨37—Existence of roadway over vendor's remaining parcel, creating easement appurtenant to parcel conveyed, held, under evidence, question for trial court (Civ. Code, § 1104).

Whether there was a roadway passing from parcel sold across vendor's remaining parcel at time of sale, so as to give purchaser an easement appurtenant, under Civ. Code, § 1104, held, under the evidence, question of fact for trial court.

2. Easements ⇨17(1)—Roadway for benefit of parcel sold must be shown to have existed at time of sale, and be necessary, to create easement appurtenant (Civ. Code, § 1104).

To create right of way easement appurtenant, passing with conveyance of property, under Civ. Code, § 1104, it must be shown that roadway was in existence and used for benefit of parcel sold, and that easement in vendor's remaining parcel is necessary for reasonable enjoyment of parcel sold, in form which it assumed at time of transfer.

3. Easements ⇨36(3)—Finding that right of way easement was not acquired by prescription held warranted by evidence.

Evidence held to warrant finding that right of way easement was not acquired by prescription, resulting from five years' open, notorious, and adverse user prior to commencement of action.

4. Easements ⇨8(1)—To establish prescriptive right of way over another's land, adverse claim must be communicated to owner or be open and notorious.

User alone is not sufficient to establish a prescriptive right of way over lands of another, but such user must be accompanied by a claim of right, communicated to the owner of the land, or it must be shown that the user was so continuous, and so openly and notoriously adverse to the owner, as to create a presumptive knowledge in the owner that person using land was doing so under claim of right.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Action by Agnes R. Grimmesey and another, as executors of the estate of L. J. Grimmesey, deceased, against Edward Elmore Kirtlan and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Hardy, Elliott & Aberle and H. W. Elliott, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bordwell, Mathews & Wadsworth and Ray W. Bruce, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an action to establish a right of way over certain property described in the complaint, belonging to defendants. The cause is pleaded in three counts. The first sets up a right of way acquired by grant, pursuant to section 1104 of the Civil Code; the second, a right of way by prescription, arising from adverse use for more than five years; and the third is a quiet title count to the easement claimed.

The complaint alleges that the defendants owned a parcel of land, comprising approximately 41 acres, situated in the northwest corner of the intersection of Ruddock avenue, running east and west, and Glendora avenue, running north and south, in the eastern part of Los Angeles county, and that defendants, on April 10, 1918, sold and conveyed to plaintiffs' decedent the westerly portion of the land, comprising approximately 15 acres, and retained the easterly portion, containing 26 acres. The portion conveyed to plaintiffs' decedent is for brevity referred to in the record as parcel No. 1, and the portion retained by defendants is designated as parcel No. 2. Parcel No. 1 is in form a parallelogram, running north and south, having a frontage on the south on Ruddock avenue of 558.05 feet. Parcel No. 2 likewise runs north and south, and has a frontage of 728.23 feet on Ruddock avenue, and is bounded on its entire length on the east by Glendora avenue.

Plaintiffs claim that, at the time their decedent purchased parcel No. 1, there was created in favor of the decedent an easement or right of way, approximately 12 feet in width, commencing at a point on the westerly side of Glendora avenue, about 650 feet north of the intersection of Glendora avenue and Ruddock avenue, running thence in a westerly direction from Glendora avenue across parcel No. 2 to the easterly boundary of parcel No. 1, and that the right of way was in use as a roadway and means of access from Glendora avenue, over parcel No. 2, to parcel No. 1, for vehicles, tractors, wagons, farm implements, automobiles, and other modes of travel, and had for a long time prior to April 10, 1918, been so used. Plaintiffs further allege that since April 10, 1918, the decedent, his family, agents, and employees, used the right of way with horses, wagons, tractors, automobiles, and other vehicles, and have enjoyed such private right of way as an easement appurtenant to plaintiffs' decedent's land. Plaintiffs further assert that shortly prior to the commencement of this action (August 21, 1924) the defendants plowed up, obstructed, and rendered the roadway impassable, and denied decedent's right to use the roadway or to enjoy the use of the easement.

It is the claim of plaintiffs that, at the time decedent acquired parcel No. 1 from defendants, there existed, and for a long time prior thereto had existed, a well-defined roadway, which had been used as a means of ingress and egress to and from parcel No. 1, and was thereafter so used by plaintiffs' decedent, for more than five years prior to the commencement of the action, and that by reason thereof an easement over parcel No. 2 has been acquired by prescription. There is no claim made to a right of way arising by deed or instrument purporting to convey a right of way separately, nor is there any claim to a right of way by necessity; plaintiffs' claim being that the easement was attached to parcel No. 1 when purchased from defendants, and also that such right of way has been acquired by prescription.

Since the commencement of the action, and prior to the trial thereof, L. J. Grimmesey, the original plaintiff, died, and by appropriate amendment Agnes R. Grimmesey and A. L. Bagnall, the duly appointed, qualified, and acting executors of the estate of L. J. Grimmesey, deceased, were substituted as plaintiffs in place of L. J. Grimmesey, deceased.

The errors urged by appellants have to do with certain findings of fact and conclusions of law, and the judgment entered thereon as follows: (1) That said findings of fact and conclusions of law, and the judgment thereon, are not supported by the evidence, but are contrary to the evidence; (2) that said judgment is contrary to law; (3) that the court erred in the admission of certain evidence.

The findings which appellants urge as not being supported by the evidence may be summarized as follows: That it is not true that, at the time plaintiff purchased parcel No. 1, nor at any other time, the plaintiff purchased of defendants, or either of them, a private right of way or easement along or over a roadway approximately 12 feet in width, then or at any other time in use over parcel No. 2; that a gravel roadway for ingress and egress to and from the defendants' residence from Glendora avenue westerly along the southerly side of defendants' residence, extends westerly from said residence a distance of 150 feet, thence westerly there is a pathway extending westerly to the westerly line of the defendants' property, and thence westerly to a tenement house located near the westerly side of plaintiff's property, parcel No. 1; that said pathway has heretofore, at times when defendants were the owners of all of said property, and at times after they sold said parcel No. 1 to plaintiff, and while defendants were in charge of the cultivation, irrigation, and otherwise caring for plaintiffs' property, been used by employees of defendants as a passageway from defendants' property to and from said tenement house; that such use by plaintiff and his employees was permissive by the defendants to plaintiff and his employees for a period of two years or less after plaintiff assumed the care of plaintiff's property; that said road was occasionally used as a means of ingress and egress to and from the public highway of Glendora avenue to the house and barns situated upon parcel No. 1; that said roadway over parcel No. 2 is not the only means of access from Glendora avenue; that it is not true that ever since April 10, 1918, the plaintiff and his family, agents, and employees have used said alleged right of way from Glendora avenue as an easement appurtenant to plaintiff's land; that no right of way for plaintiff or any other person exists, or ever did exist, over said parcel No. 2 as a means of ingress or egress to or from Glendora avenue or otherwise to said parcel No. 1; that plaintiff for five years last past prior to the commencement of this action has not continuously, openly, notoriously, and adversely to any claim of right of defendants, or under claim of right in plaintiff, used, occupied, and enjoyed a private right of way of approximately 12 feet in width, or any width, over, upon, or through the land of defendants, but that at all times after defendants ceased to cultivate, irrigate, and care for plaintiff's property, about May 1, 1922, and up to a few months prior to the commencement of this action, defendants permitted plaintiff, his family, servants, and employees, to occasionally pass over said parcel No. 2 to said parcel No. 1 as a mere accommodation.

Appellants concede that, if there is any substantial conflict in the evidence, the findings of the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal, but maintain that there is no substantial evidence upon which the findings and judgment can be supported. Appellants have cited a number of authorities holding that a transfer of property passes all easements attached thereto at the time of the transfer; that where the owner of two tenements sells one of them, or the owner of an entire estate sells a portion of it, the purchaser takes the tenement or portion sold with all the benefits and burdens that appear at the time of sale to belong to it; that when the owner of lands divides his property into two parts, granting one of them, he is taken by implication to include all such easements in the remaining part as are necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the part which he grants, in the form which it assumes at the time he transfers it. The authorities supporting this contention are numerous and uniform. In the present case, however, the interpretation of a legal principle is not so much involved as is the determination of a question of fact; that is, whether the evidence supports the findings that no roadway existed over parcel No. 2 as a means of ingress or egress to or from parcel No. 1 at the time of the sale by defendants to plaintiffs' decedent, and that plaintiffs' decedent has not openly, notoriously, and adversely, and adverse to any claim of right of defendants, occupied, used, and enjoyed a private right of way over the land of defendants for five years prior to the commencement of the action, it being conceded that the roadway in dispute is not the only means of access to parcel No. 1.

[1] The facts disclosed by the record are that the entire tract of land was originally owned by respondents. On April 10, 1918, respondent deeded the western 15 acres to L. J. Grimmesey, now deceased, who was an uncle of respondent Edward Elmore Kirtlan; that before the transfer respondent Kirtlan cultivated, irrigated, and cared for the entire tract; that after the sale he continued to cultivate, irrigate, and care for the 15 acres deeded to plaintiffs' decedent until May, 1922, when Mr. Campbell, the husband of respondent Kirtlan's sister, assumed charge for plaintiffs' decedent. According to the testimony of respondent Edward Elmore Kirtlan, at the time of the sale of parcel No. 1 there was a road from Glendora avenue to his barn on parcel No. 2, and from the end of the roadway at his barn there was only a path leading to parcel No. 1. Some of the people who lived in the house on parcel No. 1 had automobiles, but—

"they didn't get in with their automobiles. They left their automobiles as a rule in my barn. Once in a while they might take them down there; drive out—no way to turn down there—drive right through the field. I objected to it, of course. A great many people went down there, not knowing there was no road there."

It is apparent that none of the witnesses produced by appellants, 10 in number, excepting Agnes R. Grimmesey, had any knowledge of the condition of the road, or whether the road was in existence at the time of the sale of the property. None of the witnesses, Fisher, Hepner, Ames, Welch, Doughty, Bull, or Webb, had seen the property until long after the transfer to appellants' decedent. One of the remaining three, Kellenberger, was on the property from October, 1915, to July, 1916, only, and therefore his testimony does not throw any light on the conditions existing on April 10, 1918, nearly two years later. Berman, one of the two remaining witnesses for appellants, testified that he resided on the ranch adjoining the 41-acre tract from 1915 to 1925, and that when he first came there was a road clear to the boundary line. Agnes R. Grimmesey, the widow of L. J. Grimmesey, deceased, testified that, when she first saw the property early in 1918, about the time they were considering buying it, she walked over the road with Mrs. Kirtlan and Mrs. Grimmesey from the Kirtlan residence, on parcel No. 2, as far westerly as the little house on the western edge of parcel No. 1, and that there was a well-defined road across parcel No. 1. This testimony on the question whether or not there was a roadway leading from parcel No. 1 across parcel No. 2 to Glendora avenue at the time of the sale presents a conflict, the determination of which was for the trial court, and its finding thereon will not be disturbed.

[2] In order to bring the easement claimed within the provisions of section 1104 of the Civil Code, it must be shown that a roadway was in existence and use for the benefit of the parcel of land sold, and that the easement in the remaining parcel is necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the part sold in the form which it assumed at the time of the transfer. Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 135; Beem v. Reichman, 36 Cal. App. 258, 171 P. 972. The intention, in view of all of the circumstances, is the cardinal subject for inquiry. Cheda v. Bodkin, 173 Cal. 7, 16, 158 P. 1025. Where there is a better and more convenient means of ingress and egress to and from the land conveyed, and the easement is not necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the part granted, no grant by implication arises.

[3] As to the claim that a right of way was acquired by prescription—that the roadway was openly, notoriously, and adversely for more than five years prior to the commencement of the action on August 21, 1924—it may be said that the testimony of respondent Edward Elmore Kirtlan is that whatever use had been made of his land had been by permission up to within three or four months of the commencement of the action. Prior to that time plaintiffs' decedent had not claimed any right to cross respondents' land as a matter of right. The decedent L. J. Grimmesey, was the uncle of respondent Edward Elmore Kirtlan, and Mr. Campbell, who was in charge of the property for the deceased following respondent Kirtlan, when the latter ceased to manage and care for it in May, 1922, was the husband of respondent Kirtlan's sister. The use of the private roadway into the yard and around respondent's house was permitted, because the parties were so related. Respondent Kirtlan testified:

"Mr. Grimmesey was my uncle, and I was very fond of him, as much so as I was of my father. There was no reason why he shouldn't come out on my place at any time."

[4] In order to make the use adverse under the circumstances, there must have been a communicated claim of right to the easement. "User alone is not sufficient to establish a prescriptive right of way over the lands of another. Such user must be accompanied by a claim of right communicated to the owner of the land, or it must be shown that the user was so continuous, and so openly and notoriously adverse to the owner, as to create a presumptive knowledge in the owner that the person using the land was so doing under a claim of right." Tarpey v. Veith, 22 Cal. App. 289, 292, 134 P. 367, 369. The following language used by the court in Clarke v. Clarke, 133 Cal. 667, 670, 66 P. 10, 11, is appropos here:

"The question as to whether or not the use was under a claim of right, or a mere matter of neighborly accommodation, was a question of fact to be determined by the court in the light of the relations of the parties, their conduct, the situation of the property, and all the surrounding circumstances. The court below saw the witnesses, heard them testify, and found the facts against defendant. * * * It is not sufficient that the claim of right exist only in the mind of the person claiming it. It must in some way be asserted in such manner that the owner may know of the claim. The fact that the owner knew of the travel and occasional use of the property does not even raise a presumption that such use was hostile or under claim of right. If any party who is allowed by silent permission to pass over the lands of another, nothing being said as to any right being claimed, after five years, without showing that he ever communicated such claim in any way to the owner, can thus gain title by prescription, it would be a blot upon the law."

Appellants have not directed our attention to any ruling of the court, under their third assignment, that the court erred in certain particulars in the admission of evidence, and we therefore assume that they have abandoned this objection.

The judgment is affirmed.

KRAUSE v. MARINE TRUST & SAVINGS BANK et al. (Civ. 3537.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 27, 1928.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨22, 334(1)—Land contract, describing lot by reference to unrecorded map, was void, and payment thereunder was recoverable in action for rescission (St. 1907, p. 290, as amended by St. 1913, p. 568).

Contract to purchase a lot, which described it by reference to an unrecorded map, was void, under St. 1907, p. 290, as amended by St. 1913, p. 568, and purchase price paid pursuant to such void executory contract was therefore without consideration, and was a proper claim for repayment in purchaser's action for rescission.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨119—Purchaser held not barred by laches in suing for rescission (Civ. Code, § 1213).

Where contract to purchase lot represented to be 105 feet deep stated that map was then recorded in county recorder's office, and vendors represented that blueprint exhibited to purchaser, showing lot to be 105 feet deep, was true copy of map on file, purchaser had right to rely on such representations, and recording of map subsequent to execution of contract, showing depth of lot to be 90 feet, did not give purchaser constructive notice of its contents, under Civ. Code, § 1213, and he was therefore not guilty of laches in failing to sue for rescission until after acquiring actual notice of change in dimensions of lot.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by Chris M. Krause against the Marine Trust & Savings Bank and others. From the judgment, certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Swaffield & Swaffield, of Long Beach, and Edward T. Sherer and Welburn Mayoock, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Norman T. Mason, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a decree rescinding a contract to purchase real property, and refunding the purchase price thereof, on the ground of fraud.

June 12, 1923, plaintiff entered into a written contract with the defendants Gilkey and Leeston-Smith to purchase "lot 6, No. A, tract 6743, being a subdivision of the east 19.80 acres of lot 4, range 7, of the Temple & Gibson tract, in the county of Los Angeles, as per map recorded in Book 32, page 64, Miscellaneous Records of said county, in the tract No. 6743 as per map recorded in Book —, page —, of Maps in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county, California," for the sum of $2,000 to be paid in specified monthly installments. The last installment of the purchase price of this lot was not paid until June 8, 1925. This appeal is on the judgment roll only, and the evidence is not before this court.

The plaintiff alleged, and the trial court found, that in procuring the contract to purchase the lot in question the appellants Gilkey and Leeston-Smith exhibited to respondent what purported to be a blueprint copy of the map of said tract No. 6743, showing the dimensions of said lot, and then represented the fact to be that said lot fronted on Lemon street in Los Angeles and extended along Washington street a distance of 105 feet to an alley at the rear. This map, which was exhibited to respondent, was never filed for record, although the contract of sale stated that it was situated "in tract No. 6743, as per map recorded in Book —, page —, of Maps in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county." This map, which was exhibited to the respondent, was subsequently changed, so as to indicate that the lot in question was but 90 feet in depth, instead of 105 feet, as represented by the appellants. This map, so changed, was for the first time filed for record July 25, 1923, after the contract for sale of the lot had been executed and delivered. The respondent was not notified of the change. The trial court found that the respondent relied upon the dimensions of the lot as shown by the map which was exhibited to him, and upon the statements made by appellants, and that he had no knowledge of the alterations of the map, or the change in the depth of the lot, until his final payment had been made and the deed was tendered to him July 10, 1925, in which deed the lot was described as 90 feet in depth, instead of 105, according to contract. Acceptance of this deed was refused, and this action for rescission was then promptly commenced on August 6, 1925. A judgment was rendered against appellants, rescinding the contract for fraud, and restoring to respondent the amount of the purchase price which had been paid.

[1] The appellants contend that the filing of the amended map on July 25, 1923, was notice to respondent of the diminished size of the lot in question, and that he is therefore guilty of laches in failing to have promptly commenced his action for rescission after the filing of this map. This contention is without merit. The contract to purchase the lot in question, having described it by reference to an unrecorded map, was void as provided by the Statutes of 1907, p. 290 (as amended by St. 1913, p. 568), which declares:

"* * * No person shall sell or offer for sale any lot or parcel of land by reference to any map or plat, other than such recorded map or plat [which is provided for by the statute], or true and correct copy thereof. (§ 8)
* * * Any map or plat which is not executed and approved as herein required shall be null and void." (§ 9)

The purchase price of the lot, which was paid pursuant to this void executory contract, was therefore without consideration, and hence was a proper claim for repayment in this action for rescission. Smith v. Bach, 54 Cal. App. 236, 238, 201 P. 611; Id., 183 Cal. 259, 191 P. 14.

[2] The filing of the altered map subsequent to the execution and delivery to the respondent of the contract of sale of the lot in question was not notice to him of the change in the depth of the lot. His attention was not called to this change. The contract affirmatively stated that the map, at the time of the execution of the contract, was recorded in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county, although the book and page of the purported recordation were left blank. Moreover, the appellants represented to respondent that the blueprint which was exhibited to him was a true copy of the map on file. The respondent had a right to rely upon these affirmative representations as true. He had no occasion to examine the record to prove the truthfulness of these affirmative statements, but, upon the contrary, had a right to rely upon the specific provisions of his written contract. The recording of the map subsequent to the execution of the contract in question did not give constructive notice of its contents. The public record of any instrument which is by law required to be recorded, or which is entitled to be recorded, is constructive notice only as to subsequent purchasers or interested parties. A prior purchaser or interested party is not affected thereby. Section 1213, Civ. Code; 22 Cal. Jur. 616, § 29; 23 R. C. L. 211, §§ 71, 72. The appellant was, therefore, not guilty of laches in failing to bring his action for rescission until after actual notice of the change in the dimensions of the lot had been acquired, which first came to his attention upon the tendering of the deed.

The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

Ex parte WESTCOTT. (Cr. 1704.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 22, 1928.

1. Bail ~~§~~ 42—Petitioner, after second murder conviction, granted new trial for insufficiency of evidence, which was affirmed on appeal, held entitled to bail; production of additional evidence not being indicated (Const. art. 1, § 6; Pen. Code, § 1270).

Where petitioner for habeas corpus, seeking to be admitted to bail pending new trial after conviction for murder, was twice convicted, and new trial was granted after second conviction for insufficiency of evidence to support verdict, which was affirmed on appeal, and there was nothing to indicate that additional evidence would be produced by the people, petitioner was entitled to release on furnishing bail, under Const. art. 1, § 6, and Pen. Code, § 1270.

2. Insane persons ~~§~~ 83—Ample authority exists for apprehension and detention of insane persons, or those whose sanity is in doubt (Pen. Code, §§ 1367, 1374; Pol. Code, §§ 2136 to 2199).

Pen. Code, §§ 1367, 1374, and Pol. Code, §§ 2136-2199, furnish ample authority for apprehension and detention of insane persons, or those whose sanity is in doubt.

3. Bail ~~42~~—Accused may have right to bail determined, irrespective of whether he may be subject to restraint as insane (Const. art. 1, § 6; Pen. Code, § 1270).

Under Const. art. 1, § 6, and Pen. Code, § 1270, person charged with crime is entitled to have bail fixed, and to be given his liberty pending disposition of charge, except as right is modified in capital offenses, and may have right to bail, so far as criminal charge is concerned, presented and determined, irrespective of whether or not he may be subject to restraint on some other prospective complaint, asserting him to be insane.

Application by Carl Westcott for writ of habeas corpus against the Sheriff of Los Angeles County. Writ granted.

Paul W. Schenck, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. Carl Westcott, the petitioner, was indicted for murder. He was tried twice and was twice convicted. The first judgment was reversed upon appeal (260 P. 901), because of the erroneous admission of certain evidence. After the second trial the court granted the defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. Upon appeal from that order this court affirmed the same. 269 P. 724. The case is to be tried again, but there is nothing to indicate that additional evidence will be produced by the people. Pending the appeal last mentioned an application was made in the superior court on behalf of petitioner that he be admitted to bail, which application was denied without prejudice, and he now prays by this proceeding in habeas corpus to be admitted to bail pending the determination of the criminal charge above mentioned.

[1] All persons are bailable, except for capital offenses, where the proof is evident or the presumption of guilt is great. Const. art. 1, § 6; Pen. Code, § 1270. We think it evident that, under the above statement of facts and the provisions cited, the petitioner is entitled to have bail fixed, and to be released upon furnishing it as required by law.

It has been suggested by counsel for petitioner that the sanity of the latter is in doubt. This has presented for our consideration the bearing of such a condition on the part of petitioner upon his right to liberation. The prosecution has not contended that Westcott is insane, nor opposed his release upon that ground. On the other hand, the few authorities available indicate that insanity of one charged with crime is not to be considered in passing upon his petition for a writ of habeas corpus, except as having to do with the determination of the constitutional test as to whether or not the proof is evident or the presumption of guilt great. In the case of Zembrod v. State, 25 Tex. 520, upon this consideration, bail was allowed on a showing made of the petitioner's insanity.

[2, 3] Ample authority exists for the apprehension and detention of the insane, or those whose sanity is in doubt. Such provision is to be found in sections 1367 and 1374 of the Penal Code, and also in sections 2136 to 2199 of the Political Code. There appears to be no reason why full recognition cannot be given to the constitutional right of the defendant, and at the same time all regard be accorded to the safety of the public to guard against the danger of an insane person being at liberty. As a rule, one charged with crime is entitled to have bail fixed, and to be given his liberty pending the disposition of the charge. This he has as a matter of constitutional right, except as modified in cases of capital offenses, and surely he is entitled to have his claim to that right, so far as the criminal charge is concerned, presented to and determined by a competent court, irrespective of whether or not he may be subject to restraint upon some other prospective complaint asserting him to be insane.

We see no force to the argument of respondent that to fix bail in this case would, upon the statement of petitioner's counsel, endanger the public; for, particularly under the Code provisions to which we have adverted, its interests are well protected. Officials to whom authority in that behalf has been delegated have undoubted right, and probably the duty, of instituting such a proceeding as may be provided by law to test the petitioner's sanity and to secure the public safety. At least, they are possessed of all information needed to enable them to decide whether or not such action should be taken. As was suggested in Re Henley, 18 Cal. App. 1, 121 P. 933, although for the safety of the individual or protection of society it might in some instances be proper to deny bail, this should not be done without a showing being made of such facts as justify it. Here this has not been done.

It is ordered that petitioner be admitted to bail by giving bond in the sum of $10,000, pending the determination of the criminal charge upon which he is now detained, said bond to be approved by a judge of the superior court of Los Angeles county.

BALZANO v. TRAEGER, Sheriff.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 24, 1928.

1. Attachment §184—Lien of attachment on real estate merges in judgment lien, except to preserve priority, while lien on personal property continues after judgment.

When attachment is on real property, and judgment lien is established, attachment lien merges in the lien of the judgment, except to preserve the priority thereby acquired, which is continued and enforced under the judgment; but lien of attachment on personal property continues after judgment, to preserve the lien and its priority, and to allow issue and levy of execution under the judgment, which does not become a lien on personal property, even when attached in the action.

2. Attachment §184—Statute held not intended to release lien of attachment on personal property by undertaking on appeal from judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 674, as amended by St. 1927, p. 830).

Code Civ. Proc. § 674, as amended by St. 1927, p. 830, so as to incorporate into it the substance of section 671, and provide that a judgment shall be a lien on all real property of the judgment debtor, not exempt from execution, from filing of abstract of judgment in office of county recorder, and that such lien continues for five years, unless enforcement of the judgment is stayed on appeal by a sufficient undertaking, in which case the lien of the judgment, and any lien created by virtue of an attachment issued and levied in the action, ceases, held, in view of the titles of all the acts in the history of the legislation being limited to judgment liens, not intended to relate to or affect the lien of any attachment on personal property, which lien does not, as does the lien on real estate, merge in the lien of the judgment.

3. Statutes §117(8)—Code Civ. Proc. § 674, as amended by St. 1927, p. 830, as to liens released by undertaking on appeal, construed as relating to lien of attachment, is to that extent violative of Const. art. 4, § 24.

Code Civ. Proc. § 674, as amended by St. 1927, p. 830, so as to incorporate in it the substance of section 671, if construed as providing for release of lien of attachment on personal property by undertaking on appeal from judgment, is to that extent violative of Const. art. 4, § 24, as to subject and title of acts, in view of the subject of the legislation, as limited by the titles of the acts relating thereto, being the lien of judgments.

Original mandamus proceeding by Frank Balzano against William T. Traeger, Sheriff of Los Angeles County. Peremptory writ denied.

Victor H. Koenig, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and S. V. O. Prichard, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HAZLETT, Justice pro tem. This is an original proceeding in mandamus to compel respondent to release $500 belonging to petitioner and held under garnishment by respondent in his capacity as sheriff of Los Angeles county, pursuant to a writ of attachment issued in an action in which petitioner was a defendant, then pending in the superior court of Los Angeles county.

In his petition herein petitioner alleges, in addition to the foregoing, that the superior court gave judgment against him in the action for more than $500, from which judgment he perfected an appeal to the Supreme Court and filed an undertaking in double the amount of the judgment, staying execution; that thereafter, contrary to the provisions of section 674, Code of Civil Procedure, the sheriff refused to release the attachment; and that he thereupon made application to the superior court for an order releasing the attachment, which was denied.

An alternative writ was issued by this court upon the petition, and on the return day respondent filed a general demurrer. Petitioner filed his memorandum of points and authorities in support of his application, and respondent filed his brief in support of his demurrer, but petitioner did not reply.

The question presented by the parties herein is whether, under the provisions of section 674, the stay of execution in petitioner's appeal, by the execution of his undertaking, terminated the lien of the attachment upon his personal property. This question involves the proposition whether, in the light of section 24 of article 4 and section 22 of article 1 of the state Constitution, the provisions of the Code section have any application to attachments upon personal property.

Section 24 of article 4 provides that:

"Every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title. But if any subject shall be embraced in an act which shall not be expressed in its title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be expressed in its title. * * *"

And section 22 of article 1 provides that:

"The provisions of this Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory, unless by express words they are declared to be otherwise."

Section 674, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1927 (Stats. 1927, p. 830), provides that a judgment shall be a lien upon all property of the judgment debtor not exempt from execution, from the filing of an abstract of the judgment in the office of the county recorder, and that:

"Such lien continues for five years from the date of the entry of the judgment or decree, unless the enforcement of the judgment or decree is stayed on appeal by the execution of a sufficient undertaking as provided in this Code, * * * in which case the lien of the judgment or decree, and any lien or liability now existing or hereafter created by virtue of an attachment that has been issued and levied in the action * * * ceases, or upon an undertaking on release of attachment, or unless the judgment or decree is previously satisfied, or the lien otherwise discharged. * * *

Although the body of the amendatory act embraces provisions relating to attachments, its title contains no expression in reference to attachment liens or liabilities, but refers only to judgment liens, and is as follows:

"An act to amend section six hundred and seventy-four of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to the recording of copy of judgments, providing for the lien thereof and the extent of such lien."

This act re-enacted from section 671, Code of Civil Procedure, and incorporated into section 674, the substance of section 671 relating to judgment and attachment lien, and section 671 was amended at the same time (Stats. 1927, p. 829), limiting its provisions to govern only the entry of judgments in the docket. As will hereinafter appear, the title of the act adopting section 671, and the titles of all the acts adopted prior to 1927, amending that section, expressed and related only to judgment liens.

[1] The sole purpose of an attachment is to hold the property of the defendant to secure the judgment that may be rendered in the action. When the attachment is upon real property and the judgment lien is established, the attachment lien merges in the lien of the judgment, and thereafter the only effect of the lien of such attachment is to preserve the priority thereby acquired. This priority is continued and enforced under the judgment. The lien of the attachment on real property is not completely extinguished by the judgment, but such lien ceases in all respects, except to maintain the priority created and merges in the lien of the judgment, in the sense and to the extent that there are not then two separate and distinct and subsisting liens against the same property. Bagley v. Ward, 37 Cal. 121, 131, 99 Am. Dec. 256; Brun v. Evans, 197 Cal. 439, 241 P. 86. The lien of the judgment and the lien of the attachment on real property are both terminated by the filing of a supersedeas bond. Brun v. Evans, supra.

The judgment does not become a lien upon personal property, even though the property is held by attachment in the action (Bagley v. Ward, supra); but the lien of the attachment continues after judgment to preserve the lien and its priority and to allow the issue and levy of execution under the judgment (6 Cor. Jur. 271), and the judgment alone can be enforced against the property (section 681, Code Civ. Proc.; Pease v. Frank, 263 Ill. 500, 105, N. E. 299).

[2] Respondent's first contention is that section 674, so far as it relates to any lien of attachment, has application only to the lien of any attachment upon real property which merges into the judgment in the action, and that, if the Legislature, in adopting the legislation, intended to include and cover the lien of any attachment upon personal property, the titles of the acts adopting or amending sections 671 and 674, Code of Civil Procedure, would have been so worded as to embody some reference thereto. Consideration of the history of those sections will be of interest. Section 671, as adopted into the Code of Civil Procedure of 1872 (being a re-enactment of the substance of section 204 of the Practice Act), related only to judgment liens and contained no reference to attachment liens, but embodied the following:

"* * * From the time the judgment is docketed it becomes a lien upon all the real property of the judgment debtor, not exempt from execution, in the county, owned by him at the time or which he may afterwards acquire, until the lien expires. The lien continues for two years, unless the judgment be previously satisfied."

This section was amended in 1874 (Amendments of 1874 to the Codes, p. 320), by changing the word "expires" to "ceases" and the last sentence to read as follows:

"The lien continues for two years, unless the enforcement of the judgment be stayed on appeal by the execution of a sufficient undertaking, as provided in this Code, in which case the lien of the judgment ceases."

The title to this amendment is not important, for the reason that the provision of section 25 of article 4 of the Constitution of California of 1849, relating to the titles of legislative enactments, in effect until the adoption of the Constitution of 1879, was held to be directory only, and not binding upon the Legislature or the people. See the decisions hereinafter cited. Section 671 was again amended in 1895. Stats. 1895, p. 36. The title of this amendment is as follows:

"An act to amend section six hundred and seventy-one of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to the lien of judgments, their enforcement and revivor."

This amendment re-enacted the section as adopted in 1874, except that the last sentence was changed to read as follows:

"The lien continues for five years, unless the enforcement of the judgment be stayed on appeal by the execution of a sufficient undertaking as provided in this Code, in which case the lien of the judgment and any lien by virtue of an attachment that has been issued and levied in the action ceases."

Section 671 was again amended in 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 141) by an act entitled as follows: "An act to amend section six hundred seventy-one of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to judgment liens"—and the only change in the section was to require the clerk, in docketing the judgment, to enter the hour and minute of the entry. Section 671 was again amended in 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 751) by an act entitled:

"An act to amend section six hundred seventy-one and section six hundred seventy-four of the Code of Civil Procedure, and to repeal section six hundred seventy-one-a of said Code, relating to judgment liens and transcripts of judgments."

No change was made in that part of the body of the section which related to the liens of judgments and attachments in the state courts. The amendments of 1927 to the sections and the title to the amendment of that year to section 674 are hereinbefore referred to at length.

As the expressions contained in the titles above quoted are limited to judgment liens, we should not assume that the Legislature intended to have the provisions of those Code sections regarding attachment liens cover or affect the lien of any attachment which does not merge into the judgment and become a part of the judgment lien. If we should hold that the Legislature intended to provide that the execution of the undertaking on appeal from the judgment should terminate the lien of an attachment upon personal property in the action, we would be holding, in effect, that the Legislature attempted to embody in section 671, and later in section 674, a provision not mentioned in any of the titles of the acts adopting or amending them, and therefore attempted to violate the prohibition of the Constitution. We hold that the sections were not intended to relate to or affect the lien of any attachment on personal property.

[3] Respondent's second contention is that if, in amending section 674, Code of Civil Procedure, in 1927, the Legislature intended the construction of the amended section to be that the stay of execution in an appeal from a judgment should cause the lien of an attachment on personal property in the action to cease, such intention was ineffective, and that the portion of the amended section which relates to such attachment is therefore in violation of the constitutional prohibition and void, for the reason that the amended section embodies a subject not expressed in the title to the amendment or in the title of any prior legislation mentioned in the title to the amendment.

Prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1879 the constitutional provision regarding title to legislative enactments was as follows:

"Every law enacted by the legislature shall embrace but one object, and that shall be expressed in the title. * * *" Section 25, art. 4, Const. of 1849.

The construction placed upon that provision by the Supreme Court was that it was merely directory (Washington v. Page, 4 Cal. 388), and could operate only upon the conscience of the lawmakers, for the infraction of which there was no remedy in the courts (Pierpont v. Crouch, 10 Cal. 315). Also that, where the meaning of the body of the act was doubtful, the title could be relied on as an assistance in arriving at a conclusion, but it could not be used to restrain or control any positive provision of the act, and in case of doubt it should be resorted to as a means of ascertaining the intention of the Legislature. Flynn v. Abbott, 16 Cal. 359, 366; Barnes v. Jones, 51 Cal. 303, 306; In Matter of Boston Mining & Milling Co., 51 Cal. 624. Those decisions were handed down before the adoption of the Constitution of 1879. However, in construing section 24 of article 4 of the latter Constitution, in the light of section 22 of article 1 of the same Constitution, announcing the rules for construing its provisions, still in effect, different rules as to the necessity, value, and construction of titles to legislative enactments have been recognized and followed by the courts. The Constitution of 1849 contained no provision relating to the rules for construing its provisions.

It was held in Wood v. Election Commissioners, 58 Cal. 561, 565, decided in 1881, that as to any subject embraced in an act of the Legislature, which was not expressed in its title, the act was in violation of the Constitution and void; and in Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, 228, 24 P. 383, the court announced that the main object of the constitutional provision "is to prevent legislators and the public from being entrapped by misleading titles to bills whereby legislation relating to one subject might be obtained under the title of another," and "that it is not necessary that the title of an act should embrace an abstract or catalogue of its contents."

In the leading and often-quoted decision in the case of Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 29 P. 251, in addition to again announcing the above rules, the court said that:

"At the present time * * * the object of the provision [section 24, art. 4, Const. 1879] is * * * to guard against the passage of bills, the titles of which give no intimation to the members of the legislature or to the people of the matters contained therein. * * * There was a similar provision in the Constitution of 1863 [1849], and it was held here that it was merely directory, and did not nullify laws passed in violation of it, but the provisions of the Constitution of 1879 'are mandatory and prohibitory, unless by express words they are declared to be otherwise.' * * * It certainly was not intended that the title should be a repetition of the provisions found in the body of the bill. * * * If the title contains a reasonable intimation of the matters under legislative consideration, the public cannot complain. It has always been the custom to state the subject of a bill in general terms and with fewest words, and the framers of the Constitution doubtless intended the Legislature to conform to that custom. * * * It is admitted that the constitutional provision under consideration has always been given a liberal construction; and this must be so, because the Constitution itself does not define the degree of particularity with which a title must specify the subject of a bill. The matter must therefore be left largely to legislative discretion."

It was held in the case of Clark v. City of Los Angeles, 160 Cal. 30, 40, 116 P. 722, 726, that the provision of section 22 of article 1 of the Constitution, "as is well known, was inserted [in the Constitution of 1879] because of certain previous decisions holding that the provisions of the Constitution of 1849 regarding the titles of legislative acts were directory and not mandatory" (citing cases).

It was held in People v. Jordan, 172 Cal. 391, 394, 156 P. 451, 452, that:

"A liberal rule of construction has been adopted * * * in the interest of protecting meritorious legislation from being declared void through inartificially constructed titles."

To the same effect, see Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 519, 221 P. 628; People v. Sterling Refining Co. (Cal. App.) 261 P. 1080; Torson v. Fleming (Cal. App.) 266 P. 845.

It was held in the case of In re Werner, 129 Cal. 567, 570, 62 P. 97, that where the title of an act fairly indicates but one subject, and the body of the act embraced a separate and distinct subject, not expressed in the title, the portion of the act relating to the latter subject was in conflict with the Constitution and void. To the same effect, see, also, Pratt v. Browne, 135 Cal. 649, 67 P. 1082; Estate of Melone, 141 Cal. 331, 333, 74 P. 991; Williams, Superintendent of Banks, v. Carver, 171 Cal. 658, 661, 154 P. 472; Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Drainage District, 182 Cal. 252, 271, 187 P. 1041; People v. Sterling Refining Co., supra; Estate of Phillips (Cal. Sup.) 263 P. 1017; Brunson v. City of Santa Monica, 27 Cal. App. 89, 91, 92, 148 P. 950; Wallace v. Zinman, 200 Cal. 585, 254 P. 946. A full exposition of the subject is found in Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (8th Ed.) §§ 308 to 313, inclusive, having particular reference to the rules of construction herein discussed, the change in the rules recognized by our courts and the reasons for the change.

Our first duty is to maintain the Constitution as it is, and whenever it is encroached upon we must maintain its supremacy. Lewis v. Dunne, 134 Cal. 291, 297, 66 P. 478, 55 L. R. A. 833, 86 Am. St. Rep. 257. If the portion of section 674, Code of Civil Procedure, which attempts to provide a method for releasing personal property from attachment, should be upheld, it would be opening the door to the accomplishment by indirection of an evil which the framers of the Constitution manifestly intended to directly prevent; that is, giving effect to a legislative enactment upon a subject not expressed in its title. Our conclusions cannot be controlled by any matter of convenience to litigants, or because of any consideration of the fact that an appellant's personal property may still be held under attachment in the action, although he has executed a sufficient undertaking in his appeal from the judgment against him, which will amply secure the respondent's rights under a decision that may affirm the judgment. If the procedure provided for in the section results in unnecessary hardships to litigants, that is a matter for the Legislature to remedy, but is no justification for the court to disregard the plain and salutary provisions of the Constitution, made for the protection of all our people, including the lawmakers in enacting our laws. "Ita lex scripta est." Weill v. Kenfield, 54 Cal. 111, 117.

A hasty reading of the opinion in the late case of Los Angeles City School District v. Odell, President of the Board of Education, 200 Cal. 637, 254 P. 570, might give the impression that the Supreme Court had thereby set aside those rules of construction which have been adhered to ever since the adoption of the Constitution of 1879, and had reverted to the rules announced prior thereto under the provisions of the Constitution of 1849. We do not believe that such was the intention of the court. In that case the facts were that the act under consideration was amendatory of a former act adopting section 1617½ of the Political Code, and that the title to the former contained a limitation relating to the subject of the Code section, which limitation was omitted from the body of the amendment, but the title of the amendatory act recites that it is "An act to amend section 1617½ of the Political Code," and repeats the title of the prior act which expressed the limitation. The court held that the general subject of the amendment was expressed in the title, and that the fact that the scope of the body of the amendatory act was enlarged beyond that indicated by the title of the prior act, which title was repeated in the title of the amendatory act, did not make the amendatory act a violation of section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution, for the reason, mainly, that the portion of the title of the amendatory act which reads "'An act to amend section 1617½ of the Political Code' adequately expresses the intention of the Legislature, which was to supersede the previous legislation upon the subject." (Italics ours.)

The subject of the legislation under consideration in the case before us, as limited by the titles of the acts relating thereto, is the liens of judgments. It follows that section 674, Code of Civil Procedure, so far as it may relate to the lien of any attachment on personal property, is in contravention of section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution, and void.

The peremptory writ is therefore denied, and the proceeding is dismissed.

PEOPLE v. ROLDAN. (Cr. 1697.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 27, 1928.

1. Burglary $\Rightarrow$ 42(3)—Unexplained possession of stolen police badge held corroborated by other evidence inconsistent with defendant's innocence, authorizing conviction for burglary.

In prosecution for burglary, unexplained possession of stolen police badge was corroborated by evidence that defendant was roomer in hotel on date on which badge was stolen therefrom, together with contradictory statements concerning possession by defendant and use to which badge was put by him, inconsistent with defendant's innocence, and was sufficient to justify conviction.

2. Burglary $\Rightarrow$ 42(3)—Slight corroborative evidence, in addition to possession of recently stolen property, tending to show guilt, will support conviction for burglary.

Where person is found in possession of recently stolen property, slight corroborative evidence of other inculpatory circumstances, tending to show guilt, will support conviction.

3. Burglary $\Rightarrow$ 41(3)—Evidence that defendant posed as officer, broke through screen, knocked down inmate, and searched every room in house, held to indicate intent to steal.

In prosecution for burglary, evidence that defendant posed as officer, broke through screen, struck inmate of house with pistol, and searched every room in house, held to indicate intent by defendant to steal something; it being immaterial whether it was beer, whisky, or something else, in view of Pen. Code, § 459, making entry with intent to commit grand or petit larceny, or any felony, sufficient.

4. Burglary $\Rightarrow$ 3—Requested instruction, requiring finding that defendant entered premises with sole intent to commit felony, to authorize conviction for burglary, held properly refused (Pen. Code. § 459).

In prosecution for burglary, requested instruction, requiring finding that defendant entered premises with sole intent to commit felony before conviction, held properly refused, under Pen. Code, § 459.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Manuel Roldan was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Marshall A. Stutsman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

THOMPSON, J. The defendant was charged by an information containing two counts of two offenses of burglary, one of them said to have been committed on October 9, 1927, and the other on April 2, 1928. The jury returned a verdict of guilty on both counts, and this appeal is prosecuted from the judgment and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The principal contention of the appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, necessitating a review thereof. F. E. Allison, a deputy city prosecutor of Los Angeles, occupied room No. 204 at the Alhambra Apartments during the month of October, 1927. Called as a witness, Mr. Allison testified to this fact, and said that about 5 o'clock a. m. of a Sunday morning (the exact date being unknown) he was awakened by hearing his door leading into the hallway being shut; that his trousers, containing about $70 in money, some keys, and an officer's badge, were stolen at this time; that the badge, which was shown him at the hearing and which, according to other witnesses, had been found in the possession of appellant, was his badge, he being able to identify it by reason of its number and a broken clasp. The owner and manager of the Alhambra Apartments testified that appellant was living in her apartment on October 9, 1927, having registered there on September 11, 1927. Another witness testified that he was a clerk in a cigar store at 100 South Broadway street; that on the night of April 1, 1928, the appellant came to the store and told him that he had been working as an officer in the flood district, and had been given the officer's badge; that the badge was hanging loosely on his vest, and, when asked by the witness why he didn't clip it down, stated that the clip was broken. This witness also stated that the appellant at the time appeared to have been drinking. It will be noted that this explanation by appellant of the possession of the badge is directly contradictory of another, made at the police station on the morning of April 2, 1928, and the one related by him on the witness stand, to the effect that on the evening of April 1st or 2d he purchased a bottle of liquor, and while in a rest room pulling at the cork preparatory to taking a drink the bottle slipped from his fingers; that in picking it up he noticed the badge lying on some places of newspaper.

With respect to the second count, and incidentally related to the first by reason particularly of the use made of the badge by the appellant, one Hernandez, residing on April 2, 1928, at 612½ North Grand avenue, in Los Angeles, testified that between 4 and 5 a. m. appellant knocked at a screen door of his residence demanding admission; that, when the door was not opened, the appellant broke in and began searching the premises. According to this witness, appellant exhibited this same badge, and said that he was an officer, and searched every room in the house, "to see what he could find there," and while knocking at the door had a pistol in his hand, with which he knocked the witness over the head after forcing his entrance.

Another witness testified that appellant entered his room between 4:30 and 5 a. m. at 612½ North Grand avenue on this same morning, exhibiting the badge and carrying a pistol in his belt, and told the witness that he was an officer looking for wine and beer. And Macario Romero, also residing at the same address, testified substantially to the same effect. As heretofore indicated, the appellant took the stand and denied having committed either offense.

[1, 2] Appellant insistently argues that the unexplained possession of the stolen police badge is insufficient, standing alone, to support the conviction. It is obvious that this argument stands upon a false premise, for the reason that there is in this instance corroborating evidence. Not only is there evidence that appellant was a roomer in the hotel on the date on which the badge was stolen, which, of course, is of slight corroborative value, but also there are the contradictory statements concerning its possession by the appellant, and the use to which the badge was put on the morning of April 2d, which latter circumstance is not consistent with its innocent acquirement. We are not unmindful of the fact that the badge might easily pass from hand to hand, nor have we overlooked the lapse of time occurring between the date on which the badge was stolen and the date on which unlawful use was made of its possession. In the absence of any one of the corroborating circumstances already mentioned, we might have grave doubts of the sufficiency of the testimony. As it stands, however, we are of the opinion that the jury was justified in returning the verdict. The firmly established rule of law is that, "when a person is found in possession of recently stolen property, slight corroborative evidence of other inculpatory circumstances tending to show his guilt will support a conviction." People v. Cataline, 54 Cal. App. 36, 200 P. 1060. In the case just cited the possession of the stolen property was corroborated by a denial by defendant of his identity, a denial of his ability to run an automobile of the make of the one stolen, although an ignition key fitting the car was found in his possession, and a denial that he had placed the automobile in the garage in which it was found, although he was identified by the night watchman. When analyzed, it is apparent that the corroborating circumstances consisted solely of denials of facts established by other testimony. Yet the court said the verdict was abundantly supported. To the same effect we find People v. Vidal, 121 Cal. 221, 53 P. 558; People v. Luchetti, 119 Cal. 501, 51 P. 707; People v. Gibson, 16 Cal. App. 347, 116 P. 987; People v. Miller, 45 Cal. App. 494, 188 P. 52; People v. Farrell, 67 Cal. App. 128, 227 P. 210; People v. Crotty, 70 Cal. App. 515, 233 P. 395; People v. Brown, 71 Cal. App. 181, 235 P. 72.

[3] With respect to the second count of the indictment, it is urged that it was not proven that appellant entered the residence with intent to commit a felony or to commit larceny. The facts that appellant posed as an officer, broke through the screen, knocked one of the inmates over the head with a pistol, and searched every room in the house, go a long way toward indicating an intent on the part of appellant to steal something; whether it was beer, wine or whisky, as appellant argues, or something else, would make little difference, in view of the provision in section 459 of the Penal Code, stating that entering with "intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony" is sufficient.

[4] Counsel complains of two instructions requested by him, which the court refused to give. Suffice it to say that the substance of these instructions was fully covered by the court in other instructions, except in those particulars where appellant requested the court to inform the jury that, before appellant could be convicted of burglary, it was necessary that the prosecution prove that he entered the premises with "the sole intent of committing a felony," and, as just indicated, this is not the statutory definition of burglary, which to all intents and purposes was incorporated in the instructions given.

Other minor points are argued by appellant. We have examined them, and find nothing which merits or justifies further discussion.

Judgment and order affirmed.

BRYDON v. CITY OF HERMOSA BEACH
et al. (Civ. 6111.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 23, 1928.

As Modified on Denial of Petition for Rehearing Sept. 22, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 22, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ⇨477—Superior court may grant or refuse injunction staying proceedings pending appeal from judgment (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 525-533, 681; Civ. Code, § 3421; Const. art. 6, § 5).

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 525-533, 681, Civ. Code, § 3421, and Const. art. 6, § 5, superior court has power to make order granting or denying injunction to stay all proceedings pending appeal proposed to be taken from judgment when entered.

2. Appeal and error ⇨100(1)—All orders granting or refusing injunctions pending appeal are appealable, whether addressed to trial court's discretion or matter of right (Code Civ. Proc. § 963).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, all orders granting or refusing injunctions, whether temporary, permanent, or provisional, pending appeal, are appealable, whether granting or order by trial court is addressed solely to its discretion, or is matter of right vested in litigant.

3. Appeal and error ⇨122—Appeal may be taken from whole or any portion of appealable order (Code Civ. Proc. § 940).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 940, appeal may be taken from whole or from any portion of any appealable order.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨323(1)—Assessed property owners, failing to protest to council within time fixed, cannot enjoin council from proceeding with improvement, in absence of fraud, want of power, or notice (St. 1911, p. 730, §§ 6, 7, 82).

Under St. 1911, p. 730, §§ 6, 7, 82, providing that decision of council shall be final on objections to proposed assessment district after hearing, failure of owners of property proposed to be assessed for street improvement to protest to council within time fixed therefor is fatal to action by owners to enjoin council from ordering improvement or entering into contract therefor, unless council has no power to do proposed work, or there is fraud or collusion in proceedings, or council has been guilty of abuse of discretion equivalent to fraud, or failed to give required notice of improvement.

5. Municipal corporations ⇨321(2)—Assessed property owners, not protesting, are deemed to submit to jurisdiction of council in determining necessity for improvement, in absence of fraud, want of power, or notice (St. 1911, p. 730, §§ 6, 7, 82).

Under St. 1911, p. 730, §§ 6, 7, 82, making decision of council final after protest by owners to assessment, owners of property proposed to be assessed, failing to protest within time fixed, are deemed to have submitted themselves to jurisdiction of council in determination of necessity of improvements, unless council has no power to do proposed work, or there is fraud or collusion in proceedings, or council has been guilty of abuse of discretion equivalent to fraud, or failed to give required notice.

6. Municipal corporations ⇨323(3)—Claim that council acted fraudulently in not specifying lighting posts were designed as trolley poles held not sustained by evidence, in action to enjoin improvement proceeding (St. 1911, p. 730, §§ 6, 7).

In action to enjoin city council from proceeding with street improvement, claim that council was guilty of acts amounting to fraud on owners of lots in assessment district by failure to specify that nearly all lighting trolley poles were in fact designed to be used as posts for benefit of railway company held not supported by evidence showing all posts would be suitable for carrying lighting equipment, and that council declared they were to be installed for that purpose; their decision being final, under St. 1911, p. 730, §§ 6, 7.

7. Municipal corporations ⇨321(2)—City council has exclusive power to determine whether improvement is adaptable for purpose made, and decision is final, in absence of protest (St. 1911, p. 730, §§ 6, 7).

Under St. 1911, p. 730, §§ 6, 7, it is the exclusive province of the city council to determine whether improvement is of character adaptable or needed for purpose for which it is made, and its determination within its discretion is final, in absence of protest on part of property owners.

8. Municipal corporations ⇨272—That poles on improved street might be larger than necessary for lighting purposes and suitable as trolley poles, incidentally benefiting railway company, could not invalidate improvement proceedings.

In suit to restrain city council from proceeding with street improvement on ground of fraud, in failing to designate that lighting posts were in fact designed to be used also for trolley poles for benefit of railway company, fact that posts might be larger than necessary for lighting purposes, or suitable for trolley poles, or may incidentally benefit railway company, cannot invalidate improvement proceedings, or deprive council of authority to proceed with work.

9. Municipal corporations ⇨323(1)—Improvement proceeding could not be restrained, because funds used in condemning railway right of way were received from county from automobile licenses (Vehicle Act).

In action to enjoin city council from proceeding with street improvement, amended allegations of complaint, alleging condemnation of portions of right of way of railway company along improved street, and that deposit of money to pay for property taken was made from moneys deposited with city by county, out of funds derived by county from automobile licenses and other moneys received under Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517, as amended by St. 1925, p. 398), held properly stricken, since, if fund could not be so used, city would be required to pay value of land condemned out of other funds.

10. Municipal corporations — 323(3)—Evidence of negotiations between city and railway company not ripening into contract held properly excluded, in suit to enjoin improvement because of secret agreement with railroad company.

In suit to restrain city council from proceeding with proposed street improvement, because of secret agreement between council and railway company for erection of lighting posts to be used as trolley poles, evidence of resolutions by county directing negotiations with railway company, and instructing city attorney to accept terms of letter from company and file same with city engineer, was properly excluded, since showing negotiations did not ripen into contract.

11. Municipal corporations — 323(3)—Evidence of discussions by city council to combine lighting and trolley poles, not showing agreement with railway, held properly excluded in suit to restrain council proceeding with improvement for fraud.

In suit to restrain city council from proceeding with street improvement on ground of fraud by council in failing to specify that lighting posts were designed to be used also as trolley poles for benefit of railway company, proposed evidence by member of city council regarding alleged plan to install combination lighting and trolley poles, and in relation to contract between council and company, was properly excluded, in absence of showing that conversations ripened into formal action or into any agreement with railway company.

12. Municipal corporations — 330(4)—Specification of patented devices on file for reference held not to invalidate improvement proceedings.

Proceedings for street improvement held not invalid because certain patented devices were specified to be used in installing lighting equipment and patented materials were specified for use in doing paving, where agreements for use of same and prices thereof were on file in office of city clerk, for reference by property owners and bidders for work, in making bids.

13. Municipal corporations — 321(3)—Trial court's determination of substantial compliance with statute in improvement proceeding is controlling, in absence of abuse of discretion.

If improvement proceeding is one where requirement of statute has not been entirely disregarded, trial court's determination on question of substantial compliance with statute is controlling, in absence of abuse of discretion.

14. Municipal corporations — 323(3)—Denial of temporary injunction pending appeal from judgment refusing to restrain improvement proceeding held not abuse of discretion under evidence (St. 1911, p. 730, §§ 6, 7, 82).

In suit to restrain city council from receiving bids or making contracts for construction of street improvement, trial court did not abuse discretion in denying temporary injunction pending appeal from judgment for city, under evidence showing resolution for improvement, notice of adoption of resolution, failure by property owners to appeal or object within time limited, approval by council of equipment to be used, and failure to show fraud in erecting lighting poles, to be used also as trolley poles, under St. 1911, p. 730, §§ 6, 7, 82.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clair S. Tappan, Judge.

Action by Robert W. Brydon and others against the City of Hermosa Beach and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff Brydon alone appeals. Affirmed.

Robert Young, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

T. W. Marchant, City Atty., of Hermosa Beach (Kimball Fletcher, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

O'Melveny, Tuller & Myers, H. R. Snyder, Arthur M. Ellis, and Paul S. Honberger, all of Los Angeles, amici curiæ.

HAZLETT, Justice pro tem. This is an action for an injunction against the city of Hermosa Beach, the mayor, the members of the city council, and superintendent of streets of the city, to enjoin them from receiving any bids or making any contracts for the construction of certain street improvements upon certain public streets in the city, and from levying any assessment or taking other proceedings in the matter, and to enjoin a certain other action predicated in eminent domain, and for general relief.

Plaintiff Brydon and other parties plaintiff brought this action as owners in the district of lands to be assessed for the improvement, and they allege that they sue for themselves and for all other property owners similarly situated. The proceedings for the improvement are under the "Improvement Act of 1911." St. 1911, p. 730. Plaintiffs introduced their evidence, and defendants, being content therewith, introduced none, but rested, and judgment was given for defendants, from which judgment plaintiff Brydon alone appeals.

Between the time when the court announced its decision and the entry of the judgment, plaintiffs moved the court for an injunction to stay all proceedings in the matter of the improvement pending an appeal, which they proposed to take from the judgment when entered, which motion was heard and denied before the judgment was entered, and plaintiff Brydon alone appeals from the order denying the injunction pending appeal.

Respondents contend that the decision of the trial court denying an injunction pending the appeal from the judgment is final, and that no appeal lies therefrom. They cite in support of this contention Richards v. McMillan, 6 Cal. 422, 65 Am. Dec. 521; Porter v. Jennings, 89 Cal. 440, 26 P. 965, City of Pasadena v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 781, 109 P. 620, and certain decisions of the Supreme Court of New York and of the United States Supreme Court. It was held in the Richards Case that "an appeal does not lie from an order refusing an injunction." This opinion was handed down in 1856, and is not authority now, for the reason that the first legislative enactment providing for appeal from such an order was adopted in 1866. Stats. 1865-66, p. 707. In the Porter Case the court announced that:

"An order granting or dissolving an injunction is a matter of discretion with the lower court which this court will not review except where an abuse of that discretion is urged."

This case recognizes the rule that an appeal may lie from an order granting or dissolving an injunction.

The City of Pasadena Case was an original application for a writ of prohibition to prevent the superior court from maintaining and enforcing an injunction granted to preserve the status quo of the parties pending appeal from a judgment denying a permanent injunction. The question involved was whether the trial court had the right to grant the injunction to preserve the fruits of a possibly successful litigation to the appellants from an adverse judgment against them. The Supreme Court held that the trial court had the right to grant the injunction and denied the writ. In discussing the law bearing upon the question, reference was made to the Slaughterhouse Cases, 10 Wall. 273, 19 L. Ed. 915, wherein the power of the chancery courts of England to maintain the status quo of the subject-matter of litigation pending appeal was discussed. The holding referred to was that such power existed in the trial courts, "and should always be exercised, when any irremediable injury may result from the effect of the decree as rendered, but it is a discretionary power, and its exercise or nonexercise is not an appealable matter." (Italics ours.) This clause, which we have italicized, quoted from the Slaughterhouse Cases, is obiter dictum as related to the matter under consideration in the Pasadena Case, and is not controlling.

The opinions of the New York Supreme Court and of the Supreme Court of the United States, cited by respondents, are to the effect that, where the matter of granting, continuing, dissolving, or refusing an injunction pendente lite is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, its holding will not be disturbed on appeal. Strasser v. Moonelis, 108 N. Y. 611, 15 N. E. 730; Pfohl v. Sampson, 59 N. Y. 174; Brown v. Cheese Ass'n, 59 N. Y. 242; Schneider v. City of Rochester, 155 N. Y. 619, 50 N. E. 291; Bufington v. Harvey, 95 U. S. 99, 24 L. Ed. 381. And the same rule is announced in relation to an order granting an injunction to maintain the status quo pending appeal. Hovey v. McDonald, 109 U. S. 150, 3 S. Ct. 136, 27 L. Ed. 888; Virginian R. Co. v. United States, 272 U. S. 658, 47 S. Ct. 222, 71 L. Ed. 463. These decisions, however, are not authority in California, for the reasons hereinafter stated.

[1] Such an order may properly be made under section 681, Code of Civil Procedure (Pierce v. City of Los Angeles, 159 Cal. 516, 114 P. 818), and, where not prohibited by statute, the superior court, under section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution, has power to make it (Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 649, 660, 242 P. 725). See, also, Pasadena v. Superior Court, supra; Mulvey v. Superior Court, 22 Cal. App. 514, 135 P. 53; Porter v. Superior Court, 78 Cal. App. 790, 248 P. 1077; Wheeler v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 255 P. 275; United Railroads v. Superior Court, 170 Cal. 755, 758, 151 P. 129, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 199; American Trading Co. v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 770, 222 P. 142. The power exists under section 3421, Civil Code, relating to provisional injunctions, and under sections 525 to and including 533, Code of Civil Procedure, relating to provisional remedies in civil actions. United Railroads v. Superior Court, supra; American Trading Co. v. Superior Court, supra.

[2, 3] Our statute permitting appeals from the superior court (section 963, Code Civ. Proc.) provides that:

"An appeal may be taken from a superior court in the following cases: * * * from an order * * * granting or dissolving an injunction, or refusing to grant or dissolve an injunction. * * *"

And our courts have held that under that section an appeal lies from an order granting an injunction pendente lite, and, so far as mandatory in character, its enforcement may be stayed pending appeal. Doudell v. Shoo, 159 Cal. 448, 455, 114 P. 579; United Railroads v. Superior Court, supra; American Trading Co. v. Superior Court, supra. In this regard, it matters not whether the granting of the order by the trial court is addressed solely to the discretion of that court or is a matter of right vested in the litigant. It is clear that the intent of the statute is that all orders granting or refusing injunctions, whether temporary or permanent, or provisional pending appeal, shall be appealable, and this construction finds support in the cases of United Railroads v. Superior Court and American Trading Co. v. Superior Court, supra. In the United Railroads Case the Supreme Court held that where, upon notice, an order is made granting or dissolving a temporary or provisional injunction, to continue during the pendency and until final determination of the action, the remedy is by appeal. In the American Trading Co. Case it was held that an order granting an injunction pending appeal, after having refused an injunction pendente lite, can be sustained only on the theory that the order "is a portion of the order denying the injunction pendente lite, for, where the court has refused an injunction, it could not subsequently grant the injunction, because the order refusing the injunction is an appealable order." It is well settled that an appeal may be taken from the whole or from any portion of an appealable order. (Italics ours.) Section 940, Code Civ. Proc.; Donnelly v. Gray Bros., 3 Cal. App. 59, 84 P. 451.

An inspection of the record in this appeal from the order of the trial court denying an injunction to plaintiffs pending appeal from the judgment, discloses that it will be necessary to examine the whole case in order to determine whether the trial court erred in refusing the injunction. Therefore the appeal from the order will be considered in connection with the appeal from the judgment.

The improvement proposed, as described in the resolution of intention, was to be done upon Hermosa avenue and certain adjacent streets in the city. Hermosa avenue is the principal throughfare of the city, extending entirely through it, along the Pacific Ocean, a distance of about two miles, and is a double roadway, with the right of way of the Pacific Electric Railway dividing it. This right of way is, and for some time has been, used by the company as an electrically equipped double-tracked interurban railway, passing through the city and connecting it with other cities and territory of Los Angeles county. The equipment includes trolley poles, located about the center of the right of way, supporting overhead wires. In general, the improvement so proposed was to consist of grading, paving, construction of curbs, sidewalks, gutters, culverts, sewer connections, and lighting posts and standards, together with certain conduits, cables, wires, lights, and appurtenances, the details and more particular locations of which are shown upon the plans, specifications, and profiles for the same then on file in the office of the city clerk of the city, and referred to in the resolution for a further and more particular description of the work and improvement. The resolution also provides that the work and improvement shall be chargeable upon a district described therein.

In his brief, appellant admits that the proceedings are within the law, so far as the form and letter are concerned, but he asserts that they are not within the spirit of the law. His main contention is that the greater number of the lighting posts were designed for and to be used by the Pacific Electric Railway Company as trolley poles, under some agreement or understanding with the company, and that the city council did not so state in the resolution of intention, but intentionally omitted to so state, for the reasons that the members of the council knew that such statement would be unlawful and would defeat the improvement. In this connection, he also contends that the greater number of posts were made heavier, longer, and more expensive than necessary for lighting purposes, in order that the company might use them for trolley poles, thus increasing the amount of the assessment in the district. For these reasons he asserts that the injunction should have been granted.

The portion of the resolution relating to the lighting system complained of, proposed to be installed, is as follows:

"That Hermosa avenue, and certain property for the widening of Hermosa avenue (between designated points), * * * be improved * * * by the installation of certain steel lighting posts, known as 'King ferronite standards,' and certain wood lighting posts, together with certain conduits, cables, wires, lights, and other appurtenances."

The plans, specifications, and profiles referred to show the character, sizes, and locations of the lighting posts, the height of the lighting centers thereon, that 194 of such posts were to be installed in the avenue outside, but adjacent to, the right of way of the company, that lighting equipment was to be installed upon 133 of them, and that the remaining 61 were to be installed without such equipment, that 181 were to be 34 feet or more in height above the grade of the street, while the lighting centers were to be at the height of 22 feet, and that 7 of the posts were to be 22½ feet high. The testimony showed that all the posts would be suitable to be used for ornamental lighting purposes, that the lighting center could well be at the height of 18 or 19 feet to properly light the avenue, that 181 of the posts would be suitable to be used as trolley poles, as well as for lighting purposes, that the posts suitable to be used for both purposes cost more than posts for lighting equipment alone, but there is no competent evidence as to the amount of such excess cost. However, the descriptions and specifications of the posts and equipment, contained in the resolution of intention and in the plans, specifications, and profiles, are so full and complete that there is no ambiguity or uncertainty as to their dimensions or appliances, or their use for lighting purposes, immediate or prospective. Therefore the rule relied on by appellant, announced in Southwest Paving Company v. Wilson, 57 Cal. App. 251, 255, 206 Pac. 776, to the effect that, where a material variance exists between the description of the work as set out in the resolution of intention and in the plans and specifications, the proceedings are thereby invalidated, does not apply in this case. The court found upon the evidence that the improvement provided for in the resolution will cost approximately $300,000, the lighting system portion thereof approximately $85,000, and that all of the posts are suitable, useful, and proposed to be used by the city as a part of the ornamental lighting system, and most of them susceptible for use in supporting trolley wires.

Notice of the adoption of the resolution and of the hour and place where objections to the proposed work might be made was given and published in compliance with the act, but none of the plaintiffs appeared or objected within the time limited or at all. Objections and protests were made by the owners of about 16 per cent. of the lands in the proposed assessment district, and after a hearing by the council the protests were overruled, and the council adopted a resolution ordering the work. The act of 1911 provides in section 6 that under such circumstances the decision of the council "shall be final and conclusive," and in section 7 that "immediately thereupon [upon overruling the protests] the city council shall be deemed to have acquired jurisdiction to order the proposed improvements." Section 82 of the act provides that the "act shall be liberally construed, to the end that its purposes may be effective. * * * The exclusive remedy of any person affected or aggrieved thereby [by any error, irregularity or informality or neglect or omission in any procedure under the act of any officer of the city] shall be by appeal to the city council as herein provided."

[4, 5] Under the act, the failure of owners of property proposed to be assessed to protest to the council within the time fixed therefor is fatal to an action by them to enjoin the council from ordering the improvement or entering into a contract therefor. They cannot raise an objection to the improvement, in the action, which was not previously made by them to the council. Blake v. City of Eureka, 201 Cal. 643, 258 P. 945, and cases therein cited; Noyes, III, v. Chambers (Cal. Sup.) 261 P. 1006. By their failure to protest they are deemed to have submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the council in the determination of the necessity for the improvements. Swall v. County of Los Angeles, 42 Cal. App. 758, 765, 184 P. 406; Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, 691, 76 P. 661. These rules are subject to the following exceptions: Where the council has no power to do the work proposed (Harney v. Benson, 113 Cal. 314, 317, 45 P. 687); where there is fraud or collusion entering into the proceedings (People v. City of Los Angeles, 62 Cal. App. 781, 218 P. 63); and where the council was guilty of an abuse of discretion equivalent to fraud or failed to give the required notice of the improvement (Hanson v. Board of Trustees, 74 Cal. App. 588, 590, 241 P. 572.) Unless plaintiffs have shown that this case comes under one or more of the exceptions, their action is not well founded.

Appellant contends that the council was guilty of acts amounting to a fraud upon the owners of the lands in the assessment district, by their failure to specify that nearly all of the posts designated as posts for lighting purposes were in fact designed to be used also as trolley poles for the benefit of the Pacific Electric Railway Company, and some of them exclusively for the latter use.

[6-8] The evidence does not support this contention. It shows, in fact, that all the posts would be suitable for carrying the lighting equipment, and the council, as it had the right to do, declared that they were to be installed for that purpose, and their decision in the matter was final. Blake v. City of Eureka, supra. It is the exclusive province of the council to determine whether the improvement is of the character adaptable or needed for the purposes for which it is to be made. Harney v. Benson, Duncan v. Ramish, and Swall v. County of Los Angeles, supra. The fact that the posts may be taller and larger than necessary for lighting purposes, or may be suitable for and may be used as trolley poles by the company, or may incidentally benefit the company, cannot invalidate the proceedings, and the council is not deprived of its authority to proceed with the work by reason of any such condition or result. See Brown v. Board of Supervisors, 124 Cal. 274, 282, 57 P. 82.

If the trial court had held that the posts were somewhat taller and heavier than necessary for lighting purposes, the determination of the council as to the character of posts adopted, being within the discretion of the council, is final, in the absence of protest on the part of plaintiffs. It was held in Harney v. Benson, supra, that, where the board of supervisors of San Francisco adopted a resolution of intention for the construction of a sewer, it appeared that a small part of the work as designed had no outlet and at the time would be useless. The court said that it was the province of the board "to determine whether sewers are needed, and what districts will be benefited thereby. Upon these points their judgment is ordinarily final. And there may have been, in the judgment of the board, other reasons why this sewer should be thus constructed, although it would not be at once utilized. * * * The work was within the general power of the board, though to construct this sewer may have been an improvident use of the power." Also, our Supreme Court, in the case of Noyes, III, v. Chambers, supra, held that, even though some portion of the improvements appeared to be wholly useless, if proper notice was given under the act, and the property owners failed to object, they could not collaterally attack the proceedings.

Should the question of the use of the posts as trolley poles by the company arise in the future, the right to permit such use may be tested then. See Clark v. Los Angeles, 160 Cal. 30, 37, 116 P. 722. In fact, it has been held that, although an improvement may be used by a privately owned utility, it may be constructed under public improvement proceedings, and the use permitted upon proper terms and for proper compensation. Larsen v. San Francisco, 182 Cal. 1, 186 P. 757; Milheim v. Moffat Tunnel District, 262 U. S. 710, 43 S. Ct. 694, 67 L. Ed. 1194; County of Los Angeles v. Hunt, 198 Cal. 753, 247 P. 897.

In the Larsen Case it appeared that the board of supervisors of San Francisco adopted a resolution for the construction of a tunnel known as the "Twin Peaks tunnel," "for public uses," but did not specify the particular public uses to which it was to be devoted. In fact, it was constructed to be used by street car companies, or by the city and a street car company, by installing and operating street car lines through it for passenger service. The Supreme Court held that the uses were public uses, that the construction of the tunnel would be a benefit to the lands assessed, that the resolution was sufficient, and that the proceedings were valid.

In the Milheim Case it appeared that the Legislature of Colorado adopted an act to provide for the construction of the Moffat Tunnel through the Continental Divide, and for the creation of an improvement district to be assessed to pay its cost. The act declared that the tunnel should be constructed to provide an avenue of communication by transportation through the Continental Divide between the eastern and western portions of the state, and would promote the health, comfort, safety, convenience, and welfare of the people of the state. The contesting landowners claimed that the purposes of the act were not public, but were private, because the tunnel was to be so located as to be practically a part of the Moffat road, a privately owned common carrier railroad, to save the railroad from bankruptcy, and for the people of the state. The court announced that subway tunnels may be constructed by municipalities for lease to street railway and rapid transit lines for use as common carriers, and that for the construction of which the power of taxation may be exercised, and held that the proposed use by the railroad company was a public use, that the act was not in contravention of private rights, and, even if the act had specifically provided that the tunnel was designed to be leased to the company, a carrier of passengers and freights, it would be a public improvement for public use.

In this appeal the question whether the city may permit the company to make joint use of the poles is not before us. However, it fairly appears that, in proposing to install the larger posts, the council had in mind the elimination of the trolley poles now in use by the company, thus benefiting the district by preventing an unsightly duplication of poles on a beautiful avenue; but the main and primary use, as determined by the council and as found by the court, was for the lighting purposes.

[9] Appellant calls attention to the allegations of the amended complaint which were stricken out on motion of defendants, wherein plaintiffs alleged that on the day the resolution of intention was adopted the city commenced in the superior court an action against the Pacific Electric Railway Company and others to condemn two portions of the right of way of the company, and make the portions parts of and to widen Hermosa avenue, to be improved in connection with the avenue as it existed prior thereto; that there was filed with the complainant in that action the affidavit of the mayor of the city to the effect that those portions of the right of way were of the value of $49,100; that the court then made its order for the deposit of that sum in court, which was then done, and that an order was made for the immediate possession by the city of portions to be condemned; also that said deposit was made from moneys deposited with the city by the county of Los Angeles, out of funds derived by the county from automobile licenses, and other moneys received by virtue of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517, as amended by St. 1925, p. 398).

Appellant contends that the allegations were material and competent and asserts that the city is without authority to use such funds for paying for property condemned in such action. The order of the court striking out the allegations was proper, for the reason, among others, that, if the fund may not be so used, the city will be required to pay the value of the lands to be condemned out of other funds which may be legally expended for that purpose. Assuming, without holding, that the merits of that action might properly be determined in this suit, the contention does not go to the merits of that action.

[10] Appellant contends that there was a secret agreement between the council and the company for the erection of the posts for use as trolley poles, and in support of this contention refers to the fact that plaintiffs offered in evidence a resolution of the council, adopted before the resolution of intention was adopted, directing the city attorney to negotiate with the company to secure the needed portions of the company's right of way for widening Hermosa avenue, and, if not successful, to bring condemnation proceedings for acquiring the land; that they also offered in evidence another resolution of the council, adopted prior to the adoption of the resolution of intention, but after the adoption of resolution of instructions to the city attorney, reciting that the terms of a certain letter from the general manager of the company "be accepted, and the letter filed for the use of the city engineer and the city attorney in the condemnation proceedings now being started by the city"; and that plaintiffs offered in evidence the letter referred to, which letter mentions the proposed widening and improving of the two roadways of Hermosa avenue, and states that a member of the council and the city engineer requested for comparative purposes an estimate of costs involved if the width of the right of way is reduced, paving done for four blocks on the right of way, and easement given over same and over two additional crossings, paving done on ten crossings where easements exist, and laying girder rails on certain crossings, and specifying the net cost of the same at $49,010, after deducting certain credits, including $4,100 as contribution towards poles and $8,840 estimated cost of filling the right of way with crushed rock; also proposing that, in return for the easements, the city and property owners are to protect the company from any assessment for the street improvement or street widening, except a nominal one of $1 for each parcel of right of way involved, the proposition to be subject to the approval of the board of directors of the company.

Defendants objected to the introduction of each of the resolutions and the letter, respectively, upon grounds that they were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, were negotiations only, which did not ripen into a contract, related to the taking of the portions of the right of way of the company later involved in the action in condemnation, and were nothing upon which any right of action could be based. These objections were sustained, and appellant assigns the rulings as error. The rulings were correct. It is not shown that any contract of any sort, secret or open, was made between the council and the company. While the letter relates to matters in addition to the taking of portions of the right of way for street purposes, the resolutions adopted by the council relate only to acquiring the strips from the right of way, and the council, while resolving "that the terms of the letter be accepted" limited its action thereon to filing it "for use of the city engineer and city attorney in the condemnation proceedings now being started." Had any such contract been made as claimed by appellant, the "right of way deeds" referred to in the prior resolution should have been obtained as a result thereof, and the action in condemnation would have been a useless thing and an unnecessary expense. It is apparent that the council and the company failed to agree, and therefore the action in condemnation was commenced.

[11] One A. R. Holston, a member of the city council, was called as a witness by plaintiffs, and it was sought to interrogate him in relation to discussions between the members of the council prior to and about the time of the adoption of the resolution of intention, regarding an alleged plan to install combination lighting and trolley posts and in relation to an alleged form of contract between the council and the company. Counsel for plaintiffs stated to the court that plaintiffs proposed to show by the witness that the plan was to install posts that would serve as trolley poles, that the cost thereof should be assessed upon the district, that the majority of the council stated that, unless the contract was made with the company, the proceedings for the improvement would not go through, that he believed the witness would testify that the contract was signed by the company and delivered to the council for approval, and that the proposed contract provided that the company should be relieved from all assessment in the matter of the improvement, except a nominal assessment of $4.

By his questions asked the witness, counsel for plaintiffs indicated that he understood and expected the witness to testify that the proposed contract was not approved by the council but was referred to the city attorney. Plaintiffs' counsel produced what he stated was a copy of the proposed contract and had it marked for identification, but the copy is not shown in the record in this appeal. Defendants objected to each of the questions asked the witness in regard to the said matters sought to be shown by plaintiffs, on the grounds that they were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, which objections were sustained; the court stating that there was no showing that any such conversations ripened into formal action by the council, or into any agreement or understanding whatever, but all that had been shown and was then being attempted to be shown was informal discussions and tentative propositions. Assuming, but not holding, that under the plea of fraud or concealment, made in the amended complaint, the trial court should have permitted the questions to be answered in order to give the fullest latitude to plaintiffs, there is no clear inference that the offered evidence, if admitted, would show any agreement, secret or open, made by the council with the company. In fact, as hereinbefore stated, the record induces the conclusion that no such agreement, or any agreement, with the company was made; the only facts attempted to be shown, which might tend to raise a suspicion that there was some understanding between the council and the company being that, in the action for condemnation, the affidavit of the mayor states, as the value of the two strips of right of way to be taken an amount the same as the letter of the manager of the company states is the net costs to the company occasioned by the improvement, when considered with the evidence that the lighting posts were to be suitable for trolley poles for use by the company. These matters are wholly insufficient to show any agreement in regard to the character of the posts or their joint use. Appellant's contentions above stated are without merit.

[12] Appellant also contends that the proceedings were invalid because of the facts that certain patented devices were specified to be used in installing the lighting equipment, and also patented materials were specified for use in doing the paving. It appears that the agreements for the use of the same and the prices thereof were on file in the office of the city clerk, for reference by the property owners and the bidders for the work in making their bids. In the case of Gualco v. City of Bakersfield (Cal. App.) 260 P. 308, and in the cases therein cited it was held that under such circumstances, where the right to require competitive bidding is preserved, such materials may properly be specified and used. See, also, Braun v. McGuire, 201 Cal. 134, 255 P. 808. We can see no reason why patented devices for use in the lighting system may not likewise be specified and used.

[13, 14] Finally, after full presentation of plaintiffs' case, the trial court, upon the evidence adduced, found against plaintiffs' contentions upon every question raised, holding that the act of 1911 was substantially complied with by the council, and that the council did not exceed its powers. The judgment of the trial court of what is a substantial compliance with the statute in a street improvement proceeding is to be exercised in the first instance by the trial court. "If the case is one where a requirement of the statute has not been entirely disregarded, its determination of the question of substantial compliance ought to be controlling, in the absence of an abuse of discretion." Beck v. Ransome-Crummey Co., 42 Cal. App. 674, 682, 184 P. 431, 434; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 222 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734. The ruling of a trial court upon a motion for an injunction pending appeal in the action rests in the sound discretion of that court, and the ruling must be sustained on appeal from it, unless abuse of discretion is shown. We find no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court.

The other points presented by appellant, which are not herein mentioned, are collateral to and connected with the questions herein decided, and we do not deem it necessary to give them further consideration.

The order denying plaintiff's motion for an injunction pending appeal and the judgment are affirmed.

ANDERSON et al. v. RINDGE CO. et al.
(Civ. 6330.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 30, 1928.

1. Evidence ¶213(2)—Statement in letter held mere recital of unsuccessful offer of compromise, and so inadmissible as admission against interest of value of services.

Statement of plaintiff's letter to person principally interested in defendant corporation, urging payment of fees for certain services, and reminding her of concessions made in other matters, in the hope of settlement, and in this connection saying, "We also offered to leave the matter of * * * claim (reduced by us to — in the hope of a satisfactory adjustment) till you could confer with us in that matter," held a mere recital of unsuccessful offer of compromise, and so inadmissible as admission against interest in action on the latter claim.

2. Attorney and client ¶166(3)—Evidence ¶553(3)—Amount received in settlement by client, under negotiations successfully concluded with attorneys' aid, held proper for jury's and expert's consideration on value of services.

The amount received in settlement by attorneys' client, under negotiations previously commenced and dropped before they were retained, but reopened and successfully concluded with their aid after they had moved to dismiss the proceeding to condemn client's property, is a proper matter for consideration of the jury in finding the value of their services and for an expert in giving his judgment of their value.

3. Attorney and client ¶145—That part of work in preparing motion was done in another's office held not shown to be breach of attorneys' contract of employment.

Breach of contract of employment of plaintiff attorneys, suing for their fees, not claimed to have failed in attaining the ends for which they were employed, is not shown by fact that part of the work in preparation for their motion to dismiss proceeding for condemnation of their client's property was done by employees in the office of another attorney; the character of such employees' labors not appearing, and it being presumed that plaintiffs performed their contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by J. A. Anderson and another, partners as Anderson & Anderson, against the Rindge Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs against the named defendant, it appeals. Affirmed.

M. F. Mitchell, Richard Hartley, and W. J. Clark, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Anderson & Anderson, Edward F. Wehrle, Victor T. Watkins, and Nathan Newby, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

STROTHER, Justice pro tem. This action was brought by plaintiffs, a firm of lawyers, to recover an attorney's fee alleged to be due for services rendered the defendant Rindge Company. The other defendant, Newby, also a lawyer, was so joined because he had an interest in the fee and refused to become a party plaintiff. The action was tried before a jury, which brought in a verdict for the amount of the demand.

The complaint is in two counts, one declaring upon a book account, the other upon a quantum meruit for the value of the services alleged to have been rendered at the instance of defendant. The answer of the Rindge Company is a specific denial of the allegations of the complaint. The answer of the defendant Newby admitted the allegations of the complaint. The defendant Rindge Company appeals from the judgment, and the record is brought before us in a bill of exceptions.

The evidence on behalf of plaintiffs gave a circumstantial account of the employment of the attorneys in certain litigation in which the Rindge Company was a party, and of the services rendered by them to that defendant.

The evidence on behalf of that defendant did not deny the fact of the employment or of the performance of any of the services claimed to have been rendered.

[1] A number of exceptions were taken by defendants to the rulings of the court on admissions of evidence. Only three points, however, are urged in support of the appeal. The defendant offered in evidence a letter written by plaintiffs to Mrs. May K. Rindge, who seems to be the party principally interested in the Rindge Company, urging payment of fees for services in matters wholly unconnected with the claim in suit here, but reminding her of concessions made in other matters, in the hope of settlement. The letter contains this clause in relation to the matter in issue here:

"And we also offered to leave the matter of the Broadway opening claim (reduced by us to $1,500.00 in the hope of a satisfactory adjustment) until you could confer with us in that matter."

To this offer plaintiffs objected, and the court sustained the objection. The argument of appellant is that it was competent evidence as an admission against interest as to the value of the services. The statement in the letter was so patently a mere recital of an unsuccessful offer of compromise that it does not require argument, and it was clearly inadmissible in evidence.

[2] A part of the services rendered by the attorneys consisted in the preparation for making a motion in a suit brought by the city of Los Angeles against the Rindge Company and others to condemn a right of way for a street, and giving notice of the motion to dismiss the suit for condemnation on the ground that the damages awarded for the taking of the right of way had not been paid, though a year had elapsed after the award. The pressing of the motion to hearing was deferred by stipulation between the parties to that action, pending negotiations for a settlement which was concluded, whereby the Rindge Company received $50,000, in addition to the damages awarded. F. B. Scotton, office manager of the defendant company, called as a witness for defendant, testified that, "In commencing those negotiations, I was guided by Anderson & Anderson and Mr. Newby as one would be."

In the trial of this action, two attorneys were examined by plaintiffs, as experts, as to the value of the services performed. The action of the court complained of was permitting the inclusion in the hypothetical question asked these witnesses of a recital of the receipt of $50,000 as a result of their labors.

It appeared from evidence on both sides of the case that there had been negotiations for settlement between the parties to the condemnation suit which had been dropped before these plaintiffs were retained, and that the negotiations were reopened after the notice of motion by them, and successfully concluded with their aid. It follows that those facts were proper matters for the consideration of the jury in finding the value of the services, and of an expert in giving his judgment of their value.

[3] The last contention of appellant is almost too absurd for comment. The defendant Newby testified on cross-examination that part of the work done in preparation for the motion for dismissal was done by employees in his office, and it is claimed that this was a breach of the contract between plaintiffs and defendant which called for the personal knowledge and skill of plaintiffs. The character of the labors of the employees does not appear, and of course it will be presumed that the plaintiffs performed their contract. It is not suggested that they did not attain the ends for which they were employed.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is affirmed.

(Civ. 6264.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 27, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 26, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 25, 1928.

1. Automobiles $\S$ 245 (6, 72)—Automobile driver's negligence, in crossing sidewalk from street, and deceased pedestrian's contributory negligence, held, under evidence, questions for jury.

In action for death of pedestrian, struck by automobile which was being driven across sidewalk from street into open gateway at corner of lot, evidence of automobile driver's negligence and decedent's contributory negligence held, under evidence, questions of fact for jury.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 989—Appellate court's review of jury's determination of fact questions is limited to ascertaining legal sufficiency of evidence to support determination.

In reviewing jury's determination of questions of fact, authority of appellate court is limited to ascertaining whether the evidence is legally sufficient to support such determination.

3. Automobiles $\S$ 244 (1)—Finding that automobile dealer was jointly liable with its salesman for death of pedestrian, struck by automobile driven by prospective buyer, held warranted.

Where finance company, to which conditional sales contract was assigned, as legal owner seized automobile on conditional buyer's default, and turned it over to corporate conditional seller, which placed it in its used car lot for sale, and thereafter automobile, while being negligently operated by prospective buyer during demonstration by salesman, caused death of pedestrian, held, finding that conditional seller was jointly liable for accident with its salesman was warranted; salesman not being independent contractor.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 1052(2)—Any error in permitting witnesses to testify that they were employed by defendant held harmless, where they testified to facts showing employment.

Even if preliminary statements made by automobile dealer's salesman in his testimony that he was "working for" dealer, and by manager of dealer's used car lot that he was "handling" a certain car for dealer, were erroneously admitted as stating conclusions of witnesses, such errors were not reversible, where statements were followed by testimony showing facts establishing such employment.

5. Trial $\S$ 296(3)—Any error in using article "the," instead of article "a," before words "proximate cause" in instruction, held harmless, in view of other instructions.

Any error in using article "the," instead of article "a," before the words "proximate cause" in instructions on contributory negligence in action for death of pedestrian, struck by automobile, held not prejudicial, where elsewhere in court's charge jury was fully and correctly instructed on doctrine of proximate cause in connection with contributory negligence.

6. Trial $\S$ 296(3)—Omitting element of proximate cause from instructions on contributory negligence held not reversible error, where other instructions covered matter.

Failure of certain instructions on contributory negligence to contain the element of proximate cause held not reversible error, where jury was elsewhere fully and fairly instructed on that branch of the case, since instructions must be read as a whole.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action by Herbert F. Briggs and others against Jess Mead, Incorporated, Joseph T. Dendinger, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and the named defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Cooley & Gallagher, of San Francisco, for appellants.

W. E. Simpson and Walter Sorensen, both of Fresno, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. On December 31, 1925, shortly after the noon hour, Mrs. Edna W. Briggs was walking along the sidewalk in front of a lot situate on the corner of Inyo and Fulton streets, Fresno, which was being operated as a sales place for used automobiles, when the defendant Lani, accompanied by the defendant Dendinger, attempted to drive an automobile across the sidewalk from the street into an open gateway at the corner of said lot, and in doing so struck Mrs. Briggs, inflicting injuries of an internal character, from which she died the same day. This action was subsequently commenced by her surviving husband and three children to recover damages resulting from her death. Upon trial a jury awarded a verdict in their favor, and from the judgment entered thereon the defendants Jess Mead, Incorporated, and Dendinger have appealed, urging as grounds for reversal that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, and that the trial court erred in ruling upon the admissibility of evidence and in instructing the jury.

[1] The first point made against the sufficiency of the evidence relates to the issues of the negligent operation of the automobile and the contributory negligence of the deceased. The circumstances attending the accident, briefly stated, were as follows: The lot where the accident occurred is situate on the southwest corner of the said streets, and was inclosed by chains; the gateway thereto being located directly across the corner thereof and being marked by posts on each side which stood 13 feet apart. Dendinger was a salesman connected with said lot, and had taken Lani, a prospective buyer, out in the automobile in question, a Maxwell touring car, for a demonstration, and before returning to the lot requested Lani to drive, which the latter was doing when the accident occurred. As they approached the lot they drove up the easterly side of Fulton street in a northerly direction, beyond the center of its intersection with Inyo street, which runs nearly at right angles with Fulton, and then made a left half circle turn in Fulton street, and proceeded southerly in the opposite direction down the westerly side of Fulton street, across the intersection, until they reached the corner of the sidewalk, and then they turned slightly to the right to enter the gateway. Mrs. Briggs was walking southerly down Fulton street on the same side as said lot. She had crossed the intersection of Inyo street, and had reached a point about opposite the southerly gatepost on Fulton street, when Lani approached from the rear and sounded his horn. At that time the automobile was in the street, at the corner opposite the gateway, about 3 or 4 feet from the street curb, and was headed diagonally into the lot. It was also 25 feet distant from Mrs. Briggs, and traveling between 2 and 3 miles an hour. Upon hearing the horn, Mrs. Briggs turned around suddenly and, evidently believing that the automobile was coming down the sidewalk toward her, screamed and ran around the post into the gateway of the lot. Lani saw that she was confused, and the evidence shows beyond question that at that time he could have easily applied the brakes and stopped the car; but either because of excitement and lack of control of the car, or believing that Mrs. Briggs would get out of the way, or that he would be able to steer the car so as to avoid striking her, he took no measures to stop the car. Instead he continued to drive forward at the same rate of speed, with the result that she tried to dodge the automobile, and in doing so was struck and thrown against the post, causing the injuries from which she died.

[2] In view of the situation above described, a question of pure fact was presented for the jury to decide as to whether Mrs. Briggs' death, if resulting from negligence, was proximately caused by the negligent operation of the automobile, or a failure on her part to exercise ordinary care for her own safety, and, both of these issues having been determined against appellants' contention, our authority on appeal is limited to an ascertainment of whether the evidence is legally sufficient to support such determination. We are of the opinion that it is. As said in Raymond v. Hill, 168 Cal. 473, 143 P. 743:

" * * * No person who has ever ridden in or driven an automobile can be unaware of one fact, and that is that pedestrians, and women particularly, are liable to sudden panic upon the unexpected approach of this terrifying machine. In the exercise of 'every reasonable precaution' which the law enjoins, it is well within the spirit of the law to say that the driver of an automobile, approaching pedestrians, and particularly women, must have his car under such control as that it may be promptly stopped. The sounding of the horn and the noise occasioned by the muffler cut-out are each and both well enough in their way, but they do not embrace and conclude all of the duties of the driver of the automobile."

In the present case the evidence is without conflict that Mrs. Briggs was proceeding along the sidewalk, in which position she had the right to believe she would be safe from the approach of automobiles, and that when she heard the horn and saw the automobile apparently coming toward her she became terrified and confused, and sought safety in the gateway of the lot. Lani, while testifying, admitted that he saw that she was confused, and it is manifest that he could have easily avoided any further danger by simply applying his brakes and stopping the car, because at that time he was 20 or more feet distant from her and was traveling less than 3 miles an hour. Therefore the fact that he did not stop justifies the conclusion reached by the jury that he did not exercise ordinary care. The facts of the present case differ materially from those of Depons v. Ariss, 182 Cal. 485, 188 P. 797, which has been cited by appellant, for in the latter case the deceased was in the street and negligently exposed himself to danger by stepping suddenly into the pathway of the approaching truck; and, unlike the present case, the driver there immediately upon seeing the danger shut off his engine, applied the brakes, and, as the opinion therein states, "used every proper care and precaution to avoid injuring" the deceased. The other case appellant cites (Wall v. Merkert, 166 App. Div. 608, 152 N. Y. S. 293) is no closer to the point at issue than is Depons v. Ariss, supra, for the reason that there, too, the injured party was in the street and stepped suddenly in front of the automobile, giving the driver thereof not the slightest opportunity to stop his machine or otherwise avert the collision.

[3] The second point urged as to the insufficiency of the evidence relates to the question of the legal liability of appellants Jess Mead, Incorporated, and Dendinger; it being contended that neither was sufficiently connected with the ownership of the automobile, or its operation by Lani, to hold either of them responsible for his acts. The evidence bearing upon the question of the ownership of the car was in substance as follows:

Jess Mead, Incorporated, was the sales agent in Fresno for the Chrysler and Maxwell automobiles; and it was also engaged in the business of selling used cars taken in as part payment for new ones. On July 6, 1925, it sold the Maxwell car involved here, under the usual form of a conditional sales contract, to one Wainscoat; title being reserved in Jess Mead, Incorporated, until all deferred payments were made.

Thereupon the sales contract was assigned to the Pacific Finance Corporation, under a form of assignment whereby Jess Mead, Incorporated, guaranteed to its assignee the—"fulfillment of said contract [by the purchaser] according to its terms, and the payment of all moneys due and to become due thereunder, and all costs, including reasonable attorney's fees incurred in collecting the money or attempting the collection thereof, or the enforcement of any right, under said contract, or under this guaranty, * * * and further agree that should the assignee take possession of said property, for failure of the purchaser to perform any of the conditions of said contract, to at once pay to the assignee, the balance owing by the purchaser under the terms of said contract, upon the conveyance of said property to —, or — agreed that the assignee may sell the said property without notice of any kind, for such price as it can secure for the same, and in the event that said property does not sell for enough to pay any deficiency. * * *"

The certificate issued by the state motor vehicle department designated the Finance Company as the "legal owner" and Wainscoat as "registered owner," and the so-called "pink" certificate issued by said department was delivered to and held by the Finance Company. Some time prior to November, 1925, Wainscoat defaulted in his payments and otherwise violated the conditions of the sales contract, so that early in November, 1925, the Finance Company, exercising its rights under the contract, repossessed the car, which was immediately redelivered, according to the testimony of its manager, to Jess Mead, Incorporated, at its lot on the corner of Inyo and Fulton streets. At the same time the Finance Company notified Jess Mead, Incorporated, in writing, that it had repossessed said car and delivered the same to the lot above mentioned, and that "repossession figures" would be furnished as soon as the same were received from San Francisco, and subsequently two demands in writing were made by the Finance Company upon Jess Mead, Incorporated, for the balance of the purchase price due under the sales contract. The car remained on said lot until the date of the accident, and thereafter until April, 1926, at which time Jess Mead Incorporated, secured a purchaser therefor, who was sent by the latter's office manager to the Finance Company to pay the balance due on the contract and obtain the "pink" certificate properly indorsed.

The evidence further shows that, upon being notified by the Finance Company of the repossession of said car and the delivery of the same to said lot, Jess Mead, Incorporated, in accordance with its usual custom, made out at its head office a "car receipt" record in duplicate, describing the car and setting forth further information with reference thereto, one of which was kept at its head office and the other sent to the office at the lot, and placed in a loose-leaf binder known as the "Used Car Book," by Fred Deutch, the manager of said lot. This book constituted the sole record of used cars placed on said lot by Jess Mead, Incorporated, and it included also the records of other used cars delivered to Deutch by other parties for the purpose of sale. Said book was produced in court by Deutch, but it appears that the record pertaining to the car involved in this accident was missing therefrom. Deutch stated that he had not removed it, nor did he know what had become of it; that he discovered only the day before he testified that it had been extracted from the book. The records mentioned consisted of printed forms, with appropriated spaces for filling in the necessary data, and were entitled, "Car Receipt Records, Jess Mead, Inc., Fresno."

Regarding the legal relationship of the parties charged with responsibility for the accident the evidence was as follows:

Some time in 1924 Dendinger applied to Jess Mead for a position to sell its used cars, and was informed that Jess Mead, Incorporated, maintained no separate used car salesrooms, but Mead told Dendinger he would see what could be done. A few days later Mead phoned Dendinger that he had rented the Black building in Fresno as a salesroom for used cars, and the next day Dendinger was given employment. The keys to the place were delivered to him, and his duties consisted of opening up the place in the morning and locking it up at night, and demonstrating and selling the used cars, and for his services he was paid a commission of 5 per cent. on whatever sales he made.

During this time Fred Deutch was operating the lot in question for the sale of used cars under the name of "C & D Sales Company," a sign bearing this inscription being maintained over the gateway to the lot, and about the 1st of July, 1925, Jess Mead, Incorporated, discontinued its salesrooms in the Black building and made arrangement with Deutch for the sale of its used cars at this lot. In furtherance of this arrangement, Jess Mead, Incorporated, assumed and afterwards paid the rental of the corner lot in question, and paid Deutch a salary of $200 a month and commission to handle the sale of its used cars. It also replaced the "C & D Sales Company" sign over the gateway with one reading: "Jess Mead, Incorporated, Used Car Lot. Fred Deutch, Manager." All expenses for repairs to the cars were paid, and all gasoline and oil consumed in the demonstration thereof were furnished, by Jess Mead, Incorporated. Additional ground space adjacent to the corner lot was rented independently by Deutch and operated by him for the sale of used cars placed with him by other parties, and with which Jess Mead, Incorporated, had nothing to do. When the salesrooms in the Black building were discontinued, Dendinger was informed of the arrangement with Deutch, and was told to apply to Deutch for further employment, which he did, and was hired under the same conditions as prevailed at the Black building. He was given the keys to the lot, and was obliged to close it at night, by placing and locking a chain across the gateway, and open up in the morning. It was his duty, also, to demonstrate and sell the used cars, and in doing so he was permitted and expected to let the prospective buyers drive the cars. For the services thus rendered he was paid the same compensation as before, a commission of 5 per cent. on all sales made by him, and he was allowed, also, to demonstrate and sell other used cars which Deutch handled for other parties.

The effect of the foregoing evidence is that, when Wainscoat violated his contract of purchase, the automobile in question was seized by the Finance Company as legal owner thereof, and that thereupon, exercising its rights under the contract of assignment, it turned the same over to Jess Mead, Incorporated, and served the latter with notice to pay the balance due on the contract. Jess Mead, Incorporated, therefore, to all intents and purposes succeeded to all of the rights and liabilities of Wainscoat as equitable owner of said automobile, and its status remained such until it finally effected a sale of the automobile in April, 1926. In the meantime, being in possession of the automobile, it placed the same on sale at its lot, with its used car sales manager, Deutch, who was given full authority to allow demonstrations to be made thereof for the purposes of sale, and while the automobile was being demonstrated under those conditions it was negligently operated, and became the direct cause of the accident which resulted in the death of Mrs. Briggs. Therefore, under such circumstances, we are of the opinion that the jury was warranted in finding that Jess Mead, Incorporated, was liable jointly for the accident with Dendinger, who was in direct charge of the automobile at the time it was negligently driven. In its facts the present case is almost identical with Wooding v. Thom, 148 App. Div. 21, 132 N. Y. S. 50, which was cited approvingly in Easton v. United Trade School Con. Co., 173 Cal. 201, 159 P. 597, L. R. A. 1917A, 394, and in our opinion is subject to the reasoning set forth therein, and must be controlled by the legal principles there stated.

In support of its contention that Jess Mead, Incorporated, was not liable, appellants rely mainly upon the case of Barton v. Studebaker Corporation, 46 Cal. App. 707, 189 P. 1025; but we think that case is to be differentiated from the one before us upon the following grounds: There a salesman named Owens, whose business was merely that of seeking and finding and procuring purchasers for said corporation, was driving a prospective buyer named Mrs. Barton to the salesrooms of said corporation for the purpose of allowing her to examine the cars on display there, and while on the way there collided with another automobile, and Mrs. Barton was injured. The automobile which Owens was driving at the time was his property, which he maintained and operated at his own expense; and regarding the nature of his employment the evidence shows that he was at liberty to go and come where and when he pleased, and to exercise his own judgment as to the parties with whom he dealt and the manner and means to be employed in the accomplishment of his work. Here Dendinger had the keys to the sales lot and apparently had regular hours of employment, for he was "supposed to" and did open the place of business at 8 o'clock in the morning and closed it at 6 o'clock at night; and it was his duty, also, in addition to that of soliciting business, to demonstrate to prospective buyers the various cars owned by Jess Mead, Incorporated, and at the time the accident occurred he was actually engaged in the pursuit of those duties, and the car of which he then had control belonged to and was being maintained by Jess Mead, Incorporated. Therefore, in our opinion, his status did not fall within the class of an independent contractor (Curran v. Anthony, 77 Cal. App. 462, 247 P. 236).

[4] Appellants assign as error the rulings of the trial court, made over appellants' objection, allowing Dendinger to testify that he was "employed" by Jess Mead, Incorporated, and in permitting Deutch to testify that he was "handling" the Maxwell car in question for Jess Mead, Incorporated, citing Winslow v. Glendale Light & Power Co., 164 Cal. 688, 130 P. 427. The case mentioned holds in effect that, when the question of employment is the issue in the case, a witness should not be permitted to testify to his conclusion that he "was working for" the defendant, but that his testimony should be limited "to a statement of the person by whom he was employed, the nature, terms, and surrounding circumstances of his employment," which was substantially all that Dendinger testified to here, his preliminary answer, to the effect that he was "employed" by Jess Mead, Incorporated, being followed and supported by much more testimony showing the nature, terms and surrounding circumstances of such employment, and as to Deutch's testimony, his preliminary statement that he was "handling" the Maxwell car for Jess Mead, Incorporated, was also followed and supported by much more testimony, showing how, when, where, and under what circumstances said car was delivered to him, and as to the facts surrounding his employment and the nature thereof. Therefore, aside from any conclusions of the witnesses, the evidence in the present case is sufficient to establish the facts that Dendinger was employed by, and that Deutch was handling the automobile for, Jess Mead, Incorporated. That being so, there is no ground for reversal, even though it be assumed that the two preliminary statements of the witnesses to which appellants object were erroneously admitted. Winslow v. Glendale Light & Power Co., supra.

[5, 6] Nor do we find any merit in appellants' objections to the instructions. In two or three of them, wherein the court stated to the jury the affirmative allegations of the answers regarding contributory negligence, the article "the" was used, instead of the article "a," before the words "proximate cause"; but elsewhere in the court's charge the jury was fully and correctly instructed upon the doctrine of proximate cause in connection with contributory negligence, and therefore the error complained of, if any, was not prejudicial. Squier v. Davis Standard Bread Co., 181 Cal. 533, 185 P. 391.

The several instructions bearing upon the matter of fright were doubtless founded upon the law as declared in the case of Raymond v. Hill, supra, and bearing in mind that the negligence here did not consist in sounding the horn, but in negligently operating the automobile after the horn was sounded, we are convinced that the instructions complained of correctly stated the legal principles pertaining to the particular facts of this case. And regarding those instructions which appellants object to upon the ground that they omitted the element of proximate cause, it is sufficient to say that elsewhere the jury was fully and fairly instructed upon that branch of the case, and—

"No citation of authority is needed to the point that these instructions must be read as a whole and that each instruction need not be complete in itself. Thus, where the expression 'through the negligence of the defendants' is used, it is not necessary to repeat in every paragraph of the instructions that such negligence must be 'the proximate cause of the injury sustained.'" Aubel v. Sosso, 72 Cal. App. 57, 236 P. 319.

The remaining assignments of error are not sufficiently important to require discussion. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

HANSEN v. CITY OF SANTA ROSA.★
(Civ. 3430.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 31, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 29, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 29, 1928.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨293(2)—Jurisdiction over street improvement proceedings is acquired by resolution of intention, and is limited to improvements described therein.

In all street proceedings under Street Improvement Act, jurisdiction is acquired by resolution of intention and only to make such improvements as are described therein, and other work not described cannot be lawfully performed.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨304(2)—Portions of work already constructed to official line and grade may be excepted from street improvements (Street Improvement Act 1911, § 3; St. 1885, p. 147, § 7, subd. 13).

Under Street Improvement Act 1911, § 3 (St. 1911, p. 730), and St. 1885, p. 147, § 7, subd. 13, exception from all work described in street improvement of such portions as are already constructed to official line and grade may lawfully be made.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨304(4)—Resolution for street improvement covering two blocks, excepting portions already constructed to official line and grade, held not uncertain as to work to be done and excepted.

Resolution of intention to order street improvement, describing property as covering two blocks and excepting from described work all portions already constructed to official line and grade, held not uncertain as to work to be done or that to be excepted.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨304(2)—Work to be excepted from street improvement must be of same character as proposed and done to official line and grade.

Before any work can be excepted from street improvement, it must be of same character as that proposed, and must be done to official line and grade.

5. Municipal corporations ⇨303(2)—Resolution stating manner of performing street improvement, if to same effect as ordinance authorizing improvement, is sufficient.

Resolution reciting manner of performing street improvement is sufficient, if to same effect as things stated in ordinance providing for street improvement, though not reciting exact language.

6. Municipal corporations ⇨304(14)—Resolution for street improvement, reciting public interest requires day labor pursuant to ordinance, held sufficient compliance with ordinance reciting work may be more satisfactorily performed by day labor.

Resolution providing manner of performing street improvement, reciting that public interest and convenience requires work described to be done by day labor, and providing that work shall be done pursuant to provisions of ordinance, referred to by number, held sufficient compliance with ordinance reciting that work may be more satisfactorily performed by day labor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Henry D. Hansen against the City of Santa Rosa. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. W. Anderson and F. W. McConnell, both of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

J. P. Berry, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

HUGHES, Justice pro tem. This is an action to quiet title against a street assessment levied by the defendant. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Appellant's land is situated on Beaver street in the city of Santa Rosa. The street improvement to be made was on Beaver street, from the northerly property line of Howard street to the southerly property line of Spencer avenue. On August 21, 1923, respondent passed its resolution ordering the preparation of plans and specifications for the improvement of Beaver street. Pursuant thereto, specifications and a plan in detail of the work to be done were prepared. The specifications provided that the work to be done was the same as shown on the plan. On September 4, 1923, respondent passed its resolution adopting said plans and specifications, and on September 18, 1923, said respondent passed its resolution of intention. Notices of improvement, incorporating the resolution of intention, were posted, and on October 23, 1923, the respondent passed resolution No. 612, ordering the work described in the resolution, directing the clerk to post notice of said work, directing said clerk to publish a notice inviting sealed proposals or bids, and directing that such bids be delivered to the clerk on or before 8 p. m. on the 6th day of November, 1923. The clerk published said notice inviting sealed proposals, and on the 6th day of November, 1923, the city council of respondent opened and examined said proposals or bids for doing said work. Only one was received, and that was rejected, because it was not accompanied by a check for 10 per cent. of the amount of the bid, as required by the notice. Thereupon, on the 6th day of November, 1923, said council passed resolution No. 625, whereby said council rejected all proposals or bids, and further resolved:

"That the public interest and convenience require the work hereinabove described, and the council of the city of Santa Rosa hereby orders that the work and improvement hereinabove described be done and performed in the name of and by the city of Santa Rosa, pursuant to the provisions of Ordinance No. 395 of the said city of Santa Rosa."

Ordinance No. 395 was passed and adopted by the city council of the city of Santa Rosa on September 4, 1923, and was thereafter duly published. After the adoption of said resolution No. 625, the respondent city paved Beaver street from the southerly property line of Mason street to the southerly property line of Spencer avenue. Upon said work being done, the assessment was levied.

While the resolution of intention called for the improvement of two blocks on Beaver street, as a matter of fact only one block was improved; respondent city contending that the other block had already been improved in all respects under the requirements of said resolution of intention and plans and specifications.

Appellant contends that the judgment should be reversed for the following reasons:

(1) Respondent never acquired jurisdiction to do the work actually done, because the work which was done was less in extent by one full block, and hence substantially different than the improvement described in the plans and specifications, resolution of intention, and notice inviting sealed proposals or bids.

(2) Respondent never acquired jurisdiction to do the work under Ordinance No. 395, because the city council failed to comply with the provisions of section 2 of said ordinance, in the following particulars, to wit: (a) It failed to follow the provisions of the general laws of the state of California in conducting the proceedings up to and including the posting and publication of the notice inviting sealed proposals or bids, as therein provided; and (b) upon rejection of bids, and prior to the doing of the work, it failed to adopt a resolution "that in its opinion the work in question may be more satisfactorily performed by day labor, or the material or supplies purchased at a lower price in the open market."

[1] It is unquestionably the rule that, in all street proceedings under any street improvement act of this state, it is by the resolution of intention that jurisdiction is acquired, and only then to make such improvements as are described therein, and that other work not described therein cannot be lawfully performed. Kutchin v. Engelbret, 129 Cal. 635, 82 P. 214; Partridge v. Lucas, 99

Cal. 519, 33 P. 1082; Piedmont Paving Co. v. Allman, 136 Cal. 88, 68 P. 493; Stockton v. Whitmore, 50 Cal. 554.

The resolution of intention is as follows:

"Resolved, that it is the intention of the council of the city of Santa Rosa, to order the following work to be done and improvement to be made in said city, to wit:

"That the portion of Beaver street from the northerly property line of Howard street continuously to the southerly property line of Spencer avenue be improved as follows, to wit: By grading where necessary, by excavating or filling to the official or established grade, and by paving same with six (6) inches of water-bound macadam, and by constructing concrete curb and gutter combined on each side of street where not now constructed, and where and as specified in the said plan of said work, excepting, however, from all of the above-described work, such portions as are now constructed to the official line and grade. All the aforesaid work and improvement is to be done in accordance with the plans and specifications made therefor by the city engineer of said city of Santa Rosa, and adopted by resolution No. 598, adopting plans and specifications, passed and adopted by the council on the 4th day of September, 1923, which plans and specifications are now on file in the office of the city clerk of the said city of Santa Rosa, and are hereby referred to and made a part hereof.

"And it is further resolved that, where concrete curb and gutter combined has already been constructed on the street hereinabove described, and where such curb and gutter does not conform to the official grade heretofore established, and is shown on the plan for said work as concrete curb and gutter to be removed, same shall be removed and replaced on proper grade at the expense of the city of Santa Rosa; and said council hereby orders that the cost of such removal and replacement of concrete curb and gutter be paid out of the treasury of said city, and the superintendent of streets, in making up the assessment herein provided for the cost and expense of said work, shall first deduct from the whole cost and expense such part thereof as is hereby ordered to be paid out of the municipal treasury as aforesaid. * * * All the above-proposed work shall be done in pursuance of Ordinance 395, entitled: 'An ordinance to provide for work to be done in the city of Santa Rosa upon streets, avenues, lanes, alleys, courts, places and sidewalks within said city, when bids therefor are rejected by the city council, and providing for the apportionment, assessment and collection of the cost of such work.'"

[2] The improvements referred to and described cover two blocks; but it will be observed that there is excepted "from all of the above-described work such portions as are now constructed to the official line and grade." A like exception is set out in the resolution ordering the plans, adopting the same, ordering the work, and inviting sealed proposals. Such exceptions can be lawfully made. The statutes themselves provide for them. The Street Improvement Act of 1911, § 3 (Stats. 1911, p. 730). Likewise, similar provisions are to be found in the Vrooman Act (Stats. 1885, p. 147, § 7, subd. 13).

[3, 4] The resolution is not uncertain as to the work to be done or that to be excepted. Before any work can be excepted, it must, of course, be of the same character as that proposed, and must be "done to the official line and grade"; and such are the facts of this case. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Crist, 21 Cal. App. 1, 130 P. 435.

Assessments for street improvements in which the work has been similarly described have been often sustained by the courts. McDonald v. Conniff, 99 Cal. 386, 34 P. 71; Perrine v. Erzgraber, 2 Cal. 234, 36 P. 585; Williams v. Bergin, 116 Cal. 56, 47 P. 877; Powers v. Holmes, 55 Cal. App. 454, 203 P. 1023.

We therefore conclude that there is no variance between the work done and that described in the plans and specifications, resolution of intention, and notice inviting sealed proposals or bids.

We will next consider appellant's contention that respondent never acquired jurisdiction to do the work under Ordinance 395, because the city council failed to comply with the provisions of section 2 of said ordinance. Section 2 of said ordinance, in so far as it is pertinent to the subject under investigation, reads as follows:

"All proceedings for the doing of any of the work hereinabove specified in section 1 of this ordinance, up to and including the posting and publication of the notice inviting sealed proposals or bids for doing such work, shall be done under and pursuant to the provisions of the general laws of the state of California. * * * The city council may reject any and all bids presented for the doing of said work, and, after rejecting bids, may declare and determine, by a four-fifths vote of all of its members that, in its opinion, the work in question may be more satisfactorily performed by day labor or the materials or supplies purchased at a lower price in the open market, and after the adoption of a resolution to this effect, the council shall have the right and jurisdiction to have such work done and performed in the name of and by the city, and to pay therefor out of the proper funds of the city, and the city shall have a lien upon all property fronting upon said street or streets, sidewalk or alleys where the said work shall be done, and the same shall be apportioned and assessed as hereinafter provided."

After the rejection of bids, the board passed its resolution No. 625, which, in so far as it is applicable, provides as follows:

"And it is further resolved that the public interest and convenience require the work hereinabove described, and the council of the city of Santa Rosa hereby orders that the work and improvements herein described be done and performed in the name of and by the city of Santa Rosa, pursuant to the provisions of Ordinance No. 395 of said city of Santa Rosa."

This was done by a four-fifths vote, but exception is taken to the wording of the resolution, because it does not embrace the language used in section 2 of Ordinance 395. It is true that the language is not identical. In the ordinance it is expressed as follows:

"That in its opinion the work in question may be more satisfactorily performed by day labor or the materials or supplies purchased at a lower price in the open market and after the adoption of a resolution to this effect."

[5] The ordinance does not provide that such a resolution shall recite the exact language used, but it is sufficient if the resolution is to the effect of the things stated in the ordinance.

[6] The resolution states "that the public interest and convenience require the work hereinabove described be done by day labor," and this to our minds is, in substance and effect, the very thing required by the ordinance itself. Any other view, it seems to us, would be hypercritical.

In addition, the resolution is strengthened by reference to Ordinance 395, in that it provides that the work shall be done pursuant to its provisions. The language so used in the resolution, together with its reference to the ordinance, is sufficient.

It seems that there has been a compliance with all the statutory requirements.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF STOCKTON v. FRISBIE & LATTA et al. (Civ. 3496.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 27, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 24, 1928.

1. Municipal corporations ☞645—Failure of zoning ordinance to provide penalty for violation does not prevent its enforcement through appropriate civil remedy.

Fact that zoning ordinance does not declare violation of its terms shall constitute a crime, and does not provide any penalty for violation, does not render the ordinance illegal, or prevent its enforcement through an appropriate civil remedy.

2. Evidence ☞43(1)—Matters outside record are not subject of judicial notice.

Court cannot take notice of any matter outside the record.

3. Injunction ☞89—Zoning ordinance, which failed to provide penalty for violation, held enforceable by injunction in suit by city against persons violating ordinance (Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16; Const. art. 11, § 11).

Zoning ordinance adopted under Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16, approved by Legislature in St. 1923, p. 1321 et seq., which fails to provide penalty for violation of ordinance, held enforceable by injunction, under Const. art. 11, § 11, permitting city to enforce police regulations, in suit by city against persons using building in residence district for undertaking parlors; city having right to interfere in behalf of its citizens, irrespective of claim that it had no pecuniary interest.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨1017—Municipal corporation may in certain instances invoke appropriate civil remedy to coerce obedience to its police regulations (Const. art. 11, § 11).

Municipal corporation, county, or township may in certain instances by direct action on its part invoke appropriate civil remedy to coerce obedience to its ordinances, adopted in exercise of its police power, under Const. art. 11, § 11.

5. Injunction ⇨89—City may enforce police regulations by injunction, where personal welfare and property rights of large number of inhabitants would be detrimentally affected by violation of ordinance (Const. art. 11, § 11).

Where personal welfare and property rights of a large number of the inhabitants of a city or town will be detrimentally affected by violation of police or sanitary regulation, city may have writ of injunction to restrain the violation, or to cause the wrongful effect to be removed, whether ordinance provides other means of enforcement or not, under Const. art. 11, § 11, providing for city's enforcement of police regulations.

6. Municipal corporations ⇨601—Enactment of zoning ordinance is within city's police power.

Cities may, in exercise of police power, adopt and pass ordinances restricting certain districts exclusively to residential uses, and other districts to business and industrial uses.

7. Constitutional law ⇨48—Municipal corporations ⇨120—Statute or ordinance, which, if enforceable, will promote public welfare, should, if possible, be construed in harmony with constitutional requirements.

Where statute or ordinance under attack on constitutional grounds would, if enforceable, promote public welfare, court should interpret it in harmony with constitutional requirements, if possible.

8. Constitutional law ⇨63(2)—Municipal corporations ⇨601—Provision in zoning ordinance permitting erection of business buildings in residence district, if three-fourths of adjacent landowners consent and council so orders, after public hearing, held not void, as delegating legislative power (Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16).

Provision of zoning ordinance adopted under Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16, and approved under St. 1923, p. 1321 et seq., permitting issuance of permit for erection of business buildings in residence district, if three-fourths of adjacent landowners consent and city council shall so order, after public hearing, held not invalid, as delegating legislative power to property owners within residence district, since ordinance requires that ultimate decision, whether exception to operation of zoning ordinance shall be allowed, rests in council's discretion.

9. Municipal corporations ⇨591—City's reservation of discretionary power in dealing with police regulations does not deprive persons affected of constitutional guaranties.

City's reservation to itself of discretionary power in its governing boards in dealing with police regulations does not have effect of depriving persons affected thereby of guaranties of federal or state Constitution.

10. Municipal corporations ⇨122(2)—There is no presumption that discretion vested in city to make exceptions to operation of police ordinance will be arbitrarily exercised.

There is no presumption that power or discretion vested in board of city to make exceptions to police ordinance will be arbitrarily exercised, but in case such abuse is shown courts will interfere to protect persons discriminated against.

11. Municipal corporations ⇨111(4)—Provision in zoning ordinance, permitting erection of business establishments in residence district with consent of property owners and city council, if invalid, did not render entire ordinance void.

If section of zoning ordinance permitting erection of business buildings in residence district with consent of three-fourths of property owners and permission of city council was invalid, its invalidity did not render ordinance as a whole void, since section was separable and severable from prohibitory provisions of ordinance.

12. Statutes ⇨64(1)—Inclusion of subsidiary unconstitutional provision will not render entire act void, if different parts are severable and legislative purpose can be made effective.

If different parts of act are severable and independent of each other, and manifest purpose of Legislature can be made effective by upholding provisions within its constitutional power, the entire act will not be defeated by the inclusion of a subsidiary unconstitutional provision.

13. Municipal corporations ⇨601—Zoning ordinance, creating separate residence and business districts, held within city's authority under statute (Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16; St. 1917, p. 1419).

Ordinance providing for division of city into separate districts for residences and for business and industrial establishments, enacted under Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16, approved by Legislature in St. 1923, p. 1321 et seq., held not void for failure to conform to provision of St. 1917, p. 1419, authorizing legislative body of any city to divide it into districts, for purpose of regulating uses of real property therein.

14. Injunction $\Leftrightarrow$ 118(1)—City, suing to enjoin violation of zoning ordinance, was not required to plead compliance with jurisdictional prerequisites to adoption thereof, irregularities in passage of measure being matters of defense (Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16; St. 1917, p. 1419, § 4; Code Civ. Proc. § 459).

In city's suit to enjoin maintenance of undertaking establishment in residence district in violation of zoning ordinance passed under Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16, approved by Legislature in St. 1923, p. 1321 et seq., failure of complaint to affirmatively show that city commission took steps required by St. 1917, p. 1419, § 4, as jurisdictional prerequisites to adoption of zoning ordinance, held not to prevent recovery, where complaint stated substance of ordinance, time of its passage, and that it was duly passed, under Code Civ. Proc. § 459; irregularities in passage of ordinance constituting matters of defense.

15. Constitutional law $\Leftrightarrow$ 296(2)—Enforcement of zoning ordinance, creating residence and nonresidence districts, held not to deprive property owners in residence districts of their property without due process (Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16).

Enforcement of prohibitory provisions of zoning ordinance, passed under Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16, approved by St. 1923, p. 1321 et seq., creating residence and nonresidence districts, does not deprive owners of real property in residence districts of their property without due process.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by the City of Stockton against Frisbie & Latta, a copartnership, and others. From a judgment dismissing the action, after the sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. Le Roy Johnson, Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford, and A. P. Hayne, all of Stockton, for appellant.

Lafayette J. Smallpage, Gilbert L. Jones, and Charles H. Epperson, Jr., all of Stockton, for respondents.

HART, Acting P. J. The city council of the city of Stockton, operating as a municipal corporation under and by virtue of the authority of a freeholders' charter, adopted by the electors of said city at a special municipal election held on the 28th day of November, 1922, and approved by the Legislature at its session of 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 1321 et seq.), "duly adopted and passed," as the complaint alleges, "Ordinance No. 858, which went into full force and effect on December 13, 1923, whereby there was created in said city certain residence and certain nonresidence zones."

Among the specifically enumerated powers vested by said charter in the city of Stockton as a municipal corporation is the authority or power "to zone the city as relates to the use of property" (Charter, § 16, art. 3; Stats. 1923, p. 1334), and it was in pursuance of the power so vested in said city that the legislative body thereof passed the ordinance above named. The provisions of said ordinance are as follows:

"Section 1. The city of Stockton is hereby divided into zones or districts to be known respectively as nonresidence districts and residence districts, as follows:

"(A) Nonresidence zones or districts shall comprise:

"(1) All lands which at the time this ordinance goes into effect are used for any business or industry other than farming, truck gardening, growing of trees, shrubs, vines or plants, the raising of animals, professional or other customary home occupations conducted by a family within its residence, and the conduct of a boarding or lodging house not primarily for transient guests; and,

"(2) All lands located and fronting upon any section of any street which lies between the outer lines of two successive intersecting streets whether said streets cross the former street or not, and in which not less than one-half of the ground floor yardage on either side of said street is at said time devoted to business or industry or is manifestly intended to be so used.

"(B) Residence districts shall comprise areas not included in nonresidence districts.

"Section 2. Except as hereinafter provided no parcel of land lying in a residence district and not at said time devoted to any business or industry, other than those specified in section 1, shall hereafter be used therefor, and no permit shall be issued for the erection, alteration or conversion of any building for or to such use upon such parcel.

"Section 3. A permit may be issued for the erection in a residence district of a building for the purposes of any business or industry, or for the alteration or conversion of a building in such district for or to such purposes, provided that there be filed with the application for such permit written consents thereto signed and acknowledged by the owners or legal representatives of the owners of not less than three-fourths of all lands used for other than business or industrial purposes, which front on the same side of the street and which lie between the two intersecting streets nearest to and on either side of the land in question or within four hundred feet on either side thereof in case the nearest intersecting street is more than that distance therefrom, and also of all lands fronting upon the other side of the street and directly opposite said land, and of all lands immediately in the rear thereof; and provided further that the city council shall after public hearing so order.

"Section 4. The invalidity of any part of this ordinance shall not invalidate any other part thereof.

"Section 5. That all ordinances and parts of ordinances inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

"Section 6. This ordinance shall be in full force and effect thirty (30) days from and after its final passage and approval."

The complaint, among other averments, alleges:

"The said defendants are the owners of an interest in that certain property known as the 'Kilmer House,' located on lots 1, 3, and 5, block 130, east of Center street in the city of Stockton, county of San Joaquin, state of California. Said property is in a residential zone and has been used exclusively for residential purposes.

"The defendants Frisbie & Latta are now, and for a long time past have been, engaged in the undertaking business, and as an incident thereto have owned and maintained a funeral parlor, as well as hearses, caskets, and other property and apparatus necessary in the conduct of said business.

"Said defendants, without obtaining the permit required by Ordinance No. 858, have commenced and are continuing to convert the use of the building described above as the 'Kilmer House' from a residence to that of a funeral parlor, and in the furtherance of that purpose have moved funeral apparatus into said building, and have placed thereon a sign entitled 'Frisbie & Latta Funeral Home,' and, unless restrained by this court until the requisite permit is obtained, will continue to use said building in the undertaking business.

"Said defendants have never applied for the necessary permit to convert the above described property from a residential to a business use, nor have they obtained the written consents of the owners of not less than three-fourths of all lands used for other than business or industrial purposes, which front on the same side of the street and which lie between the two intersecting streets nearest to and on either side of the land in question, nor of the lands fronting upon the other side of the street directly opposite said land and of all lands immediately in the rear thereof, nor have they obtained from the city council, after a public hearing, a permit so to do.

"The defendants have commenced to maintain, and, unless enjoined by this court, will continue to maintain, the funeral business on the property above described, and in violation of the ordinance hereinabove referred to.

"The maintenance and operation of a business on the property hereinabove described constitutes a conversion of the use of said property from residential to business uses, and constitutes a violation of Ordinance No. 858 of the city of Stockton, since no permit as required by said ordinance has been obtained by the said defendants to so convert the use of said property."

The prayer is for an order temporarily restraining "the defendants, or either of them," from using the property described in the complaint for business purposes, and "after a hearing the said restraining order may be made perpetual," etc.

The ordinance involved herein and annexed to the complaint is thereby expressly made a part thereof. It should here be explained that there is a companion case to this case, entitled "Louis Sapiro and Flora Sapiro v.

Frisbie & Latta," etc., 270 P. 280, the defendants being the same as in the present case, and that the complaint in the Sapiro Case contains an averment, which is not in the complaint filed herein by the city, to the effect that, after the passage of Ordinance No. 858 (the ordinance in question), the city council passed an ordinance whereby section 3 of Ordinance No. 858 was amended, so that, in the place of providing, as in its original form it did provide, that "the city council shall, after public hearing, so order," provides "that such proposed erection, alteration, or conversion be approved by the city manager." By a written stipulation between counsel for the respective parties and filed with the records here of the two cases, this court is authorized to consider both cases as one; the points involved in both, with the exception of a few questions rather subsidiary to the principal points, being the same.

The defendants interposed a demurrer to the complaint upon both general and special grounds. Included in the special grounds of demurrer is this: (1) That the complaint fails to show that the plaintiff (city of Stockton) is authorized, in any wise or at all, to commence or maintain this action, and hence is without "legal capacity to sue herein." The demurrer was sustained, without leave to amend. From the judgment dismissing the action, after demurrer sustained, the plaintiff appeals.

The propositions submitted for solution by the present appeal, stating them in the order in which they are presented in the brief of defendants, are: (1) That, assuming that the ordinance in no particular or manner offends either the federal or state Constitution, injunction will not lie to prevent the commission of acts prohibited thereby. (2) That, likewise assuming, the city of Stockton is not entitled to invoke the remedy by injunction against the violation of its provisions. (3) That said ordinance is unconstitutional for these alleged reasons: (a) That the authority sought to be conferred by section 3 thereof upon the city council to issue a permit for the erection of a building within the limits of a residence district for the purposes of any business or industry, etc., upon the conditions specified therein involves the delegation of legislative powers; (b) that the ordinance violates the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution, "in that there is a taking of private property without due process of law or compensation therefor"; (c) that it involves "an unlawful exercise or the police power." (4) That the ordinance is invalid because it "was improperly passed, in that the council failed to follow the procedural requirements of the Enabling Act of 1917." Stats. 1917, p. 1419.

The briefs of counsel representing the respective parties are quite voluminous, and the points raised and discussed herein are pressed, pro and con, with vigor and obvious earnestness. We shall not attempt to follow strictly the ramifications of the arguments of counsel, but shall content ourselves with a statement of the reasons which have led us to the conclusion that the city of Stockton, as a municipal corporation, is legally authorized to maintain this action, that the ordinance in question in no manner or particular offends any provision either of the state or federal Constitution, and that the city council, in adopting and passing said ordinance, substantially, if not strictly, followed the procedure prescribed by the charter of the city of Stockton for the adoption or passage of city ordinances. Indeed, the reasons for supporting the conclusion herein arrived at upon all the major points presented have been so frequently explained or expounded by the cases that, in showing that neither the legal propriety of the city's position as plaintiff in the action nor the ordinance itself is obnoxious to the objections urged by the respondents against it, it will be sufficient to go no further herein than to refer to and adopt a few excerpts from the opinions in those cases.

It will be convenient to consider these two propositions together, to wit: (1) Whether injunction will lie to prevent the commission of acts in disobedience of the terms of the ordinance; (2) whether the city is legally eligible to maintain this action. The ordinance in controversy represents the exercise by the city of Stockton of the police power. The right to exercise this power by the cities and towns of the state is expressly granted by section 11 of article 11 of the Constitution. That section of our organic law reads:

"Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce, within its limits, all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws."

[1-3] The ordinance in controversy, as will be observed, itself does not declare that a violation of its terms shall constitute a crime, nor does it provide a penalty for such violation. This, however, does not render the ordinance an illegal enactment or unenforceable through the agency of an appropriate civil remedy. Matter of Ellsworth, 165 Cal. 677, 133 P. 272; see, also, C. & E. I. R. R. Co. v. Hines, 82 Ill. App. 488, and cases therein cited. But counsel for the respondents extrajudicially state in their brief that a building ordinance of the city of Stockton "provides a penalty for occupying, altering or constructing any business building without having first obtained a permit so to do," and that the penalty so prescribed applies to the ordinance in question. The complaint makes no reference to such an ordinance, and, of course, we cannot take notice of any matter dehors the record. We are not reluctant to say, however, that, even if the ordinance itself expressly prescribed a penalty for the violation of its terms, we would still be firmly of the conviction that thus there would not be afforded an adequate remedy at law to prevent the commission of acts prohibited thereby.

The obvious object of the ordinance is to promote and preserve the comforts of home life as against interference by the ceaseless humdrum, confusion, and other discomforting elements essentially characteristic of the business marts, as well as against the invasion of duly established residential districts by industrial enterprises which, although in themselves legitimate and necessary, would, from their very inherent nature, operate as a positive menace to the peace, comfort, and, in some instances, the health, of the inhabitants of such district, and also to the serious detriment of their property rights. It is perfectly clear that any remedy short of one having the force and effect practically of stalling a violation of the ordinance before the infliction of the mischief which it is its paramount purpose to prevent, or of forcing a removal of the cause of the damage after it has been done, would render the measure utterly impotent for the achievement of the ends of its adoption and passage.

To be compelled, in a case such as this, to rely for relief upon the uncertain results of the trial of a criminal case, with the usual delays occasioned by appeals, etc., would not, it is very certain, afford that speedy and adequate remedy which the nature and the object of the ordinance involved herein would, in justness, demand, in the case of a violation of its provisions. Furthermore, the imposition of a penalty upon a violator of an ordinance, even though it be by imprisonment (which could be under a municipal ordinance nothing higher than as for a misdemeanor), would not itself have the effect of removing the prohibited building or necessarily to stop the inhibited business. Village of Ashley v. Ashley Lumber Co., 40 N. D. 515, 169 N. W. 87, 91, 92. But this immediate discussion is academic rather than necessary to the decision of the point in hand, since the ordinance, so far as this record shows, has no provision prescribing a penalty for the violation of its terms. Yet, as has been shown, it is a valid ordinance, and it would certainly come as a shock, even to the commonest understanding, if it were necessary to concede that its purpose is not subject to coercive execution, if its mandates be violated, by or through some means afforded by our system of remedies and remedial rights.

But counsel for the respondents insist that the complaint fails in the statement of a case for the relief thereby demanded, because it contains no allegation that "the proposed business of defendants will be a nuisance, [or] that plaintiff has any property rights or interests which might be prejudiced by acts of the defendants, [or] that the alleged violation of the statute affects either civil rights or property interests of the people of Stockton at large." These propositions are not supported by the authorities. In 5 Pomeroy on Equity Jurisprudence (2d Ed.) § 1894, it is said:

"While the right of the government to obtain an injunction to restrain criminal acts is not confined strictly to cases of nuisance, it would seem that it should be limited to cases closely analogous. Such relief, if applied to criminal acts in general, would supersede the criminal law and deprive parties of the right to a jury trial. Where the property rights of many citizens are involved, it is proper for the government, on their behalf, to invoke the powers of equity; and it would seem that only in such a case should the jurisdiction be assumed."

In the case of In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 15 S. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092, it is said:

"Every government, intrusted by the very terms of its being, with powers and duties to be exercised and discharged for the general welfare, has a right to apply to its own courts for any proper assistance in the exercise of the one and the discharge of the other, and it is no sufficient answer to its appeal to one of those courts that it has no pecuniary interest in the matter. The obligations which it is under to promote the interest of all, and to prevent the wrongdoing of one resulting in injury to the general welfare, is often of itself sufficient to give it a standing in court."

"It is conceded, as indeed it must be, by the opponents of the ordinance in controversy here that it is within the police power, by zoning, to banish nuisances and 'near nuisances' from certain districts. It is disputed, however, that the police power may be extended by any zoning ordinance, comprehensive or otherwise, to the regulation and isolation of vocations, business enterprises, and residential uses which are not intrinsically obnoxious. A perusal of the decisions in California, which have upheld the prohibition and segregation of certain businesses by means of zoning, indicates that the court has not limited the power to zone to nuisances per se, and has held that certain business establishments, harmless in themselves, may become 'near nuisances' because of the character of the neighborhood in which they are operating. In Ex parte Quong Wo, 161 Cal. 220 [118 P. 714], the court justified the exclusion of a certain type of laundry from a residential district upon the theory that a laundry is 'of such a nature that it may be confined, in the lawful exercise of the police power within defined limits in a city.' This is tantamount to saying that whenever the recognized purposes for which the police power may be called into play are subserved, either by exclusion or segregation of any business, it may be thus regulated. This is but another way of saying that any zoning regulation is a valid exercise of the police power which is necessary to subserve the ends for which the police power exists, namely, the promotion of the public health, safety, morals, and general welfare. It will thus be seen that the police power as evidenced in zoning ordinances has a much wider scope than the mere suppression of the offensive uses of property (Des Moines v. Manhattan Oil Co., 193 Iowa, 1096, 23 A. L. R. 1322, 184 N. W. 823, 188 N. W. 921), and that it acts not only negatively, but constructively and affirmatively, for the promotion of the public welfare (Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S. 311, 51 L. Ed. 490, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289). See, also, Rose's U. S. Notes."

In Micks v. Mason, 145 Mich. 212, 108 N. W. 707, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653, 9 Ann. Cas. 291, et seq., the court said:

"Not in all cases has the right to abate been rested on the ground that a building not constructed in compliance with the ordinance is a nuisance per se, but in some it has been deemed sufficient to say that the building so erected was erected in defiance of law; but, whatever the reasoning adopted, the right has been affirmed."

This language is approved in Detroit v. Kunin, 181 Mich. 604, 148 N. W. 207.

In City of Aurora v. Burns, 319 Ill. 84, 95, 149 N. E. 784, 788, a case, precisely similar to the one before us, in which an injunction, sued for by the city, to prohibit a violation of a zoning ordinance, was sustained, the court said:

"Zoning necessarily involves a consideration of the community as a whole and a comprehensive view of its needs. An arbitrary creation of districts, without regard to existing conditions or future growth and development, is not a proper exercise of the police power and is not sustainable. No general zoning plan, however, can be inaugurated without incurring complaints of hardship in particular instances. But the individual whose use of his property may be restricted is not the only person to be considered. The great majority, whose enjoyment of their property rights requires the imposition of restrictions upon the uses to which private property may be put, must also be taken into consideration. The exclusion of places of business from residential districts is not a declaration that such places are nuisances, or that they are to be suppressed as such, but it is a part of the general plan by which the city's territory is allotted to different uses in order to prevent, or at least to reduce, the congestion, disorder, and dangers which often inhere in unregulated municipal development."

In addition to the foregoing authorities, attention may be called to the following cases, which discuss the principles involved in the present consideration and support the cases above cited: City Council of Baltimore v. Scott, 131 Md. 228, 101 A. 674; McMillan v. Live Stock Sanitary Board, 119 Miss. 500, 81 So. 169; Inhabitants of Skowhegan v. Heselton, 117 Me. 17, 102 A. 772; Board of Health of City of Grand Rapids v. Vink, 184 Mich. 688, 151 N. W. 672; Story on Equity Juris. §§ 863, 929, 948 and 956b.

[4, 5] By the above authorities it is thoroughly established that a municipal corporation or a county or a township may, in certain instances, by direct action on its part, invoke an appropriate civil remedy to coerce obedience to the mandates of its ordinances or regulations adopted in the exercise of the police power as expressly granted to it by the Constitution. Article 11, § 11, Const. And, it is worthy of note, that said provision of our organic law does not expressly limit such city, town, etc., to the adoption of any particular mode for enforcing such regulations. The language of the section in that particular is general. It says that any county, city, town or township may make local, police, sanitary and other regulations, and that such city or town may enforce the same, how or by what particular means the section does not declare. Thus it would seem that it is left for such corporation or town or county to determine for itself the particular mode for enforcing such regulations within its limits. Of course, the means of enforcement, whatever the nature thereof, must be reasonable, and should be suitable to the nature of the ordinance or the effect of the violation thereof upon the personal and the property rights of the inhabitants of such city or town. But it is too clear, both upon principle and the authorities, of which many are above named, to require further discussion, that where the personal welfare and the property rights of a large number of the inhabitants of a city or town would be detrimentally affected by a violation of a police or sanitary regulation, whether the ordinance provides other means for its enforcement or not, such city or town may itself appeal to a court of equity by means of the forceful and singularly effective writ of injunction (preventive, if the violation is merely threatened or attempted; mandatory, if the violation has already occurred) to restrain such violation or to cause the wrongful effect thereof to be removed.

[6] It cannot for a moment be doubted, in the face of the innumerable authorities, of which a few are above referred to, upholding zoning ordinances dealing with different specific subject-matters as representing the legitimate exercise of the police power of the state, where that attribute of sovereignty has been by the people through their Constitution imparted to cities, towns, and other local political subdivisions of the state, that, as an abstract proposition, such cities, towns, etc., may, by a resort to such power, adopt and pass ordinances restricting certain districts thereof exclusively to residential purposes or uses and other districts thereof to business and industrial uses only. The only valid objection that may be found and urged to such regulations would be as to the manner in which such power has therein been invoked or attempted to be invoked. And it is upon this theory, as is explained above, that the point first made by the defendants here as in impeachment of the constitutional validity of the local measure in question is founded; that is, the contention that by section 3 the city council has delegated, or attempted to delegate, to certain owners of the real property embraced within the residential district involved in this litigation a function purely legislative or which alone is a legislative attribute, in (as counsel assert) that thereby it is left to the discretion of such real property owners to determine definitely whether, in certain instances, exceptions may be recognized and allowed to the operation of the prohibitory terms of the measure, whereby business enterprises may be established and maintained within the limits of said district. It is further contended, as seen, that, if the hypothesis thus advanced be sound, then the whole ordinance, being "tarred with the same stick," is therefore absolutely void. These questions must be determined upon a construction of the language of the ordinance.

The real question thus propounded, stated in general terms, is whether it is within the constitutional competence of a city, through its governing or legislative board, and in the exercise of its police power, to leave to the exclusive determination of certain selected and designated real property owners the authority to compel other property owners in the same city to use their real property in a particular manner or for a particular purpose; or, stating the proposition in another form, whether the city council of a city may by ordinance, in the exercise of its power of police, confer upon certain owners of real property lying in a particular locality or district of the city the legal authority to deny, in effect, to other owners of real property lying in the same locality or district the right to devote such real property to such legitimate purposes or uses as may please them.

Counsel for the defendants cite a large number of cases which hold invalid zoning ordinances purporting to vest in the owners of certain quantities of the lands embraced within the boundaries of the district in the city constituting the zone the right to determine whether the operation of the prohibitory provisions of such ordinances may, in any given case, be suspended and so permit to be done that which is prohibited. The cases so cited are: Eubank v. City of Richmond, 226 U. S. 137, 33 S. Ct. 76, 57 L. Ed. 156, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1123, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 192; Levy v. Mravlag et al., 96 N. J. Law, 367, 115 A. 350; City of Utica v. Hanna, 202 App. Div. 610, 195 N. Y. S. 225; State ex rel. Nehrbass v. Harper, 162 Wis. 589, 156 N. W. 941; Wasilewski v. Biedrzycki, 180 Wis. 633, 192 N. borne, 149 Md. 349, 131 A. 801, 43 A. L. R. 819; Wertheimer v. Schwab, 124 Misc. Rep. 822, 210 N. Y. S. 312; Coon v. Board of Public Works, 7 Cal. App. 760, 95 P. 913; Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 354, 31 P. 245, 24 L. R. A. 195, 31 Am. St. Rep. 218; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 373, 6 S. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220.

On the other hand, the following cases sustaining the validity of ordinances whose provisions are substantially the same as those considered in the cases cited by the defendants, of which a few are named above, are cited by the plaintiff: Myers v. Fortunato, 12 Del. Ch. 374, 110 A. 847; City of Spokane v. Camp, 50 Wash. 554, 97 P. 770; City of Chicago v. Stratton, 162 Ill. 494, 44 N. E. 853, 35 L. R. A. 84, 53 Am. St. Rep. 325; U. S. ex rel. Early v. Richards, 35 App. D. C. 540; Building Inspector of Lowell v. Stroklosea, 250 Mass. 52, 145 N. E. 262. Another case upon which the plaintiff relies is Cusack Co. v. City of Chicago, 242 U. S. 526, 37 S. Ct. 190, 61 L. Ed. 473, L. R. A. 1918A, 136, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 594.

[7] It would accomplish no useful purpose to review in detail herein the above cases. It is enough to say generally that many of those cases involve ordinances establishing zoning restrictions or regulations and which provided that their prohibitory provisions could be modified where the mere consents of the owners of designated quantities of the lands situated within the district are obtained. And it may be added that it is held in those cases (cited by the defendants) that the vesting in certain owners of real property embraced within the districts or zones to which the regulations applied the right and the discretion of denying to other owners of like property situated in the same district to use their property for any legitimate purpose which they desired to use it not only involved an unauthorized delegation of legislative power, but that the effect of such discretion, when asserted, would be to deprive the latter of their property or property rights without due process of law. The reasoning in all the cases cited by defendants revolves around various considerations which support the conclusions arrived at. The conclusions arrived at in the cases cited by the plaintiff are directly adverse to those announced in the cases relied upon by the defendants here. The cases cited by the plaintiff hold that where, as in those instances, the operative effect of a law or city ordinance was not made to depend upon the vote or act of the people, and the law or ordinance in and of itself is complete, as it was held to be true in those cases, the fact that such law or ordinance "provides for the removal or modification of its prohibition by the act of those most affected thereby does not make it a delegation of legislative power." Myers v. Fortunato, supra. In that case the ordinance provided that no permit shall be granted for the erection or alteration of any building "intended for use as a public garage in the residential portion of the city of Wilmington, within 40 feet of the building line of any and all adjoining property owners, unless the written consent of all such adjoining owners has been filed with the building inspector."

The ordinance in the present case, however, goes much further than the ordinances considered in the cases cited by the attorneys for the respective parties herein. This statement is not approved by counsel for the defendants, their claim being that, when the written and acknowledged consents of the owners of the requisite amount of real property embraced within the zone have been filed with an application for a permit with the city council, there is then no other alternative left to that body but to grant the permit; that is to say, that, such consents having been duly filed according to the terms of the section, there is then no discretion vested in the city council by said section to reject the application or disallow the permit. Section 3 of the ordinance, it may be conceded, is not, in the respect here being considered, clearly expressed. If it be true that the section in the particular referred to is not free from ambiguity, yet it would not follow that its true meaning and intent may not be ascertained upon a fair consideration thereof by the light of established canons of construction. Where it is obvious from the face of the statute or an ordinance, under attack on constitutional grounds, that it would, if enforceable and when enforced, promote and conserve the welfare of the people, or that portion thereof to be affected thereby, the courts, in construing the same, where construction is necessary to ascertain its designed intent as to a particular vital provision thereof, must give to the language of the measure, if rationally it can be done within the general purport and the spirit thereof, such an interpretation as will make it harmonize with the mandates of our Constitutions and with the fundamental guarantees which those great primary laws of the land vouchsafe to the people. And, in approaching such an investigation, in such a case, the courts must do so in a spirit of friendliness, rather than of antagonism, toward the statute or ordinance, and upon the assumption that the statute or ordinance was enacted or passed in good faith. By the light of these and other principles whereby courts are governed in the construction of statutes, municipal ordinances, or other writings, we will proceed to consider and determine the question whether section 3 of the ordinance is unconstitutional, and, if so, whether the entire ordinance is by reason thereof rendered invalid.

[8-10] It seems plain to us, after a careful examination of the language of section 3 of the measure, that the intention was thereby to vest the council with the power or discretion of determining, upon the application for a permit, and the written consent of the owners of the indicated quantities of the real property in a residence district, whether such permit shall or shall not be granted or issued. In support of this conclusion, we first emphasize the proposition that the application for the permit must be made to the city council, and by that body the permit must, if at all, be issued. Again, we note the fact that the language of section 3 is that a permit "may" be issued, etc., thus indicating that the intention was to vest in the council a discretion in disposing of the application, exercisable either favorably or unfavorably to the application, according to the course which that body may deem to be the proper one under all the circumstances. That the verb "may," as so employed, was purposely used in its permissive or natural sense, cannot for a moment be doubted, when we keep in mind the grave consequences which might follow the granting of a permit in particular cases, and the further consideration that some of the owners of real property in the district might not themselves reside therein, and who themselves might own sufficient of such real property to lay the foundation for the issuance of a permit, and who might be governed, in consenting to the permit, more by motives of self-aggrandizement than by seeing the district maintained according to the prime purpose of its segregation from those districts allotted by the ordinance to the prosecution of the business and industrial activities of the city. Lastly, as seen, section 3 in effect provides for a public hearing of the application. This can only mean, if an absurd view of that provision is not to be indulged (and, of course, it is not), that the council must conduct a public hearing, and that interested parties may thereat appear before that body and advocate or oppose the issuance of the permit. If this be not a correct view of that provision, or not the meaning or intent thereof, then why a public hearing, or any hearing at all? And what is a hearing, in a juridical sense, but the taking of testimony, or the reception of other evidence, or the presentation of arguments upon the issue to be decided by the tribunal vested by law with the power or jurisdiction to decide it one way or the other?

We do not think that it would be a far-fetched construction of section 3 to hold that the hearing provided for thereby was not intended to be anything more than merely of an advisory nature. In other words, it would be no overdrawn construction of that section to hold that the city council would not be bound by any showing made at the hearing, but would still have the discretion of determining, upon its own independent judgment, based upon its own knowledge of the general situation, whether the application for the permit should or should not be granted. But, whether the last stated proposition does or does not involve the true construction, it is, at any rate, perfectly clear from the language of section 3 that the intention was that the ultimate decision of the question whether an exception to the operation of the prohibitory provisions of the ordinance should be allowed should rest in the discretion of the council, and that, therefore, said section or the ordinance is not justly subject to the criticism that it involves a delegation of legislative power to the owners of property lying within the residence districts. And it may pertinently be added here that it has been uniformly declared by the cases that the reservation to itself of such discretionary power by the governing boards of municipal corporations in dealing with police regulations of the same general nature as those with which we are here concerned does not have the effect of depriving the persons affected thereby of any of the guaranties either of the federal or state Constitutions. See Ex parte Fiske, 72 Cal. 125, 13 P. 310; Robinson v. Otis, 30 Cal. App. 769, 159 P. 441; Wilson v. Eureka City, 173 U. S. 32, 19 S. Ct. 317, 43 L. Ed. 603; Gorieb v. Fox, 274 U. S. 603, 47 S. Ct. 675, 71 L. Ed. 1228, 53 A. L. R. 1210. Those cases further well say that there is no presumption that the power or discretion vested in a city administrative board to make exceptions to an ordinance such as we have here will be arbitrarily exercised, but if in any case it is so exercised, and it is sufficiently so made to appear, the courts will not hesitate to extend their protective aid to the parties so discriminated against.

[11, 12] But, if it were necessary to concede that the foregoing construction of section 3 is unsound, there is yet another consideration in connection with the present inquiry which would remove the principal ground of objection to the measure. It is this: That section 3 is obviously separable and severable from the prohibitory provisions of the ordinance, and may be taken therefrom without impairing the force of the latter provisions. In other words, the prohibitory provisions of the ordinance are not dependent for their validity on section 3, and that section may therefore be eliminated from the measure entirely and wholly disregarded, without disturbing in the remotest degree or at all the legal integrity of the provisions of the ordinance establishing residence districts and prohibiting the introduction and establishment therein of business or industrial enterprises. The settled rule as to this proposition is stated as follows in 5 California Jurisprudence, at pages 645 and 646, and as so stated is supported by the cases named in the footnotes of the text:

"The question as to whether portions of a statute which are constitutional may be upheld, while other separable portions are eliminated as unconstitutional, is primarily one of intention, as shown by the general scope and purposes of the law. If the general scope of an act is within the power of the Legislature, the act is not to be declared void by reason of a subsubsidiary provision which is beyond its power. If the different parts of the statute are severable and independent of each other, and if the manifest purpose of the Legislature can be carried into effect by upholding and enforcing those provisions within its constitutional power, that purpose will not be defeated by the inclusion of an unconstitutional provision subsidiary in its nature. It is likewise settled that, if a provision which is not obnoxious to the Constitution is found even in the same section with another which is repugnant thereto, the one in itself valid and complete must be sustained, unless the two are so united as that it must be presumed that the Legislature would not have adopted the one without the other."

It is plainly manifest that the provisions of section 3 were not the dominating considerations influencing the adoption and passage of the ordinance. The prime and the important purpose of the ordinance was and is to exclude from residence districts business and industrial enterprises and their offensiveness to home life. Thus viewing section 3, the situation would be, if said section were void, as counsel for the defendants contend, that under no circumstances could a business of any kind or character be maintained in residence districts, and hence, borrowing a word or two from Hamlet, the defendants find themselves "hoisted by their own petard."

[13, 14] The objection that the ordinance in question does not conform to the terms or provisions of St. 1917, p. 1419, authorizing the legislative body of any city or town in the state to create or divide such city or town into districts for the purpose of regulating the uses of real property therein, is devoid of merit. Said statute authorizes the city council or town trustees to create such districts by ordinance, and we perceive nothing in the ordinance here which varies from the requirements of the statute. It is true, as one of the grounds of the demurrer asserts, that it is not made affirmatively to appear by the complaint that either the city planning commission, if there be such a body in the city of Stockton, or, if there be no such commission, the city council, took the steps prescribed and required by section 4 of the act of 1917, supra, as a jurisdictional prerequisite to the exercise by said council of the authority to adopt and pass ordinances creating districts in cities or towns as the bases or for the purpose of regulating the use of the real property situated therein. The prerequisites referred to are not prescribed by the charter of the city of Stockton. It was not, however, necessary in any event to plead those matters specially. Code Civ. Proc. § 459. That section provides that, in pleading "an ordinance of a county or municipal corporation, or a right derived therefrom, it is sufficient to refer to such * * * ordinance by its title and the day of its passage." The complaint, in general terms, states the substance of the vital provisions of the ordinance, which sufficiently indicate the title, states the time of its passage, and further alleges that the measure was duly passed by the city council. Furthermore, the full text of the ordinance is annexed to the complaint, and, as before stated, by it expressly made a part thereof. Any irregularities in the passage of the measure, sufficient to invalidate it, constitute matters of defense.

[15] The objection that the effect of the enforcement of the prohibitory provisions of the ordinance would be to deprive the owners of real property in the residence districts of their property without due process of law has already virtually been disposed of in contravention of such objection. There is, therefore, no necessity for any further consideration herein of that point.

As will be seen, we have not attempted to review herein many of the cases cited on both sides of the controversy. We have, however, examined all the cases cited by respective counsel. None has led us to the conclusion that any substantial objection to the validity of the ordinance exists.

The judgment is reversed.

SAPIRO et ux. v. FRISBIE et al.*
(Civ. 3497.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 27, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 24, 1928.

1. Injunction $\S$ 89—Property owners in residence district held entitled to restrain defendants' maintenance therein of undertaking establishment in violation of zoning ordinance, which failed to provide penalty for violation (Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16).

Property owners in residence district held entitled to restrain defendants from maintaining funeral and undertaking establishment in district, in violation of zoning ordinance passed under Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16, approved by St. 1923, p. 1321 et seq., where no penalty was provided for violation of ordinance.

2. Injunction $\S$ 89—Injunction against person threatening violation of statute or ordinance runs against commission of acts prohibited by measure, not against mere violation of law.

Where statute or ordinance imposes penalty for violation of its provisions, injunctive relief against persons threatening to violate statute runs against the commission of the acts prohibited, not against the mere violation of the law.

3. Municipal corporations $\S$ 645—Violation of ordinance giving right to class of persons for their special protection creates liability in their favor, enforceable by civil action against transgressor.

Where right is given by statute or ordinance to particular class of persons for their special protection, and not merely for the protection of the public at large, liability is created in favor of such particular class, as against any person violating such right, which liability may be enforced by means of appropriate civil remedy.

4. Municipal corporations $\S$ 114—Ordinance stands in original form, where purported amendment thereof is unconstitutional.

If purported amendment to ordinance is void, as constituting attempt to delegate legislative power, provision of ordinance attempted to be amended remains as it was framed in the first instance.

5. Statutes $\S$ 168—Unconstitutional provision in subsequent statute cannot effect repeal by implication.

Repeal by implication cannot result from provision in subsequent statute, where that provision is itself devoid of constitutional force.

6. Injunction $\S$ 197—Property owners in residence district held entitled to recover damages in injunction suit against defendants, maintaining undertaking establishment in district in violation of zoning ordinance (Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16).

Property owners in residence district held entitled to recover damages from persons erecting undertaking establishment in district, in violation of zoning ordinance enacted pursuant to Stockton City Charter, art. 3, § 16, approved by St. 1923, p. 1321 et seq., in connection with relief by injunction, under Civ. Code, § 3523; right of action being based on wrong following from defendant's breach of statutory duty owing to plaintiffs as members of class of persons for whose protection the ordinance was designed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by Louis Sapiro and wife against G. A. Frisbie and E. V. Latta, individually and as partners doing business under the name of Frisbie & Latta. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

J. Le Roy Johnson, Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford, and A. P. Hayne, all of Stockton, for appellants.

Lafayette J. Smallpage, Gilbert L. Jones, and Charles H. Epperson, Jr., all of Stockton, for respondents.

HART, Acting P. J. This is the "companion" case to City of Stockton v. Frisbie & Latta et al. (Civil No. 3496; Sac. No. 4087, 270 P. 270), to which we have so referred in the opinion this day filed in the last-named case, and the appeal is from the judgment dismissing the action after demurrer sustained to the complaint without leave to amend. As stated in the opinion in Civil No. 3496, the two cases were submitted here for decision together, or upon the same arguments and briefs; the legal points raised and urged in both cases, with the exception of one, being the same. The exception referred to involves the question whether the plaintiffs are entitled to claim and obtain damages for the injury which, it is charged, has been caused to their property by reason of the maintenance of the business of the defendants in the residence zone of the city of Stockton, in which zone the said property and the said business are, respectively, situated and maintained. This, therefore, is the only proposition to be considered herein; the questions involving an attack upon the constitutionality of Ordinance No. 858 of the city of Stockton having been considered and disposed of against the contentions of the defendants by the opinion in Civil No. 3496, to which we will hereinafter refer as "the companion case."

The complaint in the present case is in two counts. In the first, Ordinance No. 858 is set out in hæc verba; it being alleged therein that said ordinance was adopted and passed by the city council on the 13th day of November, 1923. The complaint describes the several steps required to be taken by the charter of the city of Stockton to effect legally the passage and adoption of ordinances for said city. The complaint further alleges that, on the 17th day of November, 1924, the city council of said city, after pursuing the preliminary course for adopting and passing ordinances for the city of Stockton, as required by its charter, adopted and passed an ordinance (No.

914) whereby Ordinance No. 858 was amended, and thereby eliminated from section 3 the part thereof providing for a public hearing before the council on the application for a permit for the erection or alteration or conversion in a residence district of a building for the purposes of any business or industry, and in lieu thereof inserted a provision requiring such "proposed erection, alteration, or conversion be approved by the city manager." The complaint further states that the plaintiffs are the owners of a "residence house" on lot 4, block 135, east of Center street, fronting on Acacia street, in said residence district, and that they are also the owners of another "residence house" on lot 6, block 135, east of Center street, fronting on Acacia street; that they have resided, still do reside, and intend to continue to reside in the residence on said lot 6, block 135; that the "residence house" on lot 4 in said block, and of which they are the owners, they have, at all times mentioned in the complaint, rented to tenants, "who have been, and still are, living there"; that defendants, on or about the 24th day of June, 1927, without first obtaining a permit so to do, as required by the ordinances referred to, "commenced the conducting of an undertaking business on lots 1, 3, and 5, in block 130, east of Center street," and "are now conducting an undertaking business there"; that the lots upon which the defendants are conducting said undertaking business are directly opposite lots 4 and 6 of block 135, upon which the two "residence houses" of the plaintiffs are located and used as above indicated; that the defendants, from the time (1st of April, 1927) they commenced preparations for the conducting of an undertaking business on lots 1, 3 and 5, in block 130, to the time of the commencement of this action, have maintained and "still are" maintaining a large sign on the front of their property, "and fronting on Acacia street, advertising said undertaking business" on said property. The complaint proceeds:

"That in so conducting said business, said defendants are and will continue to house and embalm cadavers; to hold services over such dead bodies on the premises, attended by mourners for said deceased persons; to accompany such services with doleful music; to carry the coffins containing the bodies of such deceased persons out of the front door to hearses standing in the street, and to permit and cause the forming of funeral processions at their gates in said Acacia street, and that frequent autopsies will be held and performed upon the said dead bodies, and that large numbers of persons will constantly come and go to and from said establishment, for the purpose of viewing said bodies and for the purpose of attending such autopsies and frequent ceremonies; * * * that each and all of said incidents to the conducting of an undertaking business are and will be visible and audible to each and all of the inhabitants, occupants, and residents on both sides of said East Acacia street for a distance of one block both east and west from its intersection with San Joaquin street, including plaintiffs; * * * that, by reason thereof, plaintiffs are and will continue to be, as aforesaid, greatly disturbed and depressed in mind and in spirit, and the value of their said property as a residence will be totally destroyed, and, as a result of the facts herein stated, it will be, if said undertaking establishment continues, impossible for plaintiffs to continue to occupy their said property as a residence, all of which damage will be suffered by plaintiffs in addition to the damage suffered by other residents of the neighborhood and the public in general; * * * that plaintiffs, as aforesaid, are and will be especially and irreparably injured by the continuance of said undertaking establishment; that said undertaking establishment is in a residence district, as defined by the said ordinance of the city of Stockton."

It is further alleged that no application has ever been made by defendants for a permit to conduct said business in said district, and no permit ever granted to defendants by the city council for that purpose. The second count of the complaint by reference incorporates therein all the allegations of the first count, and then alleges that "by reason of the premises plaintiffs have been damaged in the sum of $6,500, by reason of the depreciation in value of their property; that during the pendency of this action, plaintiffs will suffer damage in the further sum of $50 for each month that said undertaking business is conducted as aforesaid." The prayer is for an injunction perpetually restraining defendants from maintaining and conducting any undertaking business on the premises described in the complaint or the premises upon which said business is being conducted, and for damages in the sum stated.

[1] The point first made is that the plaintiffs "are not entitled to the relief of injunction." This point is supported by the same argument as that by which the same point was sought to be sustained in "the companion case," to wit, that an injunction will not lie to restrain the violation of an ordinance or a statute, the infraction of which carries with it penal punishment; that, in such case, the law provides an adequate remedy in the penalty prescribed for the violation of the ordinance or statute. This proposition, as we have stated, was considered and held not to be maintainable, so far as the present case is concerned, by the opinion in "the companion case." A complete answer to the proposition, as it was given in the latter case, is that the ordinance involved in this controversy is not a "criminal" ordinance; that is to say, it contains no penal provision.

The further suggestion, in connection with this point, may be advanced, and that is that, if it is the assumption here that an ordinance or statute prohibiting the doing of certain acts, without prescribing a penalty for the violation of its provisions, unless the acts in and of themselves are criminal, becomes per se-a "criminal" ordinance or statute merely because such acts are prohibited, such assumption is fallacious. Crimes are either mala in se or mala prohibita, and, as is obvious, an act, which does not itself involve moral turpitude, or which is not in and of itself criminal, can become a crime—a misdemeanor—only where an ordinance or statute so denounces it. The ordinance in this case, as is pointed out in the opinion in the companion case, neither expressly nor by implication denounces as a crime disobedience to its mandates. But, as also pointed out in the opinion in the companion case, there are exceptional circumstances which may exist, in a case where a penalty is even prescribed for the violation of the provisions of an ordinance or a statute, which would justify the interposition of the remedial power of a court of equity to prevent the commission of the acts thereby prohibited; the ground of such interposition being, of course, that the remedy at law (the mere imposition of a penalty) would be inadequate.

This particular question, though, as we have stated, having been fully considered in the companion case, no further consideration and discussion thereof herein is really required or necessary; yet we may well take occasion to say that the cases cited by defendants upon the proposition are entirely different, so far as is concerned the situation as made by the facts, from the instant case, and are therefore not in point here. Those cases are: Herald v. Glendale Lodge No. 1289, B. P. O. E., 46 Cal. App. 325, 189 P. 329, the opinion therein having been written by former Supreme Court Justice Sloan when that learned jurist was a member of the Court of Appeal of the Second District; Dean v. Powell Undertaking Co., 55 Cal. App. 545, 203 P. 1015, opinion by Mr. Justice Sturtevant. It will be perceived, upon a perusal of those decisions, that neither contains any statement at variance with the conclusion at which we have arrived herein. Indeed, in the case first named, certain cases are approvingly cited which hold that, while a complaint "having for its sole purpose an injunction against crime or misdemeanor will not lie," yet "it is just as well settled that equity will interfere, if the alleged criminal acts go further and operate to the destruction or diminution of the value of property." Manderson v. Commercial Bank, 28 Pa. 379. In the case of Dean v. Powell, etc., supra, the plaintiff sued for an injunction to restrain the establishment in a residential district in the city of Fresno of an undertaking business. There was at the time no ordinance or any regulation in the city of Fresno excluding from such districts therein any business or industrial enterprise. The court, among other things, said:

"The appellant contends that it should not have been enjoined from conducting upon its own property a business in all respects lawful and in all respects operated with the highest degree of care and under the latest approved methods, solely and entirely because a few people living in the neighborhood believe that such business so conducted will hereafter cause them mental depression. In reply to this contention the respondents have stated they are entitled to the relief awarded and that their position is supported by authorities. They cite cases that arose in those jurisdictions where a statute or ordinance had been passed limiting the locations in which an undertaking establishment might be located. City of St. Paul v. Kessler, 146 Minn. 124, 178 N. W. 171; Meagher v. Kessler, 147 Minn. 182, 179 N. W. 732; Brown v. City of Los Angeles, 183 Cal. 783, 192 P. 716. As Fresno has not adopted an ordinance on that subject, the cases are not helpful."

[2] The judgment in that case granting the injunction was reversed upon the ground that there was no sufficient showing that the plaintiffs or their property would be damaged by reason of the maintenance of an undertaking parlor in the neighborhood where it was proposed to establish it. It must be kept in mind that, in those cases in which a statute or an ordinance makes it penal for any one to violate its provisions, and where injunctive relief is granted as against those who have violated or threaten to violate the statute or ordinance, the injunction runs against the commission of the acts prohibited by the measure and not against the mere violation of the law, although, in point of fact, it must be conceded, such is its effect.

[3] The right of the plaintiffs to claim and recover damages for any injuries which they may have sustained, and may sustain pending the final disposition of this litigation, by reason of any depreciation in the value of their real property caused by the acts with the commission of which the complaint charges the defendants, seems to us to be a proposition which is not subject to serious controversy. It is a well-established and commonly recognized general rule that, where a right is given by statute or municipal ordinance to a particular class of persons and for their special protection, and not merely for the protection of the public at large, a liability is thereby created in favor of any such particular class as against any person who violates such right, and as a result injures the person or property of the former, which liability may be enforced by means of a civil action or civil remedy appropriate to the circumstances peculiar to the particular case. This rule has been announced, approved, and applied in a number of cases. Many of these are listed in the footnotes to the case of Wolf v. Smith, 149 Ala. 457, 42 So. 824, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 338, and pages following. Excerpts from a few of those cases will readily suggest, if its mere statement be insufficient for that purpose, the good sense and justness of the rule.

In Tex. & Pac. Ry. Co. (plaintiff in error) v. Riggsby, 241 U. S. 39, 36 S. Ct. 482, 60 L. Ed. 874, in which an award of damages at nisi prius in favor of the latter (an employee of the plaintiff in error) for injuries received as the result of the violation by the railway company of the Federal Safety Appliance Act (45 USCA §§ 1-16; Comp. St. § 8605 et seq.), was sustained, the court, in its opinion, among other things, said:

"A disregard of the command of the statute is a wrongful act, and, where it results in damage to one of the class for whose especial benefit the statute was enacted, the right to recover the damages from the party in default is implied, according to a doctrine of the common law expressed in 1 Com. Dig. tit. 'Action upon Statute' (F), in these words: 'So, in every case, where a statute enacts, or prohibits a thing for the benefit of a person, he shall have a remedy upon the same statute for the thing enacted for his advantage, or for the recompense of a wrong done to him contrary to the said law.' Per Holt, C. J., Anon., 6 Mod. 26, 27. This is but an application of the maxim, 'Ubi jus ibi remedium.'"

In 1 Corpus Juris, p. 952, it is said, citing in the footnotes a large number of cases:

"It is a general rule that, wherever a statute imposes a duty for the benefit of particular individuals or classes of individuals, any one within the benefit of the statute who sustains an injury by reason of a breach thereof has a right of action against the person guilty of the breach. This rule applies not only to statutory duties of public officers, but also to duties imposed by statute upon any citizen, and the private right of action is not affected by the fact that the statute also makes such breach of duty a criminal offense, or the subject of a penalty, or by the fact that the statute which imposes the duty does not in terms prescribe any remedy for its enforcement or violation."

In Wolf v. Smith, supra, the plaintiff, while working in a mine, and actively engaged in the performance of the duties of his employment, received serious personal injuries, for which he sued for damages. His complaint was grounded upon a statute of the state of Alabama imposing upon the operator, agent or superintendent of each mine the duty of keeping at the mouth thereof, "or at any other such place about the mine as shall be designated by the chief mine inspector," a stretcher and certain other enumerated articles deemed by the Legislature to be necessary for use in the carrying away of any person injured at the mine. The court, reversing the judgment made and entered after demurrer sustained by the court below, said:

"Manifestly the statute imposes the duty of keeping the articles and emollients mentioned for the benefit of those persons in the employment of the owner or person operating the mine who may be injured at or in the mines while in the performance of their duties as such employees. It is not a common-law duty, but one newly created by statute, and which, but for the statute, might be omitted. No penalty is attached for a failure on the part of the person operating the mine to comply with the requirements of the statute; but it is a general and well-established rule that the wrongdoer is liable in damages to the party injured by the violation of a statutory duty. 1 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 679. Neither does the statute provide a remedy for a failure to comply with its terms; but this presents no obstacle to recovery in a proper case against the wrongdoer. The common law affords the remedy, and, if the plaintiff has a cause of action, the proper remedy has been resorted to in this instance."

The Wolf v. Smith Case, it is to be admitted, is, in the facts, different from the instant case, but the principle underlying it is the same. Its importance in the instant case is in the proposition that an action for damages will lie for injuries either to person or property as the direct result of the violation of a statutory right or duty.

The California cases of Figone v. Guisti, 43 Cal. App. 606, 185 P. 694 (opinion by Mr. Justice Langdon, now an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, then Presiding Justice of the Court of Appeal, First District), Siemers v. Eisen, 54 Cal. 418, and Wood v. Franks, 56 Cal. 217, recognize and approve the same doctrine. In Siemers v. Eisen the injuries complained of were directly caused by a failure of the defendant to comply with the terms of an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco requiring every person having or using any animal to securely fasten such animal before leaving it on the street, or where such animal was attached to a cart, dray, etc., to lock such vehicle before leaving the animal on the street.

As stated by counsel for the plaintiffs, it is true that many of the cases cited in the footnotes of 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 338, supra, relate to actions founded on the theory that the violation of a statute constitutes negligence per se, or as a matter of law. That, of course, strictly speaking, is no less true even as to the present case. The statement that the commission of a certain act constitutes negligence per se is merely the statement of a rule of evidence. It means that proof of the commission of acts banned by statute raises the presumption of negligence—in some jurisdictions that the commission of such acts is of and in itself negligence, or negligence per se, and conclusive, while in other jurisdictions it has been held to be merely some evidence of negligence. In California it has been held in a long line of decisions that the doing of an act prohibited by statute is negligence per se, or as a matter of law. But we are not particularly concerned here with those questions, or the cases discussing them, further than in so far as they consider and discuss, though in some incidentally only, yet nevertheless enlighteningly as to the present consideration, the principles upon which the instant case must be decided. This case does not rest upon negligence. Neither in point of fact nor of law was there negligence in the acts charged here against the defendants. The right of action in this case is based upon a wrong following from the breach of a statutory duty owing by all other persons to the plaintiffs as members of a class of persons for whose protection only the ordinance involved herein was and is designed. The following observations from Martin v. Herzog, 228 N. Y. 164, 168, 126 N. E. 814, 815, are quite pertinent to the present discussion:

"Whether the omission of an absolute duty, not willfully or heedlessly, but through unavoidable accident, is also to be characterized as negligence, is a question of nomenclature into which we need not enter, for it does not touch the case before us. There may be times, when, if jural niceties are to be preserved, the two wrongs, negligence and breach of statutory duty, must be kept distinct in speech and thought. Pollock, Torts (10th Ed.) p. 458; Clark & Linseil, Torts (6th Ed.) p. 493; Salmond, Jurisprudence (5th Ed.) pp. 351, 363; Texas & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Rigsby, supra, 241 U. S. 43, 36 S. Ct. 482, 60 L. Ed. 874; Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. U. S., 220 U. S. 559, 31 S. Ct. 612, 55 L. Ed. 582."

It will not be questioned that in California the rule above considered is applicable as well to city or county ordinances as to legislative enactments. 19 Cal. Jur. 632-634; Scragg v. Sallee, 24 Cal. App. 133, 144, 140 P. 706; Figure v. Guisti, supra. In Martin v. Herzog, supra, it is in effect said that any such distinction which might be attempted to be made, or where such distinction has been made in some jurisdictions, as between legislative acts and local ordinances, is illogical, to which statement we agree. "An ordinance, * * * like a statute," said the court in that case, "is a law within its sphere of operation, and so the distinction has not escaped criticism," citing other New York cases.

The proposition next to be considered in the present connection is: Was and is the ordinance in controversy designed to protect a particular class of persons, or the class to which the plaintiffs belong, or was its purpose for or is its necessary effect the protection of the public of the city of Stockton in general? We think that it is plainly apparent from the very nature of the ordinance that the class for whose immediate or direct protection the measure was designed consists entirely of owners of homes or other real property which must be used, if at all, for residence purposes in the residence zone or district. Owners of real property situated in the district are alone legally eligible to consent to the issuance of the permit mentioned in section 3. Such owners only may with legal force oppose or approve a proposition to establish and maintain a business or industrial enterprise within the limits of the district. Incidentally, or indirectly, it is true, the public in general may be benefited by the protection afforded by the ordinance to the owners of real property in a residence district, but it will not do to say that the general public as such, albeit such real property owners may be a part of such general public, will be protected thereby in the juridical signification of that term. Counsel for the defendants argue in their brief:

"If it was intended that this ordinance should create an obligation between the applicant and certain of his immediate neighbors, it is not probable that the city council would have permitted this obligation to be canceled by petition signed by other neighbors, strangers to both parties."

To which we, in the first place, answer that the fact that the consents prerequisite necessary to the issuance of a permit, if issued at all, to install a business in a residence district, can come only from the owners of real property in the district itself, supports rather than weakens the theory that such owners of such property constitute the class of persons, and the only class of persons, for whose special protection the ordinance was adopted. Secondly, it is to be observed, as we in effect suggested in the opinion in the companion case, that for the very reason, undoubtedly, that nonresident owners of real property in the district might grant their consent for the issuance of a permit for purely selfish purposes, or without regard to the better interests of resident owners of real property therein, the city council, in framing the ordinance, particularly section 3 thereof, was careful to reserve to itself the discretion of determining, after a public hearing of the application, or, if the amendment of section 3, as above indicated, is valid, in vesting the city manager with the same discretion, whether a permit should or should not be granted in any particular case.

Commenting on the cases cited by the plaintiffs, counsel for defendants say:

"All of the cases cited by appellants are cases in which the ordinance or statute enacted an obligation between one person and another person, or class of persons, as distinguished from the general public. For instance, there are many cases providing for adequate protection of railway crossings, elevator shafts, etc. These are provided for the benefit of those who expect to cross the railroad, and those who expect to be near the elevator shafts, and hardly for the public in general."

Many of the cases cited by the appellants, it is to be conceded, are interesting to the present consideration only in so far as that therein the principle governing cases of the character of the instant case is discussed and well expounded. This is true as to the "railway crossing and elevator shaft cases." We may remark, however, that the statutes considered in those cases prescribed regulations which were in the strictest sense for the benefit and protection of the general public. They were for the protection of any of the public at large that might find it necessary to cross railway tracks or use elevators. No one of the general public is excluded from the benefit of the protection afforded by those statutes. In the present case, as is obvious, no other persons than those owning real property in the residence district are given the protection afforded by the ordinance in question. Indeed, no one other than such owners of such property needs such protection. We thus refer to the cases mentioned by counsel for the defendants (the crossing and elevator cases) because they themselves stand as concrete illustrations of the distinction between statutes designed for the protection of the public at large or in general and statutes or ordinances intended for the protection of a particular class.

Concluding the present branch of the discussion, we emphasize the proposition that the right of the plaintiff herein to claim and recover damages for any damage they may have sustained or may sustain as a result of the acts of the defendants in doing that which the ordinance prohibits, proceeds, not from or upon the theory that the acts complained of constitute a common-law nuisance, but upon the theory that, the defendants having violated a right specially given to the plaintiffs by the law, and thus having caused damage to their real property, the latter are entitled to have redressed by way of compensatory relief the wrong so committed. It is true that the maintenance of certain businesses in a residential district contrary to the ordinance here is sometimes in the cases referred to as "near nuisances." This phrase is, perhaps, used as being the more apposite to describe a situation, such as is presented here, in which the theory is, not that the acts complained of constitute a common-law nuisance, but the wrongful invasion of a statutory right given to all of a certain class of persons, for which wrong each member of such class, sustaining damage to his property by reason of the commission of such wrong, is entitled to compensatory as well as such other relief as may be necessary to his full and uninterrupted enjoyment of such right. But, whatever may be in legal nomenclature a correct or the precise description of the wrong involved in the commission of acts prohibited by legislative measures of the nature of the one here, it is unquestionably true that, if the courts were required to hold that there is no civil remedy whereby compensatory relief for damage done to one's property as the result of such acts may be obtained, the reaffirmation by our Code (Civ. Code, § 3523) of the common-law and common-sense doctrine that "for every wrong there is a remedy" would involve an idle declaration at least in some instances of civil wrongs to redress which no remedy is specially provided.

[4, 5] As to Ordinance No. 914, purporting to amend section 3 of Ordinance No. 858, as above explained, this is to be said: That, assuming that the purported amendment is unconstitutional and void, for the asserted reason that thereby an attempt is made to delegate legislative power to the city manager, in that it vests or attempts to vest in him the sole authority to allow or disallow exceptions to the operation of the prohibitory provisions of the ordinance, the result which follows is that the part of section 3 thus futilely attempted to be amended, remains or stands as it was framed in the first instance. There is no provision in Ordinance 914 expressly repealing the provision in section 3 purporting to be amended. If anything at all, the repeal of the provision, as it was originally framed, would be by implication only. "No repeal by implication can result from a provision in a subsequent statute, when that provision is itself devoid of constitutional force." Endlich on Statutes, § 192; Matter of Application of Clary, 149 Cal. 732, 737, 87 P. 580; Ex parte Sohncke, 148 Cal. 262, 82 P. 956, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 813, 113 Am. St. Rep. 236, 7 Ann. Cas. 475; McAllister v. Hamlin, 83 Cal. 361, 365, 23 P. 357. But equally applicable to this case is what is said in the opinion in the companion case to the effect that, if section 3 of the ordinance is for any reason unconstitutional and void, the consequence is that there is no provision in the ordinance authorizing any exceptions to be made to the operation of the prohibitory provisions of the ordinance, or authorizing the establishment and maintenance in any residence district in the city of Stockton of any business or industrial enterprise.

[6] It follows, of course, from the conclusions at which we have herein arrived, that in any event—that is, whether section 3 be valid (no permit having been issued) or for any cause invalid—the defendants, in establishing, maintaining, and conducting an undertaking parlor in the residence district involved in the present controversy, thereby committed and are committing acts in direct defiance of the prohibitory provisions of the ordinance, and that if, as the complaint charges, the real property of the plaintiffs has, by reason of the commission of such acts, been damaged, or its value for residence purposes diminished, then they are entitled to the equitable relief herein prayed for and such compensatory relief by way of damages as the evidence may justly warrant.

The judgment is reversed.

NATIONAL STONE TILE CORPORATION et al. v. VOORHEIS et al. (Civ. 6423, S.
 F. 13216.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 4, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 4, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 1, 1928.

1. Corporations ⇨302—Secretary appointed by board of directors is entitled, after demand, to possession of corporation's books, records, and files.

Corporation's board of directors having reorganized and appointed a secretary, he, after demand, becomes entitled to possession of the corporation's books, records, and files, and continues to be so entitled till a legal demand be made on him by another, who has become his legal successor.

2. Corporations ⇨106—Corporation, authorized to sell stock for cash, can before payment repudiate sale made partly on time.

Corporation, authorized by commissioner of corporations only to sell stock for cash, having sold some partly on time, can before deferred payments are made repudiate, with tender of repayment.

3. Corporations ⇨106—Relief will be given corporation, basing its cause of action on repudiation, while executory, of sale of its stock, illegal because not for cash.

Courts will lend their aid to a cause of action based on plaintiff's repudiation, while still executory, of plaintiff's sale to defendant, partly on time, of shares of its stock, which by the permit of the commissioner of corporations it was authorized to sell only for cash.

4. Corporations ⇨106—Repudiation by corporation of sale of stock, illegal because not for cash, is valid, notwithstanding any illegality in holder's discharge at same time from his position of manager.

Corporation can seasonably repudiate sale of its stock, illegal because not for cash, but partly on time, though in connection with the sale the buyer is employed as manager, and in connection with the repudiation is discharged from such position; he having clear legal remedy for any illegality in the discharge.

5. Pleading ⇨8(22)—Allegations of payment to and by "the corporation" held pleader's conclusions.

Allegations of pleading that money was paid "to the corporation," without statement of payment to any specified agent, and that the money has been paid out "by the corporation," are pleader's conclusions.

6. Corporations ⇨197—Certificate of stock held properly denied recognition at stockholders' meeting, sale of stock having been illegal and repudiated.

Sale of corporation's stock, illegal because not for cash, having been repudiated by board of directors, with tender back of partial payment made, election officers, at meeting of stockholders, were within their rights in refusing to recognize the certificate of stock as representing any legally issued stock and entitled to vote.

7. Mandamus ⇨3(8).—Remedy at law for delivery by old officers to new officers of corporation's books, etc., is not afforded by statute for review of election (Civ. Code, § 315).

The remedy provided by Civ. Code, § 315, to review an election held by a corporation, not purporting to afford officers elected the relief asked by their petition for mandamus, delivery to them by the old officers of the books, records, and files of the corporation furnishes no ground for denying the petition, on the ground of plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law.

8. Mandamus ⇨129—Mandamus to compel old officers to deliver books, etc., to new officers, held to lie, though title be incidentally involved, and unlawful discharge from employment be pleaded.

Mandamus will lie to compel corporation's old officers to turn over its books, etc., to new officers, though petitioners seek to try title to property and office incidentally, and though respondents set up an unlawful discharge of one of them from his position of manager, for which he was employed, as the latter matter need not be determined in such proceeding, but is a matter for action for unlawful discharge.

Application by the National Stone Tile Corporation and others for mandamus to J. T. Voorheis and others. Writ granted.

Sullivan & Sullivan & Theo. J. Roche, and Corbet & Selby, all of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Bronson, Bronson & Slaven and A. L. Shannon, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. Mandamus. The plaintiff, through its alleged officers, is seeking by this proceeding to obtain possession of its books, records, and files, etc. Its pleading sets forth a double claim.

Its first claim arises by reason of the following matters: The petition alleges the due incorporation of the plaintiff; that it has five directors, giving their names; that on February 23, 1928, a meeting of the board of directors was duly had; that at said meeting W. P. Stanton was removed as president, and C. C. H. Thomas was appointed president of the corporation; that J. T. Voorheis was removed from the office of vice president, and that W. P. Thomas was appointed as vice president; that A. L. Shannon was removed from the office of secretary, and A. L. Whittle was appointed as secretary; that after said meeting of the board of directors the newly appointed officers duly demanded of the former officers the possession of the books, records, files, etc.; and that the respondents refused to deliver them. The foregoing allegations show a complete cause of action in favor of the petitioners and against the respondents as of the date of the demand, to wit, February 23, 1928. The respondents have not even offered any defense thereto.

The second theory on which the petitioners rely, and the answer made thereto, will be discussed as we proceed. This action was not commenced until March 30, 1928, a little over a month after the reorganization of the board of directors above referred to. In the meantime the annual meeting of stockholders was held. Growing out of the proceedings of that annual meeting, another element was injected into the controversy. That element arose as follows: On the 18th of June, 1924, the commissioner of corporations of the state of California authorized the plaintiff to issue 200 shares in addition to those already outstanding. By the terms of that permit the plaintiff was authorized to "sell and issue 200 shares of its capital stock at par for cash, lawful money of the United States, for the uses and purposes recited in its application." Thereafter, on May 15, 1925, the board of directors sold to J. T. Voorheis 97 shares, for $2,000 cash and his promissory note in the principal sum of $7,700, payable five years from date, bearing 6 per cent. interest. Said stock was represented by certificate No. 43. On the date the board of directors was reorganized, and immediately after the reorganization had taken place, a resolution was adopted and ordered spread on the minutes, by the terms of which resolution the board attempted to rescind its former resolution, authorizing the issuance of certificate No. 43, and returning to J. T. Voorheis the $2,000 which he had paid in. Thereafter he was tendered the $2,000, and demand was made on him to surrender certificate No. 43, but he refused to surrender it, and refused to accept the tender. The date of the annual meeting of stockholders, as fixed by the by-laws, would have fallen on February 24, 1928. By consent of all parties interested the meeting was, by unanimous consent, postponed from time to time, and was held on March 20, 1928. Each and all of the foregoing facts stand of record, or would stand of record on the books and papers of the plaintiff corporation, except in so far as any of them have been prevented by reason of the controversy between the stockholders.

At the stockholders' meeting, when J. T. Voorheis attempted to vote certificate No. 43 for 97 shares, the attempt was challenged, and the presiding officer ruled that the purported certificate No. 43 was a void transaction, and in law constituted no evidence of issued capital stock. Acting upon that ruling, certificate No. 43 was not recognized, and the said 97 shares were not counted. Omitting said 97 shares, E. J. Thomas, C. C. H. Thomas, W. P. Thomas, J. T. Voorheis, and W. P. Stanton were elected directors. Immediately thereafter the board was again organized as follows: President, E. J. Thomas; vice president, C. C. H. Thomas; secretary, A. L. Whittle; assistant secretary, W. P. Thomas; treasurer, A. L. Whittle. If the presiding officer had received certificate No. 43, the result of the election would have been that C. C. H. Thomas would have been defeated, and A. L. Shannon would have been elected in his place. If such had been the case, it will be conceded that the election of each of the corporate officers would have been otherwise. It is alleged by the respondents that in April, 1925, J. T. Voorheis was induced to resign a lucrative employment and to purchase the stock represented by certificate No. 43 on the terms hereinabove mentioned, and as a part of the arrangement he was to become manager of the plaintiff corporation at $400 per month. On May 15, 1925, that arrangement was slightly changed, so that his salary was fixed at $450 per month. The latter arrangement continued down to the 23d day of February, 1928, when he was discharged. Respondents allege that on February 24, 1928, J. T. Voorheis "paid to said corporation, in cash, the full par value of said 97 shares, which payment was thereupon duly and regularly received by said corporation, and duly and regularly converted and applied to its own use in the ordinary course of its business, and has been paid out, and the whole thereof, by said corporation upon current obligations of said corporation; that said payment by said respondent Voorheis, and said receipt thereof by said corporation as aforesaid, was in strict accordance with the valid, binding, and subsisting agreement between said corporation and said J. T. Voorheis, whereby said corporation agreed to and did sell to said J. T. Voorheis said 97 shares, and which said agreement was independent of and in addition to the said resolution of May 15, 1925," which resolution is attached to the pleading, and is the contract of purchase and employment hereinabove referred to.

[1] When the board of directors reorganized February 23, 1928, and appointed A. L. Whittle secretary, that individual, after demand made, became entitled to the possession of the books, records, files, etc., of the plaintiff corporation, and continued to be so entitled until a legal demand should be made on him by some other person who had become his legal successor. There is no claim that there were any changes prior to March 20, 1928. The facts before us do not show that any change occurred then or subsequently.

[2-5] The petitioners state the foregoing facts, and assert that the purported issue of the stock represented by certificate No. 43 was void, and that, in legal effect, it was no issue. The respondents' reply is that the contract was illegal, and the courts will not lend their aid to either party. That rule is well settled, and the exception is equally well settled. In 6 California Jurisprudence, p. 155, § 108, the exception is stated first as follows:

"While an illegal contract remains executory, relief should be awarded to one who repudiates it because of its illegality; yet where there has been no withdrawal, nor attempt to withdraw from the transaction until after it has become executed, the law accords no locus poenitentiae."

The text is supported by Johnston v. Russell, 37 Cal. 670, 676; Wise v. Rose, 110 Cal. 159, 162, 42 P. 569; Wassermann v. Sloss, 117 Cal. 425, 428, 49 P. 566, 38 L. R. A. 176, 59 Am. App. 63, 66, 140 P. 306. The law is the same in nearly every other jurisdiction. 10 C. J. 501. In such a case the plaintiff's cause of action does not rest on an affirmation of the contract but on a disaffirmance thereof. The party who has partly performed by paying a part of the purchase price may recover the payment. Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U. S. 49, 26 L. Ed. 347; Schmidt v. Stortz, 208 Mo. App. 439, 236 S. W. 694, 697. The party that has made a purported sale which is prohibited by the statute may disaffirm the sale and recover the property back, if the purported sale remains executory. Leadbetter v. Hawley, 59 Or. 422, 117 P. 505, 506. In doing what it did, the board was not making any claim under the contract, but was seeking to wipe out what would otherwise constitute a crime. To complete the transaction the plaintiff was bound to return the moneys which it had received. It offered to do so, but the holder would not accept the moneys.

The respondents say the holder was employed and that his discharge was unlawful. If so, the holder has a clear legal remedy. They say the holder paid the remaining $7,700 on February 24, 1928, "to the corporation." This is his conclusion. They do not allege that he paid the money to any specified agent, nor do they claim he holds a receipt from any specified agent. They allege that the money has been paid out "by the corporation." Same comment. Assuming, without deciding, that on February 23, 1928, or at any time before the annual election, the holder could have paid the $7,700 to the duly appointed officers of the corporation, and that in this manner he could have completely wiped out the purported executory contract, they do not make that showing.

[6] When, on March 20, 1928, the holder of the illegal and void certificate No. 43 attempted to vote it, we think the election officers were clearly within their rights in refusing to recognize it as representing any of the legally issued stock. It was the duty of the holder of that purported certificate, of every other stockholder, and of the election officials to obey the law. The facts were not in dispute, but were all of record on the books, presumably in front of all of the persons participating in the election. Any other action would be nullification. The election was regular in all respects. That being so, it is not disputed but what A. L. Whittle, as the newly appointed secretary, is entitled to the possession of the books, records, files, etc. From what we have said, it will be seen that none of the affirmative matter set up in the return constitutes a defense to the allegation contained in the petition.

[7, 8] The respondents interposed a motion to dismiss. In support of that motion they made four specifications. They called attention to the fact that the purported contract of subscription was void and that the petitioners may not come into court relying thereon. As we have shown above, the petitioners do not rely on the contract, but claim that it has been rescinded. They call attention to the fact that the chairman of the stockholders' meeting refused to allow certificate No. 43 to be voted, and they assert he had no such power. We have ruled otherwise, and hereinabove we have stated our reasons. They assert that the petitioners have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, and they refer to the provisions of Civil Code, § 315. That section provides a remedy to review the election, but does not purport to afford the petitioners the relief which they ask in this action. The point may not be sustained. Dufton v. Daniels, 190 Cal. 577, 581, 213 P. 949. Citing the affirmative allegations which we have discussed above, they contend that mandamus will not lie where such questions must be determined. The answer is that some of the matters referred to are of such nature that they need not be determined in this action, but should be determined, if at all, in an action for unlawful discharge. Again, in this proceeding the petitioners are not seeking to try title to property or title to office except incidentally. Guaranty Loan Co. v. Treadwell, 53 Cal. App. 538, 200 P. 653; Humboldt Oil Co. v. Hoagland, 70 Cal. App. 454, 233 P. 404.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a hearing herein is denied. In so doing we disapprove the following portion of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, reading as follows:

"They say the holder paid the remaining $7,700 on February 24, 1928, 'to the corporation.' This is his conclusion. They do not allege that he paid the money to any specified agent, nor do they claim he holds a receipt from any specified agent. They allege that the money has been paid out 'by the corporation.' Same comment."

NEWSON v. HAWLEY et al.

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 14, 1928.

1. New trial $\S$ 68—Order setting aside verdict and directing judgment for defendant held proper, if defendants' motion for directed verdict was proper (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 629).

If defendants' motion for directed verdict in action for alienation of affections should have been granted, order of court, setting aside verdict for plaintiff and directing judgment in defendants' favor, was in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 629, and should stand.

2. Husband and wife $\S$ 335—Directed verdict for mother of defendant, sued for alienating plaintiff's husband's affections, held proper.

In action to recover damages for alienation of affections, brought against mother and daughter, not related to plaintiff or her husband, evidence showing only that defendant mother knew that person marrying her daughter was husband of plaintiff and consented to ceremony, without any evidence showing that she enticed plaintiff's husband to leave his wife and marry her daughter, or influenced him directly or indirectly in so doing, authorized court in directing judgment for defendant mother.

3. Husband and wife $\S$ 333(9), 335—Evidence showed defendant was induced by fraud to marry plaintiff's husband and authorized directed judgment for defendant, sued for alienation of affections.

In action by wife against defendant for alienation of husband's affections, evidence that husband, 33 years old, induced defendant, 18 years old, to marry him by false representations that he was a single man and that plaintiff was not his wife, and evidence that defendant openly acknowledged marriage held to show that defendant acted under belief that plaintiff's husband was unmarried, and that she did not maliciously deprive plaintiff of consortium of her husband, authorizing court to set aside verdict for plaintiff and direct verdict for defendant.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 927(7)—Trial $\S$ 178—Defendant's denials, made on motion for directed verdict, could not be considered at trial, nor on appeal from order directing judgment for defendant.

In action by wife against defendant for alienating husband's affections, denial by defendant that she knew husband was husband

CURTIS, J. In this case the defendants made a motion for a directed verdict, which motion was denied and the case was thereupon submitted to the jury. Thereafter the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and the court of its own motion set aside the verdict and ordered judgment in favor of the defendants. From this order this appeal was taken.

[1] By section 629 of the Code of Civil Procedure, enacted in 1923, it is provided that:

"When a motion for a directed verdict, which should have been granted, has been denied and a verdict rendered against the moving party, the court, at any time before the entry of judgment, either of its own motion or on motion of the aggrieved party, shall render judgment in favor of the aggrieved party notwithstanding the verdict."

If, therefore, defendants' motion for a directed verdict should have been granted, then the order of the court setting aside the verdict and directing judgment in defendants' favor was in accordance with the terms of section 629 of the Code of Civil Procedure, above quoted, and should stand.

The limits within which the trial court may exercise its power to direct a verdict have been definitely fixed and determined by decisions of this court of comparatively recent rendition. In Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 147, at page 149, 155 P. 631, 632, it was held that:

"The right of a court to direct a verdict is, touching the condition of the evidence, absolutely the same as the right of the court to grant a nonsuit. It may grant a nonsuit only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, herein indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such a verdict were given."

To the same effect is Estate of Sharon, 179 Cal. 447, at page 459, 177 P. 283, 288, where the rule is stated in the following language:

"It is a settled rule of law regarding trials by jury that in a proper case the court has full power to direct the jury to render a verdict. This power exists in favor of the defendant where there is no substantial evidence tending to prove all the controverted facts necessary to establish the plaintiff's case. It is not necessary that there should be an absence of conflict in the evidence. To deprive the court of the right to exercise this power, if there be a conflict, it must be a substantial one."

[2] This action was instituted to recover damages for the alienation of the affections of plaintiff's husband, Herbert John Newson. The defendants are mother and daughter, and are not related to the plaintiff or her husband. The evidence shows that, after an acquaintance extending over about one year, said Herbert John Newson and the defendant Alida Fay Hawley went through a form of marriage ceremony, and thereafter cohabited together as husband and wife at intervals for about one month.

The evidence against the defendant Lillie Hawley is unquestionably insufficient to support any verdict or judgment against her. The most that can be claimed in favor of the evidence as against Lillie Hawley is that she knew that plaintiff was the wife of Newson, and that, by being present at the purported marriage ceremony between her daughter and Newson, she consented to such ceremony. There is no evidence that she in any way enticed Newson to leave his lawful wife and marry her daughter, or that she ever influenced him directly or indirectly in so doing. The order of the trial court, therefore, in directing a judgment in favor of the defendant Lillie Hawley, must be sustained.

[3, 4] As to the defendant Alida Fay Hawley, the evidence, in our opinion, shows that she was the dupe and victim of a designing and unscrupulous scoundrel, rather than the pilferer of the affections of plaintiff's husband. She was but 17 years of age when she met Newson, who sought to give her dancing lessons to fit her for a professional career on the stage. During this time she had occasion to meet plaintiff a number of times, some of which were at the home of plaintiff and Newson at No. 1858 Geary street, San Francisco. There is evidence to the effect that Newson was referred to in her presence and hearing as the husband of plaintiff, and that the children of plaintiff and Newson called Newson "Daddy" in the hearing of said defendant. The evidence, however, is uncontradicted that Newson, by false and fraudulent statements, induced her to believe that plaintiff was not his wife, but was his sister-in-law, the widow of his deceased brother, and that the children were his brother's children, and not his own. He further induced this defendant to go through a marriage ceremony with him, claiming that he was a single man, and that his wife had died some years previously. At this time Alida Fay Hawley was only 18 years old, while Newson gave his age at the time he secured the marriage license as 33 years. After this ceremony he spent one night with this defendant at a hotel in San Francisco, and then persuaded her to return to her mother until he could make permanent arrangements for a home for them. On two or three week ends immediately following he took her to a hotel, and after spending the night with her had her return to her mother, giving the same reason for her return as that previously given on the day after their purported marriage.

The two defendants at this time had occasion to visit temporarily their former home at Walla Walla, Washington. While there the defendant Alida Fay Hawley wrote Newson two letters, directing them to No. 1858 Geary street, San Francisco, where she knew Newson resided with plaintiff and her children. On each of these letters she wrote a return address, signing the same "Mrs. H. J. Newson." These letters, as might have been expected, fell into the hands of the plaintiff, one of which was opened by her. This one the defendant had signed "Your loving wife." Plaintiff immediately began an investigation of her husband's conduct, with the result that she found of his unlawful attempt to enter into a contract of marriage with the defendant Alida Fay Hawley. About this time the defendants returned from Walla Walla, and, upon learning that Newson was the husband of plaintiff, the defendant Alida Fay Hawley immediately instituted legal proceedings and had her marriage with Newson annulled, and has never lived with, nor had anything whatever to do with, Newson since learning that he was the husband of plaintiff.

We think this evidence shows without any substantial conflict whatever that the defendant Alida Fay Hawley acted in this unfortunate matter under the belief and conviction that Newson was an unmarried man, and that she did not maliciously or intentionally deprive plaintiff of the consortium of her husband. While there may have been intimations in certain conversations had with her and in her presence and hearing that Newson was the husband of plaintiff, yet it is most apparent that, whatever impressions such conversations had upon her, their effect was overcome and entirely effaced by the false and misleading statements and assurances of Newson. She denied that any such conversations had ever been had with her or in her hearing, or that she had any information whatever that Newson was the husband of the plaintiff, until some time after her pretended marriage to him. Her denial, however, upon a motion for a directed verdict by her, could not be considered by the trial court, nor can it have any bearing upon this appeal from an order directing judgment in her favor.

But, conceding that such conversations were had in her presence or with her, the evidence in our opinion shows that their effort was entirely nullified by the deception of Newson, and that when she accepted his attentions, and thereafter consented to marry him, and did in fact go through a marriage ceremony with him, she did so with the honest and sincere conviction that he was an unmarried man, and therefore capable and legally qualified to become her lawful husband. Her entire conduct, both before and after the marriage ceremony, is not only consistent with this belief, but is inconsistent with any other reasonable theory of the case. She was but a young girl, just out of school, when she met Newson, a mature man of experience. She was imbued with the idea that she possessed unusual ability as a dancer and might make for herself a successful career upon the stage. In this idea she was encouraged by Newson, who became her instructor, and held out to her the promise and hope that they would go on the stage together, and make for themselves both a name and a fortune. In this way he ingratiated himself into her confidence and became her trusted friend and adviser.

Under these circumstances it is not strange that she would accept his statements as to his marriageable status, without further proof of their truthfulness, and even against certain intimations which she had received from other sources. That she made no secret of her conduct in the entire matter is strikingly shown by the fact that, while at Walla Walla, she wrote letters addressed to the house where she knew he resided with the plaintiff and her children, on the envelopes of which she gave her own address, signing her name of "Mrs. H. J. Newson." There is no substantial conflict in the evidence as to the foregoing facts. It is, in our opinion, insufficient to show that the defendant Alida Fay Hawley acted with any improper motives in her conduct toward Newson or toward the plaintiff. On the other hand, the whole evidence in the case shows her to be the innocent victim of an unprincipled imposter.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

SWALLOW v. TUNGSTEN PRODUCTS CO.
(L. A. 8544.)★

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 19, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 18, 1928.

1. Judgment ~~§~~452—Purchaser of property thereafter sold under judgment had right to impeach judgment, if void by reason of facts appearing on judgment roll.

Purchaser of property thereafter sold under judgment lien had right to impeach judgment on which sheriff's sale and deed depended for their validity, if such judgment was void by reason of facts appearing on judgment roll.

2. Assignments ~~§~~24(3)—Bare right of assignee to sue for fraud committed on assignor will be denied as against public policy.

A bare right of assignee to file a bill in equity for fraud committed on assignor will be denied, because a transfer of such right is against public policy.

3. Judgment ~~§~~452 — Purchaser, without knowledge of judgment lien, has right, for purpose of establishing invalidity thereof, to show that judgment was void.

Where purchaser of property subject to judgment lien had no knowledge thereof at time of purchase, it had right, after sale under such lien, to show that judgment was void for purpose of establishing invalidity of judgment lien on alleging sufficient facts to show meritorious defense to action in which judgment was entered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County;
Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by A. H. Swallow against the Tungsten Products Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for a new trial.

For opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 265 P. 493.

Richard S. Miner, of Independence (James F. Peck, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Robert Richards and A. H. Swallow, both of Bishop (Edward Brody, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. The petition for an order transferring this cause after decision by the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 1, to this court, was granted May 3, 1928. At that time we had before us a petition requesting the transfer of the cause entitled O. E. Vaughn v. Pine Creek Tungsten Co., a corporation, to this court, after decision by said District Court of Appeal (265 P. 491). That petition was denied. Both proceedings were attacks made upon the same judgment in a different form. The latter case presented the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to have the judgment therein obtained vacated and set aside on the ground that defendant, a foreign corporation, had not been personally served with summons. The specific ground upon which the motion was pressed was that the person served as the general manager and designated agent of said foreign corporation was neither the manager nor designated agent of said corporation, and therefore no service was made upon said corporation. Other points were made, but they are not germane to a consideration of the question here in hand. The District Court of Appeal had held in that case that no fraud was charged against the plaintiff in the motion and no charge was made that any fraud was committed on the court by said plaintiff, and, the motion being faulty in the respects pointed out, was not supported by the case of McGuinness v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 223, 237 P. 42, 40 A. L. R. 1110, in which case the motion was based upon the extrinsic fraud of the party to the action wherein the review was sought and fraud was found to have been committed upon the court. It was further held that a motion to set aside a default and vacate a judgment entered thereon on matters dehors the record in a case where no extrinsic fraud is alleged should be limited to one year from the time of entry of judgment on personal service. The fact that the notice of motion was served more than one year after entry of judgment constituted one of the grounds assigned for denying the relief sought.

The order of transfer was made in the instant case to give opportunity for a fuller consideration of the two important questions raised by petitioner, to wit, first, that a defendant in an action to quiet title cannot collaterally attack a judgment valid upon its face and which forms one of the links in plaintiff's title; second, that a subsequent purchaser of lands incumbered by the lien of a judgment valid on its face, and whose rights in said lands were not affected by the rendition of the judgment, has not the right to attack the judgment on grounds of fraud or mistake which the original judgment defendant would have had. Authorities are to be found in this and other states which give a color of support to the claims made by both appellant and respondent.

The present action was brought by respondent to quiet his title to certain mining claims, all of which is more fully set forth in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal (265 P. 493), which we append as a part of the opinion on the case. There is no doubt that the answer sets forth all substantive matters necessary to constitute a direct attack on the judgment. The allegations of fraud are fully set out and are in the usual form. The attack upon the judgment is direct and in no sense collateral. The discussion of this branch of the case comes well within the rule announced in Follette v. Pacific L. & P. Corporation, 189 Cal. 193, 208 P. 295, 23 A. L. R. 965. The cross-complaint, although not so designated by the pleader, is such in substance. It is therein alleged that the Pine Creek Tungsten Company was the owner of and in possession of said group of mining claims or locations from October 28, 1918, to December 28, 1922, on which last-named day it sold and transferred all of its interest, right, title, and claim in said mining claims to the Soda Products Company, a corporation; that the corporation last mentioned entered upon and took possession of said group of mining claims, and developed, operated, and prospected the same to March 14, 1923, on which day it sold and transferred its interest therein to the Tungsten Products Company, a foreign corporation; that said foreign corporation thereupon entered upon and took possession of said mining claims; that it has since been in the possession of said claims, and it and its predecessors in interest have expended more than $150,000 in opening, developing, and prospecting said mining claims and in purchasing machinery for the operation of the same; that respondent and his grantor have at all times known of the work of development and the large sums of money that were being expended by the several alleged owners of said claims, but that each remained silent, and that none of said corporation from which appellant claims to deraign title had notice at any time, direct or indirect, of the commencement or pendency of said suit wherein Vaughn was plaintiff and the Pine Creek Tungsten Company was defendant until April, 1924; that upon making said discovery appellant took prompt action to protect its rights.

The judgment sought to be voided was rendered in the case of Vaughn v. Pine Creek Tungsten Co. (Cal. App.) 265 P. 491. The complaint was filed June 19, 1922, and summons was issued forthwith and returned as served June 30, 1922. Default judgment was entered on July 17, 1922. On February 10, 1923, an amended return of service of summons was filed. The writ of execution was issued on said judgment February 19, 1923, and said group of mining claims was sold to the judgment creditor, O. E. Vaughn, March 29, 1923. The sheriff executed and delivered his deed to O. E. Vaughn on April 12, 1924. On April 14, 1924, said Vaughn quitclaimed to A. H. Swallow, Esq., who brought an action to quiet his title in and to said group of mines. The judgment going in his favor, this appeal was taken.

The trial court took the position that the judgment, being valid upon its face, was immune from what was regarded as a collateral attack by a party who had no interest in the subject of the action at the time the judgment was entered. Being of this view, the court excluded all offers of evidence which, if true, would have had the effect of impeaching the integrity of the judgment. There has been much discussion by counsel as to whether false averments in the return of service of summons, which, if not inserted, would render the service invalid, fall within the definition of extrinsic or intrinsic fraud.

"Fraud practiced upon the court is always ground for voiding the judgment, as where the court is deceived or misled as to material circumstances, or its process is abused, resulting in the rendition of a judgment which would not have been given if the whole conduct of the case had been fair." 34 C. J. 282. The species of fraud that furnishes the best example of extrinsic fraud is that kind which is practiced upon a defendant to keep him away from the trial, or to prevent him from claiming his rights in the premises, or from setting up an available defense. The judgment in the instant case was a default judgment entered by the clerk. The judicial power which directs the entry of judgments was imposed upon if the allegations of the cross-complaint are true. If to induce a defendant to absent himself from the place of trial by the employment of fraudulent acts or to prevent him by fraudulent contrivance from setting up an available defense amounts to extrinsic fraud, it must inevitably follow that a fraud committed against the defendant by a false return of service of summons, when, in fact, no service was made, whereupon a default judgment is entered without giving the defendant an opportunity to have his day in court, is also extrinsic fraud, and is fully as disastrous to the rights of a defendant as though he had been betrayed into absenting himself from the trial. In fact, the latter illustration includes all if not more of the elements of iniquity than the former illustration does. In both instances the defendant has not had his day in court. In the first case he was deceived into the notion that his rights would be preserved; in the other case, by the practice of fraud, the fact that an action was pending against him was concealed from him. Not being present in court, he was not able to combat any intrinsic fraud that may have been practiced against him.

People v. Mullan, 65 Cal. 396, 4 P. 348, presented the question as to whether Mullan, the transferor of lands to the Cucamonga Company, a corporation, had been served with summons in an action previously brought against him. Said corporation, as the assignee of Mullan, moved to set aside the judgment on the ground that no service of summons had been made on its assignor, Mullan. It was there held that the corporation was in legal effect the assignee and legal representative of Mullan and stood in his shoes, citing section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, and U. S. v. Patterson, 15 How. 10, 14 L. Ed. 578. These and other authorities are cited in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal. In the instant case, neither O. E. Vaughn nor respondent has at any time been in possession of the mining properties involved in this case. Appellant and its predecessors in interest, beginning with the Pine Creek Tungsten Company, have successively at all times been in possession of said properties since 1918. The cross-complaint, in our judgment, presents important questions of equity which entitle the pleader to be heard on the issues made. We express no opinion as to whether appellant will be able to establish the truth of its allegations.

The cross-complaint contains allegations from which an inference of fraud as to the procurement of the judgment sought to be annulled is the inevitable result. This is true also as to the proposition that the court in which the judgment was entered was unduly imposed upon. The opinion of the District Court of Appeal, per Conrey, P. J., which we herewith adopt as a part of our decision, follows:

This is an appeal from a judgment for plaintiff in an action to quiet title to an interest in certain mining claims located in Inyo county in this state. The defendant in its answer, among other things not necessary to consider here, alleged that from the 28th day of October, 1918, and up to the 28th day of December, 1922, the Pine Creek Tungsten Company was the sole owner and in possession of a one-half undivided interest in the said mining claims; that on the 28th day of December, 1922, said Pine Creek Tungsten Company sold and conveyed its said one-half undivided interest therein to the Natural Soda Products Company, which thereupon entered into possession of said mining claims, and operated the same until the 14th day of March, 1923, when it sold and conveyed said one-half interest in said mining claims to the Tungsten Products Company, the defendant in this action, and that defendant then entered into the possession of said mines, and operated the same, and was operating the same when its answer was filed herein. The defendant alleged that the title claimed by plaintiff was based wholly upon a certain sheriff's sale (of date March 29, 1923) of said property of said Pine Creek Tungsten Company, made by virtue of the execution issued on a judgment which had been entered on the 17th day of July, 1922, in the case of Vaughn v. Pine Creek Tungsten Co., and that said judgment was void for several reasons; the facts alleged being the same referred to in the decision this day filed in Civil No. 5260, Vaughn v. Pine Creek Tungsten Co., 265 P. 491, an appeal from an order of the superior court refusing to set that judgment aside. In the appeal in that case we held, on the authority of Smith v. Jones, 174 Cal. 513, 163 P. 890, that the judgment could not be set aside on the grounds urged by the moving party, because more than a year had elapsed after the judgment was entered before the motion was made.

[1] It is contended by respondent here that, even if that judgment was void, as alleged, for want of service of summons, nevertheless that the defendant in this action had no right to impeach it, because this defendant was not a party to the action in which the judgment in Vaughn v. Pine Creek Tungsten Co., was entered, and had no interest in said mining claims at the date of that judgment. The judgment was entered in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Inyo, the county in which the mines are located, and, if valid, became a lien on the title of said Pine Creek Tungsten Company in those mines on the date of its entry. If that judgment was void, it was not such lien.

Unquestionably, appellant herein, claiming title in the manner hereinabove stated, would have a right to impeach the judgment on which the sheriff's sale and deed depend for their validity, if the judgment was void by reason of facts appearing on the judgment roll. In Vaughn v. Pine Creek Tungsten Company, supra, we have held that the judgment was not void on account of any such apparent defects. But appellant herein further contends that the court erred in refusing to allow appellant to show, by evidence extraneous to the record in the former action, that there was no service of summons upon any authorized representative of the Pine Creek Tungsten Company, and that therefore the default judgment rendered against that defendant was void.

Respondent relies upon the rule that one who comes before the court solely as assignee of a defendant's right to have a judgment set aside on grounds of fraud will be denied relief, because such right is not assignable. He further contends that this rule applies in a case where, although fraud is not alleged, the judgment is sought to be impeached on account of some error extraneous to the record which left the court without jurisdiction and the judgment void as between the parties thereto. The decision in Bennett v. Wilson, 133 Cal. 379, 65 P. 880, 85 Am. St. Rep. 207, lends a degree of support to respondent's argument. On July 17, 1896, Wilson had obtained a money judgment against a corporation. At that time there was outstanding another money judgment against the corporation in favor of one Swearingen, and a second judgment in favor of Bennett. On July 18, 1896, under an execution on the Swearingen judgment, certain real property of the corporation was sold to one Cole. On January 15, 1897, Bennett, as redemptioner by virtue of his judgment, redeemed from the sale to Cole. Thereafter, and within 60 days from the date of Bennett's redemption, Wilson, claiming a right of redemption under his judgment, attempted to redeem by paying the redemption money to the sheriff. Bennett refused to acknowledge Wilson's right of redemption, and demanded a deed from the sheriff. Bennett then brought his action, wherein he attacked the validity of Wilson's judgment lien, and sought to compel the sheriff to convey the property to him in accordance with the sale to Cole under the Swearingen judgment. Wilson's judgment had been entered after default of the corporation, which default was based upon a return of summons showing that the summons had been served on the corporation through service on one Fant as general manager thereof. Bennett alleged, and sought to prove, that Fant was not such general manager, but that, in fact, Wilson himself was the general manager, and that the service and default were obtained by collusion between the sheriff and Wilson. The trial court, in the case of Bennett v. Wilson, found that the charges of fraud and collusion were not sustained, but also found that Fant was not the general manager, and did not represent the corporation; that there had been no service of summons on the corporation; and that the default and judgment were void. Wilson and the sheriff appealed to the Supreme Court, and the judgment against them was reversed. In its decision, after outlining the facts, including those to which we have referred, the Supreme Court said:

"These facts are not sufficient to bring the plaintiff within any class recognized by the authorities as entitled to impeach a judgment regular on its face. It is ingeniously put by the respondent's counsel that the entry of the judgment was 'an imposition on the court.' But this was not the case. The judgment was entered by default by the clerk, whose legal duty it was to enter it, and who had no discretion in the matter. Nor, had there been such imposition, would it have been any concern of the plaintiff. The relations of Wilson to the corporation, in the absence of explanation, might give rise to a presumption of fraud against it. But fraud against the corporation, even had it been found, would not entitle the plaintiff to impeach the judgment. Meckley's Appeal, 102 Pa. 536; Sponsler's Appeal, 127 Pa. 410 [17 A. 1097]; Biddle v. Tomlinson, 115 Pa. 299 [8 A. 774]."

The foregoing decision appears to have been grounded upon the proposition that, because the judgment of Wilson against the corporation was regular on the face of the record (although there was in fact no service of summons), and because, at the date of entry of that judgment, Wilson had not yet become a redemptioner from the execution sale under the Swearingen judgment, it followed that no rights of Bennett existing on the 17th day of July, 1896, were affected by the entry of Wilson's judgment, and that therefore he had no right to impeach the Wilson judgment.

Before accepting the decision in Bennett v. Wilson as conclusive of the matter at issue, let us see how the rule has been stated and applied in some other cases. In People v. Mullan, 65 Cal. 396, 4 P. 348, it appeared that on January 4, 1881, judgment had been rendered against Mullan in an action affecting the title to certain land. A motion was made by the Cucamonga Company to set aside that judgment on the ground that there was no service of summons on Mullan. The Cucamonga Company was a corporation "to which the land involved in the action has been conveyed, and a certificate of purchase therefor assigned by Mullan on the 20th of October, 1881." The superior court rejected the company's offer to prove that no affidavit of publication of summons was ever made, and that there was no order authorizing such publication. (It should be noted that at that time the affidavit for publication of summons and the order of publication were not by law included in the judgment roll.) The judgment was reversed; the Supreme Court holding that the corporation was in legal effect the assignee and legal representative of Mullan, and standing in his shoes. In Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 136 Cal. 571, 576, 69 P. 220, 223, the Mullan Case, supra, was cited as authority for the proposition that "one who succeeds to property that is subject to a judgment may appear to have it vacated, though he was not party to the judgment."

[2] Whitney v. Kelley, 94 Cal. 146, 29 P. 624, 15 L. R. A. 813, 28 Am. St. Rep. 106, is a case wherein the plaintiff, as grantee of defendants in a former action, filed his complaint to set aside the former judgment upon the ground that it was procured through certain frauds practiced upon plaintiff's grantors, defendants in said former action. The appeal was from a judgment dismissing the action, after demurrer sustained, and this judgment was affirmed. Sundry decisions and paragraphs from text-writers are quoted and discussed in this decision in relation to the rule which denies to any person the right to proceed in equity "against a judgment or decree to which he was not a party, and which did not at its rendition affect any of his rights." The rule is not without its exceptions. Of course, a bare right to file a bill in equity for fraud committed upon the assignor will be denied, because the transfer of such right is against public policy. Again, it has been laid down as a general rule that:

"Where an equitable interest is assigned in order to give the assignee a locus standi in judicio in a court of equity, the party assigning such right must have some substantial possession and some capability of personal judgment, and not a mere naked right to overset a legal instrument or to maintain a suit."

In some of the cases cited in Whitney v. Kelley, emphasis was laid upon the fact that the parties claiming the right to attack upon grounds of fraud the validity of judgments rendered against the assignors were claiming as assignees, of a mere naked right, and not as subsequent purchasers in possession of property conveyed to them under circumstances which made the right of setting aside the prior fraudulent judgment, or other fraudulently obtained instrument, a mere incidental right for the protection of the assignee's property rights. So the Supreme Court in Whitney v. Kelley summarized its conclusions thus:

"If plaintiff's grantors had nothing but a mere naked right to file a bill to set aside this judgment, then this plaintiff, their grantee, can have no title. It is essential that a party complaining in equity should have some present substantial interest in the subject-matter of the suit. He must have a direct interest in the result of the litigation, and his complaint must clearly indicate that fact. The plaintiff here has no interest in this land, for his grantors had no interest when they transferred to him."

The former judgment rendered against Whitney's grantors had been a judgment denying their claim of title. Therein we find a difference between that case and the case now before us. At the time, when the Pine Creek Tungsten Company conveyed to the Natural Soda Products Company, the grantor was the owner, and in possession of the property conveyed. The same is true respecting the conveyance by the Natural Soda Products Company to the Tungsten Products Company on March 14, 1923. The Tungsten Products Company became owner, and was in possession, of the property from and after said 14th day of March, 1923. It is true that there was an outstanding judgment which created an apparent lien against the property, but there had been no execution sale or conveyance by way of enforcement of that judgment lien. Appellants alleged and offered to prove these facts, and further to prove that neither appellant nor said Pine Creek Tungsten Company had any notice or knowledge of said action or judgment of Vaughn v. Pine Creek Tungsten Company until the month of April, 1924; that, during the intervening period of time since the entry of said judgment of Vaughn, appellant and its predecessors laid out and expended at least $150,000 in the development of the mining claims which are the subject of this action, and that during said period of time both Vaughn and plaintiff, Swallow, knew that said work was being carried on and said expenditures were being made on said property, and stood silently by, and permitted said work to be done and said money to be expended, without giving the said corporations or any agent of them any notification of the existence of said former judgment or of any proceedings connected therewith. The offered evidence was rejected. If the facts be such as appellant alleged and offered to prove, it is manifest that a grave injustice has been done and will be confirmed, if it be held that the offered defense must be rejected merely because the title of the owner of the property has been conveyed to appellant. If the Pine Creek Tungsten Company through its responsible officers had known of the existence of said judgment, and if in substance and essence appellant's claim was primarily and principally in the nature of a cause of action directed against that judgment, the rule might well be applied which denies the right of an assignee of such claim to assert his claim by way of equitable action or defense.

In Emmons v. Barton, 109 Cal. 662, 42 P. 303, the court referred to the rule stated in Whitney v. Kelley, supra, that a mere right to complain of fraud is not assignable. But the court said that this rule "does not apply to a case where the right to sue for a fraud is merely incidental to a subsisting substantial property which has been assigned, and which is itself intrinsically susceptible of legal enforcement." The same proposition is repeated in Kemp v. Enemark, 194 Cal. 748, 756, 230 P. 441. In the case at bar, we are now considering appellant's contentions, not upon the basis of fraud used in the obtaining of the judgment in question, but only upon the basis of the court's failure in that action to obtain jurisdiction over the defendant therein. Nevertheless, the principles controlling the right of the assignee to protection against the results of the void judgment and of the proceedings thereunder are practically the same, whether the infirmity of the judgment has resulted from fraud or has resulted from mistake in connection with the service of the summons in that action. In Marriner v. Smith, 27 Cal. 649, the plaintiffs were grantees of one Goode, pursuant to purchase of the land from Goode after entry of a money judgment obtained by Smith against Goode. The facts alleged were sufficient to show extrinsic fraud committed by Smith, which prevented Goode from defending against the action. Referring to the limitations upon the right of a grantee of the judgment debtor, where the grant has been made after entry of the judgment, the Supreme Court said:

"Goode * * * is not a party to this action. He has made no complaint against the judgment. Of course the plaintiffs cannot interfere on his behalf, and they have no interest in the matter, except so far as the judgment lien may affect their property. They have no right to have the judgment absolutely vacated and annulled. The only question is, as to whether plaintiffs stand in such a relation to the judgment against Goode and the parties thereto, as to entitle them to the aid of a court of equity to remove a judgment lien upon the land described in the complaint, and to an injunction against a sale under said judgment."

[3] So here, although appellant cannot interfere on behalf of the Pine Creek Tungsten Company to have the judgment set aside, or ask to have it absolutely vacated and annulled, nevertheless appellant, so far as its status in relation to such judgment is concerned, has the right to show the void character of the judgment, for the purpose of establishing the invalidity of the judgment lien, which is the very foundation of the plaintiff's claim of title. To the extent necessary for that purpose, appellant had the same right that the Pine Creek Tungsten Company would have had to allege and prove that the judgment was void, either by reason of fraud or by reason of mistake leading to the default and the entry of judgment thereon. In the exercise of this right appellant was, of course, subject to the same limitations which would have bound the Pine Creek Tungsten Company in seeking to obtain equitable relief against such judgment. It is a necessary condition to the allowance of such relief that facts be alleged sufficient to show that there was a meritorious defense to the action in which the judgment was entered. "Even though a judgment may have been obtained through fraud, or without service of process, a court of equity will not grant relief against it in favor of a party who 'claims only the barren right of being permitted to defend against a claim to which he had no defense.'" Lee v. Colquhoun, 175 Cal. 16, 164 P. 894. Appellant herein alleged, in his answer, facts which, if established, would constitute a defense in the former action, in that the note sued on was made without consideration, and without any authorization for execution of the same. At the trial, appellant made ample offers of evidence tending to establish these defenses, and the offered evidence was excluded; the court holding that the defendant "must rely upon what the judgment roll records show."

We are of the opinion that the rulings of the court were erroneous in the particulars hereinabove stated, and that appellant was thereby deprived of the opportunity to present an apparently good defense to the action.

The judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

OCEAN ACCIDENT & GUARANTEE CORPORATION, LIMITED, OF LONDON, ENGLAND, v. JOHNSON et al. (L. A. 10389.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 20, 1928.

Insurance §188(2)—Testimony of witness, based on general recollection relating to matters assured was required to keep records of under policy, held properly excluded.

In suit for premiums under employers' liability policy, basing premium upon entire remuneration earned during policy period by all assured's employees, and making assured's failure to keep records of remuneration earned by employees classified according to kind of work performed cause for insurer to apply to entire remuneration earned premium rate applicable to most hazardous work performed, testimony of assured's witness seeking to show segregation of employees so as to secure lower rate based on witness' general recollection, assured having failed to keep books to supply the proper information, held properly excluded.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; M. W. Conkling, Judge.

Action by the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, Limited, of London, England, against Henrietta Johnson and another, doing business under the firm name and style of the Pioneer Transfer Company, to recover unpaid premiums for employer's liability insurance. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

For opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 263 P. 279.

George H. Moore and Hubert Starr, both of Los Angeles, and Dorsey Whitelaw, of El Centro, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. At the time this action was before the District Court of Appeal, Second District, Second Division, each of the three justices thereof prepared and filed separate opinions, in one of which the justice writing the same dissented from the conclusion reached by his two associates in the respective opinions prepared by them. It was largely due to this diversity of sentiment among the members of the District Court of Appeal that we granted the petition for a hearing in this court. After a more thorough examination and study of the several opinions rendered by the members of the District Court of Appeal and the law applicable to the questions involved herein, we have arrived at the conclusion that the opinion written by Mr. Justice Craig of said District Court of Appeal coincides with the views of this court, and we hereby adopt the same as the opinion of this court. Said opinion is as follows:

The transaction out of which this action arose is one of employer's liability insurance. The suit is for unpaid premium thereon. The counts are contained in the complaint. The first count alleges that the defendants became indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $1,113.77 on account of premiums earned on a written policy of workmen's compensation insurance covering a period of one year, of which only $591.89 had been paid, and $521.79 was due and unpaid. The second count alleges an account stated upon the same transaction by which the defendants agreed to pay the plaintiff $1,113.77, and had paid $591.89. From the bill of exceptions it appears that at the trial plaintiff introduced evidence to show that it issued a policy as alleged, that the work covered by it as stated in the contract was "truckmen, general trucking (not otherwise classified), classification No. 7208, premium rate $3.77. Pay roll to include all such employees as drivers, drivers' helpers, chauffeurs, chauffeurs' helpers, stablemen, blacksmiths, repairmen, and riggers, excluding only clerical office employees and storage warehouse employees." Also, that the place stipulated as that where the work was to be done was "Calexico, Imperial county, Cal." Section H of the policy is one over which the controversy principally arose. It reads, in part, as follows:

"The premium is based upon the entire remuneration earned during the policy period by all employees of the assured, and all employees of any contractor or subcontractor of the assured, engaged in the trade, business, or work described in said declarations. * * * The assured shall keep complete and accurate record of the remuneration earned by employees classified according to the kind of work performed, and shall cause contractors and subcontractors to do likewise by inserting in all contract agreements entered into a provision requiring such records to be kept for examination by the assured and the corporation. Failure to keep such records on the part of the assured shall entitle the corporation to apply to the entire remuneration earned the premium rate applicable to the most hazardous work performed."

Evidence was introduced sufficiently establishing the account stated as alleged in the complaint, by which the defendants agreed to pay the plaintiff's bill of $1,021.79, and that of this only $591.89 was paid. The prima facie case was also proved on the other count.

Both sides rely upon Frankfort Marine Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. v. California Artistic Metal & Wire Co., 28 Cal. App. 74, 151 P. 176, to sustain their respective contentions as to the law bearing upon the issues presented by the first count. The facts of the case are similar to those in the one before us. The policy there construed contained a provision similar to section H of the contract here presented, but counsel construe the language of the opinion differently.

It was sought by testimony of the secretary of the defendant company to segregate the pay roll, but the evidence offered was simply the "general recollection" of the witness, and this was founded upon no substantial data. The ruling of the trial court refusing admission of such testimony was sustained. The principles upon which the decision was based are, we think, applicable here. They are most clearly expressed in the opinion of the court in denying the application for rehearing. One reason which is indicated as sufficient to uphold the ruling of the superior court is:

"That the proposal to prove the fact by the 'general recollection' of an officer of the defendant, after the latter had said that there were available to him no data upon which an estimate could be made, was properly rejected by the court as involving proof incompetent for that purpose.

"We do not hold that a witness, in some instances, may not properly be permitted to give his 'best recollection' as to the existence or non-existence of a particular fact relevant and material to some ultimate issue, in cases where the issue thus sought to be proved is not required to depend wholly for its establishment upon that character of proof and where there exists possible opportunity for the party against whom it is received to offer adversary proof upon the point to which it is addressed. In the case at bar, however, the ultimate question to be affected by the proposed proof, based entirely upon the 'general recollection' of the witness, is the most vital in the case to the plaintiff. And, it is to be said, equally vital to the defendant; yet readily it can be perceived how impossible it would have been for the plaintiff to have met or attempted to overcome the force and the possible effect of testimony of so dubious an evidentiary nature and how easily thus its rights might be wholly destroyed. Through no fault of its own, the plaintiff was wholly without means of knowing, or the ability even to approximate (not even enjoying the doubtful advantage of general or the best recollection) how much of the total compensation paid to its employees by the defendant was received by the 'outside employees,' and, manifestly, had the defendant been allowed to make proof of that fact by a witness upon his mere 'general recollection' thereof, based upon no data of a substantial character, the plaintiff's rights would have been placed at the mercy of testimony possessing little or no probative value and as to which an adversary showing was wholly impossible."

This quotation is most apt in its application to the facts of the instant case. While it is claimed here that the rejected testimony was the definite recollection of the witness as to employment of particular employees, it was based upon no "substantial data," and in fact upon no data of the character required by the contract of the parties. In the Frankfort Case the books included a record of all time spent by the employees whether within or without the shop. The issue was upon the segregation on that basis, and the books failed to supply the information. In the instant case it appears that the books are in identically the same condition. They show all of the time spent, but do not segregate it as to the character of work done or place of its performance. As to the lack, all data capable of being used for segregation purposes, the situations are the same. In the absence of such data stipulated by the parties as thus necessary, it is of no moment that here a witness stated that he knew the employees, nor would it meet the stipulations agreed upon by the parties themselves as to data required to show such segregation if he could tell what each did and where each worked. As in the opinion quoted, such testimony would have been determinative of the most vital issue in the case. The insurer would have been utterly at a loss to have secured or produced adversary proof. The insured had full opportunity to have kept and preserved competent evidence, and its failure to do so was not only neglect of its own interests, but a clear disregard and dereliction of a duty owed the insurer in a confidential relation of agency for the latter; and, finally, the injury which the appellants may sustain by being refused permission to use the evidence offered is the natural result of their own neglect, and to permit them now to foreclose the respondent from its day in court (which would be the practical result of allowing the issues in question to be established by the mere unsubstantiated recollection of the witness) would violate the maxim which forbids a party taking advantage of his own wrongful act.

Appellants further contend that there was testimony to the effect that $2,500 of the pay roll was paid to warehousemen, and that their work is not covered by the policy. The most that can be said to sustain this claim is that some conflict in the testimony appears to exist, but the only evidence to be found in the bill of exceptions indicating that any of the pay roll covered work of warehousemen is the statement of the witness Hill, based merely upon his general recollection, as to the competency of which evidence we have stated our views.

Finally, appellants make the contention that a part of the pay roll as reported by respondent's auditor was for work in Mexicali, whereas the policy provided that it should cover work only in Calexico, Imperial county, Cal. The only place where the word "Mexicali" occurs is in a statement rendered by the company to defendants which was introduced in evidence as a part of the proof of the alleged account stated. The bill of exceptions does not contain the entire statement. It merely quotes the summary of which all that is germane to the question here under consideration is, "Total $31,547.36; Mexicali $1,093.88." With no more of the context than this from which to judge, it would be mere speculation to conclude that the word "Mexicali" as here used indicates that any work was performed outside of Calexico. On the other hand, the bill of exceptions contains the statement, which, of course, we must accept as true, that:

"On the trial evidence was introduced by plaintiff in support of all findings of fact made by the court."

One of the findings to which reference is made is that all of the allegations in paragraph 3 of the plaintiff's first cause of action are true. These allegations contained one to the effect that the defendants became indebted to the plaintiff in this transaction in the sum of $1,113.77, which, according to the statement above mentioned, rendered by the plaintiff, includes the item, "Mexicali, $1,093.88"; hence the necessary inference that the work was done in Calexico. Upon the meager information contained in the bill of exceptions bearing upon this point we are not in a position to say that the trial court's finding in this behalf is unsupported by the evidence.

In view of our decision concerning the issues presented in the first count, it is unnecessary to pass upon appellants' contention concerning the court's rulings to do with the alleged account stated as set forth in the second cause of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

RANDLEMAN v. BOERES. (Civ. 3538.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 4, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 4, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 1, 1928.

1. Malicious prosecution §64(2)—Evidence held insufficient to show malice or lack of probable cause in prosecuting defendant on charge of burglary.

In action for malicious prosecution on the charge of burglary, findings that prosecution was actuated by malice, and that charge against plaintiff was false, because no burglary was in fact committed, held not sustained by evidence, but evidence showed probable cause.

2. Malicious prosecution §20—Honest belief, reasonably founded, that one has clearly recognized another in commission of crime, furnishes probable cause to assume his guilt.

An honest belief, reasonably founded, that one has clearly recognized an individual in the actual commission of a crime, secured by means of a close view of his features in the bright moonlight, furnishes probable cause to assume his guilt, without further circumstances.

3. Fraud §58(1)—Perjury §33(1)—Substantial proof is necessary to sustain finding or charge of fraud or perjury.

A finding or charge of fraud and perjury must be based on substantial proof.

4. Appeal and error §1001(1)—General verdict cannot stand, if not supported by evidence at trial.

The general verdict of a jury has no firmer foundation than the record of the evidence adduced at the trial, and specific finding cannot aid general verdict, in the absence of substantial evidence to support finding.

5. Malicious prosecution §56—Burden is on plaintiff to prove want of probable cause and malice in malicious prosecution case.

In action for malicious prosecution, burden is on plaintiff to prove want of probable cause and malice.

6. Malicious prosecution §23, 32—Malice may be inferred from lack of probable cause, if established by proof; but want of probable cause may not be inferred from mere existence of malice.

Though malice may be inferred from lack of probable cause, it is a question of fact, which must be established by proof, like any other material fact; but want of probable cause may not be inferred from mere existence of malice.

7. Malicious prosecution §64(2)—That accused was held by magistrate for trial is prima facie showing of probable cause.

Proof that at preliminary hearing accused was duly held by the magistrate for trial in the superior court constitutes prima facie showing of the existence of probable cause for the prosecution, and mere fact of acquittal does not destroy effect of such prima facie showing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Crail, Judge.

Action by Merle P. Randleman against Matilda Boeres. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Gilbert F. Boreman and Wm. J. Clark, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Benjamin Elconin, of Los Angeles, and Arch G. McLay, of Huntington Park, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a $2,000 verdict of a jury, rendered in an action for malicious prosecution instituted against the respondent on a charge of burglary. The record is devoid of substantial evidence to support the necessary elements of malice or lack of probable cause, and the judgment must therefore be reversed.

[1] The appellant resided with her husband and daughter in a cottage at Huntington Park, Los Angeles, Cal. The respondent was 22 years of age and unmarried. He lived with his parents, about a block from the residence of appellant. These families were not acquainted. The appellant had never spoken to the respondent, although she knew who he was. There was no previous association between them, except that upon a single occasion she and her daughter were introduced to the respondent at a party given the previous May by a neighbor, during which the respondent invited appellant's daughter to dance with him, which she declined to do. There was no criticism or adverse comment against the respondent by any member of the appellant's family. The record affirmatively refutes the inference of any conduct or declarations on the part of appellant which would indicate malice, ill will, or spite toward the respondent. The appellant did not even recall his name. He was referred to in her household, with no disparaging intent, as Rudolph Valentino. This was a mere nickname.

August 13, 1924, about 2 o'clock a. m., the home of appellant was burglarized. Her husband was a traveling man. He had planned to leave by train for Riverside, very early that morning. They retired at 11 o'clock the previous evening, sleeping in a double bed, in a room adjoining the living room. The gray trousers of Mr. Boeres, containing a purse with small change and a bill-fold pocketbook containing two $10 greenbacks, a railroad ticket, and some business cards, were thrown upon the chiffonier. The bedroom contained three windows, the shades of which were raised, permitting the bright moonlight which existed that night to illuminate the room, so that all objects therein could be clearly discerned. Some time after midnight the appellant was aroused by the barking of dogs. She testified that she was restless and lay awake much of the night, impressed with the responsibility of calling her husband in time for the early train. He also had been aroused by the barking of dogs, but was sound asleep at the time of the entry of their room by the burglar. Suddenly, without previous warning, their bedroom door communicating with the living room was silently opened; a man stealthily entered and, passing the foot of the bed, hastened to the chiffonier and seized the trousers, which he threw across his left arm, and hurried out of the room. A small purse, wristwatch, and ring which were lying upon the dresser were untouched. In passing the bed, the burglar raised his coat collar with his right hand to conceal his face. During this occurrence the appellant lay frightened and silent. She testified, however, that she had a clear view of the burglar's face and recognized the respondent. She was positive of his identity. He wore a dark blue or black suit of clothes, with a gray cap. The moment he left the room she sprang from the bed, screaming, "There is a man in the house," and rushed to the closet to get a gun. The commotion awakened her husband, who exclaimed, "What is the matter?" Amid this confusion the daughter entered the room from her adjoining bedroom, crying, "Mamma, what is the matter?" To which the appellant excitedly rejoined, "Rudolph Valentino took your father's trousers." After some conversation, the daughter asked if she should call an officer, to which the appellant assented. The daughter immediately telephoned the news of the burglary to the sheriff's office.

Three detectives were at once detailed to investigate the matter, and soon arrived at the Boeres residence. Upon their arrival, the appellant related the circumstances to these officers, and stoutly maintained that she saw his features and identified the burglar. She referred to him as Rudolph Valentino, but some one present suggested that his name was Merle Randleman. She told them where the respondent lived, on Live Oak street, about a block away, and within an hour of the time of the burglary, at about 2:30 or 3 o'clock a. m., they called at his residence. Mrs. Randleman, his mother, was up attending to her husband, who was suffering from an attack of asthma, and she answered the doorbell. She told the officers that her son had gone to a show the night before, but reached home and had retired at 10 o'clock. The respondent was called, and informed the officers that he drove his car to the Lyric Theater about 7 o'clock the previous evening, and that he had stopped at a drug store for an ice cream soda on the way home, but that he was in bed by 10 o'clock, and had been asleep ever since that time. His story apparently constituted a complete alibi, and was corroborated by both of his parents. Subsequently, however, he told the officers, Jones and Higgins, that he arrived home the night of the burglary about an hour before the officers called at his home. He also failed to account for a flat passkey which the officers found upon his key ring. The officers returned to the Boeres residence and informed appellant that the Randleman family had told them the respondent had gone to bed at 10 o'clock on the previous evening, and, in regard to her claim that she had recognized him as the burglar, it would merely be her word against their flat denial, and that she might get into trouble by charging him with the crime. In the morning Mr. and Mrs. Boeres, in company with Officer Purrier, carefully searched the premises for further evidence of the crime. She pointed out distinct finger prints appearing in a smudge of black grease which she found upon the white enamel of the outer door jamb. A footprint outlined in dirt or sand was seen upon the bedroom rug. A tool-chest of the daughter's automobile, which had been parked in the rear of the building, was found open. A vial of chloroform in a bottle labeled "pills" was found in the grass at the rear of the dwelling. The tracks, identified by respondent's witness Lowther as those of a man followed across the premises to a neighbor's fence, where the shrubbery was broken, and where early the morning of the burglary Mrs. Van Wert had found the purse belonging to Mr. Boeres, together with some papers near the fence. These foot tracks continued beyond the fence across the adjoining lot. While this group were talking at the Van Wert fence, Mrs. Duncan, who lived in a cottage two or three houses beyond, observing them, inquired what had happened. Mrs. Boeres, or some one else in the group, replied that they had been robbed. Mrs. Duncan then asked if they had lost a pair of gray trousers. Upon being assured that they had, she said her husband had discovered a pair that morning under a walnut tree in their back yard. These proved to be Mr. Boeres' trousers. The bill-fold purse, however, was not found. The Duncan premises, where the trousers were found, were directly in the course of the tracks of the burglar, which ran in the general direction of the Randleman home. The officer, Purrier, testified:

"The entrance [to appellant's home] was gained via pass key—side entrance. * * * Criminal ran in a northeasterly direction across center of block to a point opposite the house of Merle Randleman [the respondent], thence turning in the direction of his place, the tracks disappearing in the lawn across the street, though proceeding toward [respondent's] house."

Because of the warning given to appellant by the detectives, she abandoned the effort to prosecute the case, and nothing further was done regarding the matter for about two months. October 9, 1924, Mr. Jones and Mr. Higgins, members of the burglary squad from the sheriff's office, voluntarily visited appellant's home in the process of checking up on the neighborhood burglaries which had been reported, in which no action had been taken. During this interval the appellant had shown no activity or interest in prosecuting the criminal case. At the request of the officers, she once more related the circumstances of the affair, asserting her belief that she had recognized the respondent as the burglar. They asked her why she had not filed a charge against him, and she told them that the other detectives had told her she might get into trouble because of the likelihood of respondent's acquittal on proof of his alibi. Jones told her that, if she was still willing to file the charge, they would go with her to the magistrate. At the officer's suggestion, and because of their encouragement, she did accompany them to the office of Justice Miller, where she again related the facts of the case. He prepared a complaint charging the respondent with burglary, and she signed and swore to it. A warrant of arrest was issued and served upon the respondent. He was taken in custody and imprisoned for about one day, when he was released on bail. In due time the preliminary hearing took place, at which both the appellant and the respondent were sworn as witnesses. The defense of an alibi was urged by the respondent, but the magistrate, in the exercise of his judgment, assuming there was probable cause to believe that he was guilty of the charge, bound him over for trial in the superior court. At the trial, which occurred January 13, 1925, the accused was acquitted, either because the jury was not satisfied of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, or because they thought he was innocent. This action for malicious prosecution was subsequently instituted.

Upon trial of the present action, the jury rendered a judgment of $2,000 against the appellant for malicious prosecution, and also adopted special findings to the effect that her prosecution of the accused was actuated by malice, that her charge against him was false, and that no burglary was in fact committed. It is difficult to account for these extravagant findings. After a careful reading of the entire record, we are persuaded that a burglary was committed as charged by the appellant, that there is absolutely no evidence to indicate malice on her part toward the respondent, and that there is no substantial proof of a lack of probable cause to believe that the accused was guilty of the crime. The case of Johnson v. Southern Pacific Co., 157 Cal. 333, 107 P. 611, defines the term "probable cause" as "a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true."

[2, 3] It may be conceded that independent of the belief of appellant that she had recognized the burglar, the remaining circumstances fail to furnish probable cause to assume that he was guilty. It may be further conceded that the appellant was mistaken in her identity of the burglar. But an honest belief, reasonably founded, that one has clearly recognized an individual in the actual commission of a crime, secured by means of a close view of his features in the bright moonlight, furnishes probable cause to assume his guilt, without further circumstances. In the present case, however, further facts, in addition to appellant's recognition of the burglar, appear to warrant the conclusion that she had probable cause to believe in his guilt. The footprints of a man wearing a shoe about the size of respondent's were traced by Detective Purrier from the scene of the burglary "across the center of the block to a point opposite the house of Merle Randleman, then turning in the direction of his place, * * * toward his house." Along this trail were found the stolen purse and trousers. Respondent's prosecution of this action and his defense of the judgment on appeal are based entirely upon his contention that the appellant fabricated her entire story of the crime, that the burglary did not occur, and that she perjured herself in swearing to the identity of the respondent. But there is no evidence to support this fanciful theory, except some slight, immaterial contradictions in the testimony. In an illogical effort to escape from a total absence of proof of malice and a lack of probable cause, the respondent in his brief says:

"* * * The same brain that framed and fabricated and foisted this 'pipe dream' on the jury also arranged for the planting of the trousers and the planting of the purse."

This extravagant language is in direct conflict with the undisputed testimony of the record. The evidence affirmatively shows that the appellant had no malice or ill will toward the respondent, and no motive for fabricating her story of the crime. A finding or charge of fraud and perjury must be based upon substantial proof. It was a man's fingerprints which were found in the grease on the door jamb. It was the tracks of a man's shoes which led along the trail where the stolen articles were found. The stolen trousers and purse were discovered and reported by different neighbors, whom the appellant scarcely knew. There was sufficient genuine excitement and criminal clews, difficult to counterfeited, to convince a bevy of expert officers that a crime had been actually committed. No sensible person can read the record with an unprejudiced mind without being convinced that a genuine burglary was committed, and that the appellant and her family were victims of the crime.

[4] The general verdict of a jury has no firmer foundation than the record of the evidence adduced at the trial. A specific finding that malice existed, or that the appellant perjured herself, cannot aid the general verdict, in the absence of substantial evidence, to support these findings. The record fails to support these special findings.

[5, 6] The burden is always upon the plaintiff to prove both want of probable cause and malice. While malice may be inferred from a lack of probable cause, it is a question of fact, which must be established by proof like any other material fact. Griswold v. Griswold, 143 Cal. 617, 77 P. 672. Upon the contrary, a want of probable cause may not be inferred from the mere existence of malice. Franzen v. Shenk, 192 Cal. 572, 611, 221 P. 932. One may possess malice toward an accused, and yet have such probable cause to believe in his guilt as to warrant a prosecution of the crime. In an action for malicious prosecution, it is necessary for the plaintiff to show affirmatively, both malice and a lack of probable cause. Cooper v. Armour (C. C.) 42 F. 215, 8 L. R. A. 47; Ricord v. Central Pac. Ry. Co., 15 Nev. 167.

[7] In the present case the appellant established a prima facie showing of probable cause by proof of the fact that at a preliminary hearing the accused was duly held by the magistrate for trial in the superior court. It is settled law that this showing constitutes a prima facie existence of probable cause. Johnson v. Southern Pacific Co., 157 Cal. 333, 339, 107 P. 611; 18 R. C. L. 42, § 25. Upon the contrary:

"The great weight of authority and reason is that the mere fact of the acquittal of the defendant upon the trial of a criminal charge, is not prima facie evidence of the want of probable cause for the prosecution." 18 R. C. L. 40, § 23.

In the present case the respondent utterly failed to support the burden resting upon him to show either that appellant's prosecution of him was actuated by malice, or that the criminal proceeding was instituted without probable cause.

For this reason the judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. COHEN. (Cr. 1673.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 11, 1928.

1. Criminal law § 1158(1), 1159(2)—Appellate court will not weigh evidence on appeal against verdict of jury or findings of trial court.

On appeal, appellate court will not undertake to weigh evidence as against verdict of jury or findings of trial court.

2. Criminal law § 1038(3)—Defendant, not requesting addition to instruction on effect of accusatory statements made in his presence, could not object on appeal to failure to give addition.

Where court instructed jury that admissions of fact made in presence of defendant were effective only as admissions as to persons making same, and could be considered only in considering attitude and conduct of defendant at time when statement was made in his presence, defendant on appeal could not object to court's failure to further instruct that jury should consider circumstances under which defendant failed to reply to accusatory statements made in his presence; such addition not being requested when instruction pursuant to stipulation of counsel was given.

3. Criminal law § 782(4)—Requested instruction that jury must seek theory on which to acquit defendant, not theory for conviction, held properly refused.

In prosecution for possessing still, requested instruction that it is not jury's duty to seek for theory on which to convict defendant, but it is their duty to seek for theory on which to acquit defendant, held properly refused.

4. Criminal law § 829(9, 18)—Requested instructions on presumption of innocence and on reasonable doubt held properly refused, where court read statute thereon (Pen. Code, § 1096; § 1096a, added by St. 1927, p. 1039).

Where court read to jury Pen. Code, § 1096, and section 1096a, added by St. 1927, p. 1039, no further instruction on subject of presumption of innocence or definition of reasonable doubt was required, and hence requested instructions on presumption and reasonable doubt were properly refused.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fletcher Bowron, Judge.

Jack Cohen was convicted of possessing a still, and he appeals. Affirmed.

C. B. Conlin and E. R. Simon, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of "possession of still," in that he did willfully, etc., own and have in his possession a certain still worm and other described devices, designed, used, and intended to be used in the manufacture of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. He appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The information was filed against appellant jointly with one Tom Collins, who pleaded guilty and is not now before this court. The points presented on behalf of appellant are: That the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict; that one of the instructions to the jury is erroneous; and that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions requested by appellant.

[1] We have examined the evidence as set forth in the record. It is sufficient to establish the facts charged in the information. The argument of counsel on this branch of the case relates chiefly to points on which the evidence is conflicting. All such argument is met by the familiar rule that on appeal this court will not undertake to weigh the evidence, as against the verdict of a jury or the findings of a trial court.

[2] The instruction to which appellant objects had relation to the evidence of certain admissions of fact which were said to have been made by Collins in the presence of Cohen. The instruction informed the jury in effect that such admission was effective as an admission of those facts as to Collins only, and could be considered by the jury for only the one purpose of considering the attitude and conduct of the defendant Cohen at the time when such statement was made in his presence, if the jury should find that it was so made. The objection now made to the instruction is that the court failed to further instruct the jury that they should take into consideration the circumstances under which the defendant failed to reply to the accusatory statements made by Collins in his presence. It is not shown that, at the time when the instruction was given, appellant asked for this addition to the instruction. On the contrary, it is admitted that the instruction was given pursuant to stipulation of counsel. Under these circumstances the defendant has no ground of complaint concerning this matter.

The defendant requested, and the court refused, to give the following instructions:

"You are instructed that it is not your duty to seek for a theory upon which you may convict the defendant, but, on the contrary, it is your duty as jurors to seek for a theory upon which you may acquit the defendant."

"You are instructed that, unless the prosecution proves beyond a reasonable doubt to a moral certainty each and every material allegation in the information, it is your duty as jurors to acquit the defendant."

"You are instructed the suspicious circumstances are not in themselves sufficient to convict the defendant, and the chain is never stronger than its weakest link, and unless the chain of evidence is complete—by that it is meant, that unless the evidence establishes the guilt of the defendant completely—then you must acquit the defendant."

"You are instructed that this defendant is presumed to be innocent at all stages of the proceeding, and this presumption of innocence clothes the defendant at all stages of the proceeding, and goes with you jurors into the jury room, and is there to be considered by you, together with all the other evidence in the case."

[3, 4] No authority is offered in support of the first of these refused instructions, and we think it was very properly refused. It is not the duty of a jury to "seek for a theory."

The other three were merely extensions, or particular statements, of the rules concerning reasonable doubt and the presumption of innocence. The court stated these rules by reading to the jury section 1096 of the Penal Code. Where this is done, no further instruction on the subject of presumption of innocence, or defining reasonable doubt, is required. Pen. Code, § 1096a, added by St. 1927, p. 1039.

Taking the instructions as a whole, and notwithstanding the refusal of the court to give the requested instructions to which we have referred, we are of the opinion that the record contains no prejudicial error, and that there has been no miscarriage of justice in this case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

WEST v. NEECE et al. (Civ. 3555.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 7, 1928.

Bills and notes  489(3)—Defendants, sued on note given to settle action on earlier note, could not prove want of consideration therefor, without alleging it (Civ. Code, §§ 1605, 3105, 3106).

Where defendants, in settlement of action against them on note, gave another note and were assigned a certain other note and rights in stock, held that, in subsequent action on the note given in settlement of action, they could not show want of consideration for the first note, unless by proper pleadings they brought the prior transactions in question, under Civ. Code, §§ 1605, 3105, 3106.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Sam B. West against G. W. Neece and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Eugene Tincher, of Long Beach, for appellants.

James L. Giffin, of Long Beach, for respondent.

WEYAND, Justice pro tem. This action was brought to enforce the payment of a promissory note, dated June 7, 1924, in the sum of $2,000, and which note was by its terms payable November 15, 1924. Said note was executed by the appellants above named. The complaint is in the usual form, and it alleges that on December 15, 1924, the appellants paid on the principal of said note the sum of $150, and that they paid on said day the sum of $70 on the interest thereon.

In the answer of the appellants, after making denial of the execution of said note, and denial of the payments of interest as in said complaint set out, the appellants apparently attempt to set up an affirmative defense of failure of consideration. In that behalf they allege that the note sued upon was given in consideration of the plaintiff's promise to deliver to defendants $10,000 worth of the capital stock of the Long Beach Realty Company, a corporation, and that this stock was never delivered as promised. The trial court found against the appellants on the issues thus tendered, and gave plaintiff a judgment for the amount due on the note, less the payments. From this judgment the defendants appeal.

The evidence discloses that, prior to the execution of the note here involved, and on November 1, 1923, one J. M. Hulett had made and executed his promissory note to plaintiff in the sum of $1,850. Hulett had attempted to secure the payment of this note by giving an order for the delivery of the above-mentioned shares of stock, which were then in process of being issued. The delivery of this stock was prevented by an order of the corporation commissioner of the state of California, excepting as to $450 worth thereof hereinafter referred to. The evidence further shows that on November 1, 1923, the present defendants gave to plaintiff herein their promissory note in the sum of $2,000, and that just prior to June 7, 1924, plaintiff herein had brought suit thereon against the present defendants for its collection. Upon the bringing of this suit, a settlement was effected, whereby the defendants were assigned the Hulett note, and were given a dismissal of the suit then pending against defendants herein.

As a part of this settlement the defendants herein made and executed two several documents relating to the Hulett note and stock, and the promissory note then in suit against the defendants. One of said instruments was an acknowledgment of the assignment by plaintiff herein to defendants of the Hulett note, and the instrument instructing the delivery of the stock above referred to. The second instrument was a written acknowledgment of the receipt of the Hulett note and the note previously given by defendants, and the dismissal of the suit against said defendants, as consideration for the execution of the note now in suit.

No form of fraud or deceit was alleged. Apparently defendants were attempting to show by testimony that there was no consideration for the execution of the note of November 1, 1923. This could not be allowed, unless by proper pleadings they brought those prior transactions in question. This they did not do. The note of November 1, 1923, was regularly sued upon, and in settlement of that suit then pending the defendants executed the present note, and accepted an assignment of the rights to the above-mentioned stock, and actually received stock of the value of $450, and they accepted a dismissal of the suit then pending against themselves.

The prior note of December 1st given by defendants must be deemed to have been given for a valuable consideration. Section 3105, Civ. Code. Such pre-existing debt constitutes value. Section 3106, Civ. Code. Any benefit conferred by the present plaintiff on defendants was, if lawful in other respects, a sufficient consideration for the execution of the present note in question. Section 1605, Civ. Code. The former transactions being deemed legal in every way, and there being no pleading whereby the prior dealings were attacked, the trial court did not err in its refusal to permit defendants to go into all the transactions leading up to the execution of the first note. More especially is this so because of the written acknowledgments of the defendants at the time of the execution of the note here in suit.

We see no occasion to cite further authority in support of the views herein expressed.

The judgment of the lower is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

PEOPLE v. CARROW. (Cr. 1668.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 11, 1928.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Nov. 9, 1928.

1. Receiving stolen goods ☞8(4)—Evidence of defendant's admissions that he knew property found on his premises was stolen showed knowledge of theft sufficient to support conviction for receiving stolen property.

In prosecution for receiving stolen property, evidence of general conduct of defendant, including admission that he knew property was stolen, together with fact that property was found under clod of dirt in front yard of defendant's residence, where defendant admitted he had concealed property, was sufficient indication of knowledge by defendant that property had been stolen to support conviction.

2. Indictment and information ☞114—Allegation of prior conviction of felony held not part of offense charged, but interposed solely to increase punishment (Pen. Code, §§ 667, 668, 1168).

Allegation in information, under Pen. Code, §§ 667, 668, 1168, that before commission of offense of receiving stolen property, for which defendant was being tried, he had been convicted of felony and served term of imprisonment, related only to punishment which might be inflicted if defendant were found guilty, was intended only for purpose of increasing punishment, and had nothing to do with determination of status of guilt or innocence, so far as crime of receiving stolen property was concerned.

3. Indictment and information $\S$ 114—Corpus delicti of charge for receiving stolen property held not changed by further charge of prior conviction for felony (Pen. Code, §§ 667, 668, 1168).

Under information charging defendant with receiving stolen property, and that prior to commission of offense defendant had been convicted of felony and served term of imprisonment, for which he was subject to additional punishment, under Pen. Code, §§ 667, 668, 1168, corpus delicti of charge did not differ from corpus delicti in any other case, where defendant might be charged with receiving stolen property.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 1202(3)—Admissions by defendant that he had previously been convicted of felony held sufficient to establish prior conviction (Code Civ. Proc. § 1844).

Under information charging defendant with receiving stolen property and with having been convicted of prior felony, admission by defendant that he had previously been convicted of grand larceny for stealing automobile tires and served term in prison, together with testimony by another witness regarding prior admission to same effect made by defendant to witness, was sufficient to establish prior conviction, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1844.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 1202(3)—Proof of prior conviction of grand larceny in another state by defendant, charged with receiving stolen property, held not to require proof that property in prior conviction exceeded \$200 (Pen. Code, §§ 487, 489, 667, 668).

Under information charging defendant with receiving stolen property and with prior conviction of felony, under Pen. Code, §§ 667, 668, in sister state, prosecution was not required to prove that act itself, as distinguished from statutory offense, was such that, if committed within state, would have been punishable by imprisonment in state prison, and hence, where defendant was charged with prior conviction of grand larceny in sister state, it was not necessary to show that value of property exceeded $200, required by Pen. Code, §§ 487, 489, to constitute offense of grand larceny.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Douglas L. Edmonds, Judge.

Charles W. Carrow was convicted of receiving stolen property, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Joel Terrell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J. The information upon which defendant was convicted in substance charged him with the commission of the crime of receiving stolen property; also that, in the state of Kansas, prior to the commission of said offense, defendant had been convicted of a felony and had served a term of imprisonment therefor. In addition to finding defendant guilty, the jury found that he had suffered a prior conviction, as charged in the information. In accordance with the provisions of the statute (section 1168, Pen. Code), defendant was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the term prescribed by law. He appeals from the judgment.

[1] This court is unable to agree with appellant in his contention that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict as to the charge of receiving stolen property. That defendant was in possession of the property in question and that it had been stolen is conceded. With relation thereto, the general conduct of defendant, including his admission that he knew it was "hot" (meaning that he knew the property had been stolen), together with the fact that the property was found under a clod of dirt in the front yard of defendant's residence, where he admitted that he had concealed it, were sufficient indications of knowledge of the fact on the part of defendant that the property had been stolen.

The next reason assigned by appellant for reversal of the judgment is that the evidence adduced on the trial was insufficient to support the verdict as to the charge of prior conviction of defendant. Assuming the soundness of appellant's contention, its importance becomes apparent from the fact that, by virtue of the provisions of sections 667 and 668 of the Penal Code, the term of imprisonment is largely increased of a person found guilty of a crime who theretofore has been convicted of an offense punishable according to the laws of this state by imprisonment in the state prison, and who has "served a term therefor in any penal institution."

The record shows, and it is conceded by respondent, that the only evidence admitted on the trial of the action relating to the alleged prior conviction of defendant consisted of testimony to the effect that, following the arrest of defendant, he had admitted that theretofore he had been convicted of grand larceny for stealing automobile tires, and had "served a term" in the state prison at Lansing, Kan.; also that, on cross-examination of defendant, he admitted that theretofore he had been convicted of a felony.

In the case of People v. Chadwick, 4 Cal. App. 63, 73, 87 P. 384, 389, where a question similar to that here involved was under consideration, it is held that the allegation in an indictment of previous conviction of a defendant is a distinct element of the charge, and that the defendant has a right to insist that the prosecution establish the existence of that element by competent evidence before he can be convicted thereof. See, also, People v. Jones, 31 Cal. 565; People v. Delany, 49 Cal. 394; People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 345, 40 P. 440; People v. Tapia, 131 Cal. 647, 63 P. 1001; People v. Coleman, 145 Cal. 609, 79 P. 283; People v. Vertrees, 169 Cal. 404, 146 P. 890; People v. Quarez, 196 Cal. 404, 238 P. 363; People v. Ray (Cal. App.) 267 P. 593;

[2, 3] It would seem, however, that in none of the cases to which reference has been had was the distinction directly drawn, or great consideration given to the point that the defendant was not again on trial for the commission by him of the first offense. It must be apparent that, in circumstances such as are presented by the allegations in the information herein, the defendant was charged with the commission of the second offense only, and the issue as to his prior conviction of a felony was interposed solely for the purpose of increasing the punishment for the commission by him of that offense. Otherwise, if convicted, defendant would have been subjected to a second punishment for the crime first committed by him. The allegation in the information that, before the commission by defendant of the offense of receiving stolen property, he had been convicted of a felony for which he had "served a term of imprisonment," had no relation to the offense with the commission of which defendant was charged, but related to the punishment only which might be inflicted if defendant were found guilty of the crime of receiving stolen property. People v. Wallach, 79 Cal. App. 605, 250 P. 578.

Obviously, the offense remained the same, without reference to the former status (criminal or otherwise) of the person who committed it. Moreover, it is as to the punishment for the commission of the second offense only that any provision may be found in the particular, or any, statute by which a difference is provided as affecting a person who may commit such crime. The corpus delicti of the charge, as applied to the instant case, differed in no respect from the corpus delicti in any other case where the defendant might be charged with the offense of receiving stolen property. Whether, therefore, defendant had been convicted of a felony, and had "served a term of imprisonment therefor," had nothing whatsoever to do with the determination of the status of guilt or of innocence, so far as the crime of receiving stolen property was concerned.

In the case of People v. Eppinger, 109 Cal. 294, 41 P. 1037, the defendant therein was charged with the crime of making, uttering, and passing a fictitious check and with having suffered a prior conviction for petit larceny. The jury found the defendant guilty as charged, but, in violation of the requirements of section 1158 of the Penal Code, failed to find whether the defendant had suffered such previous conviction. While in the opinion expressed by the Supreme Court language may be found which may be taken to indicate that the offense of making, uttering, and passing a fictitious check, together with the charge that theretofore the defendant had been previously convicted of the crime of petit larceny, constituted but a single offense, nevertheless the force and effect of the judgment of the court is to the contrary, in that it is ruled that the "verdict rendered should be treated as a finding against the defendant upon the crime charged, and in favor of the defendant upon the question of prior conviction," together with a direction of the lower court to sentence the defendant as for a conviction for making, uttering, and passing a fictitious check. To the same effect are People v. Dueber, 34 Cal. App. 686, 168 P. 578, and People v. Franklin, 36 Cal. App. 23, 171 P. 441. See, also, Ex parte Hall (Cal. App.) 263 P. 295.

In the case of People v. Thomas, 110 Cal. 41, 42 P. 456, the defendant was charged with the commission of the crime of burglary, with a prior conviction of an identical offense. On arraignment, defendant confessed the prior conviction. On the trial, over the objection of the defendant, a witness testified in substance that the defendant had admitted to him that he had "served two years in Folsom for burglary." In deciding whether the defendant had suffered substantial prejudice by reason of the admission of such testimony, the court said in part:

"* * * The defendant having, upon arraignment, confessed the prior conviction, or pleaded guilty thereto, there was no issue as to the prior conviction to which the testimony was applicable. It was not an admission that he had committed the offense upon which he was being tried, and was wholly inadmissible as evidence tending to prove the commission of that offense. * * *"

It is manifest that, if a charge as to the commission of a crime, together with an allegation of prior conviction, constitute a single offense, a verdict of guilty would cover the entire situation; whereas, if, as required by the provisions of section 1158 of the Penal Code, in addition to the verdict of guilty, a finding by the jury be necessary as to "whether or not he has suffered such previous conviction," such requirement is a clear indication that the charge of "previous conviction" is not to be taken as a part or parcel of the main charge against the defendant, but is an issue to be determined by the jury, solely for the purpose (if found in the affirmative) of increasing the punishment to be inflicted on the defendant.

[4] Section 1844 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that:

"The direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient for proof of any fact, except perjury and treason."

The existence of certain exceptions other than those contained in the statute may be conceded, but, so far as is known to this court, none of them applies to a situation such as is here presented. Nor may it be successfully contended that, because defendant himself may have been a witness not "entitled to full credit," the rule has no application, for it appears that, not only did defendant make the admission in open court, but another witness testified regarding a prior admission to the same effect, made by defendant to such witness. In addition thereto, defendant would be in no position to now contend that he had testified falsely regarding the matter. It thus becomes apparent that the rule suggested by appellant, to the effect that the admission by defendant that theretofore he had been convicted of a felony was, in itself, insufficient to establish the fact, is incorrect in principle and cannot be sustained.

[5] In effect section 668 of the Penal Code provides that if the prior conviction of the defendant occur in "any other state, * * *" in order that the punishment of such defendant on conviction of a felony subsequently committed by him in this state may be increased by reason of such former conviction, the offense of which he was formerly convicted must have been such that under the laws of this state it would have been punishable by imprisonment of the convicted person in the state prison. As hereinbefore indicated, the evidence herein was sufficient to establish the prior conviction of defendant of the crime of grand larceny. By the provision of section 489 of the Penal Code, the crime of grand larceny, or what is now termed "grand theft," is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison. This court is not impressed with appellant's contention to the effect that, in addition to establishing the fact that theretofore defendant had been convicted of a felony, for the commission of which crime he had served a term in a penal institution, it was also incumbent upon the prosecution to establish the further fact that the act itself, as distinguished from the statutory offense, was such that, if committed within this state, would have been punishable by imprisonment in the state prison.

In this state, in order to constitute grand larceny (or grand theft), the value of the property taken must exceed $200. Section 487, Penal Code. To sustain the contention of appellant would mean that the duty devolved upon the prosecution to establish the fact that the automobile tires stolen by defendant in the state of Kansas were of a value exceeding $200. It is at once apparent that such a construction of the statute would place a tremendous burden upon the prosecution, not only in a case like the one before the court, but in every case in which the fact of a former conviction of a defendant, especially where it occurred in a foreign jurisdiction, was sought to be established. It is inconceivable that such was the legislative intention. The words of the statute are plain and readily understood, as intended to convey the meaning that it is the offense, as designated by the statute, rather than the act constituting the offense, which, "if committed within this state, would be punishable by the laws of this state by imprisonment in the state prison."

Appellant also complains of the refusal of the trial court of defendant's request to give to the jury certain specified instructions. An examination of the record herein discloses the fact that, in substance, each of such instructions was covered by other instructions which were given to the jury. As a consequence defendant was in no wise injured by the action of the court in that regard.

The judgment is affirmed.

MILWAUKEE BLDG. CO. v. WETZEL
(Civ. 3388.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 7, 1928.

1. Contracts $\S$ 28(3)—Evidence held to support finding that parties entered into contract to furnish material and labor for building being constructed by plaintiff.

In action for damages for breach of alleged contract, whereby defendant agreed to perform labor and furnish materials for store fronts and iron doors, and elevator doors for passenger elevators, and other iron work for plaintiff, a general contractor, in construction of building, evidence held sufficient to support finding that parties entered into contract for alleged breach of which plaintiff asked damages.

2. Contracts $\S$ 28(3)—Evidence supported finding that plaintiff contractor accepted defendant's bid to furnish labor and materials for store fronts and other parts of building.

In action by general contractor for damages for breach of alleged contract, whereby defendant agreed to furnish materials and labor for store fronts and other parts of building being constructed by plaintiff, evidence held sufficient to support finding that there was an acceptance of defendant's bid.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Trial court's findings on conflicting evidence were conclusive on appellate court.

Trial court's findings on conflicting evidence were conclusive on appellate court, there being nothing in plaintiff's evidence marking it as inherently improbable, or such as would justify court in holding as matter of law that it was not of sufficient probative force to uphold decision.

4. Contracts $\S$ 349(4)—In action for breach of contract to furnish materials and labor, excluding blank form plaintiff sent defendant for submitting bid held not error.

In action by general contractor for damages for breach of contract, whereby defendant agreed to furnish material and labor for store fronts and other parts of building, denying admission in evidence of printed form, which plaintiff sent to defendant for purpose of inserting therein his proposal or bid for work, held not error, where defendant's bid and acceptance thereof by plaintiff, through or by means of purchase orders, were introduced in evidence.

5. Contracts ⇨349(1)—In action for breach of contract, excluding evidence regarding whether certain item appeared on plans as recorded held not error.

In action by general contractor for breach of contract, whereby defendant agreed to furnish material and labor for store fronts and other parts of building, excluding evidence on cross-examination of plaintiff's witness as to whether "iron frames and sash," as contained in plans and specifications on which defendant framed and tendered his bid, appeared on plans as recorded in county recorder's office, held not error, where defendant undeniably based his bid on plans and specifications which contained words "iron frames and sash."

6. Appeal and error ⇨931(5)—Presumption is court considered all relevant testimony received and incompetent testimony received without objection.

Presumption is that court, in deciding case, considered all relevant and material testimony received, and even incompetent testimony, if it was received without objection.

7. Evidence ⇨158(27)—Excluding evidence regarding similarity between plaintiff's exhibit and plans from which defendant made up bid held not error, plans being best evidence.

In action by general contractor for breach of contract, whereby defendant agreed to furnish material and labor for parts of building, excluding answer to question, "Have you determined whether or not they (Plaintiff's Exhibit 8) are similar plans to those from which you figured in order to submit your bid?" which was designed to establish that words "iron frames and sash," which were in Exhibit 8, were not in plans from which defendant made up his bid, held not error, since plans themselves were best evidence of facts sought to be shown.

8. Evidence ⇨129(6)—Evidence regarding another's first bid in comparison with other bids held competent to show bid was substantially same as successful bid on reletting contract after breach and on damages.

In action by general contractor for breach of contract whereby defendant agreed to furnish material and labor for parts of building, evidence regarding B.'s first bid for work in comparison with other bids then made held competent, to show that B.'s bid was substantially same as its successful bid on reletting of contract after defendant's breach, and also, on matter of measure of damages, to show that B.'s bid on reletting involved reasonable price for same work.

9. Trial ⇨105(1)—Evidence admitted without objection was in record for purposes of decision.

Where question objected to was elsewhere fully gone into without objection, it was in record for all purposes of decision.

10. Appeal and error ⇨1058(1)—Rulings on evidence held harmless, where testimony excluded was elsewhere admitted without objection.

Where testimony sought to be brought out by one of questions and testimony excluded by ruling as to the other were elsewhere permitted to go into record without objection, rulings, if erroneous, were harmless.

11. Damages ⇨120(3)—For breach of contract to furnish material and labor for building, measure of damages was amount which would compensate party aggrieved for all detriment proximately caused thereby (Civ. Code, § 3300).

For breach of defendant's contract to furnish plaintiff, a general contractor, with labor and materials for store fronts and other parts of building, measure of damages was amount which would compensate plaintiff for all detriment proximately caused thereby, or which in ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom, under Civ. Code, § 3300.

12. Evidence ⇨112, 113(8), 601(4)—Contract price is some evidence of reasonable value of services and materials, and supports finding to that effect.

Where one has contracted to perform services and furnish materials to be used in work to be done thereunder, the stipulated contract price therefor is some evidence of the reasonable value of such services and materials, and is sufficient to support a finding to that effect, in the absence of contrary evidence.

13. Evidence ⇨112, 113(1)—Later contract can only be taken as evidence of reasonable value of work and materials left undone on breach of earlier contract, to extent that both contracts substantially correspond.

If later contract, entered into on original contractor's failure to perform, exceeds in total price that of the original or abandoned contract, by reason of the inclusion therein of certain items which were not embraced within plans and specifications on which abandoned contract was based, it can be taken as evidence of reasonable value of work to be performed and materials to be furnished to extent only that the two contracts substantially correspond.

14. Damages ⇨189—Evidence held not to authorize recovery of damages for breach of contract on basis of cost of work done by another involving additional items.

In action by general building contractor for damages for breach of contract in which defendant agreed to furnish material and labor for certain parts of building, evidence held insufficient to authorize award of damages to plaintiff, based on cost to plaintiff for having work completed under subsequent contract with another, after defendant's breach as being reasonable value of work unperformed, in view of fact that work called for by subsequent contract included numerous items not included in original contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by the Milwaukee Building Company against Kurt O. Wetzel, doing business as the K. O. Wetzel Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 266 P. 312.

Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Isaac Pacht and Clore Warne, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HART, J. A petition for a rehearing was granted herein solely for the purpose of enabling us to give further consideration to the question whether the damages awarded by the judgment were, as counsel for the defendant vigorously contend is true, in excess in a material measure of the damages to which the evidence showed the plaintiff was entitled in consequence of the damage it actually sustained through defendant's breach of his contract. After a more scrutinizing examination of the evidence addressed to that question than was given to it in our original investigation of the record, we have satisfied ourselves that counsel for the defendant are right in the statement in their petition that the evidence does disclose that the plans and specifications upon which the Bayer-Rothgeb Company successfully submitted its bid, after the defendant abandoned his contract with the plaintiff for doing the work and furnishing the materials called for by the said contract, contained certain items which were not a part of the plans and specifications upon which the defendant submitted his bid, and which increased the cost of the work and the materials over the cost thereof under the latter's contract.

We adhere to the conclusion announced in the opinion originally filed herein as to the making of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant and the refusal by the latter to perform the terms thereof, as alleged in the complaint. The judgment, however, must be modified in accord with our modified conclusion that the aggregate sum thereby allowed the Bayer-Rothgeb Company as damages for defendant's breach of his contract is materially in excess of what the evidence shows it entitled to. A more specific consideration of the evidence upon which the modification is predicated will be found in the body of the opinion. The following is the opinion heretofore filed herein, modified in accord with the foregoing considerations:

This is an action by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant damages for the alleged breach of a certain contract. Judgment passed for the plaintiff in the sum of $3,131, the amount prayed for in the complaint. The defendant moved for a new trial, the same being denied. This appeal is from the judgment upon a bill of exceptions.

The plaintiff, a corporation organized and existing in pursuance of the laws of California, prior to and at the time of the commencement of this action, was and is engaged in the business of general contractor for the erection and construction of buildings, with its principal place of business in the city of Los Angeles. The defendant, Kurt O. Wetzel, prior to and at the time of the commencement of this action, was doing business in said city under the fictitious firm name of K. O. Wetzel & Co.

At some time prior to and at the time of the commencement of this action the plaintiff was, "and still is, engaged, as the general contractor, in the erection, building and construction of that certain building * * * at No. 806 South Broadway, in the city of Los Angeles, commonly known as the Carleton F. Burke building, according to plans and specifications provided" in the contract for the erection and construction of the same. "Said plans and specifications provided for the furnishing and construction of * * * certain store fronts and iron doors to store, and iron front, iron doors, and iron grille on the wood doors to the building lobby, and iron elevator doors for two passenger elevators, and other iron work to be furnished in and about said premises." On October 31, 1922, the defendant entered into a written agreement with plaintiff to furnish said iron or metal, and to perform all work, labor, and materials necessary therefor, for the sum of $4,752, and further in said contract agreed to complete said work on or before the 8th day of February, 1923.

The complaint, from which the foregoing statement is taken, alleges that the defendant breached said contract by failing and refusing to comply with the terms thereof; that, in order to complete said building in compliance with the terms of its contract, the plaintiff "was forced to and did secure from other persons and firms engaged in the same line of business, to wit, in the furnishing of iron and metal work and doing labor with regard thereto, such as required by the plans and specifications to be followed by this plaintiff, bids and estimates of the best price at which they would furnish the materials and do and perform the labor necessary to install the same as per the original agreement with the defendant; * * * that the lowest bid or estimate for said materials and work was the sum of $7,883; * * * that plaintiff has by its contract duly made become indebted in said sum for the iron and metal work which was to have been furnished by defendant under his said contract aforesaid." It is alleged that, by reason of the defendant's failure to comply with and perform his said contract, the plaintiff has been damaged "in a sum equal to the difference between the sum of $7,883 and the sum of $4,752; the first-named sum being the amount which plaintiff was compelled to pay for the material and the work because of defendant's breach of his contract with plaintiff to furnish said material and work, and the last-named sum the amount defendant agreed to furnish said material and work for, the difference between said sums being the sum of $3,131. It is further shown by the complaint that the contract of plaintiff to erect said building provided that for its noncompletion within the time specified therein the plaintiff shall be penalized in the sum of $100 for every day until completed.

The defendant's answer first specifically denies the material averments of the complaint and then sets up a special defense. The brief of counsel for the plaintiff correctly epitomizes the averments of said special defense, and we will therefore adopt the same herein, as follows:

"As a second and separate defense defendant alleged substantially that he had received requests for the submission of a bid for certain work, designated as item No. 1 and item No. 2, said request being accompanied by certain plans and specifications. That defendant submitted bids therefor, but that neither of said bids was ever accepted. The plaintiff delivered to defendant a certain 'purchase order' calling for defendant to 'furnish and install complete ornamental wrought iron and cast iron front entrance and doors, except the lobby door and frame, which are omitted as per our plans and specifications and your bid 10/31/22, $2,952.' That said work order called for other and different work and material. That defendant returned said work order and requested that it be changed to conform to request for bid, but that plaintiff refused to change said purchase order. That defendant was ready, willing, and able to perform work called for in bid, and plans and specifications submitted to him at time of making, but plaintiff refused to allow him to so complete the contract. That as to item No. 2 plaintiff never accepted bid of defendant, but that plaintiff delivered to defendant a 'purchase order,' calling upon defendant to 'furnish and install complete passenger elevators frames and doors, as per our plans and specifications and your bid 10/31/22, $1,800.' That the original request for bid did not include any elevator 'frames.' That defendant demanded correction and elimination of item of 'frames,' but that plaintiff refused. That defendant was ready, willing, and able to perform as per his bid, but plaintiff refused to allow him to do so."

The court found that the allegations of the complaint were true, and specifically found that the averments of the special defense were untrue. The defendant contends that the findings derive no support from the evidence, and that the court, in certain rulings upon the question of the legal propriety of certain evidence, committed prejudicial error.

The defendant first declares and contends that the finding that the parties entered into the contract for the alleged breach of which damages are asked by plaintiff in this action is afforded no support by the evidence. The finding so attacked, of course, constitutes the primary foundation of the judgment and without which the judgment, of course, could not stand. It is not conceived to be necessary to enter herein into a minute examination and consideration of the evidence to show, as a careful review of the record has convinced us is true, that the finding that the defendant breached his contract with plaintiff is sufficiently supported. As is true in the general run of cases taken to the appellate courts, there is here a substantial conflict in the evidence upon that vital question. The presentation herein of a general statement, in synoptical form, of the testimony which supports the finding referred to should be made, and even with such a statement considerable space in this opinion will be required.

[1] It appears, as the complaint alleges and the court found, that the defendant, on the 31st day of October, 1922, submitted a bid to the plaintiff for performing the metal and iron work described in the findings hereinabove set forth for the building mentioned in the complaint, and also for the furnishing of the materials necessary for such work. This bid, it appears from the testimony of defendant (who was called as a witness for examination by the plaintiff under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure), was submitted to plaintiff in response to an invitation therefor by the latter some two weeks prior to said 31st day of October. At the time said invitation was made, the defendant (so he testified) and M. C. Montgomery, "estimator" of the plaintiff, together "went over the plans and specifications." Defendant testified that, on said 31st day of October, he and Montgomery again jointly examined the plans and specifications, and that immediately thereafter on that day he (defendant) signed his bid. Wetzel further testified that his bid was reduced to writing by Montgomery in the office of the plaintiff in his (defendant's) presence; that the "figures" set forth in the bid "as they were marked down in prices had been given to them by myself over the telephone some days previous to this meeting and making out of this written document as to the price of this work." Wetzel stated that, after he was solicited to make a bid on the work and prior to submitting his bid, he prepared shop drawings of a part of the work. He stated that, on the 31st day of October, 1922, he went to the office of Montgomery in response to a telephone call from some party connected with the plaintiff. At that time, after stating to defendant that he had certain work for the performance of which he desired a bid from him (defendant), Montgomery proceeded to explain the character of the work to be done. Defendant testified that:

"In order to make it possible to make any bid at all on this work, Montgomery had a set of architectural plans * * * for the Burke building, * * * and pointed out on these plans what kind of work was to be done. Then Mr. Montgomery, having absolutely no details of any kind referring to this work, had to explain to me in a positive way in what manner and in which way we should make this bid, and what work was to be done, and how this particular work was to be treated."

Wetzel said that his business was that of a manufacturer of wrought iron and cast iron, and that he had followed that work for 20 years; that it was not possible to determine from the architectural plans "the class of cast iron store front to be used in that building." Wetzel proceeded to testify that:

"In order to have a complete understanding of the class of work to be incorporated in a cast iron store front it is necessary besides the set of architectural plans to have full size details * * * which carry the exact conditions of the work as it is carried out in its actual form, size and appearance and ornamentation."

Such details, he stated, were not shown by the specifications to which he subscribed his name and upon which he submitted his bid. Continuing, he testified:

"Referring to the conversation with Mr. Montgomery held prior to October 31, 1922, Mr. Montgomery explained to me just in what manner they expected this front to be designed by them in time, in detail work, and in order to make a bid for it he explained what parts of the work they expected to be furnished, and what parts of the work should not be considered. And as for the questions, which I have asked very many, Mr. Montgomery he has answered me. * * * In consequence of this conversation I based my price and all on this conversation. * * * At the time of this conversation with Mr. Montgomery he gave me a written paper or order, whatever you might call it, that indicated just what was wanted. There was more conversation on other work, also, if that is necessary to state. This is not all. And Mr. Montgomery conversed with me on this matter perhaps more than one hour, and brought out all detail work about the thing and the conversation to more than one hour. He also asked me how long this work should take, and all such things like that. We discussed the elevator doors, and as to what particular plans should be followed. * * * At the time that I submitted the estimate, Plaintiff's Exhibit 1, or prior to that, I had examined the plans and specifications. I had a set of architectural plans given to me for figuring, and I had my instructions as to the extent of the work from Mr. Montgomery, and on this I made my estimate. The plans that I had were supposed to be the architectural plans, either the set in evidence or one just like it."

The bid of Wetzel was dated October 31, 1922, was addressed to "Meyer & Holler, Milwaukee Building Co.," and was in form as follows:

"Gentlemen: I, we, propose to furnish, as per plans and specifications, all labor and materials for the iron front and doors work on Burke job.

"State alternate figures, additions, omissions, or discrepancies between plans and specifications:

Cast iron front complete.....	$3,452 00
Deduct for store doors only.....	280 00
Deduct for store doors frame.....	385 00
Deduct for lobby doors only.....	160 00
Deduct for lobby doors frame.....	340 00
Elevator doors as per Wetzel's details, using Elevator Supply Co.'s hangers.....	1,800 00
Elevator doors as per M. B. Co. detail pr. sheet No. 13, using Elevator Supply Co.'s hangers pr.....	1,800 00

"Time limit 3 mo.

"K. O. Wetzel Co.,
"Signed by Kurt O. Wetzel."

Wetzel testified that either on the 11th or 12th day of November, 1922, he received from plaintiff two written documents addressed to him (defendant) called "purchase orders," which contained a specification, in somewhat general language, of the work which he was to perform in pursuance of the terms of his bid. The first of these orders, as they are identified as exemplars in the record (Exhibit 2), called for the furnishing and installation of "complete elevator 'frames and' doors as per our plans and specifications and your bid, 10/31/22, $1,800." This document was signed by "J. O. Graham, Manager of Construction" of plaintiff. The second (Exhibit 3), likewise addressed and signed, read:

"Furnish and install complete ornamental wrought and cast iron front entrance and doors, except the lobby door and frame, which are omitted as per our plans and specifications and your bid 10/31/22, $2,952.00."

Accompanying the above, when sent to defendant, was a letter from the plaintiff by "E. A. Waugh, Manager of Construction," in which it was stated:

"We hand you herewith drawings Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of the Baker Iron Works covering the elevator door frames which they are furnishing on the Carleton F. Burke Bldg.; also your drawing of elevator doors which is approved by us."

Upon receiving said orders, Wetzel signed the specifications and plans. Wetzel did not, after receiving the "purchase orders," proceed with the carrying out of his agreement, and refused to do so. Wetzel claimed that the matter of the ornamentation of the iron work, as given in the specifications, was too indefinite to justify any attempt to figure on definitely or safely, even by estimate, and that the character thereof, when finally given in detail, deviated materially from the specifications as they were explained and interpreted by Montgomery in the conversation between him and the latter on October 31, 1922. There were other objections made by Wetzel to the order (Exhibit 3) for "passenger elevator frames and doors," in that his bid did not contemplate elevator "frames." But these matters are explained by other witnesses for the plaintiff, and their testimony will now be considered in its application to all the disputed questions of fact herein, and which, as above stated, affords strong support to all the vital findings. Before doing this, however, it is well here to say that Wetzel stated that:

"Ordinarily the giving of an order is an acceptance of the bid—an authorization to go ahead with the work. We took those as orders."

M. C. Montgomery, referred to above, testified to the details of the conversation with Wetzel on October 31, 1922, when the plans and specifications for the work on the Burke building, on which he (witness) had asked Wetzel to submit a bid, were fully discussed; that, before submitting his bid, Wetzel examined the plans and specifications (marked in the record as Exhibit 8)—

"and after doing so he submitted a bid and signed it. The words 'iron frames and sash' (claimed by Wetzel not included within his bid) were on the plans which were shown to Mr. Wetzel on the 31st of October. There is no change on these plans with reference to the iron work from what was on there on the 31st of October. That remains the same. I had no conversation with Mr. Wetzel along the line that he was not to do the sash. There was no understanding (as Wetzel here claims) between us that the sash was to be pine instead of iron. This is delineated as outlined upon these plans of the work which was to be done by Mr. Wetzel under his bid. We submitted these plans and specifications to other bidders in the same line of work, and got bids from other people for this very work. There were four bids, including Mr. Wetzel's. He was the lowest bidder. It is not the usual practice to have detail drawings, in order to bid on a job of this kind. The usual practice is to take what we call scale drawings, meaning small scale drawings, and submit them to the bidders or subcontractors for estimate, and the one that is finally successful in getting the work is then later on furnished with full-size enlarged scale details, in order to actually execute the work that he has bid on. It is always presumed that there is enough information in the small scale work to render an intelligent bid. It is the same with this set of plans. * * * I submitted it to those that I had originally taken bids from at the time Mr. Wetzel bid. I submitted it to the Architectural Iron Works, the Bayer-Rothgeb Company and the Lowth Iron Works, the same firms who bid about October 31st. I submitted these very plans, which were approved by Mr. Wetzel, those plans, plus some details that had been made in the meantime. The work was finally awarded to the Bayer-Rothgeb Company. * * * I do not know off-hand the amount of their bid. It was more than Mr. Wetzel's bid by $3,000 or $4,000, I think. The bid of the Bayer-Rothgeb Company was slightly lower than its original bid, in the neighborhood of $500 lower. The other bids which we received after February 3d were about the same as the original bids of those firms. I think they let the bids stand, as I recall it, just as they were. There might have been some slight modification."

Montgomery further testified that, prior to the submission of the bid by Wetzel, he had a conversation with the latter, as to which conversation he (Montgomery) testified:

"At that conversation I told Mr. Wetzel what we desired him to bid on. I outlined the work for him in a more or less helpful way. I submitted the plans and specifications and supplemented them with explanations. I do not recall exactly the conversation, but I remember of running over the plans and specifications with him and pointing out the fact that the job was a commercial job of iron work, such as is usually used in buildings of that type, and pointed out the features of the work that he was to do—the store fronts, elevators. I remember showing him the sketch of the elevator door, things which I thought might be of help in working up a price on it. I told him with respect to the cast iron store front that it was the ordinary commercial work for that class of building. From the architectural plans that we had before us at the time it is possible to determine very closely the amount of ornamentation which will go into that cast iron work. I think the drawings or architectural plans would cover the extent of the ornamentation fairly well. It would show the general character and nature of it, right on the face of it, whether it were elaborate or not on the small drawings. I remember of telling him that it would be a commercial job. In our practice, and I believe in iron work in general, we refer to a 'commercial job' as a job of the type you would use in the business district, to distinguish it from a finely hand wrought and hand work forged job that might be used in very high-class residential or public work. The term does not have reference to degree of ornamentation. It would not affect that, because in casting iron the ornamentation is not an important feature—the amount of it. We did not in that conversation mention sash."

Throughout his entire testimony, both on direct and cross examination, Montgomery repeatedly asseverated that the whole of the work upon which Wetzel was invited to and did submit a bid was fully and in detail explained to the latter.

The witness Graham, called on behalf of plaintiff, stated:

"That he was placing the orders and contracts at the time of the Burke job, and that he was instructed by Mr. Waugh that Wetzel was going to get the orders; that the orders were drawn by him, and that he called Wetzel to the office, showed him the plans and specifications, the order, and the bids; that Wetzel signed the plans and specifications, after looking at them, and took the orders with him; that Wetzel returned the following day and stated that the words 'elevator frames' appearing in the purchase order (Plaintiff's Exhibit 2) were improperly included; that he (Graham) immediately saw it was a typographical error; that Wetzel was told that the words stated did not belong there, and that the Baker Iron Works had the order for the frames, and that he then scratched out the words 'frames' on Wetzel's copy and on the office copy; that Wetzel then took the orders with him again and left the office, saying that he would go ahead with the work; that he did not at that time raise the question that the order called for wrought iron and cast iron front entrance and doors; that subsequently, and about January 26, a letter was written, sending Wetzel details of the Baker Iron Works for the elevator door frames that were needed by Wetzel to complete the work; that up to that date Wetzel had not given Graham any information that he would not go ahead with the work, although he had been in the office several times between November 15 and January 26; that, after the letter of January 26 was written, Wetzel came in with the orders and stated that they were not right, and left the orders with Graham, who told him that he would have to see Mr. Waugh; that later Wetzel came back to see Waugh, and afterwards Graham mailed the orders left back to Wetzel."

The witness Waugh, manager of construction for the respondent company at the time in question, testified:

"That Mr. Wetzel came to the place about the 1st of February; that the orders were there at that time; that Wetzel complained of the details elaborated on the plans and stated that he did not want to go ahead with the work; that he asked how they elaborated, and was informed that there were two particular items objected to by Wetzel: One was the cast iron stops, and the other was the steel sash on the mezzanine floor of the front. That he then informed Wetzel that the iron stops were not a part of his contract, and that if the company wanted them he would be given an additional order to cover the item, but that the item of sash was a part of the original contract, and was in the plans and specifications that had been signed. The witness Wetzel then said, 'Yes, that was the worst thing I ever did, was to sign those plans and specifications;' that Wetzel did not indicate at that conference that he would not go ahead with the work; that the Bayer-Rothgeb Company, the subsequently successful bidder, who performed the work, had no other form of contract except their bid and the purchase order or acceptance."

The witness Buxton, testifying for plaintiff, stated:

"That he was a draftsman, and had been engaged in that line of work for some 20 years, and was working for respondent company at the time in question; that after November 15 he had possibly six conversations with Wetzel regarding the iron work, discussing various features of the order; that certain changes and revisions were made pursuant to the directions of Wetzel, which were entirely in matters of detail; that in none of such conversations did Wetzel indicate that he was not going on with the contract; that there was no different work required in the details furnished Wetzel from that specified in the plans."

[2] The above digest of the testimony clearly shows that the contention that the finding that there was an acceptance of Wetzel's bid by the plaintiff is not supported by any evidence cannot be sustained. It is to be observed that Wetzel himself testified that:

"Ordinarily the giving of an order is an acceptance of the bid—an authorization to go ahead with the work."

Furthermore, Wetzel's conduct with reference to the transaction, after receiving the orders, plainly shows that he regarded and assumed that the sending of the orders to him amounted to an acceptance of his bid by plaintiff, and thus a completed contract. This testimony corresponds with that of the other parties submitting bids for the work. It was admitted by Wetzel that, in his deposition taken before the trial of this action, the main objections to the plans and specifications upon which he framed and submitted his bid revolved around the item of ornamentation—that is, that the nature and the extent of the ornamentation could not be determined from said plans and specifications. In the same deposition, it was shown at the trial, Wetzel stated that certain items which he claimed were not included in his bid "are not even of any great importance."

But further consideration herein of the evidence in detail upon the question whether the plaintiff accepted defendant's bid is not necessary. It is enough to say that these results, which are either expressly or impliedly within the court's findings, are clearly deducible from the evidence: That defendant, upon the small scale plans or drawings and the specifications, and also the conversations with Montgomery explaining the undelineated details of the work, based his bid; that the plans or drawings in their very nature contemplated extrinsic explanation of the smaller details as to ornamentation; that such a course is usual in such transactions, and known so to be by those experienced in iron and structural steel work; that the plaintiff accepted defendant's bid, after which further oral explanations as to details were made to defendant; that the latter, after such acceptance, pointed out to one of plaintiff's agents an item which was erroneously included in one of the purchase orders delivered to defendant, and that thereupon, acknowledging the error, plaintiff's agent struck out and eliminated said item from said purchase order; that at no time, when personally consulting any of plaintiff's agents about his bid after the same was ratified or accepted by the plaintiff, did Wetzel say or intimate that he did not intend to proceed with the execution of the terms of his agreement; and that he expressed no such intention until addressing to plaintiff a letter, dated February 3, 1923, to the effect that the details previously delivered to defendant by plaintiff (the purchase orders) so far deviated from "the intended work" as to justify him in declaring "your order canceled." From defendant's own testimony and his conduct with respect to the transaction, the court could expressly have found that the truth was that, after his bid had been accepted by plaintiff, he discovered and concluded that he had entered into an improvident agreement, from a financial point of view, and for that reason, and not because he was not given sufficient information as to details, etc., he resolved to repudiate his engagement. He specifically stated, it will be noted, that he based his bid on the drawings and his conversations with Montgomery.

[3] Of course, the effect of the testimony of the defendant and his witnesses, at variance with that introduced by the plaintiff upon the salient questions of fact, was merely to create a conflict, and the court's findings against the defendant are therefore conclusive upon this court, there being nothing in the plaintiff's evidence which marks it as inherently improbable, or such as to justify us in holding, as a matter of law, that it is not of sufficient probative force to uphold the decision in all respects.

[4] The first of the several assignments of error based upon certain rulings of the court urged here grows out of the ruling denying admission in evidence on the offer of defendant of a printed form which plaintiff sent to defendant for the purpose of inserting and so specifying therein his proposal or bid for the work. The form, save certain printed words indicating the different items of which the work was to consist and as to which the bid was to be made, was a blank, and, of course, was unsigned. The ruling excluding the paper was proper. We can conceive of no service which it could render as evidence in this case. The defendant's bid and the acceptance thereof by plaintiff, through or by means of the purchase orders, were, as seen, introduced in evidence. These, with the conversations between the several agents of the plaintiff, particularly the conversation with Montgomery, explaining the details of the work, and upon which, mainly, the defendant stated he based his bid, were all that were necessary to show, at least with approximate accuracy, the particular nature and extent of the work for the performance of which the plaintiff solicited the defendant to submit a bid. The blank form, therefore, could have reflected no light upon the proposition or any issue in the case.

[5] It is next objected that there was error in the ruling forestalling an answer to the question to the witness Montgomery on cross-examination by defendant's counsel as to whether the words "iron frames and sash," as contained in the plans and specifications upon which defendant framed and tendered his bid (Exhibit 8), "appeared upon the plans as recorded in the county recorder's office"; the original plans and specifications having been filed in the recorder's office with the original contract—that is, the contract for the erection of the building between plaintiff and the owners thereof. The ruling was correct. The defendant undeniably based his bid on "Exhibit 8," which, as seen, contained the words "iron frames and sash." We cannot conceive what relevant or possible purpose the fact, if it was a fact, that said words were not indicated on the original plans, could serve in the present case. It may be added that Montgomery stated that the plans recorded and the plans submitted to defendant were different in some of the matters of detail.

[6, 7] The point next urged is that it was error for the court to sustain the plaintiff's objection to the following question to defendant by his counsel:

"Have you determined whether or not they (Plaintiff's Exhibit 8) are similar plans to those from which you figured in order to submit your bid?"

The proposition which the question was designed to establish was that the words "iron frames and sash," which, as seen, were on "Exhibit 8," were not on the plans from which defendant made up his bid. Defendant elsewhere testified that those words were not on the plans according to which his bid was prepared. Counsel for defendant, on page 79 of his opening brief, expressly so admits, contending, however, that, the question being specific as to that matter, the ruling disallowing an answer thereto would show that the court "left out of consideration entirely that testimony in arriving at its conclusion as to what contract defendant made." The presumption is that the court, in deciding the case, considered all the relevant and material testimony received, and even incompetent testimony, if it was received without objection, as was the testimony of defendant on that subject. The ground upon which the court disallowed an answer to the question was that the plans themselves were the best evidence of the fact thus sought to be shown, and upon that ground the ruling was legally correct.

[8, 9] Over objection by defendant, the court permitted the witness Montgomery, in response to a question by counsel for plaintiff, to state what the bid by the Bayer-Rothgeb Company was for the work, when that company submitted its bid in the first instance, in comparison with other bids then made—that is, the bid of the Bayer-Rothgeb Company and other bids submitted in the first instance in the month of October, when defendant was the successful bidder. The purpose of this testimony was to show that the Bayer-Rothgeb bid was then substantially the same as its successful bid on the reletting of the contract in February, 1923, and also upon the matter of the measure of damages, as far as it might tend to do so, to show that the bid of said company on the reletting involved a reasonable price for the same work. We think the testimony was competent for that purpose. At any rate, the same question was elsewhere fully gone into without objection, and it was, therefore, in the record for all the purposes of the decision below.

[10] There are two other assignments under the present head. We will not give them special notice herein, though it may be said that, even if we were required to hold that they were technically erroneous, the testimony sought to be brought out by said questions was elsewhere permitted to go into the record without objection. The rulings, therefore, were harmless in their effect upon defendant's rights, assuming, but not deciding, that they involved error.

[11] Another question raised by the defendant here is that the award of damages was founded "upon a state of facts which the record does not support." The rule applicable to cases such as the one here is embraced within or declared by section 3300 of the Civil Code, as follows:

"For the breach of an obligation arising from contract, the measure of damages, except where otherwise expressly provided by this Code, is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom."

[12, 13] It was practically stipulated by and between counsel, on the close of the taking of the testimony, that the rule as to the measure of damages in the instant case is that adopted by the court in its findings and as established by the above section of the Civil Code. It is a well-established rule—at least, it may be so declared, so far as our own jurisdiction is concerned—that in a case, such as the one in hand, where a party has entered into a contract with another to perform certain services and furnish materials to be used in work to be done thereunder, the stipulated contract price therefor is some evidence of the reasonable value of such services and materials, and, further, that the contract price is itself sufficient evidence of the reasonable value of such services and materials in such a case to support a finding to that effect in the absence of any evidence to the contrary. Bacigalupi v. Phoenix Bldg., etc., Co., 14 Cal. App. 632, 112 P. 892, a case involving an action for damages for the abandonment before completion of a contract for the erection and construction of a building. See, also, Angell v. Hopkins, 79 Cal. 181, 21 P. 729; Bunting v. Salz, 3 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 193, 22 P. 1132; Greenebaum v. Taylor, 102 Cal. 624, 36 P. 957; Levy v. Scott, 115 Cal. 39, 46 P. 892; Dunne Invest. Co. v. Empire State Surety Co., 27 Cal. App. 208, 150 P. 405, 411; Wallace v. Ah Sam, 71 Cal. 197, 12 P. 46, 60 Am. Rep. 534. But, in the application of the foregoing rule in a particular case, it must appear that the later contract is in all substantial respects similar, in terms, conditions, specifications, and total price, to the contract which has been abandoned by the party originally agreeing to do the things which such contract requires to be performed or done. In other words, the later contract, if it materially exceeds in total price that of the original or abandoned contract, by reason of the inclusion therein of certain things to be done which were not embraced within the plans and specifications upon which the abandoned contract was based, can then, obviously, be taken as evidence of the reasonable value of the work to be performed and materials to be furnished to the extent only that the two contracts substantially correspond with respect to the plans and specifications, or the conditions and the terms according to which the work is to be done and the materials therefor to be furnished.

[14] Upon a re-examination of the evidence, we have been persuaded, as counsel for the appellant maintains is true, and as above it has been stated, that in material respects "the award of damages was founded 'upon a state of facts which the record does not support.'" The briefs of counsel fail to particularize, with the same degree of clarity as does the petition for a rehearing of this cause, the difference, as shown by the evidence, existing between the two contracts in respect to the specifications upon which the bids were respectively submitted to the respective contractors and in accord with which said contracts were respectively made. In their petition, counsel for the defendant show in detail the several and various items not contained in the specifications upon which the defendant submitted his bid for the work to be done and the materials required for performing the work and which items were contained in the specifications according to which the Bayer-Rothgeb Company tendered its bid and agreed to perform the work and provide the materials therefor. A careful comparison of the statement in the petition with the evidence has convinced us that the variance thus pointed out by counsel in that particular between the respective specifications is well-grounded.

We will therefore follow in a general way the petition for a rehearing in pointing out herein the items which should be excluded from the award of damages as fixed by the judgment. These consisted of the following: (1) Cast iron stops to hold the glass on the front of the building in position, as called for by the Bayer-Rothgeb specifications and contract, in lieu of copper stops, as provided for in the defendant's specifications and contract, and a marquee, admittedly not in the defendant's specifications, but introduced for the first time in those of Bayer-Rothgeb Company, the excess in the cost of cast iron stops over copper stops being from "$150 to $200," as was shown by the uncontradicted testimony of the witness C. R. Fleishman, secretary of the defendant, and the additional expense created by the introduction of the marquee into the Bayer-Rothgeb contract over and above the total price provided in the contract of the defendant, being from $15 to $20. (2) Geared hangers called for by the Bayer-Rothgeb plans, specifications, and contract, instead of nongearred hangers as contained in the defendant's bid and called for by his contract; the excess in cost of geared hangers as called for by the Bayer-Rothgeb contract over nongearred hangers, as called for by the defendant's contract, being the sum of $360. The total of these, as figured by the defendant, upon the basis of the minimum sums at which the two items first named (the glass stops and the marquee) are respectively estimated, is the sum of $525, in which sum the damages awarded by the judgment must be reduced.

The Bayer-Rothgeb contract, or the total price for which it was stipulated therein that said concern would do the work described in said contract and furnish the materials therefor, is itself sufficient evidence, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, of the reasonable value of such work and materials, in so far as the same corresponds or conforms, in the character and the extent thereof with the work and the materials called for by the defendant's contract. In other words, with the elimination from the Bayer-Rothgeb contract of those items set forth in its plans and specifications, and consequently contained in its contract, and which items were not shown on the plans and specifications upon which the defendant submitted his bid, the contract of the former, or the total price for which the Bayer-Rothgeb Company thereby agreed to do the work and furnish the materials therefor, is, as it thus stands, itself sufficient evidence of the reasonable value of such work and materials, no countervailing proof upon that question having been introduced in the case.

The judgment is hereby modified, by deducting from the amount of damages thereby awarded the sum of $525, and, as so modified, it is affirmed.

CORCORAN v. HARRIS, Judge of Superior Court. (Civ. 6467.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 14, 1928.

1. Execution ⚡393—Judgment debtor may be required to appear before referee appointed in county other than where judgment was recovered, if he resides or has business there (Code Civ. Proc. § 714).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 714, superior court has power to appoint referee in another county, and to require judgment debtor to appear before such referee, if judgment debtor resides, or has his place of business in county in which he is required to appear.

2. Execution ⚡374—Judgment creditor entitled to order requiring judgment debtor to appear for examination cannot harass debtor to no purpose (Code Civ. Proc. § 714).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 714, providing that, when execution against property of judgment debtor is returned unsatisfied, judgment creditor "is entitled to" order requiring judgment debtor to appear and answer concerning his property, judgment creditor is not permitted to harass judgment debtor to no purpose.

3. Execution ⚡380—Second examination of judgment debtor is within superior court's discretion and should not be made, unless new facts are disclosed.

Second order of examination of judgment debtor is wholly within discretion of superior court, and should not be made, unless new facts are disclosed to court which were not known to judgment creditor at time of former hearing.

4. Courts ⚡475(1)—Power to order arrest of judgment debtor and require appearance held within exclusive jurisdiction of superior court in county where judgment was rendered and cause pending (Code Civ. Proc. § 715).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 715, power to order arrest of judgment debtor and require him to enter into undertaking to appear when directed, and not to dispose of any property in meantime is within exclusive jurisdiction of superior court in county where judgment was entered and cause pending.

5. Execution ⚡371, 393—Order for examining judgment debtor should issue out of superior court in county in which judgment was entered or referee should be appointed in county of debtor's residence or place of business (Code Civ. Proc. § 714).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 714, order for examination of judgment debtor should issue out of superior court sitting in county in which judgment was entered, and if judgment debtor neither resides nor has his place of business in such county, same court should appoint referee to hear matter in county of debtor's residence or place of business.

Application for writ of prohibition by David Corcoran to restrain Hon. T. W. Harris, as Judge of the Superior Court, from proceeding further under an order of examination. Writ granted.

E. S. Page, W. E. Rode, and Laurence R. Chilcote, all of Oakland, for petitioner.

Earle Warren, Dist. Atty., and R. H. Chamberlain, Jr., Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, and Jack A. Seaman, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is an original application for prohibition seeking to restrain the respondent, as judge of the superior court in Alameda county, from proceeding further under an order of examination issued by him under a judgment rendered in Los Angeles county. The theory of petitioner is that the superior court of the county where the judgment has been rendered and where execution has been returned unsatisfied has sole jurisdiction to direct the judgment debtor to appear and be examined. The proceedings were instituted under section 714, Code of Civil Procedure, which reads:

"When an execution against property of the judgment debtor, or of any one of several debtors in the same judgment, issued to the sheriff of the county where he resides, or if he does not reside in this state, to the sheriff of the county where the judgment roll is filed, is returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, the judgment creditor, at any time after such return is made, is entitled to an order from a judge of the court, requiring such judgment debtor to appear and answer concerning his property before such judge, or a referee appointed by him, at a time and place specified in the order; but no judgment debtor must be required to attend before a judge or referee out of the county in which he resides or in which he has a place of business."

[1-4] The power of the superior court to appoint a referee in another county and to require the judgment debtor to appear before such referee has never been denied, if the judgment debtor resides or has his place of business in the county in which he is required to appear. Though the section provides that the judgment creditor "is entitled to" such an order, it is not designed to permit him to harass the judgment debtor to no purpose. This would seem to follow from the well-settled rule that a second order of examination is wholly within the discretion of the superior court, and that it should not be made unless new facts are disclosed to the court which were not known to the judgment creditor at the time of the former hearing. Watson v. Pryor, 49 Cal. App. 554, 193 P. 797; People v. McKamy, 28 Cal. App. 196, 151 P. 743; McCullough v. Clark, 41 Cal. 298. Under section 715, Code of Civil Procedure, the superior court may order the arrest of a judgment debtor and may require him to enter into an undertaking that he will appear when directed, and that he will not, in the meantime, dispose of any of his property not exempt from execution. This power is likewise lodged in the discretion of the court. But to say that the superior court has discretion to make such orders is idle, unless we hold that the power rests alone in the superior court sitting in the county where the judgment was entered and the cause pending. Otherwise two or more courts might make conflicting orders at the same time upon the same subject-matter without any relief to the parties aggrieved.

[5] Section 714 appears in the chapter of the Code entitled proceedings supplemental to execution. It follows immediately the chapter relating to execution of judgments. In many of the sections of this chapter covering the issuance of the writ, the stay, the service, the order for a new writ, and the order for injunctive relief, the expression "the court" is used in the same manner as it is used in section 714. The long-established practice has been that such orders should issue out of the court sitting in the county where the cause is pending. The same practice has been followed generally as to orders issued under section 714, and respondent has failed to advance any reason why this practice should be departed from.

We are satisfied that the proper construction of section 714 is that an order for the examination of a judgment debtor should issue out of the superior court sitting in the county in which the judgment was entered, and that, if the judgment debtor neither resides nor has his place of business in such county, the same court should appoint a referee to hear the matter in the county of the debtor's residence or place of business. It follows that, in the matter complained of, the respondent was without jurisdiction to make the order.

Let a peremptory writ issue.

CONSUMERS' SALT CO. v. RIGGINS. ★ (Civ. 6143.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 13, 1928.

Rehearing Granted Oct. 11, 1928.

1. Mandamus ☞129—Mandamus lies to compel delivery of corporate seal, books, etc., to newly elected secretary.

Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel delivery of corporate seal, books, etc., by former secretary to newly elected secretary of corporation.

2. Appeal and error ☞437—Judgment requiring issuance of new stock certificate to adjudged owner is not vacated by appeal and deposit of certificate to stay judgment (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 944, 946).

Judgment requiring cancellation of stock certificate and issuance of new one to person adjudged rightful owner is not vacated by appeal and deposit of new certificate with clerk of court on condition that judgment be stayed, under Code Civ. Proc. § 944, but is held in abeyance pending appeal, under section 946, and certificate is ineffective for any purpose, since reversal of judgment would render it a nullity.

3. Mandamus ☞5—Corporation secretary, elected by vote of holder of majority stock certificate issued under suspended judgment, from which appeal was pending, held not entitled to mandamus to deliver corporate seal, books, etc., pending determination of such appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 944; Civ. Code, § 312).

Corporation and one elected secretary by vote of one adjudged rightful owner of certificate for majority of stock issued under stayed judgment, from which appeal was pending, will not be granted writ of mandate, requiring former secretary to deliver corporate seal, books, etc., to new secretary, pending appeal from such judgment, on theory that one may not go behind legal title to stock, as disclosed by corporate books, to determine ownership thereof for voting purposes, under Civ. Code, § 312, where such books showed that new stock certificate, required to be issued by such judgment, was issued and deposited with clerk to stay judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 944.

Application by the Consumers' Salt Company and C. L. Mullholand for a writ of mandate requiring J. R. Riggins to deliver the corporate seal, books, etc., to petitioners. Writ denied.

Harry M. Irwin, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Newby & Newby, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The petitioners are a corporation organized under the laws of this state and a stockholder claiming to be its newly elected secretary, who pray a writ of mandate requiring the respondent Riggins, Mullholand's predecessor, to deliver to them the corporate seal, books, papers, etc., of said corporation. Respondent contends that his alleged successor was not legally elected, and is therefore not entitled to hold the office of secretary, or to demand possession of its records.

It appears that prior to said election, and on September 16, 1927, in a suit involving the ownership of certificate No. 40, for 225,000 of a total issue of 300,010 shares outstanding of the capital stock of the corporation, judgment was rendered decreeing that one B. D. McAlvay was the rightful owner thereof, and that said certificate be canceled and a new one issued to him therefor. On November 15, 1927, the defendant in that proceeding, petitioner herein, appealed from such judgment, and respondent alleges that, solely for the purpose of staying execution pending the appeal, he caused said certificate to be canceled, a new one numbered 47, for the same number of shares, to be issued, and deposited with the clerk of the superior court.

It is also alleged that the new certificate bore a statement in writing that it was issued only upon condition that judgment be stayed, under the provisions of section 944 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to abide its final determination, and that the same conditions were entered in writing upon the stock books of the corporation. Thereafter, and on July 16, 1928, at a stockholders' meeting, which was regularly called, Mullholand and McAlvay and three other stockholders were declared elected directors, for each of whom the former voted 93,750 shares, and the latter voted 225,000 shares. A meeting of directors was then called for the election of officers, whereupon the petitioner Mullholand was declared elected secretary. He thereafter demanded of respondent Riggins, the former secretary, possession of the office and its paraphernalia, which was refused.

The petitioners contend that, notwithstanding the appeal, certificate No. 40 was canceled and a new one issued by action of the corporation, that the sole test of the right to ownership of stock is the entry thereof in the corporate books, and that the judgment was self-executing. Respondent insists that by appeal and deposit of said certificate the judgment was stayed, and hence that it was of no force or effect; that McAlvay was not the owner of the 225,000 shares which he voted for the election of Mullholand as director, and that the latter was therefore not legally qualified for the office of secretary or entitled to possession of the records demanded.

The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to the instant controversy are as follows:

Section 943 recites, in part, as follows:

"If the judgment or order appealed from direct the assignment or delivery of documents or personal property, the execution of the judgment or order cannot be stayed by appeal, unless the things required to be assigned or delivered be placed in the custody of such officer or receiver as the court may appoint, or unless an undertaking be entered into. * * *

Section 944 provides that:

"If the judgment or order appealed from, direct the execution of a conveyance or other instrument, the execution of the judgment or order cannot be stayed by the appeal until the instrument is executed and deposited with the clerk with whom the judgment or order is entered, to abide the judgment of the appellate court."

Section 946 further provides:

"Whenever an appeal is perfected, as provided in the preceding sections of this chapter, it stays all further proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from, or upon the matters embraced therein. * * *

[1, 2] If the petitioners be entitled to the relief prayed, we think it settled beyond question that mandamus is the proper remedy. Potomac Oil Co. v. Dye, 10 Cal. App. 534, 102 P. 677. However, that petitioners' interpretation of section 312 of the Civil Code, and decisions construing the same, that "every person, * * * having stock in his own name on the stock-books of the corporation at least ten days prior to the election," is entitled to vote under all circumstances, is not supported by the authorities cited. Petitioners' argument is founded upon the theory that one may not go behind the legal title of stock as disclosed by the corporate books to determine ownership for voting purposes. In the instant case, however, the ownership of said stock is a question in litigation. the certificate in question was issued and deposited with the clerk for the purpose of staying the operation of a judgment declaring petitioner Mullholland to be the owner, and the face of the corporate books definitely show that fact. The judgment is not vacated by such appeal and deposit, but it is held in abeyance pending appeal, and the certificate is ineffective for any purpose, since a reversal of the judgment would render it a nullity. Di Nola v. Allison, 143 Cal. 106, 76 P. 976, 65 L. R. A. 419, 101 Am. St. Rep. 84; United States Oil & Land Co. v. Bell (C. C. A. 9th Cir.) 219 F. 790. This question was presented under a similar statute in Durfee v. Harper, 22 Mont. 373, 56 P. 589, wherein it was said:

"The object of the law in requiring an executed certificate to be deposited with that official was to preserve the rights of parties until it might be determined by this court who owned the stock; and until such determination there could be no delivery of it, and no exercise of ownership by using those incidental rights dependent upon the decision of this court as to the ownership. A contrary ruling would oftentimes make a stay of execution by appeal valueless; for it would not stop the doing of acts to prevent which the suit may have been brought, and which, if done, are equivalent to the possession of all that the lower court may have awarded the successful party."

[3] That B. D. McAlvay is even a legal stockholder is a question depending upon a judgment which is temporarily suspended; hence the official capacities of C. L. Mullholland as director and secretary are likewise contingent upon McAlvay's title to the stock. To decide the question presented by this proceeding would require anticipation of an affirmation of the judgment upon appeal, which involves issues not before us.

The writ of mandate is denied.

LOBINGIER v. SKINNER. (Civ. 5822.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 29, 1928.

1. Mortgages $\S$ 32(1)—Agreements by third parties with plaintiff and defendant securing payments of notes held a mortgage.

Plaintiff took a deed from persons not parties to action for the purpose of securing payment of certain moneys to bank of which he was an officer. In return therefor, plaintiff executed in favor of such parties an agreement termed a contract of sale, agreeing to sell property to them and setting forth certain notes to be paid plaintiff. The parties giving the deed entered into another somewhat similar agreement with defendant and entered into two other agreements, termed supplemental to original, with plaintiff. Held, in an action to quiet title between mortgagees, that, in view of Civ. Code, $\S$ 2924, such agreements constituted in effect a mortgage, in which plaintiff with his two prior liens was the first mortgagee and defendant the second.

2. Mortgages $\S$ 435—Demurrer to complaint in foreclosure for nonjoinder of mortgagors shown to have conveyed all their interest to plaintiff before action held properly overruled.

In action to quiet title, where case was made out as clearly an action to foreclose a mortgage, demurrer to plaintiff's complaint for failing to join certain third parties who were mortgagors, where they were shown to have conveyed all their interest in property to plaintiff before commencement of action, making it unnecessary to join them as parties, and where defendant neglected to bring them in as parties in cross-complaint filed by him, held properly overruled.

3. Mortgages $\S$ 559(6), 568—Defendant in foreclosure, not naming mortgagors in cross-complaint, cannot recover judgment against them on note, but can only litigate claim to priority of lien.

In foreclosure action, defendant not naming mortgagors as parties in his cross-complaint cannot recover personal judgment against either of them on note made by them, but can only litigate his claim to priority of lien and a share in proceeds of foreclosure sale.

4. Mortgages $\S$ 487—Decree of sale in mortgage foreclosure without equity of redemption held to violate statute (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 700a et seq.; Civ. Code, $\S$ 2889).

In action to quiet title determined to be merely mortgage foreclosure action, decree for sale to be made without equity of redemption held violation of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 700a et seq., in that defendant had lien on land by way of mortgage and had right of redemption; such being favored in law under Civ. Code, $\S$ 2889.

5. Mortgages $\S$ 458—Filing supplemental complaint on day findings and judgment in mortgage foreclosure were signed held not material error.

That supplemental complaint served on defendant in foreclosure action was not filed until day when findings and judgment were signed and evidence was received and proof of expenditures made in care and protection of property by plaintiff after commencement of action and in accordance with mortgage contract which were beneficial to defendant as well as other parties held not a material error.

6. Mortgages $\S$ 563—As respects validity of disposition of proceeds of sale, defendant in foreclosure, not served with notice terminating mortgagors' rights to redeem and of quitclaim deed to plaintiff, held not prejudiced.

As respects validity of disposition of proceeds of sale, defendant in foreclosure action held not unduly prejudiced by not being served notice of rescission given third parties as mortgagors, terminating their rights to redeem property, and by quitclaim deed made by mortgagors to plaintiff; defendant's lien being as effective after as before notice was served and quitclaim deed executed.

7. Mortgages ⚡563—Distribution of money from sale of land held in accordance with mortgagee's written authorization, not objected to for several years thereafter.

In mortgage foreclosure action, distribution of money realized from sale of part of land after establishment of plaintiff's prior lien held authorized by defendant's written authorization to pay certain sum which was not disputed, where defendant made no objection to distribution for several years thereafter.

8. Mortgages ⚡200(2), 490—Mortgagor's contract to pay taxes after March 1st, A. D., without year date, held meaningless, not obligating plaintiff mortgagee to pay any of taxes and not precluding him from charging reclaiming costs on foreclosure.

Plaintiff as mortgagee contracted with mortgagors not parties to action to pay all taxes and assessments on property to March 1st, A. D., after which the mortgagors were to pay such items; held that, without a year date being stated, as a covenant standing alone, clause is meaningless, and connected with evidence by court cannot be construed as meaning that it was intended plaintiff was to be obligated to pay any of taxes, therefore not making it the fault of plaintiff that property was sold for taxes, precluding him from charging reclaiming costs against proceeds of tax sale.

9. Appeal and error ⚡152—Judgment ordering sale of property in mortgage foreclosure without equity of redemption should be corrected to allow redemption.

In action to quiet title, where facts were found completely sustaining instead an action for foreclosure of mortgage, notwithstanding its denomination by plaintiff, held that portion of judgment ordering property sold without equity of redemption should be corrected in that respect; a new trial being unnecessary.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Action by J. F. Lobingier against Henry Skinner. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed as modified.

Sloan Pitzer, of Alhambra, for appellant.

Nichols, Cooper & Hickson, of Pomona, for respondent.

YORK, J. [1] The complaint in this action denominates it "an action to quiet title," but it is clear from the facts alleged in the complaint and in the answer and cross-complaint of the appellant, Skinner, and from the facts found by the court, which facts were supported by the evidence, that it is nothing more nor less than an action to foreclose a mortgage. The legal title to the property in question was vested in the plaintiff by a deed to him dated June 26, 1914, and was made to him for the purpose of securing the payment of certain moneys to the American National Bank of Pomona, which bank had provided the funds to secure this conveyance to plaintiff at the request of Jennie Atkins Carette. She became the equitable owner of the property by virtue of this deed, the title to which was vested in the plaintiff as trustee for her, and title to the same was held by such trustee merely to secure the payment of the funds advanced by the American National Bank of Pomona; the said plaintiff being an officer of that bank. At the time the conveyance was made to plaintiff, he executed to Mrs. Carette what was termed a "contract of sale," agreeing to sell the property conveyed to him to Jennie Atkins Carette, the terms of which contract of sale set forth certain promissory notes wherein she promises to pay plaintiff the aggregate sum of $8,059. This contract of sale was made on June 27, 1914, and was in the usual form of contracts of sales of real estate, some of the provisions of which will be referred to later. The plaintiff, who was such trustee, was in fact acting for Mrs. Carette and the American National Bank of Pomona, and said moneys were due said bank, a fact not appearing on the face of the papers. On October 26, 1917, another contract was entered into by Jennie Atkins Carette and her husband, Charles J. Carette, and the plaintiff, denominated an "agreement supplemental" to that of June 27, 1914, wherein said Carettes agreed to secure the payment of two additional notes made by them and payable to plaintiff in the aggregate sum of $2,620. Said supplemental agreement also provided that plaintiff should be secured thereby in any additional sums due by said Carettes to plaintiff, not exceeding in the aggregate amounts $10,500. It was understood by the Carettes that said plaintiff had no personal interest in said transactions and that he was acting for the said bank.

On November 6, 1917, said Carettes entered into another agreement with plaintiff, denominated an "agreement supplemental" to the agreement of June 27, 1914, wherein they (the said Carettes) agreed that $3,350 due from Jennie Atkins Carette to the said Skinner should be secured subject to the liens of the American National Bank of Pomona, which were created by said contract of June 27, 1914, and said so-called supplemental contract of October 26, 1917. Said sum of $3,350 was evidenced by a promissory note of even date, signed by both the Carettes, and payable to said Skinner. These agreements constituted in effect a mortgage in which plaintiff, with his two prior liens, was the first mortgagee and defendant, Skinner, was the second mortgagee. Section 2924, Civ. Code; section 744, Code Civ. Proc. The court finds sufficient facts to sustain a judgment of foreclosure, and adjudges that the plaintiff holds a first lien upon the therein described lands in the sum of $15,346.61, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 14th day of April, 1925, to the date of payment of the sum prior to any right, title, or interest of any of the defendants; that Henry Skinner (the only appellant) has a second lien thereon in the sum of $3,638.74, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from April 14, 1925, to date of payment, which lien is found by the court to be a second lien and subject to the claim and lien of plaintiff. These are the only liens to be considered on this appeal. The court then orders the property sold at public auction as one parcel by a commissioner appointed by the court. It then orders the sale to "be made without equity of redemption," and that "upon the completion of said sale the commissioner shall execute a deed to the purchaser at such sale," and that "Henry Skinner * * * and all persons claiming from or under them * * * and subsequent to the filing of the notice of the pendency of the action * * * be forever barred and foreclosed of and from all equity of redemption * * * after the delivery of said commissioner's deed." The commissioner is ordered from the proceeds of the sale to pay, first, the fees and expenses of said sale; second, the costs of suit due the plaintiff; third, to pay plaintiff $15,346.61, with interest from April 14, 1925, at 7 per cent. per annum, and from the remainder, if any, to pay to said Skinner $3,636.74, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum from April 14, 1925. The further provisions as to the application of the proceeds of such sale are not material in the consideration of this appeal.

[2,3] Appellant contends that the demurrer he interposed to plaintiff's complaint should have been sustained because of non-joinder of parties, in that Charles J. Carette and Jennie Atkins Carette (held herein to be mortgagors) were necessary parties to the action. The case made out is clearly an action to foreclose a mortgage, and the fact that the Carettes had conveyed all their interest in the property to plaintiff before the action was commenced, rendered it unnecessary to make either of them parties as to plaintiff's cause of action. Defendant, Skinner, filed a cross-complaint and had the opportunity to bring both the Carettes in as parties thereto, but neglected to do so. Not having done so, he cannot, of course, recover a personal judgment against either of them on his promissory note made by them. He could only litigate his claim to priority of lien and a share in the proceeds of the sale.

[4] Appellant's contention that, if Jennie Atkins Carette has an interest in said property or the proceeds of the sale thereof, he is entitled to enforce his claim against that interest by reason of the fact that he had a mortgage on the land and her deed to plaintiff did not release Skinner's mortgage thereon, though true, is not in point. During the trial it was not contended that that deed released said Skinner's mortgage. The judgment recognized his lien, but the decree of foreclosure contains the provision, "It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said sale shall be made without equity of redemption," and that "upon the completion of said sale the said commissioner shall execute a deed to the purchaser or purchasers of said property at such sale." This clause we construed to be a violation of section 700a et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, in that said Skinner had a lien on said land by way of mortgage and had a right of redemption from such sale. Rights of redemption are favored in law. Section 2889, Civ. Code. There was no failure to find upon material issues. The appellant's contention on that point was on matters not material to the adjudication of the case.

[5] Appellant complains that on the 23d day of April, 1925, a supplemental complaint was served on appellant and on the 25th day of April, 1925, he filed written exceptions thereto, and that the supplemental complaint was not filed until the day when the findings and judgment were signed. But this was not a material error. Evidence was received in proof of expenditures made in the care and protection of the property by plaintiff after the commencement of the action, and in accordance with stipulations in the mortgage contract. These were beneficial to appellant, as well as to all parties interested.

[6] The charge of fraud against plaintiff is wholly without foundation. The contract of October 26, 1917, made between plaintiff and the Carettes, was for securing an indebtedness due the American National Bank for moneys owned to it by the Carettes which had been loaned them by the bank to care for and improve the property in question. There was no false representation on the part of any one, and the contract of November 6, 1917, in favor of Skinner was made to secure the indebtedness of Charles J. Carette to the said Skinner if the property should be more than sufficient to pay plaintiff's claim. This contract, as made, specifically stated that the Skinner lien was subordinate to the liens created by the two prior agreements; therefore citations to section of the Civil Code and decisions relating to breaches of trust by a trustee are not in point. The claim that appellant was unduly prejudiced by a notice of rescission that was given to the Carettes, terminating their rights to purchase said property without notice to appellant, and by the quitclaim deed that was made by Carettes to plaintiff without notice to appellant, has no merit or force, in that neither of said acts affected appellant's rights in the premises. Appellant's lien was as effective after as before the said notice was served and said quitclaim deed executed.

[7] After the claim of lien of appellant had been established by contract with the Carettes and plaintiff, appellant, in writing (by his attorney, Sloan Pitzer), authorized the American National Bank to sell about 8 acres of said property when it could pay to appellant his proportion of the proceeds of said sale, after deducting $1,000 for the said Jennie Atkins Carette, $300 for Edward Winterer, held to be third lien claimant, cost of survey, and certificate of title, the balance to be divided between the bank and appellant under a certain contract of June 27, 1914, in proportion to the amount due each under said contract. Here it may be noted that the contracts subsequent to that of June 27, 1914, were considered and treated as supplemental of the original contract. The sale was made for $8,840, and a division of the purchase price was made as follows:

Jennie Atkins Carette.....	$1,000 00
Edward Winterer.....	330 00
Henry Skinner.....	1,574 00
Taxes paid.....	32 33
Certificate of title and recording.....	31 80
Applied to Lobingier contract.....	5,871 82

Or a total disbursed of..... $8,840 00

Appellant now contends that said distribution was not made in accordance with his authorization, and therefore that the judgment for plaintiff should have been for a less sum. Appellant testified that he was not consulted before the payments were made, that they did not consult with him before they paid $1,000 to Mrs. Carette; but his written authorization to pay Mrs. Carette that sum is not disputed, and there is no contention as to this payment by any one but appellant. As to the amount appellant received, he does not specify what he should have received, and there is no evidence that the Carettes received any further proceeds of said sale. Appellant received from the American National Bank a statement of the disbursements of the proceeds of this sale, a check for $1,574, stated to be his portion, cashed it, and made no objection to the distribution of the proceeds of the sale for several years thereafter.

[8] Appellant contends that an amount paid by plaintiff to restore to plaintiff the title to the property after it had been sold for taxes, and a deed made by the state conveying the title to one J. J. Richart should not have been allowed plaintiff, in that it was, as alleged by appellant, the fault of the plaintiff that the property was sold for taxes. The contract made between the plaintiff and Jennie Atkins Carette, which we hold to have been a mortgage to plaintiff as trustee for the payment of certain moneys to the American National Bank of Pomona, in form a contract of purchase and sale, contained these provisions:

"And said party of the second part (Jennie Atkins Carette) further agrees to pay all taxes and assessments of every kind and nature levied or assessed on or against the said premises, and each and every part thereof, from and after the first day of March, A. D. —, inclusive of the said latter date, and the said party of the first part (Lobingier) hereby agrees to pay all taxes and assessments levied or assessed on or against said premises prior to said date."

The circumstances considered by the trial court were that the Carettes were really owners of the property at the time the contract of June 27, 1914, was made; that the respondent had no interest in it; that he took the title to secure an indebtedness to the American National Bank of Pomona, and in the negotiations leading up to the making of the contract nothing was said about plaintiff paying any taxes. Without a year date being stated, as a covenant standing alone, it is meaningless. Connected with the evidence taken by the court, it cannot be construed as meaning that it was intended that plaintiff was to be obligated to pay any of the taxes. It was therefore not the fault of the plaintiff that the property was sold for taxes, and he should not be required to deduct the cost of reclaiming it from the holder of the title under the tax sale, from the proceeds of the sale under judgment of foreclosure. The court therefore did not commit an error in adjudicating the amount due the plaintiff because of the expense of obtaining a deed from the purchaser from the state.

Appellant's contention that plaintiff should not have been allowed interest except on the notes is not sustained by the evidence. The contract distinctly provides that interest on all sums paid by plaintiff which plaintiff was authorized to pay under the terms of the contract should be repaid to him, "together with interest from the date of payment at the same rate of interest as is provided to be paid in the notes hereinbefore set out." The interest was allowed on items where payments had been made in accordance with the said contract.

The contention that the Carettes were to have five days' notice to perform is not founded on the evidence, in that the Carettes requested plaintiff to do the work and make the expenditures, and appellant was benefited rather than prejudiced by the payments made by plaintiff in protecting the property. The contract which was made by and between plaintiff and Charles J. Carette and Jennie Atkins Carette for the purpose of securing the payment of two notes payable to plaintiff, one in the sum of $500 and the other in the sum of $2,120, was denominated a "supplemental agreement" to that of June 27, 1914, and provided for securing the payment thereof on the property described in said contract of June 27, 1914, and "additional sums" advanced by plaintiff to them, not exceeding $10,500. Under this agreement it appears that plaintiff advanced to the Carettes two sums of $75 and $675.

[9] That portion of the judgment which orders the property sold without equity of redemption cannot be sustained. The facts found are so complete in sustaining an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage, which this action was, notwithstanding its denomination, that a new trial is unnecessary, and the judgment will be complete with the correction indicated.

It is ordered that there be, and there is hereby, stricken from said judgment the clause, "that said sale shall be made without equity of redemption," and, as so modified, said judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

94 Cal. App. 7

PEOPLE v. KASPAROFF. (Cr. 1681.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 12, 1928.

1. Arson §37(1)—Evidence held sufficient for conviction of burning insured house with intent to defraud.

Evidence on prosecution for burning insured house with intent to defraud held sufficient to prove the corpus delicti, and that defendant was the guilty person.

2. Criminal law §1036(1)—Objection at time is necessary for error in admission of evidence.

That there may be error in admission of evidence, it is necessary that there be objection at the time.

3. Criminal law §404(4)—Rug, with part burned cut off, held admissible on prosecution for burning insured house and contents.

That rug was partly burned in the fire, and that after its return to defendant the burned part was cut off, held enough to justify its admission on prosecution for burning insured house and contents with intent to defraud.

4. Criminal law §1036(9)—In view of limited purpose of offer, and waiver of objection by counsel, error held not predicable on admission of photographs in arson case.

Error cannot be predicated on admission of photographs taken at the house five days after the fire, which defendant was charged with setting to obtain insurance, they having been offered merely for purpose of illustration in connection with descriptive testimony, and defendant's attorney having stated that he had no objection, when it was suggested that the photographs be shown to the jury.

5. Criminal law §681(1)—Exclusion of vial of camphorated oil, offered in arson case to account for smell of oil, held not error; it not being shown to have been in possession of occupant.

Refusal to permit defendant in arson case to introduce in evidence a vial of camphorated oil, offered in connection with evidence that an inmate of the house had been using camphorated oil, in support of theory that this might have accounted for the smell of oil where rug was on fire, held not error, there having been no evidence that the vial had been in the possession of the occupant.

6. Criminal law §665(1)—Matter of excluding witnesses during trial is in court's discretion.

Exclusion of witnesses from courtroom during trial is a matter committed to the court's discretion; so that, in the absence of a showing of abuse of such discretion, it is not ground for complaint that the court refused to exclude some of them.

7. Criminal law §1144(14)—That jury was instructed to consider only the evidence, and not statements of counsel, in determining facts, may be presumed.

There being no complaint of the instructions, it may be presumed that the jury was instructed that statements of counsel are not evidence, and that only the evidence should be considered in its determination of the facts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Pete Kasparoff was convicted of arson, and was denied a new trial, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. M. Astor, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., and Hugh McIsaac, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

CONREY, P. J. By information duly filed the defendant was accused of three offenses, to wit, the crime of burning insured property with intent to defraud an insurance company, the crime of attempt to commit murder by attempting to kill and murder one Satinig Kasparoff, and the crime of attempt to commit murder by attempting to kill and murder one Katrina Kasparoff. It was alleged that these three offenses were connected together in their commission. By verdict of the jury, the defendant was acquitted on the two charges of attempt to commit murder, and was convicted on the first count; that is to say, of the crime of burning insured property. Having been duly sentenced, he appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] Appellant contends that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict of conviction, and particularly that the corpus delicti was not proven. The fire occurred on the night of December 26, 1926. The house was owned by the defendant, and was occupied by defendant with his wife and children, together with Satinig Kasparoff and her daughter Katrina. Satinig was the widow of defendant's deceased brother. The mother and daughter occupied a room by themselves in the house. Not only was the fact proven that the house was partially burned that night, but there was evidence that the fire was of incendiary origin, and there was evidence pointing to the defendant as the author of the conflagration. It was shown that defendant had purchased the house for $350, and had moved it to a parcel of land held by him and Satinig in joint tenancy, and that defendant had insured the house and its furnishings and a small garage for a total sum of $2,800. There was much evidence concerning financial transactions between defendant and Satinig Kasparoff, concerning moneys belonging to her. While this evidence related more directly to the charge of attempt to murder, it also had some relation in connection with the insurance, to the element of motive which might have induced defendant to set the fire. Without more extensively outlining the details of the story, it plainly enough appears that the evidence is sufficient to prove the corpus delicti, and that defendant was the guilty person.

[2] Appellant contends that the court erred in its rulings upon four items of evidence, viz. in allowing one Parsegian to testify to conversations of Satinig Kasparoff with Mrs. Parsegian when defendant was not present; in admitting in evidence a certain rug, not shown to be in the same condition as when taken from the building or before the fire; in admitting in evidence some photographs and maps made at the house five days after the fire, and not in the presence of the defendant; in refusing to allow defendant to introduce in evidence a small vial of camphorated oil. The circumstances concerning admission of said testimony of the witness Parsegian were as follows:

During cross-examination by defendant's counsel of the witness Katrina Kasparoff (Anaratian), Katrina was asked to say when she first told the story concerning the fire and the attempt upon her life. Katrina replied that a week after the fire she told a friend, Shazda Parsegian. Thereafter the prosecution called Mrs. Parsegian, and asked her whether or not Katrina had conversed with her at the time stated, and had informed her of the circumstances of the fire. To this question the defendant made no objection. Mrs. Parsegian answered in the affirmative, but did not give the details of the conversation; those details were then brought out by the defendant on cross-examination, in the face of objections made by the district attorney. The matter was further developed—chiefly for purposes of explanation—on redirect examination. We see no error in any rulings of the court upon any objections then made, and the item is, at all events, of comparatively slight importance.

[3] There was testimony of witnesses to the effect that at the time of the fire they saw a rug on the floor of the room occupied by Satinig Kasparoff and her daughter; that this rug was on fire, and that there was a smell as of kerosene. Two days afterward this rug was taken in charge by officers of the fire department, who produced it in the justice's court, where a complaint had been filed against Peter Kasparoff. After that proceeding had been dismissed, the rug was delivered back to defendant. After the present prosecution had been commenced, the same rug was taken from the defendant's possession; but in the meantime the burned part of it had been cut off. The only point made in support of the objection to the introduction of the rug in evidence is that there were two days between the time of the fire and the time when the rug was first taken from defendant's house, and that no evidence was produced to show that it was in the same condition as when taken from the building, or before the fire. It is argued that, under these facts, there is no evidence that any smell of kerosene remaining on the rug was due to any condition existing at the time of the fire. This point was not made in support of the objection at the trial. The testimony that the rug had been partially burned, and that the burned part had been cut off after the rug was returned to Kasparoff was alone sufficient to justify its reception in evidence.

[4] In support of appellant's claim that the court erred in admitting in evidence photographs taken at the house five days after the fire, appellant does not refer us to the places in the record where the evidence and rulings on this matter should be found. Our own investigation, however, shows that these photographs were offered merely for purposes of illustration in connection with descriptive testimony. Also we observe that, when it was suggested that these photographs be shown to the jurors, the attorney for the defendant stated that he had no objection.

[5] The court did not err in refusing to permit defendant to introduce in evidence the vial of camphorated oil. This offer was made in connection with some evidence that Satinig Kasparoff had been using camphorated oil after an injury to her shoulder. The offer was made in support of a theory that this might have accounted for the smell of oil in the rug. There was no evidence that the vial offered in evidence had ever been in the possession of the woman. The item is of no importance, and the court did not err in its ruling.

[6] The only other grounds of appeal presented by appellant are that the court abused its discretion in refusing to exclude all of the witnesses from the courtroom, and call them in one by one, and that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in his opening statement of the case, in certain suggestions that he intended to show that defendant's brother, John Kasparoff, had met with a violent death at a time when defendant was present, thereby insinuating that defendant had been the cause of his death.

The common rule is that the exclusion of witnesses from the courtroom during a trial is a matter committed to the discretion of the court. In this case the court did require, as to the witnesses Sating Kasparoff and her daughter, that each one be absent during the testimony of the other. There was no abuse of discretion in refusing to exclude the other witnesses, and there is nothing to indicate any prejudice to defendant by reason of the court's ruling in this matter.

[7] In regard to the alleged misconduct of the district attorney, counsel for appellant has not cited enough of the record to show that the statement made by the district attorney was improperly made, or to show that any assignment of error was made at that time. The quoted statement of the district attorney in fact suggests the supposition that John Kasparoff was killed in some way by the machinery in the pump house where his death occurred. No complaint is made concerning instructions given by the court to the jury, and it may be presumed that, as is usual, the jury was instructed that statements of counsel are not evidence, and that the jury should consider only the evidence in its determination of the facts.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

ROWELL v. WESTERN MOTOR TRANSPORT CO. et al. (Civ. 6312.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 14, 1928.

1. Evidence $\S$ 450(5)—Terms of contract of assumption of obligations, if of doubtful or ambiguous meaning, may be explained by extrinsic evidence.

As in case of any other contract, meaning of any terms of contract of assumption of obligations, if doubtful or ambiguous as to obligations assumed, may be explained by extrinsic evidence.

2. Sales $\S$ 58—Liabilities of seller of business assumed by buyer held, in view of practical construction by parties, not to include seller's future liability under employment of another.

Under provision of contract of sale of business, whereby buyer assumed and agreed to pay "the liabilities of the seller as they existed at the close of business on the 30th day of September, 1921, but not to exceed $103,500," the seller having reported liabilities as of that date aggregating $102,498.85, made up exclusively of current liabilities actually payable as of the date named, and not including any contingent liabilities, and indicated other liabilities without specifically showing them, and the parties having acted thereon, they will be held to have put a practical construction on the contract, showing that future liability on contracts of employment by the seller were not intended to be assumed by the buyer.

3. Corporations $\S$ 590(3)—Corporation, merely because buying business of another, held not liable on obligation of seller.

Defendant corporation, which bought the business of the corporation by which plaintiff was employed, is not liable on the obligation to plaintiff of his employer, in the absence of contract of assumption of such obligation; it not being shown that the seller had breached plaintiff's contract, or that the consideration for the transfer was diverted from the seller to its stockholders, or that there was any fraud, there being no showing of lack of consideration, or that seller was left without assets, or that defendant was simply a reorganization of the old company under a new name, with practically the same assets, stockholders, and directors.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by L. G. Rowell against the Western Motor Transport Company and another. From judgment for plaintiff, against defendant California Transit Company, said defendant appeals. Reversed.

Earl A. Bagby, of Oakland, for appellant.

Frank J. Blake, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BUCK, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an action to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff by reason of his unlawful discharge prior to the expiration of the terms of his employment. The employment in question was based upon a contract entered into between plaintiff and defendant Western Motor Transport Company, which contract and the liability thereon were alleged to have been assumed by the defendant California Transit Company, who thereafter discharged the plaintiff.

The case was tried before the court without a jury. Neither of the defendants offered any evidence on their own behalf, and the case was submitted upon the evidence educed on behalf of the plaintiff. The court thereupon made findings and gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant California Transit Company, in the sum of $4,500, and in favor of the defendant Western Motor Transport Company, for its costs. From this judgment, the defendant California Transit Company alone appeals.

The main ground of the appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding of the court that the appellant assumed the obligations of plaintiff's contract of employment. The contract of employment was for the term of three years from September 15, 1921, at a monthly salary. On the 7th day of the following November the Western Motor Transport Company entered into a written contract with the appellant, whereby the first-named company sold and delivered to the appellant "all of the property and assets of every kind and nature owned by the seller save and except its franchise as a corporation," upon the condition that the—

"buyer shall and will pay seller for said property, as soon as permitted so to do by order of the California Railroad Commission, 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the buyer, of the par value of $100 each. * * * Buyer hereby assumes and agrees to pay and discharge the liabilities of seller as they existed at the close of business on the 30th day of September, 1921, but not to exceed the sum of $103,500, and further assumes and agrees to pay the liabilities of seller, if any, incurred since said date in the conduct of the business of seller. This agreement shall not be effective until the sale herein provided for, and the stock issue herein agreed to have been approved by the California Railroad Commission."

Thereafter, on February 8, 1922, after both companies had appeared before the Railroad Commission in pursuance of the statute, such a showing was made that the commission made the following order:

"Western Motor Transport Company, having applied to the Railroad Commission for permission to transfer its operative rights to the California Transit Company, and California Transit Company having asked authority to acquire such operative rights, and to issue $183,500 of common stock, and to assume indebtedness, a public hearing having been held, and the Railroad Commission being of the opinion that the money, property, or labor to be procured or paid for through the issue of $100,000 of stock, and the assumption of indebtedness in the amount of not exceeding $103,500, is reasonably required by California Transit Company, and that this application should be granted, subject to the conditions of this order:

"It is hereby ordered that California Transit Company be and it is hereby authorized to issue $100,000 par value of its common stock to Western Motor Transport Company, and to assume not exceeding $103,500 of indebtedness of Western Motor Transport Company, all for the purpose of acquiring the properties of the Western Motor Transport described in this application.

"It is hereby further ordered that this application, in so far as it relates to the issue of $83,500 of stock, be dismissed without prejudice.

"The authority herein granted is subject to further conditions as follows:

"(a) The $100,000 of stock which California Transit Company is herein authorized to issue shall be delivered to Western Motor Transport Company as part payment for the properties, which it is herein authorized to sell to California Transit Company.

"(b) Western Motor Transport Company shall, within 10 days from the effective date of this order, file with this commission a stipulation agreeing not to distribute any of the $100,000 of stock until all claims of creditors have been satisfied."

This order was accepted and acted upon by both corporations; the seller proceeding to liquidate its business, and the buyer continuing to operate with the plaintiff in its service at the same salary as was provided for in his contract until April 1, 1924, when he was discharged without his consent.

[1] Respondent relies upon the well-established principle of equity that, though he was not a party to the contract of November 7, between the corporations, or expressly mentioned therein or directly referred to, he was nevertheless entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the obligee, and to avoid circuity of action he could bring suit on the contract if he comes within a class of persons expressly intended to be benefited by the appellant's assumption of liability. Section 1539, Civ. Code; 6 Cal. Jur. 469, et seq.

But the same equity which permits the plaintiff to be subrogated does not require that the obligor whom he is permitted to sue shall be bound to any greater or broader assumption of liability than is justified by the terms of the contract of assumption. This rule was applied in the case of Walker v. Selma Fruit Company, Inc., 177 Cal. 525, 171 P. 309. See also, Sherwood v. Gill, 36 Cal. App. 707, 173 P. 171. Also, as in the case of any other contract, the meaning of any of the terms of the contract of assumption, if doubtful or ambiguous, may be explained by extrinsic evidence.

[2] At the outset it should be noted that the contract of November 7th herein does not, like many of the cases relied upon by the respondent, expressly state that the purchaser assumes "all of the debts and liabilities of the seller." on the contrary, in the case at bar, the purchaser agreed only to assume "the liabilities of the seller as they existed at the close of business on the 30th day of September, 1921, but not to exceed $103,500."

It is therefore evident, both as regards the identity, as well as the class, of liabilities intended to be assumed, that the above description is doubtful until its meaning can be made certain by some proper rule of interpretation. As stated in volume 6, California Jurisprudence, at page 304, with numerous citations:

"It is well recognized that the terms of a contract may be manifested by conduct when not stated in words. And where the meaning is doubtful the acts of the parties done under a contract afford one of the most reliable means of arriving at their intention. The law recognizes the practical construction of a contract as the best evidence of what was intended by the provisions. 'Contemporaneous exposition is in general the best.'"

The first "acts of the parties done under the contract" of November 7th were in obvious pursuance of the provision of the contract that it be approved by the Railroad Commission; for, in order to provide the commission with evidence upon which it could base its approval, it appears from the proceedings introduced in evidence that "the Western Motor Transport Company reports its assets and liabilities as of September 30, 1921," and the commission accordingly finds that:

"Its liabilities of the same date, payment of which will be assumed by the California Transit Company, are reported to aggregate $102,498.85; the record showing, however, that certain other liabilities exist which do not appear on the company's balance sheet."

Now, in referring to the balance sheet just mentioned, it appears that the aggregate of $102,498.85 "which will be assumed by the California Transit Company" is made up exclusively of current liabilities actually payable as of September 30, 1921, and do not include any contingent liabilities of the class or kind represented by plaintiff's contract of employment. The final order of the commission set forth above, approving "the assumption of liabilities not in excess of $103,500," is obviously based upon the above finding of liabilities in the sum of $102,498.85 as identified, plus "other liabilities" not shown in the balance sheet, but—under the rule ejusdem generis—of the same class of liabilities as the identified $102,498.85. And the final conduct of the parties, in accepting and acting with full knowledge upon the above order as made, would further indicate that the parties were placing a like construction upon the language of the order when it classified the liabilities to be assumed as above. In the absence of fraud, which is not attempted to be alleged, or proven, or found in this case, we cannot substitute for the intention of the parties as above expressed some other or broader intent which counsel may argue the parties should have had but did not express.

[3] Counsel also contends that, irrespective of the contract of November 7, 1921, the money judgment herein should be sustained because, as he states:

"The established doctrine of the law is that, when one corporation takes over all the assets of another corporation, the continuing corporation, irrespective of the existence or absence of an express agreement, must also shoulder all the liabilities of the transferor, nor can any agreement tending to limit those liabilities or exclude any of them affect the rights of any obligee of the transferring corporation."

This doctrine, with its necessary and proper limitations, is illustrated in the cases cited by counsel. See, also, very full annotations in 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1119, and 15 A. L. R. 1114. The reason of the rule as generally stated is that the assets of a corporation constitute a trust fund for the benefit of the creditors, which may not through either actual or constructive fraud, be fraudulently diverted to the detriment of the creditors. But in the case at bar there are no findings, either made or justified by the evidence, which would bring this case within the rule relied upon by counsel, so as to sustain the money judgment entered herein.

In the first place, it is not shown that the company transferring its assets had, prior to or at the time of the transfer, or at all, breached plaintiff's contract. Nor is it shown that the consideration for the transfer was diverted from the transferring corporation unlawfully, or at all, to its stockholders. Both these circumstances were made to appear in the complaint sustained in the case of Schaake v. Eagle, etc., 135 Cal. 472, 63 P. 1025, 67 P. 759, relied upon by counsel. Nor is there any allegation of actual fraud, or any sufficient showing of constructive fraud; for there is no showing of any lack of consideration actually received by the transferring company, or that such company is insolvent, or that the company was left without assets, or that the transferee corporation was simply a reorganization of the old company under a new name, with practically the same assets, stockholders, and directors, as appeared in the other California cases relied upon by counsel, all of which are cited or referred to in the later case of Stanford Hotel v. M. Schwind Company, 180 Cal. 348 at page 354, 181 P. 780, 783.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

UNRUH v. KAUFFMAN et al. (L. A. 8322.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 26, 1928.

1. Corporations ~~§~~264—Stockholder's liability for corporation's indebtedness for work done held not barred by limitations on theory that work was completed before incorporation, in view of contract provisions and tentative character of prior oral agreements (Civ. Code, § 322; Code Civ. Proc. § 359).

Stockholder's liability, under Civ. Code, § 322, for corporation's indebtedness for work done, held not barred by three years' limitation prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 359, on theory that all work was completed when corporation was formed, where written contract, though referring to prior oral agreements as to commissions, percentage of work completed and amount paid therefor, provided for completion of work and payment for services performed and "to be performed," and contained important covenants not in parol agreements, which were but tentative understandings to be reduced to writing when corporation was formed.

2. Corporations ~~§~~269(2)—Defendant stockholder's letter, recognizing plaintiff's services to corporation in practically amount claimed, within limitation period, held admissible on issue whether action was barred (Code Civ. Proc. § 359; Civ. Code, § 322).

In action against stockholder under Civ. Code, § 322, for compensation for services rendered to corporation, letter signed by defendant as president thereof, recognizing services in practically amount claimed, on date within three years' limitation period prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 359, held admissible on issue whether action was barred.

3. Pleading ~~§~~236(3)—Permitting trial amendment of complaint is largely within trial court's discretion.

Permitting plaintiff to file an amended complaint during trial is largely within the discretion of the trial court.

4. Corporations ~~§~~271—Whether stockholder, sued for corporation's indebtedness, owned stock or held it as trustee, was fact question for trial court (Civ. Code, § 322).

In action against stockholders under Civ. Code, § 322, for compensation for services rendered to corporation, whether principal stockholder was owner of all stock in his name or held it as trustee for others was a question of fact to be determined by the trial court.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action by David S. Unruh against Milton Kauffman and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Woodruff & Shoemaker and Clyde C. Shoemaker, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bradner W. Lee, Jr., Bradner W. Lee, and Kenyon F. Lee, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. The question presented by this appeal is whether the action brought against the stockholders of a corporation upon the personal liability provision of section 322, Civil Code, for compensation for services rendered said corporation under a contract entered into by said corporation, and the claimant is barred by the provisions of section 359, Code of Civil Procedure. The trial court held that it was not; hence the appeal.

In 1912, Milton Kauffman, appellant herein and a defendant at the trial, purchased a tract of unimproved land, consisting of about 2,000 acres, and known as tract 2371, from the E. J. Baldwin estate, for the purpose of bringing the same into a high state of development and offering lots and parcels thereof for resale in accordance with a plan of subdivision which he had in contemplation. David S. Unruh, a civil engineer, was acquainted with the lands purchased, as both he and said Milton Kauffman either had owned or did then own small tracts of land situate in the vicinity of said tract 2371 prior to the purchase of the latter by said Milton Kauffman. Kauffman and Unruh entered into an agreement whereby Unruh was to do the surveying, subdividing, laying out of, and grading the streets, and such other work of engineering as would bring said lands into a state of improvement and development that would make them readily marketable. Said improvement included the development of a water system for irrigation purposes of a capacity sufficient to produce upon said lands citrus fruits, as well as expensive land improvements not necessary here to describe. From the inception of the purchase of said lands by Kauffman it was agreed between him and Unruh, who consulted and advised with Kauffman in the matter, that as soon as feasible a corporation was to be formed and said tract of 2,000 acres was to be conveyed to it in consideration of a certain number of shares of stock of said corporation to be issued to said Kauffman as would be fair and just in the premises. Kauffman and Unruh agreed that in the meantime the latter should begin the work of construction, development, and subdivision as was forecast by the project. In furtherance of said plan, the Valencia Heights Water Company was incorporated November 6, 1912, and, by amended articles thereafter filed, it became a mutual water company operated for the benefit of the landowners.

Unruh commenced the work of construction, development, and subdivision during the fall of 1912. It was the agreement of Kauffman and Unruh from the beginning of their contractual negotiations that Unruh was to receive as compensation for all services rendered by him in connection with said tract 2371, comprising 2,000 acres of land, which services included the development of water, sinking of wells, building of reservoirs, laying out and grading of streets, subdivision, and other development work, a commission computed upon a sales price valuation of the lands to be fixed when the subdivision was finally completed and a map thereof was placed of record. Said map was recorded July 8, 1913. The method of fixing the basis of the compensation which Unruh was to receive for all services performed by him was orally agreed to in March of said year 1913. The corporation, which it was agreed from the first should be formed to finance and handle the project, was incorporated April 17, 1914, and was given the corporate name Valencia Groves Company. The capital stock consisted of 500,000 shares. Only about 2,003 shares were fully paid for or issued. Practically all of said stock issue—1,991 shares—was held and owned by Milton Kauffman. The other few shares were issued for organization purposes only. Milton Kauffman was the president treasurer manager of said corporation. It was understood between said Kauffman and Unruh from the commencement of their business engagements that Unruh was to receive as compensation for all services rendered by him $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. commission on the sales price of the land. The oral agreement was definite as to the payment of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. commission, but was silent as to some of the subjects contained in the written contract, and lacked definiteness in a number of other respects. Kauffman declined to enter into a written contract with Unruh until the corporation was formed. Said contract was then made in the name of the corporation. This contract was entered into May 5, 1915, and expressly approved a prior verbal agreement or understanding existing between the corporation and Unruh, whereby Unruh was to receive for his services for subdividing said property and for completing the construction and development work thereon a commission of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., computed upon the sum of \$421,583.30, the agreed valuation of said lots, to be paid in installments at the time of the sale of said lots under whatever terms or conditions said lots should be sold or agreed to be sold. It was further stipulated that 75 per cent. of the work required of said Unruh under his contract of employment had been done, and that he had received as part payment for his services \$875.31. Said contract further provided that the corporation, "in consideration of the services performed and to be performed by the second party [Unruh], agrees to pay the second party the further sum of \$9,663.90, at the times and in the manner hereinafter set forth, * * * the balance remaining unpaid of said $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the total valuation of said lots, according to the schedule of valuation hereinabove referred to." It was also agreed that, if said amount, to wit, \$9,- 663.90, or any part thereof, should remain unpaid for a period of 2 years from the date of said agreement, to wit, May 5, 1917, said amount or any unpaid portion thereof should immediately become due and payable; further, that, if Unruh should within the period of 6 months from the date of said contract, to wit, November 5, 1915, and prior to the completion of his work, for any cause discontinue his services to the corporation within such time without the consent of said corporation and without its fault, then, in that event, said corporation should be required to pay only 75 per cent. of any part of said \$9,663.90 then remaining unpaid at the time of said discontinuance of services. Said contract also provided that, if said Unruh should discontinue his services without the consent of said corporation and without fault on its part at any time within a period of $1\frac{1}{2}$ years from November 5, 1915, and prior to the completion of his work on said property, then the corporation was required to pay him only 80 per cent. of such sum as then remained unpaid; provided that, if the first party should at any time prior to May 5, 1917, or prior to the completion of the work on said property, dispense with the services of Unruh without his consent and without his fault, then he might demand from the corporation 80 per cent. of the sum then remaining unpaid, which sum should immediately become due and payable to said Unruh, and, when paid to him, should be in full settlement of any or all demands of said Unruh for services rendered by him. The above contract, in substance set forth, was executed in the name of Valencia Groves Company, a corporation, by Milton Kauffman, president, Ira W. Black, secretary, and David S. Unruh.

It is appellant's contention, putting it in his exact language:

"* * * That the question of the defendant's statutory stockholders' liability is not affected by the later special contract in writing, dated May 5, 1915, and that the action, having been commenced on May 3, 1918, is barred by the provisions of section 359 and subdivision 1 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as having been commenced more than 3 years after the liability was incurred by the corporation."

[1] Appellant insists that the liability of stockholder Kauffman for practically all of the corporation's indebtedness to Unruh (section 322, Civ. Code) was barred by the 3 years' limitation prescribed by section 359, Code of Civil Procedure, prior to the filing of said complaint, to wit, May 3, 1918. Appellant takes the position that all of the work performed by Unruh was completed prior to, or not later than, the day on which the corporation was formed, to wit, April 17, 1914, and that whatever liability attached to Kauffman as a stockholder under preorganization oral agreements or other agreements thereafter made was barred before the action was commenced. This argument is buttressed on certain paragraphs contained in the written contract of May 5, 1915. We do not think that the interpretation placed upon the contract by appellant is sustained by the instrument considered in its entirety, or that it should be so construed in the light of the circumstances of the transaction. It is true that the preamble of the written agreement makes reference to certain prior oral agreements, such as the rate of commissions on the gross valuation of said lands and the percentage of the work completed at the time the contract was executed and the amount paid Unruh on account thereof, but it will be noted that in said preambulatory paragraphs provision is made for the completion of said construction and development work, and the first sentence of the contract following said recitals or preambles is the following:

"Now, therefore, it is agreed as follows: The first party [corporation], in consideration of the services performed and to be performed by the second party [Unruh]. * * *" (Italics supplied.)

[2] Moreover, under the alleged previous oral understanding, Unruh was to receive his commission in installments as and at the time of the sale of said lots, whereas by the terms of said written contract, if any part of the commission computed on a $421,583.30 valuation of said tract 2371 should remain unpaid May 5, 1917, 2 years from the day of said contract, then said unpaid remainder was to immediately become due and payable. Other important covenants appear in the written contract which were not included in any parol agreement. In fact, there are a sufficient number of material agreements and conditions in the written contract which were not mentioned in the parol agreements as to have justified the trial court in finding them to be separate contracts. Besides, it is the clear development of the situation that the first engagements were but tentative understandings, subject to change as the interests of the project would require. At best, the oral agreements from the beginning were very little more than agreements or understandings between Kauffman and Unruh that a corporation was to be formed to handle the project, and, when formed, their engagements were to be composed and reduced to writing. Neither party had at any time prior to the execution of the written contract a concrete, definite notion as to the exact form said tentative plans, as discussed through several years, would finally assume. Both seemed to rely upon the sound judgment and fair-mindedness of the other, and were willing and intended to abide the time when all of the tentative matters would mature into concrete form and substance. The record shows that Unruh did perform services after the written agreement was entered into, and that he held himself ready to perform and did perform future services as in said contract provided. That the corporation encountered financial misfortunes was no fault of his, and he did not default in any of his agreements. A letter written by the corporation as late as May 10, 1917, to the attorney of Unruh and signed by Milton Kauffman, president of said corporation, recognizes the services rendered by Unruh in practically the amount claimed by him. No error was committed in receiving it in evidence. It will be borne in mind that prior to the formation of the corporation Kauffman was the owner of the land which he placed upon the market, and afterwards he was the active manager of said corporation and owned all of its stock except 10 or 11 shares held by his brother and the attorney for organization and administration purposes. His control of the corporation affairs was as complete and continuous after incorporation as it had been at any prior period.

Counsel for appellant relies upon Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 612, 34 P. 335, 37 Am. St. Rep. 87, and Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, 171 Cal. 500, 153 P. 939, and other cases of that type as authorities here for a holding that the statute of limitations commenced to run against Unruh at the moment of, if indeed not prior to, the formation of the corporation, on the theory that corporate liability then attached. We think those cases cannot be accepted as aids to the appellant in consummating respondent's defeat under the circumstances of this case. The facts herein are widely different from those treated in the cited cases. The application of the rule in those cases was proper; in the instant case it would be inappropriate and bring about an inequitable situation and one not originally in the contemplation of the parties.

[3] The court did not commit error in permitting the plaintiff during trial to file an amended complaint. That was a matter largely within the discretion of the trial court, and the defendant did not lose any substantial right thereby.

[4] As to whether Kauffman was the owner of all the stock which stood in his name or that his uncle and another were the owners of a portion thereof and Kauffman held the same as trustee for them, was a question of fact to be determined by the trial court. It cannot be said that there is no evidence to sustain the trial court's conclusion on this and other issues presented upon the trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.

PARSONS et al. v. LUHR et al.
(S. F. 12100.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 15, 1928.

1. Nuisance — 36—It was immaterial whether tree found to be nuisance, was located wholly on plaintiff's land or on boundary, as respects abatement.

Where large eucalyptus tree was found by court to be a nuisance, and plaintiff was ordered to abate it by removing its trunk and roots, extending into defendants' land, it was immaterial whether tree was situated wholly on land of plaintiff, or on the boundary line, and whether defendants' land was planted to lawn and garden, or only to lawn.

2. Trial — 361—Where findings justified conclusion that tree near boundary was nuisance, clerical error in another finding held not to preclude judgment directing abatement thereof.

Where other findings were sufficient to justify conclusion that large eucalyptus tree on or near boundary line was a nuisance, mere clerical error in another finding that leaves continually fell from tree and covered lawn and garden of "plaintiffs," so as to give it an untidy appearance, though defendants' property was intended to be referred to therein, held immaterial, and did not preclude judgment requiring plaintiffs to abate nuisance, by removing branches and roots extending into defendants' land.

3. Nuisance — 33—Evidence held to sustain finding that large eucalyptus tree on or near boundary was nuisance (Civ. Code, § 3479).

Finding that large eucalyptus tree on or near boundary between plaintiffs' and defendants' properties was a constant menace to defendants' property, and therefore a nuisance, under Civ. Code, § 3479, held sustained by the evidence.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by E. B. Parsons and another against G. W. Luhr and another, in which defendants filed cross-complaint. From the judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Fred L. Dreher and J. Ed McClellan, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Earl J. Sinclair and George G. Olshausen, both of Berkeley, and Howard H. Desky, of Oakland, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. Appeal by plaintiffs and cross-defendants from a judgment against them, ordering them to remove a eucalyptus tree which is growing on the boundary line between the property of the plaintiffs and the property of the defendants. The action was commenced by plaintiffs, who alleged that the tree in question was a large eucalyptus tree, having a circumference of approximately 8 feet; that it was planted for ornamentation and shade; that the trunk stands partly on the land of plaintiffs and partly on the land of defendants; that defendants have threatened and now threaten to cut down or injure or destroy said tree. It is alleged that said tree is of the age of approximately 25 years, and cannot be replaced, if destroyed, and that, unless defendants are restrained, they will cause irreparable damage to plaintiffs. An injunction is asked.

The answer and cross-complaint denies that the trunk of said tree stands partly on the lands of plaintiffs and partly upon the lands of defendants, and alleges that only a portion of the roots of said tree and certain limbs of said tree project and extend over the lands of said defendants, and further alleges:

"That it has not been their intention at any time to cut down or destroy said tree, but simply to remove those portions of the limbs and roots thereof which extend over and upon the property of said defendants."

The pleading then continues with allegations to the effect that said eucalyptus tree has been growing upon the land of plaintiffs for many years; that it has been allowed to grow to such size that it has caused damage to the land of defendants, by lessening its value, and that, by reason of its enormous size and brittle qualities, it is a constant menace to the house and property of said defendants; that in the past limbs have fallen from said tree, endangering the lives and property of said defendants; that the land of defendants is planted with lawn and garden, and that the roots from said tree sap the land of said defendants, and extract therefrom the elements necessary to permit the growth of such lawn and garden; that the leaves continually fall from said tree, and so cover the lawn and garden of plaintiffs as to give it an untidy appearance; that the said tree, by reason of the facts alleged, constitutes a nuisance. It is prayed that the nuisance be abated, and that the plaintiffs be directed to remove the tree.

The trial court found that the parties were adjoining landowners; that for many years prior to and at the time of the trial of said action there was growing upon the land of plaintiff a large eucalyptus tree; that said tree had been allowed by said plaintiffs to grow to such a size that it has crowded over onto the land of defendants, and has pushed its roots into the land of defendants, and has and still continues to cause damage to the land of said defendants, by lessening its value, and that by reason of its enormous size and brittle qualities it is a constant menace to the house and property of said defendants; that in the past limbs have fallen from said tree, endangering the lives and property of said defendants; that the land of defendants is planted to lawn and garden, and that the roots from said tree sap the land of said defendants and extract therefrom the elements necessary to permit the growth of such lawn and garden; that leaves continually fall from said tree and so cover the lawn and garden of plaintiffs as to give it an untidy appearance. There are also omnibus findings to the effect that all the allegations of defendants' cross-complaint and answer are true, except as otherwise found, and that all the allegations of plaintiffs' complaint and of plaintiffs' answer to the cross-complaint are untrue, except as otherwise found. The judgment ordered plaintiffs to abate said tree as a nuisance by removing its trunk and its roots extending into the land of defendants.

[1] Upon the appeal it is argued at great length that the findings are not sustained by the evidence. We have examined the transcript, and have ascertained that the findings, in so far as they are material to the judgment, are abundantly supported by the record. Since the tree was found to be a nuisance, it is immaterial whether it is situated wholly on the land of plaintiffs, or on the boundary line between the lands of the parties. It is also immaterial whether the defendants' land was planted to lawn and garden, or only to lawn, as contended for by appellants.

[2] A further argument is made against the judgment because of the obvious clerical error in the finding that "the leaves continually fall from said tree and so cover the lawn and garden of plaintiffs as to give it an untidy appearance." This finding followed the allegation in the cross-complaint relating to this matter, and it is obvious from a reading of that pleading that a clerical error was made by the pleader, and copied by the one drawing the findings. The evidence is to the effect that the leaves fell from the tree and covered the porch and lawn of defendants. It would seem that this court should have and does have power to correct obvious typographical errors, such as this one, and it has been so held. Caine v. Polkinghorn, 54 Cal. App. 387, 389, 201 P. 936. However, if that power be lacking, the finding, read literally, would be no bar to the judgment; it would simply be immaterial, and the other findings would be sufficient to justify the conclusion that the tree was a nuisance. A question similar to the problem in the instant case was presented in the case of Stevens v. Moon, 54 Cal. App. 737, 202 P. 961, wherein it was decided that roots of eucalyptus trees, projecting into the land of neighbors and killing vegetation, by depriving such vegetation of nourishment and moisture, constitute such trees a nuisance. See, also, Shevlin v. Johnston, 56 Cal. App. 563, 205 P. 1087.

[3] The finding that the tree in question was a constant menace to the property of the defendants is sustained by the testimony to the effect that in the past large branches had fallen on the roof and porch of defendants' house, one of such branches tearing a hole in the roof; that the leaves filled the gutters, and littered the porch and lawn. Clearly, under the testimony appearing in the record here and the findings of the trial court, this tree was "an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property." Sec. 3479, Civ. Code.

The judgment is affirmed.

MCINTYRE et al. v. CONSOLIDATED WATER CO. et al. (L. A. 10104.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 22, 1928.

1. Waters and water courses $\S$ 156(5)—Rate contract between water company and owners of water rights held not to affect such rights (Const. art. 14).

Where S. deeded right to certain quantity of water and proportionate interest in wells to plaintiffs' predecessor, and thereafter conveyed his property, including wells and water system, to a water company subject to plaintiffs' rights, and, because of uncertainties as to extent of plaintiffs' rights, water company entered into contract with plaintiffs, fixing rate for distribution of water to them and expressly recognizing their prior rights, held that plaintiffs' rights were not affected by the later contract, regardless of validity thereof, nor fact that water company was public utility under Const. art. 14, since part of water from a single source may be devoted to public service and part retained for private use.

2. Waters and water courses $\S$ 156(9)—Landowners having interests in water and supply system, by consenting to sale of system to public utility, held not to have abandoned their rights.

That privately owned water system was sold by defendant water company to defendant city and became part of public utility, with knowledge and consent of plaintiffs, who, as appurtenant to their lands, owned right to certain quantity of water and proportionate part of water system, held not to cause them to lose such rights by abandonment, notwithstanding wells and distributing system were altered and enlarged by defendants; such changes being for defendants' own benefit.

3. Constitutional law $\S$ 135—Eminent domain $\S$ 2(10)—Raising water rates fixed by contract without consent of landowners held to impair obligation of contract and constitute taking of private property for public use without compensation (Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10; Const. Cal. art. 1, §§ 14, 16).

Where cost of distributing a certain quantity of water from defendant public utility's water supply system to lands of plaintiffs, to which lands such rights were appurtenant, was definitely fixed by contract executed when water system was in private ownership, defendant's raising of rates as to such owners without their consent would impair the obligation of contract, and, so far as increase inured to benefit of public use by reason thereof, it would be taking of private property for public use without compensation, in violation of Constitution (Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10; Const. Cal. art. 1, §§ 14, 16).

4. Action — Waters and water courses — 158½(2)—Complaint held to state cause of action, as against demurrer, for injunction and declaratory relief concerning water rates under contract (Code Civ. Proc. § 1060 et seq.).

In action under Code Civ. Proc. § 1060 et seq. for injunction and declaratory relief, complaint alleging that plaintiffs, as appurtenant to their lands, owned rights to certain quantity of water and interest in water distributing system under deed to their predecessor in title, that after execution of such deed water system was conveyed to water company, which entered into contract with plaintiffs, recognizing their rights and privileges and fixing rate for distribution of water, and that subsequently water company conveyed property to city, which revoked the contract and refused to furnish water to plaintiffs except on payment of higher rates, held sufficient as against demurrer.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by Samuel D. McIntyre and others against the Consolidated Water Company and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Nichols, Cooper & Hickson, of Pomona, (A. L. Hickson, of Pomona, of counsel), for appellants.

Joseph A. Allard and Allard & Mitchell, all of Pomona, for respondents.

TYLER, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff Samuel D. McIntyre and some sixty-eight others have joined as plaintiffs to obtain an injunction and declaratory relief concerning certain water rights secured to them by contract. The proceeding is brought under section 1060 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides, in substance, that any person interested under a deed, will, or other written instrument, or under a contract, or who desires a declaration of his rights or duties with respect to another, or in respect to, in, over, or upon property, may bring an action for declaration of his rights, including a determination of any question of construction or validity arising under such instrument or contract. The complaint alleges, in substance, that on the 14th day of September, 1887, one Fred J. Smith and William Everett entered into a certain written agreement, by the terms of which Smith agreed to sell and deliver to Everett, and Everett agreed to purchase, a stream of water of continuous and uniform flow of 6,500 gallons every 24 hours. The water so purchased was to be obtained from a well to be bored by Smith upon lands owned by him and delivered through pipes to a subdivision of land owned by Everett. The title to said water, together with a proportionate interest in the well, was to pass to Everett upon payment of the purchase price, which the agreement recites was made. A deed was executed by Smith to the waters and the well in conformity with the terms of the agreement. In and by said deed, Smith granted and conveyed to Everett the quantum of water mentioned, as developed by artesian wells on lands belonging to Smith described as lot 32 of the Loop and Meserve tract, rancho San Jose, county of Los Angeles, together with a perpetual right of way through the pipe line system owned by Smith for carrying the water and also a proportionate interest in the artesian wells as the water conveyed bears to the whole amount flowing from the wells through the pipe line system. At the time of the conveyance, Smith owned the water and the lands on which the well was located.

The complaint proceeding alleges: That Everett subdivided his lands upon which the water was to be delivered and plotted a subdivision and sold and transferred the various lots to different purchasers. That plaintiffs herein were the successors in title to Everett in said lands and to a portion of the waters and pipe line as conveyed by Smith to Everett. That during the years 1887 and 1888 Smith conveyed to and contracted with various people, other than Everett, different interests in said water to which certain plaintiffs herein have succeeded. That all of the water, water rights, and interest conveyed by Smith as above set forth were conveyed by way of deeds of grant duly recorded, and were and still are appurtenant to certain lands in and adjacent to the city of Pomona. About the year 1897, Smith sold to the defendant the Consolidated Water Company the well on said lot 32, together with the pipe lines, subject, however, to his former conveyances, all of which were expressly reserved from the operation of the sale. After such sale was made, there arose some uncertainty concerning the amounts of water the respective purchasers were entitled to. To obviate any dispute, the Consolidated Water Company made and executed a written agreement with the plaintiffs, which agreement is made a part of the complaint. By its terms, the water company contracted and agreed to furnish and deliver, by pumping or otherwise, to the respective signatories, plaintiffs herein, from lot 32, or other sources, the quantities of water set opposite their respective names, for the sum of 8 cents per thousand gallons. This contract recognizes the ownership of the water rights and privileges of plaintiffs in certain wells, and it also attempts to provide how it may be canceled or annulled. In the event of annulment, it recites that "the parties shall be restored to and retain the same rights and privileges held by them regarding said water rights as they had and were entitled to before the agreement was made, and neither party shall be subject to any damages on account of the annulment of this agreement." Plaintiffs or their predecessors in title did not by this agreement in any manner release, waive, or transfer to the water company their right, title, and interest in and to the waters, water rights, or pipe line which they had acquired from their grantor. After the water company had purchased the well and water from Smith, as above narrated, it deepened the well and otherwise improved it. Thereafter, in order to produce a greater supply of water, it drilled another hole immediately adjacent to the old well, using in part the same shafting as had been originally in use, and tapped the same water veins and channels and underground sources of water supply, and developed and brought to the surface the same waters, identically, as those which had formerly been produced and brought to the surface by the old well. The well as improved by the water company has been in use continuously by it for the production of water for sale to its consumers and patrons. The complaint then alleges that on October 1, 1926, the city of Pomona purchased from the water company its interest in the water distributing system. It is charged that immediately prior to such sale the water company caused to be served upon plaintiffs a notice of revocation of its contract above referred to, and after the sale the city of Pomona reaffirmed such revocation, and has threatened to cut off the delivery of water under said contract, and refuses to furnish water at all times to plaintiffs except upon payment of the rates and under the terms and conditions fixed generally for the delivery of water within the city of Pomona, and at rates much higher than those fixed by the contract. Then follow allegations to the effect that defendants have so altered and changed the distributing system that it is impossible for them to restore to plaintiffs their property and rights under their contract. Plaintiffs also allege that the waters were at all times privately owned, and have never been, and are not now, a public utility. The contracts and deed above referred to are annexed to the complaint and made a part thereof. Judgment is prayed (1) for an injunction against defendants raising the rates in violation of its contract; and also (2) for a mandatory injunction that defendants furnish the specified amount of water to each plaintiff at the rate provided for in the contract; and (3) for declaratory and such other relief as may be equitable.

To this complaint, defendants interposed a demurrer on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and also as to certain alleged uncertainties. The trial court sustained the demurrer, and plaintiffs refused to amend, electing to stand on their pleading. They here contend that the amended complaint was sufficient against defendants' demurrer, and it should have been overruled. In support of the judgment on demurrer, respondents claim that appellants are not entitled to any relief under the facts stated in the complaint, for various reasons, and relief was properly denied them. They contend that the contract of March 15, 1900, made by and between plaintiffs and the water company, was and is invalid, as in violation of article 14 of the Constitution, as the water company was a public utility at the time the contract was entered into; that it gave a preferential right to waters dedicated to a public use, by increasing a burden upon a public utility. It is further claimed that appellants' rights in and to the waters have been lost by abandonment. Uncertainty as to particular allegations is also claimed. We see no merit in any of those contentions.

[1] Plaintiffs acquired their water rights long prior to the time the water company acquired its interest in the remaining waters of the well from Smith in 1897. The waters so acquired by plaintiffs were and now are appurtenant to their lands. They were never conveyed at any time to the water company or to any one else, nor were they ever dedicated to public use. On the contrary, the water in question and an interest in the well and distributing system were at all times held in private ownership by plaintiffs. After the sale by Smith to the water company of his interest, in 1897, some uncertainty arose as to the amount of water the respective parties were entitled to. The contract of March 15, 1900, made with the water company, was entered into for the purpose of making certain some of the uncertainties of the prior agreements. Plaintiffs did not acquire their rights under this agreement, the rights which they had formerly acquired being merely confirmed thereby. The agreement itself recognizes plaintiffs' prior rights, for it provides that upon its abrogation the parties shall be restored to and retain the same rights and privileges held by them regarding said water rights as they had and were entitled to before the agreement was made. The mere fact, therefore, that the water company was a public utility at the time the contract was made in no manner affected plaintiffs' rights to their interest in the water and distributing system. Part of water from a single source may be devoted to public service and part retained for private use. Allen v. Railroad Commission, 179 Cal. 68, 175 P. 466, 3 A. L. R. 249. But, even if it be assumed that the contract is invalid for any reason, such fact in no manner deprives plaintiffs of their property, as in that event they are relegated to their former rights, which consist of an interest in the well and distributing system and certain waters which it is alleged defendant refuses to permit plaintiffs to use.

[2] Equally without merit is the further claim that whatever rights plaintiffs may have had in the waters and distributing system have been lost by abandonment. In this connection the claim is made that the well and distributing plant having been altered so as to become incorporated with the system now owned by the city of Pomona, a public utility, such incorporation being with plaintiffs' knowledge and consent, they have lost their rights therein, as the law will not permit such act to increase the burden of the utility. The change was brought about by defendants themselves for their own benefit in an endeavor to increase their quantity of water, and they cannot avail themselves of this act to deprive plaintiffs of their property. The law provides a simple and just means by which a public utility may acquire the private property of others.

[3] Then, again, the cost of distributing plaintiffs' waters to their lands was definitely fixed by contract, and to raise the rate without their consent would impair the obligation of a contract, and, so far as the increase inured to the benefit of the public use by reason thereof, it would be the taking of private property for public use without compensation. Allen v. Railroad Commission, supra. The further claim is made by respondents that, as the contract was annulled in the manner provided for in the instrument itself, plaintiffs are entitled to no relief in consequence of such termination. There is nothing in the complaint to show that the contract was ever annulled in the manner claimed. The pleading merely recites that defendants are refusing to deliver water under the contract. But even in the event of an annulment the parties under the very terms of the contract were to be restored to their former rights, and it is alleged defendants refuse to make such restoration. Plaintiffs have enjoyed the full use of their waters since they were acquired in 1887 down to the time the city of Pomona acquired the interest of the water company in 1926, and they have done nothing during all this period which would in any manner impair or destroy their rights in their property.

[4] The complaint in ordinary and concise language sets forth plaintiffs' cause of action, and there is no uncertainty in any of its allegations, either in form or substance, and the rights therein asserted are not shown by their pleading to have been relinquished or lost as claimed by defendants. The demurrer to the complaint should have been overruled.

The judgment is reversed.

REDD v. GARFORD MOTOR TRUCK CO.,
Inc., et al. (L. A. 8049.) ★

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 26, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 25, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ⇐931(1)—On appeal from verdict for plaintiff, appellate court assumes trial court, under conflicting evidence, took plaintiff's version of defendant's conduct, waiving forfeiture of truck sued for.

Where trial court, under conflicting evidence, found for plaintiff in action for claim and delivery of motor truck, it must be assumed on appeal that court accepted plaintiff's version of oral contract and acceptance of second installment as waiver of right to insist on forfeiture for nonpayment of first installment for truck.

2. Sales ⇐477(6)—Seller's acceptance of second installment held waiver of right of forfeiture for buyer's failure to pay first installment in full.

Where buyer of truck under conditional sales contract failed to pay first installment entirely, seller's acceptance without objection of second installment constituted waiver of right to insist on forfeiture because of buyer's failure to pay first installment in full when due, at least until such time as seller notified buyer of insistence on right of forfeiture.

3. Sales ⇐477(1)—Seller's repossession of truck, under oral agreement to resell same and apply proceeds on contract, held waiver of right of forfeiture for failure to pay entire first installment.

Where buyer of truck under conditional sales contract failed to pay first installment in full, and buyer returned truck to seller under oral agreement whereby seller was to resell truck and complete payments from proceeds of truck, receipt of possession of truck by seller under such oral agreement constituted waiver of right of forfeiture and repossession, until seller failed to resell truck or buyer in meantime further defaulted in making payments thereafter to become due.

4. Contracts ⇐318—Law does not favor forfeitures.

The law does not favor forfeitures.

5. Sales $\hookrightarrow$ 481—Buyer, suing in action of claim and delivery for motor truck, tendering full purchase price, was entitled to repossession of truck, or value thereof, against seller waiving right of forfeiture.

In action for claim and delivery of motor truck by conditional buyer tendering full payment of truck, where evidence showed that seller waived right of forfeiture and repossession for failure to pay first installment in full, buyer was entitled to repossession of truck, or value thereof in event redelivery could not be made.

6. Replevin $\hookrightarrow$ 81—Damages claimed for detention of motor truck held compensatory only, in absence of averment on which exemplary damages could be sustained.

Where plaintiff, in action of claim and delivery of motor truck, alleged generally that he was entitled to recover $2,000 damages for detention, which allegation was denied by defendants, damages so claimed were compensatory only, since plaintiff made no averment out of which exemplary damages could be sustained.

7. Replevin $\hookrightarrow$ 82—Plaintiff, seeking compensatory damages for detention of truck, failing to prove any damages therefor, held entitled only to nominal damages.

Where plaintiff, in action of claim and delivery for motor truck, alleged only compensatory damages for detention of truck, plaintiff was put on proof of damages sustained by reason of defendant's detention of truck, and, in absence of such proof, only damages which plaintiff could recover would be nominal damages.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul Burks, Judge.

Action of claim and delivery of a motor truck by C. C. Redd against the Garford Motor Truck Company, Incorporated, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 261 P. 1067.

W. Cloyd Snyder, of Santa Paula, for appellants.

I. R. Rubin and M. G. C. Harris, both of Los Angeles (Adolph Johnson, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor in an action for claim and delivery whereby he was awarded possession of a motor truck, or its value if delivery could not be had, in the sum of $3,000, together with damages for the alleged unlawful detention thereof in the sum of $2,000. On September 14, 1923, the evidence herein shows the plaintiff to have been the owner of a certain motor truck, and on said day he entered into an agreement with the defendants for the purchase under a conditional sales contract of that certain Garford motor truck which is the subject of the present action, by the terms of which agreement the plaintiff turned over to the defendants the motor truck which he then owned at an agreed value, which was to be credited upon the payment of the Garford motor truck he was about to purchase, which left apparently a balance due upon the latter of $4,120.15, and which by the terms of said agreement was to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendants in 18 monthly installments, the first of which was to be the sum of $465, payable on October 14, 1923, the remainder of said installments being in the sum of $215, payable upon the 14th day of each month thereafter, time being expressly made the essence of said agreement. The plaintiff was given immediate possession of the truck.

On October 1, 1923, the plaintiff was notified in writing that his first installment of $465, with interest thereon, would become due on October 14, 1923. On that date the plaintiff gave the defendants his check for the sum of $300, without any special direction as to how the same should be applied. At that time it appears that he was entitled to a credit of $50 on account of the sale by the defendant of the other truck. It appears, also, that there was due by the plaintiff to the defendants the sum of $94.50 upon an open account. The defendants thereupon credited the plaintiff with said payment of $300, and also with the $50 credit to which he was entitled, and then charged against said credit the said sum of $94.50 due upon said open account, which left a balance of $255.50, which the defendants applied to the payment pro tanto of the installment which had fallen due upon said date. Shortly thereafter the defendants sent to the plaintiff a written notice to the effect that his second installment of $215, with interest, totaling $239.95, would become due on November 14, 1923, and on the latter date the plaintiff paid to the defendants the amount of said installment in full.

Thereafter, and on the morning of November 21, 1923, the plaintiff, as the evidence discloses, returned said Garford motor truck to the defendants, and thereupon, as he testified, entered into an oral agreement, by the terms of which the defendants were to sell said truck, and were to pay from the proceeds thereof whatever amounts were due or to become due the defendants upon account of the purchase price thereof, paying the balance, if any, to the plaintiff. At a later hour in said day the plaintiff returned to the sales room of the defendants, and was then informed that the defendants had elected to repossess said truck under the terms of the written agreement for its purchase, and on account of the failure of the plaintiff to pay in full the amount of the installment which had fallen due upon October 14th, and upon which it was claimed a balance of $236.96 remained due. On the following day the plaintiff offered to the defendants his check in full payment of said amount and demanded repossession of the truck, which were both refused, whereupon, and on November 23, 1923, the plaintiff commenced this action in claim and delivery for said truck, or for the value thereof, fixed at $3,000, and for damages in the sum of $2,000 for its unlawful detention.

Upon the trial of the cause before the court sitting without a jury, the trial court, upon the foregoing facts, made its findings of fact and conclusions of law in the plaintiff's favor, and thereupon made and entered the judgment from which this appeal has been taken.

[1-4] It is the contention of the appellants that since, by the terms of the written agreement for the purchase by means of an installment contract of the aforesaid Garford motor truck, time being expressly made the essence of said agreement, there was on November 21, 1923, a balance of $236.96, which had been overdue since October 14, 1923, upon the first installment payable on the latter date upon and under the terms of said agreement, the said defendants were entitled to declare a forfeiture thereof and to repossess said truck, and that, having done so lawfully, they were entitled to refuse to accept from the plaintiff the proffered balance due upon said installment on the following day, and that, having thus lawfully repossessed said property, the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain this action, and hence that the judgment therein should have been in favor of the defendants for their costs. On the other hand, the respondent, while admitting that on and after October 14, 1923, there had remained due from himself to the defendants the said balance of $236.96, on account of which the defendants might at any time prior to November 14, 1923, have declared a forfeiture of said agreement and have thereupon lawfully repossessed said truck, contends that such right of forfeiture and repossession was waived by the defendants, when, on November 14, 1923, they accepted from the plaintiff payment in full of the second installment upon said contract due on said date, at least until, after receiving without objection said second installment, they had given notice to the plaintiff of their intention to claim said forfeiture unless within a reasonable time the plaintiff should make the payment of the balance due upon the amount of the first installment.

The plaintiff further insists that when, on the morning of November 21, 1923, he voluntarily returned said truck to the possession of the defendants under the oral agreement to which he testified, the defendants were to sell the same and from the proceeds of such sale pay in full whatever amounts remained due upon the purchase price of the truck, and when the defendants received the possession of said truck under such oral agreement they thereby further and fully waived whatever rights of forfeiture and repossession they might have theretofore had under the original agreement. It is true that as to this latter oral agreement the evidence given by the plaintiff and that given by the manager of the Garford Motor Truck Company touching said latter transaction is in direct conflict; but since the trial court found in the plaintiff's favor upon the issues tendered in said action, we must assume that it not only accepted the plaintiff's version of said oral agreement, but also interpreted the acts of the defendants in accepting without objection the second installment due to them under the terms of the original agreement as a waiver of their right to insist upon a forfeiture because of the failure of the plaintiff to pay in full the amount of the first installment when due, at least until such time as they had notified the plaintiff of their insistence upon said forfeiture in the event that the latter failed to make prompt payment of said balance due after receiving such notice.

We are of the opinion that the trial court was correct as to each and both of its foregoing conclusions. That the law does not favor forfeitures is well settled by the decisions of this court in numerous cases, and, as was well said in the case of Knarston v. Manhattan L. I. Co., 124 Cal. 74, 77, 56 P. 773, 774:

"Evidence tending to show the waiver of a forfeiture will be looked upon with kindly eyes."

The case of Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 294, 110 P. 947, 949 (139 Am. St. Rep. 126), is a leading authority in this state upon the subject of forfeiture of installment contracts, and we find therein, quoted with approval, the statement of Mr. Pomeroy in his work on contracts, to the effect that:

"The one entitled to insist upon a punctual performance by the other or else that the agreement be ended, may waive his right and the benefit of any objection which he might raise to a performance after the prescribed time, either expressly or by his conduct, and his conduct will operate as a waiver when it is consistent only with a purpose on his part to regard the contract as still subsisting, and not ended by the other party's default."

In the case of Hoppin v. Munsey, 185 Cal. 678, 683, 198 P. 398, it was held that the making by the vendee and acceptance by the vendor without objection of subsequent payments upon an installment contract operated as a waiver of the right of forfeiture which had arisen by virtue of the vendee's previous default, to the extent, at least, of requiring the vendor to notify the vendee of its intended insistence upon such forfeiture unless the amount in default was promptly paid. The cases of Pacific Finance & Investment Co. v.

Pierce, 48 Cal. App. 600, 191 P. 1115, and Benedict v. Greer-Robbins Co., 26 Cal. App. 468, 147 P. 486, are not inconsistent with the views above expressed, since in the first of these cases there was an express provision in the original contract of conditional sale to the effect that the acceptance by the vendor of any installment payment was not to operate as a waiver of its right to retake possession of the property without previous demand or notice on account of any previous defaults, while in the second of said cases the default of the plaintiff consisted not only in his failure to make the required payments in the first instance, but also in his failure so to do after he had been notified of the vendor's insistence that the balance remaining due upon such installments must be promptly paid. For like reason the case of Silverstin et al. v. Kohler & Chase, 181 Cal. 51, 183 P. 451, 9 A. L. R. 1177, contains nothing inconsistent with the views above expressed, since in that case the defaults of the vendee which entitled the vendor to retake the property were future defaults occurring after certain intermediate installments had been paid.

But even if it should be conceded, as the appellant herein contends, that the fact of their acceptance of the second installment due upon said original agreement would not of itself suffice to work a waiver of their right to take repossession of said truck on account of the plaintiff's previous partial default, we are satisfied that by the subsequent executed oral agreement entered into between the parties on the morning of November 21, 1923, by the terms of which the plaintiff yielded and the defendants took possession of said truck under a definite agreement to undertake the sale of the same, and by and through such sale when accomplished to repay to themselves all sums due and to become due under said original contract, they fully waived whatever rights they still possessed, if any, to claim a forfeiture thereunder, until their efforts in the way of the resale of the said truck had failed to prove seasonably successful, or that the plaintiff in the meantime had further defaulted in making the payments thereafter to become due upon said original contract of conditional sale. The conduct of the defendants in accepting the repossession of said truck upon the foregoing terms and conditions was utterly inconsistent with any right which they might otherwise have claimed to retake said property under the forfeiture terms of the original agreement, and to use the expression of Mr. Pomeroy approved in Boone v. Templeman, supra:

"It is consistent only with a purpose on his part to regard the contract as still subsisting, and not ended by the other party's default."

[5-7] This being so, we are satisfied that the trial court correctly decided that the plaintiff was entitled in this action to the repossession of said truck, or the value thereof in the event such redelivery could not be made. We are, however, by no means satisfied that the trial court was also correct in that portion of its judgment wherein it was decided that the plaintiff was entitled to damages in the sum of $2,000 for the detention by the defendants of said property. The plaintiff in his complaint states generally that he is entitled to recover "the further sum of $2,000 damages for detention thereof." The defendants in their amended answer deny that the plaintiff is entitled to said sum, or any amount whatever, as damages for their detention of said property. The damages which the plaintiff thus sought, and which the defendants deny, were compensatory only; the plaintiff having made no averment upon which a claim of exemplary damages could be sustained. Lamb v. Harbaugh, 105 Cal. 691, 39 P. 56. This being so, the plaintiff was put upon proof as to the fact and extent of whatever damages he had sustained by reason of the defendants' detention of said truck. The record is entirely lacking in such proof, and in the absence thereof the only damages which the plaintiff would be entitled to have awarded him would have been nominal damages. In this state of the record the trial court was in error in awarding to the plaintiff the sum of $2,000, or any other sum, other than merely nominal damages, against the defendants.

This being so, that portion of the judgment which awards the plaintiff the sum of $2,000 damages by reason of the detention by the defendants of said property must be stricken from said judgment, and, with this amount eliminated, the judgment in the plaintiff's favor for the redelivery to him of said truck, or for the value thereof in the sum of $3,000, if such delivery cannot be had, must be and the same is hereby affirmed.

ROGERS v. SCHNEIDER et al. (L. A. 9436.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 18, 1928.

1. Judgment $\S$ 162(4)—Plaintiff's failure to disclose knowledge of default judgment and acquiescence in subsequent deposition proceedings held sufficient to support order vacating judgment (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 473, 2021).

Plaintiff's failure to disclose his knowledge of default judgment, entered without notice to defendants' attorney before expiration of additional time, granted by latter for taking plaintiff's deposition, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 2021, and acquiescence in steps subsequently taken by defendants to acquire sufficient information to prepare and file answer, held sufficient to support order setting aside default judgment under $\S$ 473, even if defendants' appearance were general and not limited to deposition proceeding.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 957(1)—Judgment $\S$ 139—Setting aside default is within superior court's discretion, and will not be disturbed on appeal, unless discretion was plainly abused (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473).

Exercise of authority, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, to set aside default or relieve party from any proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, is confided to discretion of superior court, and will not be disturbed on appeal, unless such discretion plainly appears to have been abused.

3. Costs $\S$ 260(4)—Penalty will be imposed on plaintiff appealing from order vacating default judgment, where there was no possibility of reversal under facts (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473).

Plaintiff, having persisted in taking appeal from order vacating default judgment under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, though there was not remotest possibility of reversal under facts shown, a penalty for damages because of resulting delay and expense to defendants will be imposed.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by J. W. Rogers against Frank Schneider and others. From an order setting aside a default judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

D. Chase Rich, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred E. Peterson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order setting aside, upon motion of defendants, a default judgment entered in plaintiff's favor. The action was one whereby plaintiff sought to recover an unpaid balance of $10,300 alleged to be due him on a contract made with defendants for the alteration of an apartment house owned by defendants, and to foreclose a mechanic's lien on said property for said balance.

[1] The uncontroverted evidence introduced in the court below, upon the hearing of the motion to set aside the judgment obtained by default against the defendants, discloses a singular and unwarranted course of conduct pursued by appellant against his adversaries, the respondents herein. The record shows that the complaint was filed in court below on April 5, 1926. A copy of the complaint and summons was never served upon the defendants (respondents), but a copy of the complaint and summons was mailed by appellant's attorney, D. Chase Rich, to respondents' attorney, Fred E. Peterson, and received by the latter on April 6, 1926. Inclosed in the same envelope containing a copy of the complaint and summons, appellant's attorney addressed the following letter to respondents' attorney, omitting the formal parts:

"As per my conversation with your partner yesterday, I inclose herewith summons and complaint in superior court case No. 193287, J. W. Rogers v. Frank Schneider et al. Your partner stated over the telephone that upon receipt of the summons and complaint that you would enter a formal appearance for your clients."

On April 14, 1926, said attorney for defendants (respondents) made an affidavit to obtain the examination of the plaintiff by deposition, as provided by the Code of Civil Procedure, $\S$ 2021, and for an order to inspect the original contract upon which the pending action was based, which was averred to be in the possession of plaintiff. After setting forth in the application for the order the title of the court and cause, the caption of the particular proceeding, designated "Affidavit for Subpoena Taking Deposition," appeared immediately thereunder. The first sentence of the application was in these words: "That he [defendants' attorney] is attorney for and hereby appears for defendants in the above-entitled matter." (Italics supplied.) The last clause of said application is, "and the defendants have appeared and do hereby appear for the purpose of obtaining an order for the taking of said deposition." It is evident that an attempt at least was made to limit the appearance of defendants to the procurement of an order to take the deposition of the plaintiff and to inspect said contract. It is further averred in said affidavit or application "that it is necessary to inspect the said contract prior to the filing of an answer, and defendants desire to take the deposition of the plaintiff prior to filing said answer." (Italics supplied.) The taking of said deposition was noticed for April 27, 1926. A subpoena duces tecum was issued and had been served on the plaintiff, commanding him to be present and produce said contract on the day last above named. Upon the coming of said day, the attorney for plaintiff telephoned a request to the attorney for defendants, that the taking of said deposition be continued to April 29, 1926. The request was granted. On the day following the granting of the continuance, to wit, April 28, the plaintiff appeared in the superior court without a suggestion being made to the attorney for the defendants that he intended to do so, and without any knowledge on defendants' part as to his intention, and procured a judgment in the sum of \$10,300, together with interest and costs, to be entered against defendants. Upon the arrival of the day to which the taking of the deposition was continued, to wit, April 29, 1926, the following passed between the attorney for defendants and the attorney for plaintiff:

"Mr. Peterson: At this time, Mr. Rich, will you stipulate that the deposition may be taken at this time instead of the time stated in the notice, which time was extended at your request out of courtesy?"

"Mr. Rich: I so stipulate."

The plaintiff's conduct when giving his deposition was usually contumacious. He refused to answer many pertinent questions propounded to him by opposing counsel, placing his refusal in some instances upon the advice given by his counsel not to answer certain questions. The latter's conduct was not free from censure in the conduct of the examination. Plaintiff's testimony as to the possession of the contract which he was commanded to produce, but which he did not produce, was evasive. An order to show cause why plaintiff should not be required to produce said contract and answer certain specific questions or be punished for contempt of court and pay defendants' damages as provided by law, was issued and served upon said plaintiff. He failed to appear on the day fixed by said order, and an attachment and bench warrant were placed in the hands of the sheriff of the county of Los Angeles, but he was not served, for the reason that he could not be found by the sheriff. Plaintiff's attorney did not at any time during the proceedings make known to defendants' attorney the fact that a default judgment had been entered against his clients, although he came in personal contact with him on numerous occasions during the development of said proceedings as herein outlined.

The earliest day that defendants or their attorney actually knew or learned that the foreclosure decree of April 28, 1926, had been entered against them, was June 4, 1926, whereupon defendants gave notice that on June 15, 1926, they would move the court to set aside said default and vacate the judgment entered thereon upon the grounds that said default was entered through mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect of their said attorney. The attorney for the moving defendants presented an affidavit in support of his motion, none of the averments of which was disputed by counter affidavit, setting out the facts herein recited. The defendants, in addition to averring the things and matters heretofore set out, which were averred as indicative of a course of bad faith on the part of plaintiff's counsel, further averred that "the said D. Chase Rich, by trick and device, as more fully appears from this affidavit, caused this affiant to extend the courtesy of continuing the taking of said deposition until after the said D. Chase Rich would have and did enter the default and obtain judgment against the said Frank Schneider and Anna Schneider." Defendants also prepared and appended to the moving papers their proposed answer to the complaint, which unquestionably contained good and sufficient grounds of defense to the complaint if found by the court to be true. The trial court upon a hearing of said motion on its merits set aside the default and vacated the judgment. Upon an inspection of the record presented, we are fully satisfied that it could have made no other order. Conceding that the appearance of defendants was general and that it was not limited to the deposition proceeding, it clearly appears from the face of the affidavit for taking the deposition of plaintiff that the purpose of taking the deposition was to enable the defendants to advisedly answer the complaint. Such was the averment of the affidavit and notice upon which the claim of appearance in the action is based. No service of summons or copy of the complaint was made, and only upon the force of said affidavit and notice could plaintiff's claim of appearance be predicated. Respondents doubtless were mistaken at the inception of their procedure in believing that, inasmuch as no service of summons and copy of the complaint had been made, their time to answer was extended to such time as they should file their answer or otherwise voluntarily appear in the usual manner. In their erroneous understanding of the matter, they were encouraged and aided by the active participation of appellant, who became a party to every step taken by respondents, after he had taken judgment by default, and at no time made any objection to what might ordinarily be regarded as moot proceedings. The failure to disclose his knowledge as to the true situation which he had brought about and his acquiescence in and implied consent to the steps taken by respondents in order to acquire sufficient information to enable them to accomplish an express purpose, to wit, to prepare and file their answer, would of itself furnish grounds of estoppel against the claim that the appearance made under the circumstances related should deprive the respondents of their right to answer. The participation of the appellant in said proceedings in a manner which could have had no other effect than to mislead the respondents is a sufficient reason to support the order of the trial court in setting aside the default and vacating the judgment entered thereon. The appearance of the respondents, based upon the affidavit and notice aforesaid, will, in the interests of justice, be given the construction which the conduct of appellant consistently throughout the proceedings justified. The appearance, therefore, now insisted upon, cannot be deemed, in this case, good cause for denying the motion which was seasonably made in the circumstances herein set forth.

[2] "The authority of the superior court to set aside a default, or relieve a party from any proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, is given by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and that the exercise of this authority is confided to the discretion of the court, and will not be disturbed upon appeal therefrom, unless such discretion shall plainly appear to have been abused, has been so frequently affirmed in this court that a reference to a few of the cases will be sufficient." Winchester v. Black, 134 Cal. 125, 66 P. 197.

[3] It would have been our plain duty to reverse this case, had the trial court not exercised its discretion as it did. After having done so upon the facts as herein recited, there was not the remotest possibility of a reversal of the order made, setting aside the default and vacating the judgment. Nevertheless the plaintiff has persisted in taking this appeal, thereby causing unwarranted delay and incurring expense to respondents. The appeal being wholly without merit, we deem it proper, in affirming the order, to also impose a penalty for damages against appellant for taking a frivolous appeal.

The order appealed from is affirmed, with damages in the sum of $100.

AYRES et al. v. WRIGHT et al. (S. F. 12439.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 17, 1928.

Appeal and error 965—Venue 52(1)—Change of venue for convenience of witnesses is discretionary, and denial can be reversed only for trial court's abuse of discretion.

Motion for change of venue based on convenience of witnesses is addressed to sound discretion of trial court, and order denying change cannot be reversed in absence of abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Rolfe L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Florence C. Ayres and another against C. A. Wright and another. From an order denying plaintiffs' motion for change of venue, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Raymond Perry, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Geary & Geary, of Santa Rosa, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from an order denying plaintiffs' motion for a change of trial of said action, made upon the ground of the convenience of witnesses.

Plaintiffs brought the action in the county of Sonoma, the county in which the defendants reside. By their motion they sought to have the place of trial changed to the county of Alameda, in which county plaintiffs reside.

A motion for the change of venue based upon the convenience of witnesses is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and an order denying the change can only be reversed for an abuse of discretion. Perky v. Perky, 190 Cal. 492, 213 P. 492; Pascoe v. Baker, 158 Cal. 232, 235, 110 P. 815; Miller & Lux v. Kern Co. Land Co., 140 Cal. 132, 136, 73 P. 836.

We have examined the several affidavits of the respective parties used by the court upon the hearing of the motion, and we find no abuse of discretion by the court in its ruling upon said motion.

The order is affirmed.

PISTA v. RESETAR et al. (S. F. 12441.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 17, 1928.

1. Appeal and error 80(3)—Partition 73—Interlocutory decree in partition suit is conclusive as to matters determined and is "final judgment" within appeal statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3).

An interlocutory decree in action for the partition of real property, though preliminary, is conclusive as to the matters determined therein and is to all intents and purposes a "final judgment" from which an appeal may be taken under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Final Judgment.]

2. Partition 73—Plaintiff in whose favor interlocutory decree for payment of money was rendered in partition suit held entitled to interest thereon from date of interlocutory decree (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 681 et seq., 963, subd. 3, 1035; Civ. Code, § 3302).

Plaintiff recovering interlocutory decree for payment of money in partition suit held entitled to interest upon award from date of entry of decree in the same manner as if judgment had been rendered in an ordinary action for the recovery of money under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 681 et seq., 1035, Civ. Code, § 3302; interlocutory decree being final as to all questions adjudicated therein under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3.

3. Judgment ¶218—Form of judgment is immaterial provided rights of parties may be determined therefrom.

Form of judgment is of no consequence so long as the rights of the respective parties can be ascertained therefrom, test of sufficiency being substance rather than form.

4. Partition ¶73—Interlocutory decree which finds specified sum due, owing, and unpaid from defendant to plaintiff is sufficient to constitute valid award.

Interlocutory decree in partition suit held sufficient to constitute valid award as to wording of clause which finds due, owing, and unpaid from defendant to plaintiff a specified sum.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; H. C. Lucas, Judge.

Action by Blas Pista against Mike Resetar and others. From an order denying execution against defendants' property to enforce payment of interest on an interlocutory decree, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. This action was instituted for the purpose of partitioning certain ranch property and determining the respective interests of the parties in and to the growing crops thereon. Upon submission of the cause after trial and with consent of all parties expressed in open court, an interlocutory decree was entered by which said property was duly partitioned and divided, 82/100 thereof to appellant and 18/100 thereof to respondent. Said decree further adjudged and determined that there was due, owing, and unpaid from respondent to appellant, representing appellant's 82/100 of the income and proceeds of said real property, after deduction of taxes, expenses, etc., the sum of $9,840. Thereafter final decree was duly entered, partitioning said real property as aforesaid, and further adjudging that the sum of $575.13 was due from appellant to respondent, covering the value of taxes advanced and certain improvements made by respondent on appellant's portion of said land subsequent to rendition of the interlocutory decree. Said final judgment also declared:

"Nothing herein provided or contained shall or does in any way affect the provisions of paragraph 5 of the interlocutory decree * * * wherein it is adjudged and determined that there is due, owing and unpaid from said defendant * * * to * * * plaintiff * * * $9,840, which provision, in said interlocutory decree, notwithstanding any of the provisions of this final decree, shall remain in full force and effect."

No appeal was taken either from said interlocutory decree or from said final decree, and pursuant thereto respondent duly paid to appellant said sum of $9,840, less said sum of $575.13. Appellant, however, claimed interest upon said $9,840 from the date of the filing of said interlocutory decree to date of payment to him thereof, and made demand therefor, which was refused. He thereupon made a motion for an order directing that execution issue against respondents' property to enforce payment of said interest, which motion was denied. From the order denying it this appeal is prosecuted.

The facts are undisputed. The question is whether appellant is entitled to interest upon the money award of $9,840 made by said interlocutory decree from the filing date thereof and prior to entry of any final judgment in this action. We think that he is.

[1, 2] An interlocutory decree in an action for the partition of real property, although preliminary to the final judgment of confirmation, is conclusive as to the matters determined therein (Thompson v. White, 76 Cal. 383, 384, 18 P. 399; 20 Cal. Jur. § 56, p. 642-3); that is, it is final upon the questions adjudicated in it and is to all intents and purposes a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken (section 963, Code Civ. Proc. subd. 3), although it is not the last judgment entered in the action. See Sharon v. Sharon, 67 Cal. 185, 195, 196, 7 P. 456, 635; 8 P. 709, where the court had under consideration the question of whether an order for the payment of alimony and counsel fees was in the nature of a final judgment. The above subject is fully discussed there and the language of that opinion is equally applicable to an interlocutory decree of the character of the one here before us. See, also, Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Calif., etc., Co., 159 Cal. 484, 491, 114 P. 838, and cases therein cited; Los Angeles v. Los Angeles C. Water Co., 134 Cal. 121, 122, 123, 66 P. 198, and cases therein cited. Said interlocutory decree being in the nature of a final judgment, appellant was entitled to enforce payment thereof, with interest upon the award, in the same manner as if said judgment had been rendered in an ordinary action for the recovery of a specific sum of money. See section 1035 and section 681 et seq., Code Civ. Proc.

[3, 4] Conceding the finality of said interlocutory decree, respondent nevertheless questions the sufficiency of the wording of the clause which finds due, owing, and unpaid from respondent to appellant said sum of $9,840, to constitute a valid award. It is unnecessary to set forth here the exact wording of the provision in question. In substance it decrees to appellant from respondent said sum, and that such was its true intent and meaning is confirmed by the clause hereinabove quoted from the final judgment declaring that nothing in said final judgment shall in any way affect the adjudication made by said interlocutory decree as to said $9,840. "The form of the judgment is of no consequence so long as it may be ascertained therefrom what rights, if any, of the respective parties in the action have been determined by the court. The test of its sufficiency must rest in its substance rather than in its form. (Hentig v. Johnson, 8 Cal. App. 221 [96 P. 390]; Hoover v. Lester, 16 Cal. App. 151 [116 P. 382]; Black on Judgments, § 115; Freeman on Judgments, § 50.)" Welch v. Reese (Cal. App.) 255 P. 250. See, also, Hentig v. Johnson, 8 Cal. App. 221, 224-225, 96 P. 390.

That appellant is equitably entitled to payment of said interest cannot be doubted. Said sum of $9,840 was declared by said interlocutory decree to be then due, owing, and unpaid, and respondent had no right to its retention and use after the entry of said decree without payment of interest thereon (sec. 3302, Civ. Code; Gray v. Bekins, 186 Cal. 389, 399, 199 P. 767, and cases therein cited).
Order reversed.

HERBERT M. BARUCH CORPORATION v.
SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
(L. A. 10917.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 27, 1928.

Judges 25(2)—Judge, empowered to act until disposition of all matters before him during term, retained jurisdiction of cause completed by him subsequently.

Plaintiff applied for an alternative writ of mandate to compel the superior court as defendant to set for trial a cause pending in the court, on the asserted ground that the cause was at issue and had not proceeded to a valid judgment, in that the judge before whom the cause was originally tried signed and filed findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment in favor of defendants on August 27, 1928, after losing jurisdiction of cause by expiration of his assignment on June 30, 1928, he not being re-assigned until July 2, 1928, held that the judge, by virtue of assignment order empowering him to act until all matters heard or partially heard or submitted to him should have been completed and disposed of by him and also for the purpose of hearing and determining any motion of the case decided by him, retained jurisdiction to finally dispose of case subsequent to term in which trial was had.

Application for writ of mandate by the Herbert M. Baruch Corporation to be directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, B. Rey Schauer, Judge, to compel setting of a cause for trial. Writ denied.

Loewenthal, Lissner, Roth & Gunther, of Los Angeles, and Albert A. Rosenshine, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for an alternative writ of mandate to compel the respondent superior court to set for trial a cause pending in said court entitled, "Herbert M. Baruch Corporation v. Hartford Accident and Indemnity Co. et al.," on the asserted ground that the cause is at issue and has not proceeded to a valid judgment. The cause had theretofore been set for trial on March 23, 1928, and from March 27 to April 19, 1928, a trial had taken place before Hon. Stephen G. Long, sitting as judge of the superior court under assignment as such by order of the chairman of the Judicial Council. Judge Long is a judge of the municipal court of the city of Long Beach. He was originally assigned to the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles from January 3 to March 31, 1928. By subsequent order he was assigned to said superior court from April 1 to and including June 30, 1928. He was again assigned to said superior court beginning July 2 to and including September 29, 1928. On May 15, 1928, following the conclusion of the trial of said cause and while he was presiding in one of the departments of said superior court, Judge Long made and entered an order for judgment in favor of the defendants in said cause and directed the defendants to prepare and serve proposed findings and judgment. On August 27, 1928, findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment in favor of said defendants were signed by Judge Long and filed. It is the contention of the petitioner that the findings and judgment so signed and filed were and are a nullity by reason of the fact that there was an interval of time between, or a so-called "interregnum" in, the service of Judge Long in said superior court because of the expiration of his second assignment on June 30th and the commencement of his next assignment on July 2d, and that therefore all of the powers of said judge to act further in said cause were terminated on June 30th and were not revived by the subsequent assignment of July 2d.

Each order of the chairman of the Judicial Council assigned Judge Long "to sit as judge of the said superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles beginning [specifying the dates], and thereafter to act as such until all matters heard or partially heard or submitted to you therein shall have been completed and disposed of by you, and also for the purpose of hearing and determining any motion after judgment in a case decided by you."

It is not contended by the petitioner that Judge Long did not regularly preside at the trial and order findings and judgment in said cause. Under the foregoing form of the order Judge Long's first and second assignment continued his service for all purposes of the disposition of said cause in the superior court after the expiration of the specific date named in the order of assignment. In signing findings and judgment in said cause in August, 1928, Judge Long was acting under the authority of the orders of assignment from January 3 to June 30, 1928, and the subsequent assignment from July 2 to September 29, 1928, could have no effect upon his power to act under the prior assignments. Any other rule or method of procedure would not only be contrary to the plain import of the orders of assignment themselves, but would result in the greatest confusion in the disposition of causes by judges acting under assignment by the chairman of the Judicial Council.

There is no merit in the petition, and the application for the alternative writ is denied.

JANSSEN et al. v. TATE et al. (Civ. 3551.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 17, 1928.

1. Mines and minerals $\S$ 55(8)—Rights of purchasers under executory contract of sale of mining property being forfeited for non-performance, they are not entitled to reimbursement for expenditures.

All of purchasers' rights under a mining company's executory contract of sale of its mining properties having been forfeited for non-performance, they are not entitled to reimbursement for expenditures made by them under the contract.

2. Corporations $\S$ 629—Stockholder of defunct corporation cannot maintain action for partition till its affairs are wound up and debts paid, in absence of showing that trustees have funds therefor.

Stockholder of defunct corporation cannot maintain action for partition till its affairs are wound up and its debts paid, in the absence of showing that the trustees have funds in their hands to pay such debts; there being no attempt in the action to have a settlement of the corporation's affairs.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action by I. P. Janssen and others against Ada D. Anthony Tate and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Charles L. Brown, of El Centro, and Hamilton & Lindley, of San Diego, for appellants.

Arthur F. H. Wright and C. G. Selleck, both of San Diego, for respondents.

WEYAND, Justice pro tem. On the 20th day of August, 1924, the complaint herein was filed in the superior court of San Diego county to partition certain mining property in said county and to impress the whole of the said mining property with a lien claimed by I. P. Janssen for sums expended by him for the preservation of said property.

The plaintiffs were I. P. Janssen, individually, and I. P. Janssen as administrator of the estate of Enho Janssen, deceased, and I. P. Janssen as trustee of the Pacific Paint Products Company, a defunct corporation. The complaint avers that the paint company forfeited its charter and ceased to exist as a corporation on March 4, 1922. The only claim of ownership in plaintiff, either individually, or as administrator of the estate of Enho Janssen, or as trustee of the defunct paint company, arises out of ownership of stock in the said defunct company, or because I. P. Janssen was a director of the defunct corporation when it forfeited its charter.

The answer in the suit denies generally the allegations of ownership in the property sought to be partitioned, the expenditures by Janssen, and further pleads an estoppel in the way of a judgment rendered as against the plaintiff I. P. Janssen, and the Pacific Paint Products Company on April 15, 1921, in an action wherein the defendant herein, Ada D. Anthony Tate, and others, quieted title to the same property as against the said I. P. Janssen and the Pacific Paint Products Company. This case is reported in 183 Cal. 329, 191 P. 538.

There is no claim of plaintiffs in the present case that between the 15th day of April, 1921, and the commencement of the present action on the 20th day of August, 1924, the plaintiff individually, or the said Enho Janssen, or his estate, or the said Pacific Paint Products Company, acquired any independent interest in the said property. Judgment in the present case was for defendants, and the plaintiffs appeal.

While in the record there is presented much collateral matter, we are unable to see the relevancy of much that is attempted to be presented to this court. In the present case, the plaintiffs introduced the judgment roll in the case of Anthony et al. v. Janssen, and Pacific Paint Products Co., Intervener. From that judgment roll, in the case of Anthony v. Janssen, it appears from the findings of the court that on November 30, 1908, the Palagonite Mining Company owned the property in controversy. June 2, 1910, the trustees of that corporation entered into an executory contract of sale to one Ralph E. Pearce; August 1, 1910, Margaret Standeford, one of the trustees of the Palagonite Mining Company and a stockholder therein, sold and conveyed her interest as such stockholder to said Pearce; August 15, 1910, Pearce sold and conveyed all of his interest in the property to the Premier Investment Company. That company caused certain work to be done in the development of the mining property, for which it failed to pay. The laborers filed liens, and the property was, under a proceeding to foreclose the liens, sold to one James R. Haddock.

This judgment did not run, however, against the trustees of the Palagonite Mining Company, and they are not bound thereby.

On June 21, 1912, Haddock sold all of his interest in the said property to Janssen, and on January 30, 1914, Janssen conveyed all of his interest therein to Pacific Paint Products Company.

In 1914 all of the purchasers' rights under the Pearce contract were forfeited for non-performance under his executory contract, but the Pacific Paint Products Company still retained whatever rights were acquired by it from Margaret Standeford as an individual stockholder.

The conclusion logically follows as found by the court in Anthony v. Janssen:

"That the Pacific Paint Products Company, a corporation, is now the successor in interest of the rights of Margaret Standeford as an individual and a stockholder in the Palagonite Industrial Mining Company, a defunct corporation."

The decree in that case provides:

"It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the intervener, Pacific Paint Products Company, is the owner of and has succeeded to all the individual rights of Margaret Standeford as a stockholder of the Palagonite Mining Company in and to the assets of said defunct corporation."

[1] At the commencement of the present action the Pacific Paint Products Company was merely a stockholder in the Palagonite Company. Anthony v. Janssen, 183 Cal. 329, 191 P. 538. Plaintiffs were not entitled to reimbursement for expenditures made under the Pearce contract, as all of their rights under that contract were forfeited.

[2] A stockholder of a defunct corporation cannot maintain an action for partition until the affairs of the corporation are wound up and its debts paid, in the absence of a showing that the trustees have funds in their hands to pay such debts. Capuccio v. Caire, 189 Cal. 514, 209 P. 367. There was no attempt to have any settlement of the affairs of the Palagonite Company in the instant case. As before stated, the plaintiffs introduced in evidence the judgment roll in the case of Anthony v. Janssen. This judgment conclusively shows that they have no interest in the property of the Palagonite Company, except as stockholders. The evidence offered by them and rejected and the evidence stricken out having no bearing on their alleged interest, it was immaterial. The plaintiffs' own evidence conclusively shows that the judgment of nonsuit was properly entered.

The judgment in Anthony v. Janssen also fully adjudicates Janssen's claims for moneys expended in the preservation of the property, holding that he had no such claim.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HEMMA. (Cr. 1722.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 18, 1928.

Infants $\Rightarrow$ 20—Man who delivered note to girl, requesting her presence at night at secluded rendezvous, held guilty of contributing to minor's delinquency (Juvenile Court Act, § 1, subd. 11; § 21).

Conviction for contributing to minor's delinquency under Juvenile Court Act (St. 1915, p. 1225) § 1, subd. 11, and section 21, held sustained as to defendant 42 years of age, who delivered note to young girl, in no way related to him, and without any apparently good reason, requesting her to meet him at night in remote and secluded place.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Harry Hemma was convicted of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. L. Richardson, of Riverside, and Frank C. Scherrer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., John D. Richer, of Los Angeles, and Albert Ford, Dist. Atty., of Riverside, for the People.

CONREY, P. J. By information, the defendant was accused of a misdemeanor committed as follows: It was charged that the defendant, on or about the 8th day of May, 1928, in the county of Riverside, committed a certain described act which "tended to cause, encourage, and contribute to one Rosalie Zilly, who was then and there a female person under the age of twenty-one years, to come within and remain a person within the provisions of section one" of the Juvenile Court Law (St. 1915, p. 1225). The particular act charged was that the defendant wrote and delivered a note to said minor, asking her to meet him at some eucalyptus trees that night between the hours of 9:30 and 11 o'clock, and that said defendant did thereby attempt to induce and entice said minor to meet him privately at said eucalyptus trees, which were in a remote and secluded spot. There were further allegations showing the absence of any lawful reason or occasion for such an invitation by defendant to said minor.

At the trial, defendant waived trial by jury, and the case was presented to the court on a stipulation of facts. The note as delivered by defendant read as follows: "Tonight will wait down east Road where the Blue Gum Tree's will be there by 9/30 and will wait until 11." The defendant on the stated day wrote and delivered this note to the girl, Rosalie Zilly, who is of the age of 15 years, and the age of Mr. Hemma is 42 years. She was staying in a shop sewing when defendant came in and dropped this note in her lap. Inasmuch as the girl did not go to the suggested place of rendezvous, we agree with counsel for appellant in his contention that, if any crime was committed by defendant, the offense was completed by the delivery of the note. It is not material, although it appears to be the fact, that the defendant did not succeed in obtaining a favorable response to the suggestion contained in the note. If he has committed a crime, the offense consisted solely in the doing of an act which in its nature was such that it would tend to cause, encourage, and contribute to delinquency on the part of the minor.

The offense charged against the defendant is covered by the provisions of section 21 of the Juvenile Court Act, together with subdivision 11 of section 1 of the act. Said subdivision 11 places within the terms of the act any person under the age of 21 years who is leading or from any cause is in danger of leading an idle, dissolute, lewd, or immoral life. Section 21 reads as follows:

"Section 21. Penalties. Any person who shall commit any act or omit the performance of any duty, which act or omission causes or tends to cause or encourage any person under the age of twenty-one years to come within the provisions of any of subdivisions one to thirteen inclusive of section one of this act, or which act or omission contributes thereto, or any person who shall, by any act or omission, or by threats, or commands, or persuasion, induce or endeavor to induce any such person, under the age of twenty-one years, to do or to perform any act or to follow any course of conduct, or to so live as would cause or manifestly tend to cause any such person to become or to remain a person coming within the provisions of any of subdivisions one to thirteen inclusive of section one of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

The sole question to be decided is presented by appellant's contention that the delivery of said note by the defendant, a man of mature years, to a young girl in no way related to him, and without any apparent good reason therefor, does not carry with it any necessary implication that by said act he was seeking to persuade her to the commission of an act which would place her in danger of leading an idle, dissolute, lewd, or immoral life. We are of the opinion that this contention should not be sustained, and that, in the absence of any explanation showing an innocent purpose, the natural and reasonable tendency of the defendant's action, according to its manifest intention, was to persuade the young girl to commit an act such as this statute is intended to prevent. Our attention is not called to any decision which in its facts presents this precise question. We think, however, that the principles which should apply are fairly stated in People v. Cohen, 62 Cal. App. 521, 217 P. 78. The court, in sustaining the conviction in that case, said:

"The purpose of the juvenile law as now framed * * * is to protect the youth of our state from those evil and designing persons who would lead them astray, and we are not disposed to in any way impair its usefulness by giving any narrow or strained construction to any of its plain and obvious provisions."

In this case we wish to make it clear that we do not hold that under all circumstances the mere delivery to a minor of a note in the terms here shown would presumptively be a criminal act. There might be conditions and relationships of such character that the note would carry no suggestion of evil. But in this case the age of the man, and the absence of any normal or reasonable excuse for the defendant's act, leads to the necessary inference that he was seeking to accomplish an illegitimate purpose.

The judgment is affirmed.

EVERETT v. HAYES et al. (Civ. 3556.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 18, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 8, 1928.

1. Quieting title $\S$ 44(1)—It must be presumed, in purchaser's suit to quiet title after vendor's death, that consideration for transfer was reduced because of attachment lien.

In action by purchaser of property to quiet title after death of vendor against whom attachment suit had been instituted, it must be presumed that purchaser did not give full value for property, but that the consideration was less than its value because of the attachment lien.

2. Attachment $\S$ 272—Attachment lien continues after death of defendant unless principal action abates or statute prevents enforcement of lien.

In absence of statutory provisions preventing the enforcement of attachment liens, attachment lien should be recognized as continuing after death of defendant in the attachment suit, unless the action abates by reason of his death.

3. Abatement and revival ☞53—Death of defendant does not abate action on contract for recovery of money (Code Civ. Proc. § 385).

Action on contract to recover money does not abate on death of defendant under Code Civ. Proc. § 385.

4. Attachment ☞272—Attachment lien on vendor's land held not extinguished by vendor's death (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 385, 1504, and § 542a as amended by St. 1919, p. 64).

Attachment lien on vendor's land in favor of one purchasing the property while subject to the attachment and before vendor's death held not extinguished by vendor's death, under Code Civ. Proc. § 542a, as amended by St. 1919, p. 64, since action did not abate under Code Civ. Proc. § 385, and no statute prevents enforcement of such lien, though section 1504 denies lien under judgments against executors.

5. Attachment ☞272—Fact that judgment in attachment suit will not become lien because of defendant's death does not prevent enforcement of attachment lien acquired during defendant's lifetime (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 686, 1504, 1505, and § 542a as amended by St. 1919, p. 64).

Fact that judgment recovered in attachment suit will not become a lien on the land on account of defendant's death under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 686, 1504, 1505, does not prevent enforcement of attachment lien arising during defendant's lifetime under § 542a as amended by St. 1919, p. 64.

6. Attachment ☞224—Attachment lien continuing in force after defendant's death is enforceable by appropriate suit in equity, though no judgment lien can be acquired (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 686, 1504, 1505).

Attachment lien continuing in force after death of defendant can be enforced by appropriate suit in equity, where death of defendant before entry of judgment prevents possibility of judgment lien under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 686, 1504, 1505.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action by Frances A. Everett against J. Chauncy Hayes and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, of Los Angeles, and Wright & McKee, of San Diego, for appellants.

Dana R. Weller, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff brought this action December 24, 1924, to quiet her title to several parcels of land. The defendants alleged that in an action prosecuted by them against plaintiff's predecessor in interest, prior to the acquisition of title by the plaintiff, they had caused a writ of attachment to be duly levied on said lands and that such action was still pending and undetermined. They prayed "that plaintiff may take nothing by this action; that further proceedings herein may be stayed and continued until such time as the rights of the parties in said cause * * * may be determined and adjudicated;" and for other relief. The court found, in substance, that the defendants commenced an action against Mrs. L. J. H. Hastings September 28, 1923, to recover the sum of $11,000 alleged to be due them on contract; that in that action a writ of attachment was duly levied on part of the land described in the complaint herein which at that time belonged to and stood of record in the name of Mrs. Hastings; that the attachment has not been released or discharged and the action in which it was issued "has not been dismissed or terminated, but still remains pending and undetermined"; that "subsequent to the levy of said writ of attachment the said Mrs. L. J. H. Hastings conveyed to plaintiff all of her right, title, and interest in and to all of said property owned by her and upon which said writ of attachment had theretofore been levied; that subsequent to the date of said transfer, * * * on the 27th day of April, 1924, the said Mrs. L. J. H. Hastings died intestate, and that no proceedings have been taken by any person to administer upon her estate." As conclusions of law the court found that "the lien of the attachment * * * ceased to exist upon the death of the said Mrs. L. J. H. Hastings," and judgment was entered quieting the plaintiff's title against the claims of the defendants. The defendants have appealed from the judgment on the judgment roll alone.

[1-4] It was held in Myers v. Mott, 29 Cal. 359, 89 Am. Dec. 49, three of the justices joining in the decision and two dissenting, that if the defendant die after the levy of an attachment and before judgment in the action, his death destroys the lien of the attachment, and several later decisions are to the same effect. These decisions are not based upon any statute providing that the death of the defendant shall discharge the attachment, but upon the statutory provisions that, when a judgment is recovered against an executor or administrator, "no execution must issue upon such judgment, nor shall it create any lien upon the property of the estate, or give to the judgment creditor any priority of payment." Code Civ. Proc. § 1504. In the Myers Case (page 370 of 29 Cal.) it is said:

"Here no lien can be acquired by means of the judgment, and no execution is permitted, and the purpose of the attachment becoming impossible of accomplishment, by reason of the death of the defendant, it must of necessity, upon the happening of that event, have ceased to be a lien."

In Turner v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 187 Cal. 76, 84, 200 P. 959, 962, it is said:

"The right to pursue the debtor's property under attachment ends with his death, the attached property falls into the estate, and the only right left the attaching creditor as against the decedent's estate is to follow it under the modes of disposition provided by the probate law."

In this case the attached property does not belong to the estate, but has passed into the hands of a third person, who has no interest in the estate growing out of the transfer. From the findings of the court it appears that the property was conveyed to the plaintiff by quitclaim deed. It must be presumed that she did not give full value for the property, but that the consideration for the transfer was greatly less than such value because of the attachment lien. If the death of Mrs. Hastings discharged the attachment lien, then, if the estate is solvent, it will be compelled to pay any judgment recovered in the attachment suit, and, if insolvent, the plaintiffs therein will be unable to realize anything on the judgment, while the plaintiff in this action will hold the land freed from the lien with which it was incumbered at the time of the transfer, without any consideration therefor and contrary to natural justice. No reason appears for applying the rule announced in the Myers Case to the facts of this case, but that rule should be limited to cases in which express statutory provisions have the effect of preventing the enforcement of attachment liens. In the absence of such statutory provisions, "there seems to be no reason why the attachment lien should not continue after the death of defendant, unless the principal action abates by reason thereof." 6 C. J. 279; 21 A. L. R. 279; Ann. Cas. 1917A, 156. It is clear that the action against Mrs. Hastings did not abate by her death. Code Civ. Proc. § 385. Section 542a of the Code of Civil Procedure, added in 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 749), as subsequently amended (Stats. 1919, p. 64), provides:

"The attachment * * * shall be a lien upon all real property attached for a period of three years after the date of levy unless sooner released or discharged as provided in this chapter, by dismissal of the action or by entry and docketing of judgment in the action."

This action was commenced about 15 months after the levy of the writ of attachment.

[5] The fact that any judgment recovered in the attachment suit will not become a lien on the land will not prevent the enforcement of the attachment lien. Had the plaintiffs in that action recovered judgment during the lifetime of Mrs. Hastings and subsequent to the transfer, the judgment would not have been a lien on the land. Code Civ. Proc. § 674. It would not be contended, however, that, under such circumstances, the attachment lien would have been unenforceable. It has been held in a number of cases that an attachment lien on land may continue in force, under various circumstances, after entry of a judgment which does not constitute a lien on the land. Riley v. Nance, 97 Cal. 203, 204, 31 P. 1126, 32 P. 515; Weinreich v. Hensley, 121 Cal. 647, 661, 54 P. 254; Brun v. Evans, 197 Cal. 439, 442, 241 P. 86.

[6] In the event of recovery of judgment by the plaintiffs in the attachment suit, since the attachment lien will be continued in force, the lien can be enforced by an appropriate suit in equity. In upholding the enforcement in equity of a judgment lien where there was no other adequate remedy, it was said:

"The enforcement of liens, whether equitable or statutory, is a well-recognized function of courts of equity; and the only distinction in this respect between the different kinds of liens is, that in the case of the latter equity will interpose only where there is no other adequate remedy. * * * In this case the property in question was conveyed to her daughter by Mrs. Wallace in her lifetime, and therefore never formed part of her estate. It could not be reached, therefore, in the probate proceeding; nor could an execution be issued on the respondent's judgment. (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 686, 1505.) The respondent was therefore wholly without remedy otherwise than by resort to a court of equity. Whether there was other property in the estate out of which the claim might be paid does not appear; nor is the question material. The respondent has a specific lien on the property in question, which—so long as the debt is not satisfied—he is entitled to enforce." Hibernia, etc., Soc. v. London, etc., Ins. Co., 138 Cal. 257, 259, 71 P. 334.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. BIGELOW. (Cr. 1633.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 18, 1928.

1. Poisons ☞9—Evidence held to sustain conviction for unlawful possession of morphine and heroin (Poison Act).

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of defendant for the possession of morphine and heroin in violation of Poison Act (St. 1907, p. 124, as amended).

2. Criminal law ☞1211—Defendant who previously served 18 months in federal penitentiary for violating Harrison Narcotic Act held properly sentenced as prior offender on his conviction of unlawfully possessing narcotics (Poison Act; Pen. Code, §§ 17, 666-668; 18 USCA § 541; 26 USCA 705).

On his conviction for possession of morphine and heroin in violation of Poison Act (St. 1907, p. 124, as amended), a felony, defendant who had been previously convicted of violating Harrison Narcotic Act, for which he had served 18 months in federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan., and which was a felony under 18 USCA § 541, 26 USCA § 705, was properly sentenced as one previously convicted of a felony, under Pen. Code, §§ 17, 666-668.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Virgil H. Bigelow was convicted, as former offender, of unlawfully possessing morphine and heroin in violation of State Poison Act as amended, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Cooper & Collings, and John S. Cooper, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and V. L. Ferguson, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant was convicted on an information which charged him with the offense of violating the State Poison Act (Stats. 1907, p. 124, as variously amended), a felony. At the conclusion of the trial, under the provisions of section 969a of the Penal Code, added by St. 1927, p. 1064, the information against defendant was amended so that in addition to the charge contained in the original information he was charged with a "previous conviction," which latter fact was admitted by defendant. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The gist of the offense alleged to have been committed by defendant was the unlawful possession by him of certain morphine and heroin. From the record it appears that when arrested defendant had a considerable quantity of each of the drugs on his person. Although the defense consisted of an attempt to show that at the time of his arrest defendant was lawfully acting in conjunction with federal officers for the purpose of entrapping and causing the arrest and conviction of certain persons suspected of being unlawful dealers in drugs, on cross-examination defendant admitted that the morphine and heroin in his possession were purchased by him and intended to be used by him personally. It is therefore clear that appellant's contention that the evidence did not support the verdict cannot be sustained.

[2] Appellant also urges the point that the trial court erred in imposing sentence upon defendant as for one who theretofore had been convicted of a felony.

By sections 666, 667, and 668 of the Penal Code, in substance it is provided that one who has been convicted of a former offense which, if committed within this state, would be punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, is punishable for any subsequent crime committed by him within this state by a punishment more severe than though theretofore he had not suffered such prior conviction. As hereinbefore stated, defendant admitted his former conviction of a felony, to wit, under the so-called Harrison Narcotic Act, for which he served a term of 18 months' imprisonment in the Leavenworth Penitentiary, at Leavenworth, state of Kansas. The penalty for violation of the federal statute (section 5460, Barnes' Fed. Code, 1919; 26 USCA § 705) is "not more than five years" imprisonment; and by section 10038 of the same Code, 18 USCA § 541, it is provided in effect that all offenses which may be punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year shall be deemed felonies. It would follow that so far as the federal statutes are concerned, defendant was convicted of a felony. While the so-called State Poison Act (Stats. 1907, p. 124, as variously amended) is not the exact counterpart of the Harrison Narcotic Act, in its substance, in part, it denounces the same general conduct, and provides various penalties for the infraction thereof, ranging from fines, or imprisonment in the county jail, to imprisonment in the state prison. By section 17 of the Penal Code felonies and misdemeanors are defined as follows:

"A felony is a crime which is punishable with death or by imprisonment in the state prison. Every other crime is a misdemeanor. When a crime, punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, is also punishable by fine or imprisonment in a county jail, in the discretion of the court, it shall be deemed a misdemeanor for all purposes after a judgment imposing a punishment other than imprisonment in the state prison."

As is said in People v. Smith, 143 Cal. 597, 599, 77 P. 449, 450:

"The question as to whether or not a crime is a felony depends upon the punishment. If the punishment is imprisonment in the state prison the crime is a felony."

See, also, People v. Sacramento Butchers' Ass'n, 12 Cal. App. 471, 489, 107 P. 712.

In the case of Doble v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 556, 576, 241 P. 852, 860, it is held that a fair construction of section 17 of the Penal Code is:

"That in prosecutions within the contemplation of that section, the charge stands as a felony for every purpose up to judgment, and if the judgment be felonious in that event it is a felony after as well as before judgment; but if the judgment is for a misdemeanor it is deemed a misdemeanor for all purposes thereafter."

It appearing that the former conviction of defendant was of an offense punishable by imprisonment in the state prison of this state, and that in fact for the commission of the offense of which defendant was convicted he was sentenced to, and served a term of, imprisonment in a federal penitentiary for a term of 18 months, it follows that no error was committed by the trial court in pronouncing judgment upon the defendant as for one who theretofore had been convicted of a felony.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 15, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 8, 1928.

Burglary § 18—Information charging burglary by entering premises to commit larceny held not defective because of use of word "larceny" instead of "theft" (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by and section 490a as added by St. 1927, p. 1046).

Information charging burglary by unlawfully entering described premises with intent to commit larceny therein held not defective because of use of word "larceny" instead of "theft," under Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, providing that a person guilty of any one of several offenses specified, including larceny, is guilty of theft and section 490a as added by St. 1927, p. 1046, providing that wherever any statute refers to larceny, embezzlement or stealing it shall be interpreted as if the word "theft" were substituted therefor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Charles Giron was convicted of burglary by willfully and unlawfully entering certain described premises with the intent to commit larceny therein, and he appeals. Affirmed.

R. O. Stotter, of Long Beach, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, J. In each case the information charged that the defendant committed the crime of burglary by willfully, unlawfully, etc., entering certain described premises "with the intent then and there and therein to commit the crime of larceny." The cases were consolidated for trial. The jury found defendant guilty in each case, and judgments were entered accordingly. He appeals from the judgments.

The sole ground of appeal is that the informations do not charge any public offenses, for the reason that under the amendments of the Penal Code, adopted in 1927, there is no longer a crime in this state by the name of larceny. Section 459 of the Penal Code, which defines burglary, provides that every person who enters any house, room, etc., "with intent to commit grand or petit larceny, or any felony is guilty of burglary." It will be noted that the informations were drawn in accordance with this language of the statute.

Prior to the amendments to the Penal Code, made in the year 1927, larceny was the name given by the Code (section 484) to the felonious stealing of personal property. The definition there given was, in substance, the common-law definition of that crime. For the purpose of consolidating larceny and certain other crimes under a common name, section 484 was so amended (St. 1927, p. 1046) that a person guilty of any one of those several offenses is declared to be guilty of theft. The acts which theretofore constituted the crime of larceny are now included in the definition of theft. At the same time there was added to the Penal Code a new section, 490a. "Theft to be substituted for larceny, embezzlement or stealing. Wherever any law or statute of this state refers to or mentions larceny, embezzlement, or stealing, said law or statute shall hereafter be read and interpreted as if the word 'theft' were substituted therefor." It is contended by appellant that under these amendments the crime defined by section 484 must now be read as the crime of "theft," and that therefore when the informations charged that the defendant unlawfully entered the described premises with intent to commit larceny, they merely charged the unlawful entry by defendant upon premises of another—in other words, a mere trespass, but not any crime punishable under laws of this state.

We think there is no merit in this contention. So far as the new definition of larceny is concerned, the change of name is one of form and not of substance. The amendments did not wipe out the common-law definition of larceny, nor did they destroy the universal meaning of the word wherever English is spoken, that larceny is a form of theft. To think otherwise would be to defy common sense.

The judgments are affirmed.

Roscoe O. Stotter, of Long Beach, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, of Los Angeles, for the People.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction on a charge of burglary.
The sole ground of appeal relied upon by appellant is identical with the contention of appellant in People v. Giron, Crim. No. 1699 (Cal.
App.) 270 P. 462, opinion this day filed. On the authority of that decision, and for the reasons therein appearing, the judgment in this case is affirmed.

SMITH v. SMITH. (Civ. 3469.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 18, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 18, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 10, 1928.

1. Divorce ⇐236—Wife's agreement, releasing claim for support in consideration of husband's dismissal of appeal from wife's judgment against him, held not to prevent awarding alimony in divorce suit (Civ. Code, §§ 139, 146, 147, 158-160).

Allowance of alimony in divorce suit held within court's jurisdiction, under Civ. Code, §§ 139, 146, 147, notwithstanding existence of agreement between spouses whereby wife released all claim to alimony or support from husband's property in return for his dismissal of appeal from judgment against him and in favor of his wife, since agreement was not a property settlement, as contemplated by Civ. Code, §§
158-160, and court could therefore disregard it.

2. Divorce ⇐236—No consideration for wife's release of alimony was shown by husband's agreement to dismiss appeal from wife's judgment and not to seek repayment of moneys paid thereunder.

Husband's agreement not to seek repayment of moneys paid wife under judgment, and to dismiss appeal from judgment in return for wife's release of claims for her support and for custody of children, showed want of consideration on its face, since presumption necessarily attached that judgment referred to was properly entered.

3. Judgment ⇐951(1)—Judgment referred to in agreement for dismissal of appeal is presumed to have been properly entered.

Judgment referred to in husband's agreement to dismiss appeal, in return for wife's release of claim for support, is presumed to have been properly entered.

4. Divorce ⇐200—Court is not limited to community property in providing for wife's support in divorce suit (Civ. Code, § 139).

Power of court in making provision for support of wife in suit for divorce, under Civ.
Code, § 139, is not limited to community property rights.

5. Divorce ⇐245(1)—Expiration of time for appeal from interlocutory judgment of divorce held not to preclude its alteration as to alimony (Civ. Code, § 139).

Fact that time for appeal from interlocutory judgment in divorce suit has expired held not to preclude change in decree regarding alimony, under Civ. Code, § 139.

6. Divorce ⇐245(1)—Husband and wife, executing agreement for wife's support prior to divorce, are presumed to have contracted with reference to power of trial court to modify agreement (Civ. Code, §§ 139, 158, 159, 160).

Husband and wife, in making agreement for wife's support, under Civ. Code, §§ 158-160, will be presumed to have contracted with the understanding that trial court, in suit for divorce, possesses power to change or modify award or provision as circumstances may require, under section 139.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County;
Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Suit for divorce by Elaine T. Smith against Sidney V. Smith, Jr. From a final decree of divorce, in so far as it awarded alimony and counsel fees, and from an order modifying the award of alimony, defendant appeals.
Affirmed in part.

Alden Ames, of San Francisco, and Henry
& Bedeau, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Charles A. Wetmore, Jr., of San Francisco, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. On the 25th day of June, 1926, an interlocutory decree of divorce was entered in the above-entitled action, which decree is in the words and figures following, to wit:

"This cause came on regularly for trial before the court on the 24th day of June, 1926, upon the complaint of plaintiff and the answer thereto of defendant. W. H. Carlin appeared as counsel for plaintiff, and Alden Ames appeared as counsel for defendant. A trial by jury having been expressly waived by the respective parties, the cause was tried before the court without a jury; whereupon witnesses were duly sworn and examined, and they testified in said cause, and documentary evidence was introduced therein, and the stipulation of the parties concerning property rights and custody of the children was received in evidence, and the testimony was closed, and thereupon findings of fact and conclusions of law were duly waived by the respective parties by their written consent, duly made, signed, and filed with the clerk of this court; and the court having duly considered the evidence and being fully advised in the premises, and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that all and singular the allegations and averments in plaintiff's complaint contained are true:

"Whereupon it is hereby adjudged, determined, and declared, that plaintiff, Elaine T. Smith, is entitled to a divorce from the defendant, Sidney V. Smith, Jr. It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that there is no community property whatsoever existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that plaintiff be awarded no property whatsoever; that the care, custody, and control of the two elder children of plaintiff and defendant, referred to in the complaint in this action, namely, Sidney V. Smith, Jr., and Cora B. Smith, be and hereby is awarded to their uncle, Felix T. Smith, with the right and privilege on the part of both plaintiff and defendant to visit and see said children at all proper times and proper occasions; that the custody, care, and control of the youngest child of said marriage, namely, Elaine Smith, be and the same hereby is awarded to Anna Trenberth, mother of plaintiff, and Felix T. Smith, jointly; the manual care of said child to remain with said Anna Trenberth during her lifetime and while able to attend to the same, with the right and privilege on the part of both plaintiff and defendant to visit and see said child at all proper times and on proper occasions.

"It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that, commencing with the 1st day of July, 1926, and on the 1st day of each and every month thereafter, continuing for a period of one year, or 12 months, defendant Sidney V. Smith, Jr., shall pay to plaintiff as alimony the sum of one hundred dollars ($100).

"It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that each of the parties to this action shall defray and pay his and her own costs and counsel fees.

"Done in open court this 25th day of June, 1926. Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge."

On the 20th day of June, 1927, pursuant to a notice thereof given on or about the 6th day of June, 1927, the plaintiff moved the court to amend the order or decree for alimony, and to provide that, until the further order of the court, the defendant should pay to the plaintiff the sum of $250 per month as alimony for her maintenance and support, and also for a like sum for counsel fees. A hearing was had upon this motion, which was supported by affidavits and oral testimony, taken under advisement by the court, and thereafter an order was made, changing the order or decree of the court as to the alimony to be awarded to the plaintiff, and ordering that until further change the defendant should pay to the plaintiff the sum of $175 per month, and also further specifying that the plaintiff "be allowed the further sum of $200 as and for attorney's fees in this proceeding, and her costs incurred herein." The motion for the change in the allowance of alimony was made, and, as appears from the recital contained in the order of the trial court awarding further alimony, was by reason of the physical incapacity of the plaintiff to support herself, and the further reason that she was without means and entirely dependent upon such alimony as should be allowed by the court.

The proceedings had before the trial court upon the motion for an order continuing the allowance of alimony and specifying the amount to be paid monthly show that the minor children, the issue of the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant, had been amply provided for by the last wills and testaments of a grandfather and grandmother, being the deceased father and mother of the defendant Sidney V. Smith, Jr. The record also shows that the defendant was in possession of certain farming lands in the county of Yuba, of the value of some $40,000, and that he was also the beneficiary of a trust fund aggregating a trifle over $108,000 in value, and the amount of the income therefrom amply enabled the defendant to comply with the orders of the court. The record before us contains practically no contention to the contrary. Following the entry of the order which we have just referred to, the court, on the 24th day of October, 1927, entered a final decree of divorce, following the interlocutory decree as modified, and as to the alimony the decree reads as follows:

"It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendant above named, Sidney V. Smith, Jr., do pay to the plaintiff above named, Elaine T. Smith, the sum of $175 per month as permanent alimony, payable monthly commencing on the date, July 1, 1927, and to continue monthly thereafter until the further order of this court."

The final decree also directed that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff the sum of $200 as and for her counsel fees. Following the entry of the final decree, the defendant appealed from the order modifying the award of alimony, and also from the final decree in so far as it awarded alimony and counsel fees. Prior to the entry of the interlocutory decree in said cause a stipulation was entered into between the plaintiff and defendant, which reads as follows:

"In the event that, upon such competent testimony as may be adduced upon the trial of the above-entitled action, an interlocutory decree of divorce should be entered in favor of plaintiff and against defendant, and concerning which this stipulation shall be silent, it is hereby agreed by and between the parties hereto as follows:

"I. The care, custody, and control of the two elder children named in the complaint herein, namely, Sidney V. Smith, Jr., and Cora B. Smith, shall be awarded to their uncle, Felix T. Smith, with the right and privilege on the part of plaintiff to visit and see said children at all proper times and on all proper occasions.

"II. The care, custody, and control of the youngest child, Elaine Smith, shall be awarded to Anna Trenberth and said Felix T. Smith, with the right and privilege on the part of both plaintiff and defendant to visit and see said child at all proper times and on all proper occasions.

"III. Defendant shall be responsible and pay for the support, maintenance, and education of said three children.

"IV. For a period of one year from and after the 1st day of July, 1926, defendant shall monthly, commencing with the 1st day of July, 1926, and on the 1st day of each and every month thereafter for a period of one year, pay to plaintiff the sum of one hundred dollars ($100.00).

"Dated this 24th day of June, 1926.

"Elaine T. Smith, Plaintiff.

"Sidney V. Smith, Jr.

"W. H. Carlin, Attorney for Plaintiff.

"Wallace & Ames, Attorneys for Defendant."

This stipulation was presented to the court, and, as appears from the recital contained in the interlocutory decree, was considered by the court prior to the entry of the decree. At about the same time another instrument in writing was signed by the respective parties reading as follows:

"This agreement, made and entered into this 24th day of June, 1926, by and between Elaine T. Smith, hereinafter called the wife, and S. V. Smith, Jr., hereinafter called the husband, witnesseseth:

"That in consideration of the dismissal of the appeal heretofore taken by the husband on the judgment obtained by the wife against him in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Yuba, and his agreeing not to seek repayment of any moneys heretofore paid by him to the wife under his [her] judgment, the wife hereby releases and discharges the husband from all claims and demands of every kind and nature, whether for moneys owing or to any community property or alleged community property in his possession or control, or for alimony or maintenance or support heretofore accrued or hereafter to accrue, and for said consideration the wife further agrees that the husband may have undisturbed the custody and control of the children of the parties.

"In witness whereof, the parties hereto signed their names the day and year first hereinabove written.

Elaine T. Smith.

"Sidney V. Smith.

"Witness: Alden Ames."

This agreement was not introduced in evidence at the trial of the divorce action, and was not considered by the court in the entry of the interlocutory decree. However, upon the motion interposed by the plaintiff to modify or change the terms of the interlocutory decree relative to the allowance of alimony, this instrument was introduced in evidence, and in the language of the trial court was to be considered "for whatever it was worth." Upon this appeal it is contended that the trial court was without jurisdiction to make any allowance of alimony by reason of the stipulation and the agreement which we have set forth.

It is first contended that, as the time for appealing from the interlocutory decree had expired, the trial court was without jurisdiction to change its terms. The contention, however, is not pressed with much seriousness; the stress of appellant's argument being based upon the stipulation introduced in evidence prior to the entry of the interlocutory decree, and the agreement introduced in testimony upon the hearing of the motion for a change in the order as to the allowance of alimony. Whether the stipulation and the agreement should be considered as one instrument, or as parts of one instrument, under the provisions of section 1624 of the Civil Code, does not appear to us to be material. The stipulation was only introduced in testimony and presented for consideration by the trial court prior to the entry of the interlocutory decree. As we read the stipulation, there is nothing therein which in any way tends to limit any payment on the part of the defendant to the plaintiff, or to limit the power of the court to make such further order as it might deem consistent with the necessities of one party and the ability of the other. The stipulation and order of the court did not provide for the payment of a lump sum, but merely that the particular amount specified was to be paid every month for the period of one year, leaving to the court its jurisdiction to make such further order under section 139 of the Civil Code as the circumstances of the parties might justify.

[1-3] It is contended, however, that the instrument, called the "agreement," introduced in evidence upon the hearing for the continuance or modification of the further payment of alimony, absolutely barred the plaintiff in this action from any further rights, and also inhibited the court from making any provision for her support and maintenance, irrespective of any changed circumstances or conditions affecting the necessity therefor. When carefully considered, this instrument is found to be not a property settlement, as contemplated by sections 158, 159, and 160 of the Civil Code. The instrument does not purport to be anything further or other than a release of the defendant by and on the part of the plaintiff of any claims as to any alleged community property, or for alimony or maintenance accrued or to accrue, and an agreement that the husband might have, undisturbed, the custody and control of the children; the purported consideration being the dismissal by Sidney V. Smith, the defendant in this action, of an appeal theretofore taken by him from a judgment obtained by the plaintiff against him in a previous action, and his agreeing not to seek repayment of any moneys theretofore paid by him to the plaintiff under and by virtue of the judgment in said action. This agreement was not considered by the trial court, as we have said, prior to the entry of the interlocutory decree, and it appears from the record to have been disregarded by the trial court in the entry of the order and decree from which the defendant has appealed.

Not being a property settlement, not having made any settlement upon the wife whatever of any property or making any provisions for her support and maintenance, it is evident to us that the trial court, if it had jurisdiction so to do, very properly disregarded the terms of the so-called agreement. There being nothing to the contrary in the record, the presumption necessarily attaches that the judgment referred to in the agreement was properly entered; that there was no money to the payment of which Sidney V. Smith, Jr., was entitled. This being true, the instrument upon its face shows a want of consideration. All that can be said in favor of the instrument is that it probably evidences a desire on the part of the plaintiff to get free from the bonds which had bound her to a man at whose hands the court found that she had suffered extreme cruelty sufficient to entitle her to a divorce. The stipulation which we have set forth and considered by the court in the entry of its interlocutory decree evidences a departure from the terms of the so-called agreement by both parties to the action, and also by the court.

[4] With these premises laid down, we will consider the cases relied upon by counsel, and also those which we deem decisive of this case. Appellant sets forth that all questions possible to be raised in this case are fully considered and decided in his favor in the case of Brown v. Brown (Cal. App.) 244, 256 P. 595. It requires, however, only a cursory review of the Brown Case to show that appellant's contention is untenable. The Brown Case did not involve the power of the trial court to modify or change a previous order under and in accordance with the terms of section 139 of the Civil Code. In the Brown Case the issue involved was as to whether the agreement that had been entered into between the parties pursuant to sections 158 and 159 of the Civil Code, and incorporated into the interlocutory decree of divorce, was valid or void. The question decided was whether the respective parties had the legal right to enter into such an agreement, and did not in any way involve the jurisdiction of the trial court to either adopt or disregard the property settlement that had been arranged between the parties. The trial court, however, did adopt the settlement made by the parties and set it forth as a part of the interlocutory decree.

The point urged against the agreement was that it was void, as against public policy, and in not having been entered into until after the actual separation of the parties. Nothing of that nature is involved in the controversy now before us. The holding of this court in the case of Brown v. Brown, supra, that an agreement entered into between husband and wife, making provision for the support of the wife and incorporated into the interlocutory decree of divorce, is not controlling in this case, where the agreement makes no provision for the support of the wife, settles no property upon her, and, not having been made a part of the interlocutory decree of divorce, is not an authority to the effect that the power of the court to change or modify alimony allowances under the terms of section 139, Civil Code, is in any wise limited or abridged. The circumstances involved in the Brown Case and in the case at bar are entirely dissimilar. The sections of the Civil Code considered and applied in the Brown Case are not applicable here.

In the case of McCahan v. McCahan, 47 Cal. App. 176, 190 P. 460, the court, in an opinion written by Mr. Justice Waste, had occasion to consider the power of the trial court to approve or disregard agreements between husband and wife relative to the settlement of property rights and the making of provision for the support of the contracting parties. It is there said:

"The trial court, having jurisdiction of the divorce action, had unlimited authority to make disposition of the community property of the parties. Civ. Code, §§ 146, 147. Whenever, therefore, it was made to appear that a division of the property had been made in accordance with the terms of the separation agreement, the court necessarily had jurisdiction to consider the instrument, and to affirm it, or to disregard it, if it was found to be void. 'Such pretended agreements, if they are to have any force, must be subjected to the examination of the divorce court, and derive their sanction from a decree made by the court with a knowledge of the facts.' Loveren v. Loveren, 106 Cal. 509, 513, 39 P. 801. The court, in the instant case, in its decree made no division of the property of the parties, or provision for the support of the defendant, but did recognize and expressly reserve to her the power to assert such rights and benefits as might accrue to her under the previously executed articles of separation. This action on its part we construe to be a ratification of the agreement to that extent."

The agreement under consideration made provision for the support of the wife, and, as shown by the quotation, was adopted and approved by the trial court to that extent. True, the agreement had to do with the division of community property. But the power of the court, under section 139, Civil Code, is not limited to community property rights in making provision for the support of the wife. Again, in the McCahan Case the decree of divorce did not undertake to make any other or separate provision for the support of the wife, other than followed as a necessary imputation from a ratification of the agreement entered into between the parties. Instead of being an authority to support the appellant's contention in the case at bar, it is an authority in support of the action of the trial court. The striking force of the opinion in the McCahan Case is found in these words:

"Such pretended agreements, if they are to have any force, must be subjected to the examination of the divorce court, and derive their sanction from a decree made by the court with a knowledge of the facts." (Italics ours.)

When a knowledge of all of the facts was brought home to the trial court in the case at bar, the agreement was disregarded, and modification of the previously entered decree made as demanded by the necessities of the plaintiff and the ability of the defendant to pay, as shown by the testimony set forth in the record.

In Soule v. Soule, 4 Cal. App. 97, 87 P. 205, the power of the court to modify or change an allowance of alimony previously made was very fully considered, and it was there held that whether the court, in the decree of divorce, used the word "permanent" or "temporary" alimony was wholly immaterial; that under section 139, Civil Code, the court had power to measure and fix the amount of compensation to be allowed for the support of the wife and to change the same from time to time as the necessities of the case and the circumstances of the parties required. The court further, in its opinion, stated that the burden was upon the plaintiff to show that the agreement involved was to be for life, and that such agreement was made known to the court before the decree was signed. This latter circumstance removes the case from the list of authorities relied upon in support of the defendant's appeal. The agreement was not made known to the court in either case, and there is nothing in the record in the case at bar which shows that the trial court, in making its allowance in the first instance, had anything before it to indicate that the parties intended to limit the power of the trial court to make further provision for the support of the wife, and when the agreement was subsequently brought to the attention of the court, and subjected to its inspection in the light of the facts as to the defendant's ability to pay and the plaintiff's necessities, was disregarded.

[5] The fact that the time for appealing from the interlocutory judgment had expired is of no moment. This court, in the case of Gates v. Gates, 54 Cal. App. 407, 202 P. 151, in an opinion written by Mr. Justice Burnett, hearing herein denied by the Supreme Court, held:

"That the interlocutory judgment had become final before the modification was made does not render said section 139 [Civil Code] inapplicable."

In that case the modification was not made until after the time for appealing from the interlocutory decree had expired. The authorities cited in that case are all applicable here. In the recent case of Smith v. Superior Court, 264 P. 573, this court, in an opinion written by Mr. Justice Hart, had occasion to affirm the ruling in the Gates Case.

In the case of Mathews v. Mathews, 55 Cal. App. 661, 204 P. 27, it was held that the court had power under section 139, Civil Code, to modify an allowance of alimony and to make an award different than that agreed to by the parties. The circumstances there did not show that the stipulation was before the court or was ratified by it. It was further held that the award under section 139, Civil Code, is to be made with regard to the circumstances of the parties, respectively, and when the circumstances change, the court may in its discretion modify the award. In Hughes v. Hughes, 68 Cal. App. 195, 228 P. 675, it was held that:

"The superior court, in an action for divorce, has jurisdiction to make, on the application of the husband, an order modifying an interlocutory decree by reducing the amount of maintenance awarded thereby, notwithstanding the fact that the parties have previously made an agreement settling their property rights wherein the husband agreed to pay to the wife a stipulated monthly sum," etc.

If this is true, where provision has been made by the agreement for the support of the wife by the husband, with stronger reasoning must the rule apply that the court has power to act under section 139, Civil Code, where no provision has been made and the circumstances equitably require such action. In the Hughes Case, as in the case at bar, it was not shown whether the court, in framing its decree, adopted, rejected or ignored the agreement, etc. In Lynch v. Lynch, 69 Cal. App. 66, 230 P. 462, the jurisdiction of the trial court to modify its orders awarding alimony is considered, the authorities collected and the rule heretofore announced exemplified and followed. In Bacigalupi v. Bacigalupi, 72 Cal. App. 654, 238 P. 93, a case was presented where the interlocutory decree had become final and did not purport in any way to award alimony. The power of the court to thereafter make provision for the wife was denied. No alimony having been allowed and no award having been made, there was nothing to modify or to change. This difference in circumstances readily distinguishes the Bacigalupi Case from the case at bar.

In Moog v. Moog, 264 P. 490, the Supreme Court having before it the question of the power of the trial court in divorce actions to make provision for the wife in the face of contracts of settlement between the parties, holds as follows:

"With reference to ordinary contracts, the position of appellant is sound, undoubtedly; but in actions for divorce there is a very large discretion vested in the trial court in the allowance of permanent support for the wife, where she is granted a divorce, even in the face of contracts of settlement between the parties. Such contracts must be subjected to the examination of a court in the divorce action and derive their sanction from a decree made by the court with knowledge of all the facts. Loveren v. Loveren, 106 Cal. 509, 39 P. 801; McCahan v. McCahan, 47 Cal. App. 176, 190 P. 460; Roberts v. Roberts (Cal. App.) 256 P. 826. The rule stated in Corpus Juris, vol. 19, p. 218, is to the effect that where provision has been made by the husband for the wife, by separation agreement, the wife is not entitled to temporary alimony, unless she offers to return what she has received or shows that the amount provided for in the agreement is not sufficient for her needs. The latter condition existed in the instant case. While the court found that the agreement was entered into without fraud or undue influence, it, nevertheless, found that the plaintiff had become totally blind since it was entered into and had become afflicted with tuberculosis and was in need of the services of a nurse, and that she was without means. It was this unfortunate condition, doubtless, which influenced the court in making the award of alimony in addition to what had already been received by plaintiff. Under the circumstances, we see no reason to interfere with the exercise of discretion vested in the trial court."

[6] That the general current of authority is in line with the holding of the cases which we have cited as to the power of the trial court to disregard agreements between the parties relative to provisions for support, appears from the case of Jennison v. Jennison, 136 Ga. 202, 71 S. E. 244, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 441, and the notes thereto. The holding of the cases there cited is to the effect that the order allowing alimony is subject to revision at any time. The parties, in making the agreement, will be presumed to have entered into the same with the understanding that the trial court possessed the power to change or modify the award or provision made for support, as the circumstances might require or as the justice of the case might necessitate, the distinction being drawn that in some states, there being no statute similar to our code, the power to change or modify must be reserved in the decree.

All of the cases cited by appellant are reviewed in some one of the cases which we have considered, and therefore are not particularly mentioned herein.

On the part of the respondent it is urged that practically every question presented for decision in the record now before this court was considered and disposed of in an elaborate opinion prepared by Mr. Justice Hart, of this court, in the case of Smith v. Superior Court, reported in 264 P. 573. With this contention we agree. On the part of the appellant it is contended that the issues presented upon this appeal are not all involved in the proceeding just referred to, that the proceeding there was by certiorari, here by appeal, and that the agreement which we have considered was not before the court in the record presented upon application for a writ of certiorari. Be this as it may, the opinion of this court upon certiorari fully considered the jurisdiction of the trial court, the effect of the agreement, and the power of the court to ratify or disregard the same. The agreement is now before the court, and everything which was said by this court upon the certiorari proceedings relative to the agreement and the issues involved herein are pertinent and decisive, and are hereby affirmed as being a correct statement of the law.

Respondent admits that the order allowing attorney's fees should not have been made. For this reason the power of the court in relation thereto is not considered, and the amount allowed by the trial court as attorney's fees is ordered stricken from the judgment. In all other respects the judgment is affirmed. The respondent is awarded costs on appeal.

PEOPLE v. KNOCKE. (Cr. 1705; 3194.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 19, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 15, 1928.

1. Criminal law §655(5)—In theft prosecution, judge's remark to defendant's attorney, that he was surprised any one passing bar examination should raise question raised, held not prejudicial misconduct.

In prosecution for grand theft, where witness was asked value of stock he turned over to defendant and another and defendant's attorney objected on ground that witness could not testify as to value, court's remark to defendant's attorney, that he was surprised that any one passing bar examination should raise question whether owner could testify regarding value of anything he possesses, held not prejudicial misconduct.

2. Criminal law §1129(1)—In theft prosecution where court remarked to defendant's attorney cross-examining witness that he was going to insist on attorney's being fair with witness, misconduct may not be predicated on occurrence in absence of assignment.

In prosecution for grand theft where there had been considerable cross-examination concerning memorandum used by witness to refresh her recollection, and where defendant's attorney told witness she was changing her testimony, and court stated to attorney that he was going to insist on his being fair with witness and that witness had not changed her testimony, misconduct may not be predicated upon occurrence in absence of assignment.

3. Criminal law §655(5)—Where district attorney objected to question as immaterial and defendant's counsel stated, "Why, I should say not," court's remarks regarding defendant's attorney's behaving himself in court held not prejudicial misconduct.

In prosecution for grand theft, where, during cross-examination of witness, deputy district attorney objected to question as immaterial and defendant's counsel stated, "Why, I should say not," court's statement to defendant's attorney: "Now wait. If you cannot behave yourself in this court, you better go and practice in the police court. Make your motion in a quiet manner," whereupon defendant's attorney apologized, held not prejudicial misconduct.

4. Criminal law § 655(1)—Court's admonition to accused during discussion between judge and counsel to keep quiet, or accused would be in jail for contempt of court, held not prejudicial misconduct.

In prosecution for grand theft, court's admonition to accused during discussion between judge and counsel: "Now please keep quiet. This is about the third or fourth time you have attempted to talk to me from the witness stand, and I don't like it. You are here to answer questions. If there is any more of that kind of talk, you will be in jail over Saturday and Sunday for contempt of court," held not prejudicial misconduct.

5. Criminal law § 1169(5)—Where court struck out conversations objected to as hearsay testimony, accused cannot complain regarding admission.

In prosecution for grand theft where witness testified regarding conversations which were objected to as hearsay testimony and court struck out all conversations, accused cannot complain.

6. Witnesses § 246(1)—Court may occasionally ask question to elucidate or make clear point which might otherwise remain in doubt.

It is not improper for trial judge occasionally to ask question for purpose of elucidating or making clear any point which might otherwise remain in doubt.

7. Criminal law § 696(3)—Court properly struck out testimony of character witness who had never discussed accused's reputation with any one in place where he knew him.

In prosecution for grand theft, court properly struck out testimony of character witness who testified he had known accused in Los Angeles for eight months and that he first knew him in Davenport, where witness testified he had never discussed accused's reputation with any one in Los Angeles.

3. False pretenses § 49(1)—In prosecution for grand theft, all circumstances connected with transaction, conduct of defendant, and declarations of others may be looked to to furnish corroborative evidence (Pen. Code, § 1110).

In prosecution for grand theft, all circumstances connected with transaction, conduct of defendant, and his declarations to other persons may be looked to to furnish necessary corroborative evidence under Pen. Code, § 1110.

9. False pretenses § 49(1)—Evidence held sufficient to support conviction for grand theft.

In prosecution for grand theft, evidence held sufficient to support conviction.

10. Criminal law § 829(1)—Error cannot be predicated upon refusal of instruction covered by instructions given.

Error may not be predicated upon refusal of court to give instruction covered by instructions given.

11. Criminal law § 829(18)—Refusing instructions on rule of reasonable doubt held not error, where court delivered instruction in words of statute on subject (Pen. Code, § 1096, and section 1096a, added by St. 1927, p. 1039).

In prosecution for grand theft, refusal of instructions dealing with rule of reasonable doubt held not error, where court delivered instruction in words of Pen. Code, § 1096, relating to reasonable doubt, in view of § 1096a, added by St. 1927, p. 1039, providing that when this is done no further instruction upon presumption of innocence or defining reasonable doubt need be given.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Arthur E. Knocke was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Kearby, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The defendant by information was charged with five different offenses of grand theft, on all of which counts the jury returned a verdict of guilty. He appeals from the judgments pronounced thereupon and also from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

In support of the appeal, counsel assigns four grounds as follows: (1) Misconduct of the trial judge consisting of asserted prejudicial and improper remarks during the course of the trial; (2) errors in the admission and exclusion of evidence; (3) insufficient evidence to support the conviction, including the argument that there is no corroborative evidence required by section 1110 of the Penal Code; and (4) error in refusing to give certain requested instructions.

We shall follow the foregoing order in our consideration of the problems presented, and turn first to what is claimed to constitute misconduct on the part of the trial court. The Attorney General points out that not one of the ten different remarks made by the trial judge was assigned as misconduct during the course of the trial nor was any effort made at any time to correct the error, or prevent prejudicial effect upon the jury, if any there was. Appellant recognizes the general rule that a claim of misconduct on the part of the trial judge will not ordinarily be considered on appeal, unless the party who complains has given the trial court an opportunity to correct the error or false impression, but asserts that the remarks here were of such a character that their harmful effect could not have been avoided by any retraction or instruction. He also asserts that had an endeavor been made to assign the remarks as error the net result would have been a vitriolic attack upon defense counsel, who it may be stated is not the attorney now representing appellant.

[1] The record in the case will not support these claims. Selecting from the remarks those which come the nearest to being irremediable, we take first an instance occurring at a time when a witness was asked to testify concerning the value of stock of which she was the owner as follows:

"Q. By Deputy District Attorney: What was the total value of all the stock that you turned over to Mr. Knocke and Mr. Murray?

"Defense Counsel: Object to that, no proper foundation laid.

"The Court: What foundation?

"Defense Counsel: She does not know the value.

"The Court: Why, Mr. —, it is elementary that an owner may always testify as to value.

"Defense Counsel: The value of stock?

"The Court: The owner of anything may testify as to the value of anything he possesses. I am surprised that any one who has gotten by the Bar Association examination should raise that question. The objection will be overruled."

The trial judge was manifestly correct in the ruling, and while it would have been more in keeping with the decorum which should attend the trial of an action at law, and more in harmony with the judicial dignity which should characterize the pronouncements of those to whom is intrusted the delicate power of sitting in judgment not to have expressed his surprise, it is undoubtedly true that there was no serious reflection upon counsel and none which could not easily have been rectified.

[2] Again there had been considerable cross-examination concerning a memorandum used by the witness to refresh her recollection. After learning from this witness that she did not write the names on the particular memorandum at the time they were first mentioned to her, counsel returned to the subject as follows:

"Defense Counsel: Q. Did you write them down at that time? A. No, sir.

"Q. How did you remember them? A. I wrote them down at the time.

"Q. Where? A. I have a little paper here; they were new names to me, and I did not want to forget them.

"Q. Were you suspicious at that time? A. No, but he was a stranger to me. I don't think I have the casualty company name in here. No, I didn't write them down. Mr. Knocke wrote them down for me many times on a slip of paper at my home.

"Q. Now you are changing your testimony to the effect that Mr. Knocke—

"The Court: Oh, I am going to insist on your being fair with the witness. She has not changed her testimony and she has not so testified. She said that she wrote them down and Mr. Knocke did.

"Defense Counsel: I apologize, your Honor; I don't mean to be unfair.

"The Court: Probably you do not, but sometimes one does things without meaning to."

It is apparent from the testimony just quoted that the witness was referring to a piece of paper or memorandum which she thought she had about her, probably in her hand bag. We can even from the transcript visualize her as she looks for it and says: "I don't think I have the casualty company name in here." It is clear, although made more so in subsequent testimony, that she had written the memorandum used to refresh her recollection some time after the names were first written down for her by appellant. The trial judge was perfectly correct in his statement of the situation, and at least in the absence of an assignment, misconduct may not be predicated upon the occurrence. Counsel was not within his rights when he attempted to make an assertion of what the witness had done rather than to have asked a question to clear up the confusion if such actually existed in his mind.

[3] The next assignment covers the following occurring during cross-examination:

"Defense Counsel: Do you remember lending Mr. Murray any money at any time? A. I have loaned money to Murray, yes.

"Q. That was during the ten months that you had known him?

"Deputy District Attorney: Objected to as immaterial.

"Defense Counsel: Why, I should say not.

"The Court: Now wait. If you cannot behave yourself in this court, you better go and practice in the police court. Make your motion in a quiet manner.

"Defense Counsel: I apologize."

There then follows a discussion between court and counsel concerning its materiality, conducted, so far at least as appears from the transcript, without heat or friction. From the portion which we have quoted it is apparent that defense counsel was excited and by a display of vocal volume drew from the court a rebuke which rightly enough might have been more perfectly phrased, but which fails to exhibit any incurable error. In fact, counsel recognized his own error and made apology therefor.

[4] With one exception the remaining assignments of instances of misconduct consists of discussions between the trial judge and counsel concerning the materiality of proffered testimony. There is nothing to indicate that the court was attempting to do more than gain an understanding of the theory upon which counsel was proceeding. No request was made that the jury be excused. No attempt was made to cure the error if it was committed, and nothing to indicate that appellant is brought within the exception to the general rule, although it is earnestly insisted that the admonition of the court to the appellant during one of these discussions does so operate. The appellant was on the stand and the judge and counsel were engaged in a discussion when the judge turned to appellant and said:

"Now please keep quiet. That is about the third or fourth time you have attempted to talk to me from the witness stand, and I don't like it. You are here to answer questions. If there is any more of that kind of talk, you will be in jail over Saturday and Sunday for contempt of court."

Unquestionably the rebuke was stern, and undeniably also the appellant had transgressed. It may be that milder language would have sufficed and no doubt other words could have been chosen, more in keeping with judicial dignity and decorum, but some consideration must be given to the fact that under the strain of a trial and the repetition of an offense, even trial judges are not always able to choose their diction with the nicety of a Field or Marshall. We see no irremediable error.

[5] Under the second reason given by counsel as grounds for reversal, he assigns the reception of certain hearsay testimony. From an inspection of the record we cannot sustain this argument. The witness Aldahl, one of the people whose property was obtained, testified to efforts made by her to locate the appellant after she had failed to receive a promised dividend and also to efforts made by her to locate someone calling himself Dreyfuss, who had claimed over the telephone to be an employee of the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, and who in the same conversation over the telephone had recommended the appellant's associate, Murray, and the company with which appellant and Murray claimed to be connected. The court, however, on motion for that purpose, very properly struck out all the conversations, and counsel's complaint therefor is not supported by the record.

[6] Two of the assignments under this head seem to be based upon the theory that the trial judge has no right to interpose and ask questions of the witness. In neither instance was the witness the defendant, nor is it pointed out that the court repeatedly took the witnesses out of the hands of counsel as was the case in People v. Boggess, 194 Cal. 212, 228 P. 448. In one instance four questions were asked, and in the other three; in one it was for the purpose of endeavoring to fix a date, and in the other for the purpose of showing that the business of appellant was prominently advertised on his windows, leaving the jury to draw its inference as to whether the appellant, who had a conversation there, was acquainted with the nature of that business. While these actions are not assigned as misconduct on the part of the trial judge, we may observe the rule announced in People v. Reid, 72 Cal. App. 611, 237 P. 824, and People v. Whitaker, 68 Cal. App. 7, 228 P. 376, to the effect that it is not improper for the trial judge occasionally to ask a question for the purpose of elucidating or making clear any point which might otherwise remain in doubt.

[7] Counsel also complains because the court struck out the testimony of a character witness who testified that he had known appellant in Los Angeles for a period of eight months and that he first knew him in Davenport, Iowa. This witness testified that he had never discussed the appellant's reputation with any one in Los Angeles. It is said in People v. Cord, 157 Cal. 562, 108 P. 511:

"The ultimate fact to be established is his actual personal character, and it is considered that the general opinion of his character held by persons who know him is of probative value as evidence of his real character. Hence the witness to such reputation must, at least, be acquainted with the prevailing impression in the community, as disclosed by actions, conduct, or conversations relating to the character in issue, although it is not necessary that the witness testifying should know that the majority of the community have that impression."

This case sufficiently disposes of appellant's claim in this particular.

We see no merit or substantiation in the remaining assertion that the court erred in excluding testimony. The record apparently does not support his assertion that the court refused to permit appellant to prove his good faith. The two objections which were sustained being related to a collateral issue, the bearing of which upon the question argued is difficult to comprehend, the rulings were correct.

[8, 9] The next assault upon the judgment is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict and that there is a total lack of corroboration required by section 1110 of the Penal Code. The record discloses that some time prior to July 21, 1927, discussions were had between Mr. Ridout of the Ridout Corporation and Franklyn A. Murray concerning a proposed arrangement whereby Murray would become employed by the corporation for the purpose of selling interests in buildings to be erected and sold. In a general way the method of operation was to raise as much money as possible on a mortgage, and then to sell to other persons certificates of interest for the remainder, whereupon a trust was arranged declaring the interests of the various persons who would benefit upon the sale of the property and directing the trustee to make distribution accordingly. After some discussion it was determined by the participants in the discussion that Mr. Murray would have to operate independently of the Ridout Corporation, and during the time the discussions were progressing he filed a certificate that he was doing business under the fictitious name of Finance Control Company. Mr. Ridout and Mr. Campbell of the corporation instructed their attorney to draw a proposed contract with the Finance Control Company and went ahead with other preliminary arrangements, and particularly did they prepare a report upon one of their ventures and some cards with Murray's name thereon, which cards were not, however, delivered to Murray. About July 20, according to Mr. Campbell, the president of the Ridout Corporation, negotiations were terminated altogether and Murray was never employed. The employment of appellant by the Ridout Corporation was never in contemplation, although appellant testified that Murray stated in the presence of Campbell that he was going to employ him. This testimony of the appellant was denied by the witness Campbell. The record also discloses that during the months of August, September, and November the appellant, together with Murray, represented to Mary Donnell that they were employed by the Ridout Corporation for the purpose of selling interests in the ventures of the company; that in reply to a query by her concerning who composed the corporation the appellant said, "Mr. Walter B. Campbell, Mr. W. W. Ridout, and Mr. Murray and myself," and that appellant took them to an apartment which was under course of construction on Bonnie Brae street and told her that her money would go into that building. A witness living at the same house as Miss Donnell testified that appellant called there during August and stated in the presence of Miss Donnell and herself that he had affiliated himself with the Ridout Corporation for the purpose of selling ventures and attempted to interest her in the purchase, later suggesting that she assist in their sale and receive as her compensation a 5 per cent. commission. She was in fact paid a commission upon the first sale to Miss Donnell. The testimony of Anna Aldahl, who made two purchases during the month of October, 1927, is to the same general effect, except that appellant went so far as to represent to her that he and Mr. Murray had been associated with the Ridout Corporation for four years and that they had "sold over 60 buildings in nine months." The check given by Mrs. Aldahl on the first occasion was introduced and bears the indorsements of Franklyn A. Murray and the Acme Bonding Company, there also being testimony to fully justify the inference that the money was spent for bail bond for Murray in connection with other charges pending against him. Campbell also testified that they had no thought, until the accidental finding of a brief case containing the chronological reports and other information which led them to the home of Mary E. Donnell, that Murray or appellant were engaged in selling any ventures.

Under this state of the record, it cannot be seriously argued that the testimony of the complaining witness is lacking in corroboration, supported as it is by the testimony of an independent witness who took part in similar conversations with the appellant, and supported by all of the circumstances, such for example as the brief case containing information which led back to one of the victims, including the chronological reports prepared by the Ridout Corporation and referring directly to its method of doing business and the fact that almost identically the same false representation was used with different people. The rule of law is in this class of cases that all the circumstances connected with the transaction, the conduct of the defendant, and his declarations to other persons may be looked to, to furnish the necessary corroborative evidence. People v. Harrington (Cal. App.) 267 P. 942, and cases there cited.

The discussion on this phase of the case completely disposes of the contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, and we are thus brought to a consideration of the complaint that the court erred in refusing to give certain requested instructions.

[10] The court refused to give an instruction requested by the appellant to the effect that it is not sufficient merely to show that one is present when a theft is committed, but that it must be shown that he has guilty knowledge of the theft attempted and thereafter to aid or abet in its commission. The jury were told in an instruction that if a person "acts in good faith according to what he believes to be right, the intent to defraud being absent, he is guilty of no crime." They were also told that one who aids or abets in the commission of an offense is to be punished as a principal, but that to aid or abet meant "to knowingly and with criminal intent, aid, promote, encourage or instigate by act or counsel, or by both act and counsel, the commission of such criminal offense." It is apparent that the subject of the requested instruction was fully covered and no error may be predicated upon the refusal of the court to give it for the reason that it was covered by instructions given.

[11] Complaint is made of the court's failure to give eight requested instructions, all dealing in one form or another with the rule of reasonable doubt. A complete answer to this entire argument lies in the fact that the court delivered an instruction in the words of section 1096 of the Penal Code, it being provided in the succeeding section (1096a) that when this is done no further instruction upon the presumption of innocence or defining reasonable doubt need be given.

We have examined all of the other instructions which were requested and not given, and find that in substance they were covered by the court and that the jury were fully and fairly instructed upon all of the points of law therein suggested.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for hearing herein is denied. In denying said petition, we desire not only to approve but to emphasize the expressions of the District Court of Appeal with relation to the decorum which should attend the trial of actions at law and the degree of judicial dignity and of judicial patience and impartiality as well which should characterize the conduct and pronouncements of those to whom is intrusted the delicate power of sitting in judgment; and, while we are in agreement with the appellate tribunal that the departure of the trial judge from these ideals in the instant case may not be held to amount to such misconduct, as, in the state of the record, would suffice to justify a reversal, we have deemed this an apt cause and a timely occasion to give expression of our disapproval of this and of all similar departures from the standards of judicial decorum and dignity which should attend the trial of all causes, and particularly all criminal causes, in the courts of this state.

ADAMS et al. v. PETROLEUM MIDWAY CO., Limited. (L. A. 9280.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 19, 1928.

1. Contracts ⌘176(2)—It was trial court's province in action on oil lease to resolve doubtful language therein.

In action in form of account for money had and received by defendant for use and benefit of plaintiffs, where sum sued for was claimed by plaintiffs as due and owing to them as royalty under terms of a lease of oil lands providing for one-sixth share of products obtained from operation of wells and settlement for net proceeds of sales, it was the province of the trial court to resolve doubtful language in the lease.

2. Mines and minerals ⌘79(1)—Lease providing for one-sixth share of oil products for lessor obligated lessees after sale to pay one-sixth of total net proceeds.

In action, complaint in which was in form of account for money had and received, the sum sued for being claimed by plaintiffs as due and owing to them as royalty under oil lease, which provided that plaintiff should have one-sixth share of products produced or of net proceeds of sale of products, held that after sale defendants' obligation was to pay one-sixth of actual net proceeds of all products sold and not merely proceeds of any one-sixth sold.

3. Appeal and error ⌘183—Defendant cannot complain on appeal because complaint was in form of count for money had and received instead of alleging breach of lease, not having objected to evidence of lease.

Where plaintiffs sued to recover money claimed by them to be due and owing them as royalty under terms of lease of oil lands, and complaint was in form of count for money had and received, instead of setting forth the breach of the express contract, and no objection was made to admissibility of evidence of the lease, but defendant joined with plaintiffs in a statement of agreed facts setting forth the execution of lease and the acts performed by it thereunder, the parties by so stipulating consented to determination of issue upon the pleadings as framed, and therefore defendant cannot complain on appeal that incorrect form of pleading was used.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Nancy E. Adams and others against the Petroleum Midway Company, Limited. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Morgrage & Stanley, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. C. Shelton, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. Defendant, Petroleum Midway Company, appeals from a judgment for plaintiffs in the sum of $7,799.01 entered upon a complaint in the form of a count for money had and received by defendant for the use and benefit of plaintiffs. The case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts, from which it appears that the sum sued for was claimed by plaintiffs as due and owing to them as royalty under the terms of a lease of oil lands, situate in Huntington Beach, executed by plaintiffs as lessors to the Columbia Leasing & Developing Company as lessee, and by it assigned to defendant and appellant herein.

Before action brought, defendant had paid to plaintiffs a sum equal to one-sixth of the prevailing market price of a quantity of oil and other products equal to the entire output of the well situate upon the leased lands, instead of one-sixth of the "net proceeds" of said sales as provided by the lease contract. The plaintiffs' contention, upheld by the court below, was that the obligation of the defendant under the terms of said lease was to pay them one-sixth of the amount actually realized from the sale of the oil and other products of the well upon the leased lands, the amount sued for being the difference between one-sixth of the sum actually received from the sale of the entire output, a portion of the oil produced thereon having been sold at the rate of $2 a barrel, which was considerably higher than the prevailing market price, and one-sixth of the amount which would have been received had the entire production been sold at the market price.

The provision of the lease in question is as follows:

"To have and to hold the same unto the said lessee, its heirs, successors and assigns, for the term of one year from and after the date hereof, and as much longer as petroleum, maltha, or gas shall be produced by said lessee from said lands; yielding and paying therefor unto the said lessors, to be shared in proportion to the acreage herein leased by each of them, one-sixth part of so much of said petroleum, maltha and gas produced and saved from said lands by the lessee * * * as shall be evidenced by written statement thereof to be rendered the lessors on or about the 15th day of each month, for the oil, maltha, or gas produced during the preceding calendar month, delivery of the quantity of oil or maltha due the lessors to be made free of expense into tanks, storage not to exceed thirty day period, or the oil, maltha or gas to be sold and settlement made with lessors for the net proceeds of such sales, on or about the 15th day of each month."

The defendant Midway Company and several other companies contracted with the Union Oil Company for the sale of a certain amount of the oil produced from wells controlled by the sellers to the Union Oil Company at the rate of $2 per barrel. The oil which is the subject of the present controversy was produced from a well on the lands leased by plaintiffs to defendant during the months of March to July, 1923. The oil and other products of the well were never divided and delivered in kind to the plaintiffs as lessors, but the entire output, with the exception of an insignificant quantity used by defendant in the operation of other wells, was sold. All oil not sold to the Union Oil Company under the contract at the rate of $2 per barrel was sold at the market prices. Before action brought defendant had paid plaintiffs one-sixth of the amount received from the sale of all oil and other products so sold at market prices, and one-sixth of the market price of the products sold to the Union Oil Company, actually marketed by appellant by authority of said lease at the much higher rate of $2 per barrel.

Appellant's contention is that the lease by implication authorizes the lessee, if it shall elect to satisfy its obligation to the lessors by a money payment, rather than by delivery of one-sixth of the output, to pay a sum equal to one-sixth of the prevailing market price of the entire output, rather than to pay one-sixth of the amount actually received upon sales. The lease certainly does not expressly provide that the prevailing market price rather than the actual sales price is to be the basis of computation, and we find no reason for implying such a term.

[1] Appellant further contends that since upon a division in kind of the oil the lessors would be entitled to receive a one-sixth thereof, it may pay to said lessors the sum actually received for any one-sixth sold, and since more than one-sixth was sold at the market price and a sum equal to the amount received for said one-sixth paid to plaintiffs, it has fully discharged its obligation. Thus, appellant would be enabled to pay to the lessors the amount received from the sale of the one-sixth part of the oil sold at the lowest price and to retain for itself the larger profits realized from the oil sold at the higher prices. The trial court interpreted the lease to mean that the lessors were entitled to one-sixth of the total amount received from the sale of the entire output. If it should be conceded that the provision of the lease is sufficiently uncertain to admit of the meaning which appellant gives it, it certainly cannot be said that the agreement, considered in the light of the facts stipulated to, is not susceptible of the interpretation placed upon it by the court. Hence we cannot disturb the decision. It was the province of the trial court to resolve doubtful language in the lease. We are further of the opinion that the construction placed upon the provisions of the lease by the trial court is more reasonable than the interpretation sought by appellant.

[2] The result must be the same whether the covenant of the lease should be construed as creating a cotenancy in the lessors and defendant in the output of the well, or is more properly interpreted as reserving to the lessors merely a right to receive a stipulated proportion of the yield as rent, with no interest in the specific property until a one-sixth share should be segregated. Regardless of the nature of the relationship before a sale, thereafter the obligation of the defendant was to pay one-sixth of the actual net proceeds.

[3] Ordinarily recovery of money due by the terms of a subsisting written contract should not be sought under a count for money had and received, but the complaint should set forth the breach of the express contract. In the instant case no objection was made to the admissibility of evidence of the express contract, but instead appellant joined with respondents in a statement of agreed facts setting forth the execution of the contract of lease and the acts performed by appellant thereunder. By their stipulation the parties made the question of the interpretation of the sale provision of the lease virtually the sole issue in the case and consented to the determination of said issue by the court under the pleadings as framed. Under these circumstances, if it be conceded that a different form of pleading would have been more appropriate, appellant cannot now be heard to complain. It has suffered no prejudice.

Judgment affirmed.

BROPHY et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

(S. F. 13105.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 2, 1928.

1. Wills ⚡271—Order denying motion to dismiss will contest held not error for want of authority of affiant opposing motion conceded to be working for contestant's attorney.

Order denying motion to dismiss will contest relieving contestants of default and directing issuance of new citation held not erroneous on ground that contestants were not properly before court because affiant in affidavit opposing motion to dismiss was stranger to proceeding and not attorney of record nor entitled to represent contestants, where affiant purported to be acting for attorney of record for contestants and was treated as having so acted both by court and parties.

2. Wills ⚡270—Where will contests were timely filed and, citations applied for, superior court acquired jurisdiction to hear will contests (Code Civ. Proc. § 1328).

Where it was conceded that will contests were filed within one year from date of admission of last will and testament to probate, and that citation was duly applied for and issued within year after probate, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1328, superior court acquired jurisdiction to hear contests and to make such orders with relation to service of citation or issuance of supplemental or alias citations as it might deem necessary to bringing of parties before it in order that contests might be heard on merits.

3. Wills ⚡270—Application to be relieved from defaults in serving citations in will contest held within six-month statutory period (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Where citations issued on behalf of contestants of will were returnable November 10 and 25, 1927, and default, if any, in making service of citation, could not have antedated return dates, application for relief from defaults, if any, filed May 2, 1928, was within six-month period provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

4. Wills ⚡270—Application by will contestants for relief from default in serving citations held for superior court, not Supreme Court (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Merits of will contestants' application to be relieved from defaults in serving citations held for superior court within exercise of jurisdiction under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, and not for Supreme Court.

Application for writ of certiorari by Isabelle Brophy and another, as executrices of the last will and testament of John T. Brophy, deceased, and others, against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco and others, to review a certain action and orders of said court. Writ denied.

Jeremiah V. Coffey and Edward I. Coffey, both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Harry I. Stafford, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioners herein applied for a writ of review to be directed to the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, requiring said court to certify the record and proceedings thereof in the matter of the estate of John T. Brophy, deceased, pending in said court, with a view to having it determined whether or not the action and orders of said court in certain matters and proceedings in the matter of said estate were taken and made within its jurisdiction. Pursuant to said writ issued herein, the original records and proceedings in the matter of said estate have been transmitted to this court for the purpose of such review.

The particular facts which require, for such purpose, our consideration, as shown by such record, are these: John T. Brophy died testate in the city and county of San Francisco on the 15th day of August, 1926, being at said time a resident of said city and county. The last will and testament of said decedent was by an order of the said superior court made and entered on October 7, 1926, duly admitted to probate, and letters testamentary thereon were issued to Isabelle Brophy and Honora Ellen Ford, as executrices of the last will and testament of said deceased, and they have ever since been and now are duly qualified and acting executrices of said will. On October 15, 1927, a contest of said will was filed by Leonard Brophy and Russell Brophy, who were represented by Harry I. Stafford as attorney for said contestants. Thereupon the said superior court made an order directing citation to issue upon such contest, returnable November 10, 1927. Such citation was issued, but no service or return thereof appears to have been made. On October 6, 1927, another will contest was filed by Thomas F. Brophy, Aileen Muldon, Virginia Brophy, and Edith Brophy Dersch, wherein Harry I. Stafford also appeared as attorney for said contestants, and in such latter contest an order directing citation to issue was made, returnable on November 25, 1927, and such citation was thereupon issued, but, so far as the record herein shows, no service thereof or return thereon was ever made. On April 12, 1928, the petitioners herein made a special appearance in said court in said proceeding and filed therein notices of motion to dismiss the aforesaid contests, and each of them, upon the ground that the several contestants named therein had failed to serve upon said petitioners, or any of them, said citation, and had failed to obtain alias or supplemental or other citation or citations, and had failed to request said superior court to be relieved of their respective defaults in that regard, and had not otherwise diligently prosecuted their said contests. The notices of said motions thus filed were served upon Harry I. Stafford as the attorney of record of said contestants. Thereafter and on May 2, 1928, an affidavit in opposition to the aforesaid motions to dismiss said contests was filed in said court. This affidavit was made and sworn to by one Dean Cunha, who stated therein that he was at all times mentioned therein in the employ of Harry I. Stafford, attorney of record for the contestants, and as such had at all times been in full charge of the filing of said contests and petitions for the revocation of the will of said decedent, and had been in personal charge of the matter of the issuing and service of the citations issued therein and of whatever proceedings had been taken in said court with relation to the issuance and service or lack of service of said citations.

The affiant then proceeds to set forth certain facts which he offered as an excuse for the failure to serve said citations and as reasons why said court should deny the applications of the petitioners herein for the dismissal of said contests and should permit the contestants under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have issued new and supplemental citations in furtherance of their said contests. To the aforesaid affidavit of Cunha the respondents and petitioners herein filed and caused to be served upon Harry I. Stafford, as attorney of record of the contestants, a counter affidavit, wherein it was undertaken to dispute certain of the facts set forth in the affidavit of Cunha, but wherein no statement or objection was made to the filing or consideration of the affidavit of Cunha upon any ground. When the matter came on for hearing before said court, it was submitted on briefs to be filed by the respective parties, and thereafter a number of said briefs were filed. In the briefs of respondents it was suggested that Mr. Cunha was a stranger to the record, but apparently the purpose of such suggestion was to urge upon the court that no affidavit of merits had been made either by him or by the contestants, and that for that reason the contestants were not entitled to the relief sought under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. To this suggestion the contestants, through their regular attorney of record, presented a reply brief, wherein it was set forth that said Cunha was at all times acting for and on behalf of said attorney of record of said contestants. To this brief the respondents in due course presented a reply, wherein the objection that Cunha was a stranger to the record was apparently abandoned and the question of the relief to be granted or denied in the premises was fully discussed. Thereafter, and on June 25, 1928, the several matters having been submitted for decision, the trial court made and entered its order denying the respondents' motion to dismiss said contests, finding that the contestants had regularly appeared in said several matters by their attorney of record, Harry I. Stafford, and furthermore finding that the contestants were entitled to be relieved from any default they had suffered in their failure to serve the aforesaid citations, and upon such findings made and entered its order denying the motions of the respondents to dismiss said contests, and directing the clerk of the court to issue new and supplemental citations, returnable before said court on August 15, 1928. Thereafter and on July 23, 1928, a petition for a writ of review was filed herein.

The contention of the petitioners for said writ is that the said superior court had no jurisdiction to make the order last above referred to, or to make or enter any other order in the premises than an order dismissing said contests. It is primarily urged in support of said contention that the contestants were not properly before the court at or prior to the making of said order, by reason of the fact that the said Dean Cunha was a stranger to said proceeding and was not the attorney of record or nor entitled to represent the contestants in any proceeding before said court.

[1] We are satisfied from the recital of the foregoing facts that there is no merit in this contention, since in filing his affidavit in opposition to the respondents' motions to dismiss said contests Cunha not only purported to be acting for and on behalf of his employer, the attorney of record for said contestants, but was treated as having so acted both by said court and by the respondents herein in the proceedings before said court which preceded the making of its aforesaid order.

[2-4] We are thus brought to a consideration of the main question in the case, which is as to whether the superior court had jurisdiction to make and enter its order refusing to dismiss said contests and purporting to relieve the contestants from whatever might have been their default in the failure to make service of the two citations which had been regularly issued in support of their contests theretofore regularly filed. It is conceded herein that said contests and each of them were filed within the period of one year from the date of the admission of the last will and testament of John T. Brophy, deceased, to probate, and that in each of said contests a citation was duly applied for and issued within one year after such probate, in conformity with the requirements of section 1328 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This being so, the court acquired jurisdiction to hear and determine said contests and to make and enter such orders with relation to the service of such citations, or with relation to the issuance and service of such supplemental or alias citations as it might deem necessary and expedient to the bringing of the parties before it in order that such contests might be heard upon their merits. This question was fully presented to and considered by this court in Estate of Logan, 171 Cal. 357, 363, 153 P. 388, and it was therein held not only that the failure of a contestant to make service of a citation within the year, under the aforesaid section of the Code of Civil Procedure, was not fatal to such contest, but that the court having jurisdiction of the proceeding was also possessed of power to relieve a party contestant from any failure or default in the matter of the service of such citation and to cause further and supplemental or alias citation to issue as would afford such relief, citing Estate of Simmons, 168 Cal. 391, 143 P. 697, as authority for this conclusion. The return dates of the citations issued on behalf of the contestants herein were, respectively, November 10 and 25, 1927. The default, if any, of the contestants in making service of said citations could not have antedated the return dates thereof, and it follows that, since the application for relief from said defaults, if any, was filed upon May 2, 1928, it was within the six months' period provided in section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Whatever may or may not have been the merits of the contestants' application to be relieved from such defaults, if any, was a matter for the superior court within the exercise of the jurisdiction given it by said section of the Code to determine, and with such determination or the merits thereof we have in this proceeding no concern, for the reason that the sole question before us in this proceeding is the question of jurisdiction.

It is our conclusion, therefore, that the application of the petitioners for the relief sought herein should be, and the same is hereby, denied.

SIMONTON et al. v. LOS ANGELES TRUST & SAVINGS BANK et al. (L. A. 8916.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 27, 1928.

1. Husband and wife ⚭264—That stocks stood in wife's name ever since acquisition and during coverture is evidence of her separate ownership thereof.

That shares of stock on which plaintiffs sought to impress a trust as heirs of deceased husband of defendant's testatrix had stood in her name ever since their acquisition and during coverture is entitled to some weight as evidence of her separate ownership thereof.

2. Fraud ⚭50—Fraud is never presumed, but must be affirmatively proved.

The general rule in both civil and criminal cases is that fraud, which is criminal in its essence and involves moral turpitude at least, is never presumed, but must be affirmatively proved.

3. Evidence ⚭596(2)—Fraud ⚭58(1)—Party charging fraud or criminal act must overcome legal presumption of innocence.

To establish fraud or criminal act of party in civil action, other party must overcome by at least a fair balance of evidence, not only evidence introduced by party charged, but legal presumption of innocence which exists in every case.

4. Husband and wife ⚭274(1)—As to heirs, property does not lose status as community by change in form.

As respects rights of heirs, property does not lose its character or status as separate or community property by a change in form or identity.

5. Husband and wife ⚭264—Evidence held to sustain finding that stock, claimed by testatrix's deceased husband's descendants, was her separate property (Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8).

In suit by deceased husband's descendants to impress trust on shares of stock, claimed by them, under Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, in proceeding for distribution of widow's estate, as her heirs at law, to whom she bequeathed residue, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that stock was her separate property.

6. Evidence ⚡87—Uncontroverted presumptions are binding on court or jury, but direct or indirect controverting evidence raises fact issue for determination.

While disputable inferences or presumptions are allowed to stand, not against, but in lieu of, proved facts, court or jury is bound thereby when not controverted, but, when controverted by other evidence, direct or indirect, an issue of fact is raised which must be determined as in other cases.

7. Appeal and error ⚡1010(1)—Trial court's conclusion on fact issue, raised by evidence controverting presumption, is conclusive, unless manifestly without sufficient evidentiary support.

Trial court's conclusion on issue of fact, raised by evidence controverting disputable presumption, is conclusive on appellate court, unless manifestly without sufficient support in evidence.

8. Evidence ⚡89—Quantum of evidence necessary to overcome presumption depends on character or circumstances of particular case.

The quantum of evidence necessary to overcome or dispute a disputable presumption depends on the character or circumstances of the particular case.

9. Husband and wife ⚡264—"Proof to a reasonable certainty" is sufficient to overcome presumption that property acquired during coverture is community property (Civ. Code, § 164; Code Civ. Proc. § 1826).

To overcome presumption, under Civ. Code, § 164, that property acquired during coverture is community property, proof beyond reasonable doubt, or that which produces demonstration, is not required, but "proof to a reasonable certainty," which means such proof as would so convince mind of ordinary man that he would be willing to act on it in business affairs of life, is sufficient under Code Civ. Proc. § 1826.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Proof to Reasonable Certainty.]

10. Appeal and error ⚡1010(1)—Sufficiency of evidence of fact, required to be clearly proved, is primarily for trial court, whose finding, supported by any substantial evidence, is not reviewable.

Sufficiency of evidence to establish fact, proof of which law requires to be clear and convincing, is primarily for trial court, whose finding is not reviewable on appeal, if supported by any substantial evidence.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Suit by J. G. Simonton and others against the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank, a corporation, as executor of the last will of Jane Simonton, deceased, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion 265 P. 929.

Stewart & Stewart, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Overton, Lyman & Plumb, and George W. Prince, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

TYLER, Justice pro tem. Suit to impress a trust upon personal property, consisting of shares of stock in various companies, distributed to respondents in an estate. Certain phases of this matter have been before this court on former appeals. Estate of Simonton, 183 Cal. 53, 190 P. 442; Simonton v. Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank, 192 Cal. 658, 221 P. 368. The essential facts are not in dispute, and are as follows:

George W. Simonton and Jane Simonton were husband and wife. The husband died testate in Los Angeles in the year 1904. He had been previously married and left children by such former marriage, but he left no issue of himself and Jane Simonton. Jane Simonton was one of two executors of his will, and the same was probated in Los Angeles county, and, by its terms, so far as this action is concerned, Jane Simonton took a life estate in the property owned by deceased, and the remainder was left to those of his children and grandchildren who should survive his wife. In the probate of the estate certain property was disclosed which was claimed and found by the court to be community property, and it was accounted for as such, and distributed one half to Jane Simonton as surviving widow as her share of the community, the other half to her for life with remainder over to the children and grandchildren of her husband who should survive the wife, as provided for under the terms of the will. Plaintiffs, appellants herein, are among those children and grandchildren. Some 13 years after the death of her husband, and on February 25, 1917, Jane Simonton died testate at Los Angeles. The provisions of her will amounted to intestacy in so far as affects the property here in question, for, after making certain specific bequests, it provided that the residue of the estate should go to her heirs at law as provided by the laws of succession of this state. Defendants, respondents herein, other than Josephine Fosdick and the bank, who was the executor of the estate of Jane Simonton, are the blood relations, and next of kin of Jane Simonton; they being her brothers and sisters and the children of deceased brothers.

After the death of Jane Simonton, appellants learned that she held shares of stock in various corporations which were issued to her in her own name, but which she had acquired and held prior to the death of her husband and during the period of her marriage. These shares of stock had not been inventoried by her in the estate of her husband. Upon presentation of the petition for distribution in the estate of Jane Simonton, plaintiffs, appellants herein, appeared and claimed the property in question as legatees and devisees under Mrs. Simonton's will as her statutory heirs, under subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code, the residuary portion of her will, as above stated, having devised and bequeathed such portion of her estate to her heirs at law as determined by the laws of succession of this state. That section provides, in substance, that, when a widow dies intestate and without issue, such of her estate as was formerly either the community property of herself and husband or his separate property shall go to the descendants of her husband. The matter was set for hearing, and it was determined that the property here in question was the separate property of Mrs. Simonton at the time of her husband's death and that appellants had no interest therein. Other property was held to be community in character, and it was distributed to appellants. A decree was entered pursuant to such findings, from which decree appellants appealed to this court. The decree was affirmed. Estate of Jane Simonton, 183 Cal. 53, 190 P. 442.

Subsequent to this final judgment, appellants brought the present action to declare a trust in their favor in the property involved. The complaint charges, in substance, that Jane Simonton, as the executrix of the last will and testament of her predeceased husband, fraudulently and designedly concealed the property in question from the notice of the probate court in the administration of her husband's estate, and that the same was fraudulently and wrongfully appropriated by her to her own personal use and benefit in violation of her trust and to the prejudice of the plaintiffs, children and descendants of her deceased husband. Lack of knowledge of the existence of the fact until after the filing of the inventory in the widow's estate is alleged, and by way of a second cause of action it is further alleged that the omission was due to a mistake on the part of Mrs. Simonton. A demurrer was interposed to the complaint and sustained. Plaintiffs failed to amend, and judgment was rendered by the trial court in favor of the defendants. An appeal was taken to this court from the judgment, and the same was reversed. Simonton v. Los Angeles T. & S. Bank, 192 Cal. 651, 221 P. 368. Thereafter defendants by answer denied that any portion of the claimed property was community in character or that it was wrongfully or by mistake omitted from the inventory of the estate of George W. Simonton, and they alleged it was at all times the separate property of Jane Simonton and decreed to be such in the estate of Mrs. Simonton and defendants were therefore estopped by such decree from claiming to be entitled to any of the property in question, it being res adjudicata upon the fact that all the property herein sued for and upon which a trust is sought to be declared was at the date of the death of George W. Simonton the separate property of Jane Simonton. The trial court found, in substance, that the property was not wrongfully omitted from the estate of Geo. W. Simonton, but that it was in fact at all times the separate property of Jane Simonton. It further found that it had been determined to be such in a proper proceeding had in her estate for the purpose of determining the persons entitled thereto under the residuary clause of her will; that the determination of what portion of the property of her estate was, on the one hand, the separate property of Geo. W. Simonton at the time of his death or was community property of the spouses, or, on the other, what portion was the separate property of Jane Simonton at such time was necessary in order to properly make distribution in the estate of Jane Simonton; that a decree was entered in said estate as to all the property upon which plaintiffs here seek to impress a trust in favor of defendants; and that such decree became final by its affirmance in this court. Estate of Simonton, 183 Cal. 53, 190 P. 442. It further found that plaintiffs having elected to claim the property as heirs and devisees of Jane Simonton under her will were estopped from laying claim to such property in this action. Judgment followed that plaintiffs take nothing by their action.

[1-5] It is here claimed that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the property in question was the separate property of Jane Simonton, as it is not of that clear and convincing character which the law requires. To sustain their allegations of fraud and mistake, plaintiffs relied mainly, if not wholly, upon the naked presumption raised by section 164 of the Civil Code, since changed by the Legislature, that property acquired during coverture is presumed to be community in character. To destroy or overcome this statutory presumption respondents proved that the Simontons were married between the years of 1875 and 1880; that prior to her marriage Mrs. Simonton worked as a teacher, seamstress, and dressmaker, and was economical in her expenditures, and probably had saved and possessed money at the time of her marriage. That subsequent to her marriage and between the years 1877 and 1882, she had received over $2,500 from her father's estate. Her brother testified that he was of the opinion that his sister had invested this sum in stocks of corporations, either in Los Angeles or San Jose, and it appeared that all the corporate stock here sued for, with the exception of eight shares of Bank of St. Helena stock, consisted of stock of corporations situated in those places. It further appeared that Mrs. Simonton received an additional inheritance of between $100 and $300 from a sister. All of this testimony was not disputed. In addition thereto it appeared that the shares of stocks in question had, ever since their acquisition, and during her cover-ture, stood in the name of Mrs. Simonton, a fact which is entitled to some weight as evidence of ownership. Hale v. Kennedy, 42 Cal. App. 398, 183 P. 723. Then, again, defendants were aided in their proof by the very fact that the property was omitted from the inventory of the husband's estate. The general rule is that fraud which is criminal in its essence and involves moral turpitude, at least, is never presumed, but must be affirmatively proved. 27 Corp. Jur. p. 44; Drown v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 175 Cal. 21, 165 P. 5. To have fraudulently omitted the property would have been a crime. The law presumes a person is innocent thereof, which presumption is applicable to civil and criminal cases alike. Where, therefore, in a civil action a question arises the determination of which involves the establishment of a fact that a party has been guilty of fraud or criminal act, the other party, in order to obtain a determination of such question in his favor, must overcome, by at least a fair balance of evidence, not only the evidence introduced by a party so charged, but also the legal presumption of innocence which exists in every case. Again, property does not lose its character or status as separate or community property by a change in form or identity (Estate of Brady, 171 Cal. 1, 151 P. 275), and plaintiffs made no effort to show that the character of the property as fixed by its manner of acquisition was at any period ever destroyed or impaired by commingling it with community funds, and the fact that it was not so commingled is indicated by the permanent character of the investments, which at all times stood in the name of Mrs. Simonton. Nor was any evidence introduced to show that the original funds received by Mrs. Simonton in the manner indicated, or which she may have acquired prior to her marriage by reason of the fact that she had an earning power and was industrious and economical, were ever expended by her. The burden of her support rested upon her husband, and he was fully able to maintain his obligation in this respect.

nett, 106 Cal. 514, 39 P. 922. They are allowed to stand, not against the facts they represent, but in lieu of proof of them. When not controverted, however, the court or jury is bound to find according to the presumption. When controverted by other evidence, whether direct or indirect, an issue of fact is raised which it is the duty of the court to determine as in other cases, and its conclusion is conclusive upon an appellate court unless it be manifestly without sufficient support in the evidence. Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 104 P. 308.

[8, 9] It is difficult if not impossible to state just what quantum of evidence is necessary to overcome or dispute such presumption; practically the whole question depends upon the character or circumstances of the particular case. If the rights of a creditor are involved, the court may, and indeed generally does, look with a watchful eye upon all transactions between husband and wife. Where, however, the issue arises between husband and wife, or, as here, between the heirs or devisees of either, the court might be content with a quantum of proof that might be deemed insufficient in other cases. No hard and fast rule can be laid down upon the subject. Proof of separate ownership reasonably certain in view of all the circumstances is all the law requires. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt, or that which produces demonstration, is not required, and, indeed, in actual practice, degree of proof means very little. Proof to a reasonable certainty means such proof as would so convince the mind of the ordinary man that he would be willing to act upon it in the business affairs of life. This is all that well-considered cases require. See section 1826, Code Civ. Proc. Just how the courts handle these questions can better be shown by illustration than rule. In discussing the character and quantum of evidence necessary to rebut the presumption relied upon by appellants, Mr. Justice Richards in the recent case of Estate of Nickson, 187 Cal. 603, 203 P. 106, in speaking for the entire court said:

"We are of the opinion that it is incumbent on the party seeking to overcome the presumption of community property to do no more than to produce such legal evidence as, under all the circumstances of the particular case, would ordinarily produce conviction to an unprejudiced mind, and that in the face of such evidence the naked presumption, unsupported by any testimony, must fall."

[10] The sufficiency of evidence to establish a given fact, where the law requires proof of the fact to be clear and convincing, is primarily, as in other cases, a question for the trial court to determine, and, if there is substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached below, the finding is not open to review on appeal. Steinberger v. Young, 175 Cal. 81, 165 P. 432; Couts v. Winston, 153 Cal. 686, 96 P. 357. Here, in our opinion, there is such substantial evidence. This conclusion renders unnecessary a discussion of the finding as to the effect of the final decree in the estate of Jane Simonton, deceased, establishing the property in question to be the separate property of Jane Simonton, which appellants here assail, as plaintiffs have been given full opportunity herein to prove their charges. The same may be said as to the further question of estoppel raised by respondents to the effect that appellants, having elected to claim the property herein sued for in such estate under her will, are concluded from again laying claim to such property in this action.

From what we have said it follows that the judgment should be and it is hereby affirmed.

NEWSOM et al. v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF CONTRA COSTA COUNTY et al.
(S. F. 12273.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 27, 1928.

1. Bridges $\Leftrightarrow$ 15—Right to take tolls for use of bridge is "franchise," subject to public regulation by state and subordinate governmental agencies.

Right to take tolls from users of bridge is a "franchise," and as such is a privilege of public concern, the exercise whereof is subject to such public regulation, control, and administration as may be prescribed by the state or by its subordinate governmental agencies thereunto duly authorized.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Franchise.]

2. Counties $\Leftrightarrow$ 55—Initiative law held inapplicable to application for tollbridge franchise (Const. art. 12, §§ 22, 23; Pol. Code, §§ 2843 et seq., 2870 et seq., 4058).

Under Const. art. 12, §§ 22, 23, as amended in 1911 and 1914, regulating tollbridge franchises, and Pol. Code, § 2843 et seq. and § 2870 et seq., requiring precedent findings of fact by county board of supervisors, hearing and determination of protests and asserted prior rights on application for franchise, functions of supervisors are so intermingled with their administrative and quasi judicial functions as to render operation of such statutes entirely inconsistent with initiative law under section 4058.

In Bank.

Application by Fred S. Newsom and another for mandamus to be directed to the Board of Supervisors of Contra Costa County and W. J. Buchanan and others in their official capacity as members of said board, requiring them to pass as an ordinance or submit to a vote of the electors of said county a proposed initiative ordinance granting a tollbridge franchise. Writ denied.

Superseding opinion in 261 P. 990.

Pierce & Carlson and Wilbur S. Pierce, all of Richmond, for petitioners.

Archibald B. Tinning, Dist. Atty., of Martinez, for respondents.

J. E. Rodgers and A. F. Bray, both of Martinez (for American Toll Bridge Co.), Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, Dudley D. Sales, Jesse G. Benson, McCutchen, Olney, Mannon & Greene, Warren Olney, Jr., James M. Hanley, Bells & Orrick, and Chickering & Gregory, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

SHENK, J. This is a second application to this court for a writ of mandate to compel the board of supervisors of Contra Costa county to submit to the electors of said county, pursuant to the initiative provisions of the Constitution and section 4058 of the Political Code, a proposed ordinance, the purpose of which is to grant to the Northern California Development Company, a corporation, a franchise to construct and maintain a tollbridge across the Straits of Carquinez, which forms the boundary between the county of Contra Costa and the county of Solano. On the first application the writ was denied. Galvin v. Board of Supervisors, 195 Cal. 686, 235 P. 450. In the determination of that matter the doctrine was announced that an ordinance proposed by the electors of a county under the initiative law must constitute such legislation only as the board of supervisors has power to enact under the Constitution and laws of the state granting, defining, and limiting the powers of that body. See, also, Myers v. Stringham, 195 Cal. 672, 235 P. 448. It was held in the Galvin Case that the board of supervisors was without the power to enact the ordinance presented to it for adoption, for the reason that the notices of the application for the franchise had not been given as required by section 2870 of the Political Code, that a hearing on the application had not been had as required by section 2871 of the Political Code, and that the state engineer had not been notified of the desire of the board of supervisors to grant such a franchise as required by section 4 of the Act of March 14, 1881 (Stats. 1881, p. 76).

After the decision on the first application, and commencing on June 18, 1926, the petitioner, Northern California Development Company, published notices of its application for leave to erect a tollbridge in purported compliance with the statute. Thereafter, on July 19, 1926, there was presented to the county clerk of Contra Costa county a petition to submit to a vote of the electors of said county an ordinance granting to the Northern California Development Company a franchise to construct and maintain a tollbridge over the Straits of Carquinez. A copy of the proposed ordinance was attached to the petition, designating therein the location of the proposed bridge, fixing the amount of the statutory penal bond, fixing the amount of the license tax to be paid by the person or corporation taking tolls on said bridge, fixing the rate of tolls for crossing said bridge, fixing the terms of the franchise, requiring the bridge to be constructed within a certain time and to be of a certain width, character, description, and material, and providing for the purchase of said bridge by the counties of Contra Costa and Solano and for the acquisition of said bridge by the state of California upon the expiration of said franchise. This initiative petition also notified the board of supervisors that the signers thereof had by separate petition requested the state engineer to designate to said board the draw (if any) to be made in the proposed bridge and also the length of the span thereof necessary to permit the free flow of water. The initiative petition was checked by the county clerk as to the number of signatures thereon, and was found by him to be sufficient in that respect.

The petition to the state engineer referred to in the initiative petition was addressed to the state engineer, and was signed by the same number of electors who had signed the initiative petition addressed to the board of supervisors. Pursuant to the petition to him, the state engineer, under date of July 20, 1926, addressed to the board of supervisors a communication designating the matters and things requested by said petition to be designated by him. In said communication the state engineer did not, however, designate the width of the draw to be made in the bridge as required by section 4 of the Act of March 14, 1881 (Stats. 1881, p. 76), nor did he decide or declare therein that no draw was necessary. It appears from the petition herein that the petition to the state engineer was presented to that official after the board of supervisors had refused to make the request.

The initiative petition, together with the proposed ordinance, was presented to the respondent board of supervisors at the regular meeting of the board on August 2, 1926. Hearing on the application for the franchise was set for August 9, 1926, at 10 o'clock a. m., at which time protests were filed with said board against the granting of the franchise. At the hearing, oral and documentary evidence was produced before and received by said board both for and against the application. At the conclusion of the hearing, the board made an order denying the application and denying the request and demand of the Northern California Development Company that the communication from the state engineer hereinbefore referred to be spread upon the minutes of the board. Whereupon demand was made upon the board of supervisors that it pass the proposed ordinance without alteration within 10 days after August 2, 1926, or proceed forthwith to call a special election at which said ordinance should be submitted to a vote of the electors of Contra Costa county. The demand was refused by formal order of the board, and thereafter, on October 19, 1926, this petition for a writ of mandate was filed.

In response to the petition, the respondents filed an answer admitting certain allegations of the petition, denying others, and alleging certain matters of affirmative defense. The position of the respondents is that there is no duty resting upon them to enact said ordinance pursuant to the demand of the petitioner corporation to enact the same and no duty resting upon them to submit said proposed ordinance to a vote of the electors of the county of Contra Costa. It is insisted that the proposed ordinance, if enacted, would be in contravention of general laws of the state in numerous particulars set out in the answer and in the briefs. Numerous briefs have been filed by amici curiæ stressing the same points from different angles and additional points, to the effect that no duty rests upon the board of supervisors to submit said ordinance to a vote of the electors of said county. It would serve no useful purpose and would unduly prolong this opinion to discuss them all. One of the contentions of the respondents and certain of amici curiæ would seem to require first attention. That contention is that the constitutional and statutory provisions relating to the initiative are inapplicable to the process of granting a tollbridge franchise under existing law, because of the discretionary power vested in the board of supervisors and the fact-finding preliminary steps necessary to the lawful granting of such a franchise.

[1, 2] It should first be observed that the right to take tolls which the petitioner corporation seeks to acquire is a franchise and as such is a privilege of public concern, the exercise whereof is subject to such public regulation, control, and administration as may be prescribed by the state itself or by its subordinate governmental agencies thereunto duly authorized. "The theory upon which such rights are granted is to promote the public good and convenience, the advancement of commerce, and the more ready intercourse of the people. * * *" Fortain v. Smith, 114 Cal. 494, 46 P. 381. The Legislature of this state assumed control of the granting of tollbridge franchises and the regulation of operations thereunder as early as 1854, when "An act concerning public ferries and tollbridges" was adopted. Stats. 1854, p. 123. It is worthy of note that in the amendment of section 22 of article 12 of the Constitution in 1911 and of section 23 of the same article in 1911 and 1914, and in the statutes since enacted relating to public utilities, the laws of the state relating to the granting and regulations of tollbridge franchises has remained unchanged thereby. In other words, tollbridge regulations have been from the early history of the state and now are in a class by themselves. Through the years they have remained subject to legislative control. In the act of 1854, the court of sessions was granted authority to establish tollbridges whenever deemed necessary except across navigable waters. It was provided therein that the permission to operate a tollbridge should be in the discretion of the court, and that no license should be issued unless it should first be made to appear that such tollbridge was necessary for the accommodation of the public. An elaborate procedure was provided governing the granting of the application for the right to take the tolls, including publication of notice of the application, the manner of construction and the materials to be used, the fixing of the tolls, and the duties of the tollbridge keeper. These regulations have continued in the same or a modified or amplified form by subsequent legislation. The act of April 28, 1855 (Stats. 1855, p. 183), transferred the discretionary power to grant tollbridge franchises and to regulate the operations thereunder, subject to statutory regulations, to the boards of supervisors of the several counties, and that discretion has remained in such boards under subsequent legislation to the present time.

The law now governing the application and granting of tollbridge franchises and the public regulation of the grantee's rights thereunder is found in the Act of March 14, 1881, and enactments incorporated mainly in the Political Code. Section 2870 of that code provides that every applicant for authority to construct a tollbridge must publish notices of the time when the application will be made to the board of supervisors for such authority. Section 2871 provides that, on the hearing of the application, any person may appear and be heard. At such hearing the board of supervisors may take testimony, or authorize it to be taken by any judicial officer of the county, and the hearing may be continued from time to time. Section 2872 provides that, if the board be of the opinion that the public interest will be promoted thereby, it may, by the assent of a majority of its members, grant the application by an order entered in its minutes, particularly designating the bridge. By section 2873 the board is granted power to require that the bridge be constructed within a certain time, be of a certain width, character, or description, and be constructed of certain materials. Section 2875 provides that all bridges constructed over navigable streams must have a draw or swing of sufficient space or span to permit the safe, convenient, and expeditious passage at all times of any water craft which may navigate the water bridged. Section 2876 vests in the board the power to regulate the number of animals that may be driven over the bridge at any one time and to provide rules for the government of the draws or swings and attendance of the same. Section

2878 provides that, when the bridge is completed and a certificate that it is completed and is safe and convenient for public use is signed by the commissioner of highways or president of the board of supervisors and filed in the office of the county clerk, the owner may erect a toll gate and require the payment of such tolls as the board of supervisors has fixed and may from time to time prescribe. Section 2843 provides that, when authority to construct a tollbridge over waters dividing two counties is desired, application must be made to the board of supervisors of that county situated on the left bank descending. Section 2845 provides that the board of supervisors in granting such authority must at the same time (1) fix the amount of the penal bond to be given by the operator of the bridge and provide for the annual renewal thereof; (2) fix the amount of the license tax to be paid by such operator; (3) fix the rate of tolls collected for crossing the bridge which may raise annually an income not exceeding 15 per cent. on the actual cost of construction of the bridge, and such additional income as will provide for the annual cost of operation, maintenance, amortization of and taxes on the bridge; (4) fix the term for the operation of such bridge, which shall not exceed 50 years; and (5) make all necessary orders relative to the construction, erection, and business of licensed tollbridges which they have by law the power to make. Section 2846 provides that the license tax and rate of toll fixed as provided in the preceding section must not be increased or diminished during the term of 20 years, unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the board of supervisors that the receipts from tolls in any one year is disproportionate to the cost of construction, or the fair cash value thereof, together with the cost of all necessary repairs and maintenance of the bridge, and that the license tax fixed by the board must not exceed 10 per cent. of the tolls annually collected. Section 2847 provides that every owner or keeper of a tollbridge must report annually to the board of supervisors the several items of costs, expenses, and revenue specifically set forth in the section. The obvious purpose of this report is to provide additional information not available to the board in fixing the license tax and tolls in the original franchise and to enable the board of supervisors to act intelligently and lawfully with reference to the amount of the license tax and tolls to be thereafter fixed. Section 2848 provides that, whenever the board of supervisors is about to fix the license tax and rate of tolls, inquiry must be made of the items which are in the section made necessary for consideration and may for that purpose examine under oath the owner or keeper of the bridge and other witnesses, and that, if the valuations as fixed by the board are not agreed to by the owner or keeper of the bridge, the same shall be fixed by three commissioners, one to be appointed by the board, one by the owner, and the third by the county judge, who must hear testimony and fix such value and cost according to the facts, and report the same to the board of supervisors under oath. Section 2849 provides that, when the amounts are ascertained as prescribed by the preceding section, the board of supervisors must fix the rates of tolls and license tax and the amount of the penal bond. Section 2851 provides that when, as in the present case, the bridge connects two counties, the license tax must be paid to the two counties in equal proportions. Section 2854 provides that the owner of land on either side of the waters to be crossed, and the owner of the land on the left bank descending over the owner of the land on the right bank, is entitled to preference in procuring authority to construct the bridge, but, if such owner fails or neglects to apply for such authority within a reasonable time after the necessity therefor arises, the board of supervisors may grant such authority to another.

Section 4 of the Act of March 14, 1881, provides that, whenever the board of supervisors of any county desires to grant the privilege of erecting and maintaining a tollbridge to any individual or corporation across a navigable stream, said board "shall notify the state engineer of such purpose, and of the precise point where such bridge is proposed to be located. The state engineer shall, within ten days of the receipt of such notice, designate the width of the draw to be made in such bridge, and also the length of the span necessary to permit the free flow of water."

When the foregoing general law of the state is borne in mind, it is at once observed how inappropriate and impossible of operation would be the application of the initiative to the granting of a tollbridge franchise thereunder. It has been recognized from an early date in the history of the state that, in the exercise of their functions under particular statutes, "the board of supervisors is a special tribunal, with mixed powers, administrative, legislative and judicial," and that in the discharge of its duties under the tollbridge statute of 1855 (Stats. 1855, p. 183), which is the predecessor in the main of the present statutory law on this subject, the board exercised such mixed powers. Waugh v. Chauncey, 13 Cal. 11. Likewise, under present law the board of supervisors in the consideration of an application for and in the granting of a tollbridge franchise is called upon to exercise such mixed powers. It is required by the statute that a time be set for a public hearing on the application for the franchise. Protests against the granting thereof may be filed. Priorities may be asserted. The board is authorized to take testimony at such hearing or provide for the taking of testimony before any judicial officer of the county. The board is authorized to grant the franchise if it be "of the opinion that the public interests will be promoted thereby." Section 2872, Pol. Code. In arriving at this conclusion or the opposite conclusion, the board is vested with broad discretionary power in the exercise of which the rights of the applicant, the rights of the protestants, if any, and the public interests must be taken into consideration. From the denial of the application in this case, it is obvious that the board, after the hearing, concluded that the protests should be sustained, or that the public interest did not demand the granting of a franchise in such proximity to a recently constructed tollbridge by another applicant and grantee of a franchise. Both reasons may have actuated the board in denying the application involved in this proceeding.

The general laws of the state and the Political Code provisions above referred to vest in the board of supervisors broad discretionary powers. In the event it decides that the franchise should be granted, the board is required to fix the rate of tolls which may be collected for crossing the bridge. In fixing these tolls the board is required to take into consideration the cost of construction, operation, and maintenance of the bridge, and permit an annual income from the tolls so fixed sufficient to raise not exceeding 15 per cent. on the actual cost of construction and such additional income as will provide for the annual cost of operation, maintenance, amortization of, and taxes on the bridge. The facts upon which to base proper toll charges, which in the proposed ordinance involved herein constitute not less than thirty-three different classifications of tolls, must be found by the board of supervisors in order that the grantee of the franchise receive just returns on the investment and thus satisfy the constitutional requirement that private property be not taken for public use without just compensation. These considerations requiring necessary and precedent findings of fact by the board, together with the further statutory requirement of a hearing and a determination on protests and asserted prior rights, compel the conclusion that it was not intended, either by the provision of the Constitution or by section 4058 of the Political Code, that the initiative should be applicable to the granting of a tollbridge franchise under present law. In what has been said we have in mind the declarations of this court that the act of granting a franchise is legislative in character. People v. Board of Supervisors, 122 Cal. 421, 55 P. 131, and cases therein cited; 12 Cal. Jur. 682. It is concluded, however, that, under the law as it now stands, the legislative functions of the board of supervisors in considering and acting upon an application for a tollbridge franchise are so intermingled with the administrative and quasi judicial functions of said board as to render the operation of such law entirely inconsistent and unworkable with the initiative law. When the proposed initiative measure is presented to the board, it must, under the law, be adopted without alteration, and there is no discretion vested in the board to make its provisions with reference to license tax and tolls conform to the facts required to be found as a condition precedent to the granting of a valid franchise.

A determination that direct legislation was not intended to apply to all actions of subordinate governmental bodies involving in part the exercise of the legislative function is not new in this state. It has been said generally that "by the enactment of initiative and referendum laws the people have simply withdrawn from the legislative body and reserved to themselves the right to exercise a part of their inherent legislative power." Dwyer v. City Council, 200 Cal. 505, 513, 253 P. 932, 935. The passage of ordinances relating to the improvement of streets under certain street laws has been held not to be subject to control by the initiative because of discretionary power vested in the city council. Hyde v. Wilde, 51 Cal. App. 82, 196 P. 118. In Chase v. Kalber, 28 Cal. App. 561, 153 P. 397, it was held that, notwithstanding the fact that the action of a city council in adopting a resolution of intention to improve streets is legislative in character, none of the precedent steps necessary to be taken for the improvement of streets was intended to come within either the power of the initiative or of the referendum, and that the operation of direct legislation and the system provided by the Legislature for the improvement of streets cannot coexist as to such matters. To the same effect is Starbuck v. City of Fullerton, 34 Cal. App. 683, 168 P. 583. So, here, if the initiative be applicable to the granting of a tollbridge franchise, the provisions of the state law vesting administrative and discretionary powers in the board of supervisors are to that extent repealed, a result which should not be declared except by a clear and unmistakable intention to that effect on the part of the legislative branch.

As affecting the limitations on the power of the Legislature to establish a uniform system of county government under sections 4 and 5 of article 11 of the Constitution, it was said in Galvin v. Board of Supervisors, supra, at page 693 (235 P. 452):

"This grant of power to the Legislature to enact general and uniform laws relating to the matters referred to in the foregoing clauses of the Constitution constitutes in itself a limitation upon the power of counties, whether acting through their regularly constituted legislative bodies or attempting to act directly through initiative legislation, to adopt ordinances or regulations which would have the effect of destroying the uniformity in regard to such matters which the state legislature by the enactment of general and uniform laws was required to create and maintain."

After quoting extensively from the Political Code sections hereinabove referred to and from other general laws of the state, it was further said in that case at page 696 (235 P. 454):

"The foregoing provisions of the Political Code and of the general law above quoted define and limit the powers of the board of supervisors of the county of Contra Costa in the matter of enacting legislation granting franchises for the erection and maintenance of tollbridges across the navigable waters which form the boundary line between said county and the county of Solano, and provide expressly and exclusively for the procedure which must precede such grant."

The court was there discussing in the main the requirement of the law that the proposed ordinance, even if adopted under the initiative, must be accompanied by the same statutory precedent steps as to notices of the hearing on the application for the franchise and the request by the board of supervisors to the state engineer as were required in the case of the granting of the franchise by act of the board of supervisors itself. It was not decided in that case that the initiative law would not apply to the granting of a tollbridge franchise. It was rather assumed that, if the proposed ordinance were adopted under the initiative, it would yet be invalid for noncompliance with the general tollbridge franchise law. The statement in that case, however, to the effect that such general law provides "expressly and exclusively for the procedure which must precede such grant," was prophetic of the present determination that such procedure must be followed in the granting of a tollbridge franchise to the exclusion of the general law relating to the initiative.

Other points are made by the respondents. It is insisted that, although the proposed initiative ordinance provides in section 9 thereof that the rate of tolls fixed therein shall remain unchanged for a period of 20 years unless the receipts from tolls in any one year be shown to be disproportionate to the cost of construction of the bridge or the fair cash value thereof, together with the cost of all necessary repairs and maintenance of the bridge, there is no similar provision for a change in the license tax fixed by section 7 of the proposed ordinance within said period of 20 years as provided in section 2846 of the Political Code. It is also insisted that there is no provision in law for the substitution of the petition of 20 per cent. of the electors of the county to the state engineer for his report in lieu of such a request by the board of supervisors, as required by section 4 of the Act of March 14, 1881. The Galvin Case is relied upon in this contention, to the effect that the procedure laid down by the tollbridge franchise law must be followed and no substitutions are legally permissible. It is also contended by certain amici curiæ that the building of a tollbridge across waters forming the boundary line between two counties is a matter of general state concern, or at least is of more than the concern of the one county on the left bank of the waterway descending, and that therefore the electors of but one of the counties should not be given the power to decide the question of granting the franchise. This is but another reason advanced indicating that the initiative as applied to the electors of one county should not be made to apply to the granting of such a franchise in which the two counties are interested. It is deemed unnecessary to discuss these and other contentions of the parties and amici curiæ, however meritorious they may appear to be, for the reason that our decision on the main point is decisive of the controversy.

From what has been said, it is not to be inferred that the final act of the board of supervisors in granting a tollbridge franchise might not be held to be subject to the referendum. When all of the required precedent steps of a discretionary and fact-finding nature have been taken by the board and the franchise has been regularly granted, a proper construction of the Constitution and statutory law relating to the referendum might lead to the conclusion that the referendum would apply. That question is not involved in this proceeding, and we express no opinion thereon.

The peremptory writ is denied.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.

SEAWELL, J. I concur in the reasoning and conclusion of the main opinion, which, in substance, is to the effect that the general law of the state prescribing the procedure for the granting of licenses to erect and maintain tollbridges across navigable waters of the state is inappropriate and practically impossible of operation in its application to the initiative method of enacting ordinances as the system is prescribed by section 4058, Political Code. In so doing I do not recede from the views expressed at length in the opinion filed in this cause November 27, 1927, 261 P. 990.

My investigation of the subject upon the previous hearing of the cause inclined me to the view expressed in the main opinion as to the inapplicability of the initiative method of adopting an ordinance such as described herein. However, I then thought, and still think, that the conclusion herein arrived at can be as well, if not better, placed upon the ground that under the provisions of sections 528 to 530, inclusive, Civil Code, as those sections read at the time said initiative ordinance was presented to the board of supervisors for adoption, the authority to construct and operate the tollbridge could be granted only to such corporations as were formed for the exclusive purposes of constructing and maintaining a particular designated tollbridge. The corporation in the instant case is not such a corporation, but was formed to conduct a large variety of enterprises and businesses, but nowhere in its articles of incorporation declared its intention to construct a tollbridge across Carquinez Straits. There seems to be no loophole by which the statutory requirements as they formerly existed may be evaded. All of the statutes by which the right to a grant of franchise to construct a tollbridge is authorized and all statutes germane thereto, whether of regulatory or administrative character, as specifically pointed out in the opinion rendered in the cause formerly before us, require that the corporation so applying must be formed for the specific purpose of constructing and maintaining said tollbridge at a designated place. The many duties imposed upon said corporation and the penalties and forfeitures prescribed for a failure or neglect to conform with the many requirements of the statute, including strict accountability to the board of supervisors as to the amount of its capital stock, the amount paid in and annually expended, the amount received for tolls, the amount of dividends, and numerous other matters specified by statute respecting the business of the corporation, make it clear that the Legislature did not intend to permit revenue derived from the operation of tollbridges in which the public had an interest to become intermixed or confused with private funds derived from private enterprises.

Reading the several statutes together, and keeping in mind the fact that the Legislature was more concerned with the public interest which it was endeavoring to conserve than it was in broadening the scope of private corporations organized for profit, there seems to be no substantial ground upon which petitioners may rest their demand.

The fact that private corporations have habitually omitted or refused to conform to the provisions of the statutes as written cannot have the force of repealing statutes.

SHANNON v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1928.

1. Municipal corporations $\S$ 218(8)—City civil service employee, orally discharged and not served with written notice personally or by leaving copy at his home, held unlawfully discharged (Los Angeles City Charter, art. 9, $\S$ 112[a]).

City civil service employee, orally informed of his discharge and not served with written notice thereof either personally or by leaving copy at his place of residence, as required by Los Angeles City Charter, art. 9, $\S$ 112(a), held not lawfully discharged.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 218(8)—Oral discharge of city employee held ineffectual under charter requiring formal notice (Los Angeles City Charter, art. 9, $\S$ 112 [a]).

Oral statement by superintendent of buildings to clerk in city building department that he was discharged held ineffectual for any purpose, since mere knowledge of fact, of which formal notice is specifically required, as by Los Angeles City Charter, art. 9, $\S$ 112 (a), cannot be held substitute for such service.

3. Municipal corporations $\S$ 218(8)—Transmission of written notice of employee's discharge to civil service commissioners, without attaching certificate showing service on person discharged, is ineffectual (Los Angeles City Charter, art. 9, $\S$ 112 [a]).

Building superintendent's transmission of written notice of clerk's discharge to board of civil service commissioners, as required by Los Angeles City Charter, art. 9, $\S$ 112 (a), without attaching certificate showing required service of such notice on person discharged, is ineffectual.

4. Mandamus $\S$ 165—Averments of application for mandamus must be taken as true on demurrer.

Averments of application for writ of mandate to compel petitioner's restoration to position as city civil service employee must be taken to be true on demurrer.

5. Mandamus $\S$ 13—Civil service employee, unlawfully discharged, could invoke writ of mandate for restoration without first applying to civil service commissioners for investigation (Los Angeles Charter, art. 9, $\S$ 112 [a]).

Civil service employee, never lawfully discharged because of failure to serve written notice of discharge in manner required by Los Angeles Charter, art. 9, $\S$ 112 (a), could invoke writ of mandate to compel his restoration to such position without first applying to board of civil service commissioners for investigation of grounds of removal, as required of lawfully discharged employees.

6. Mandamus $\S$ 151(1)—City held proper party to mandamus proceedings against building superintendent for reinstatement as clerk in building department.

City held a proper, if not necessary, party to proceedings by unlawfully discharged civil service employee for writ of mandate to compel superintendent of buildings to restore him to position as clerk in department of building and safety; such department being merely a subordinate department, and superintendent a subordinate official, of city.

7. Municipal corporations $\S$ 220(6)—Petitioner not alleging compliance with charter provisions, nor making proper city departments and officials parties to mandamus proceeding for reinstatement, as civil service employee, held not entitled to salary from date of unlawful discharge (Los Angeles City Charter, art. 28, $\S$ 360 et seq.).

Unlawfully discharged civil service employee, not alleging compliance with provisions of Los Angeles City Charter, art. 28, $\S$ 360 et seq., regulating procedure for allowance and payment of salaries, nor making city departments and officials charged with duty of complying therewith parties to proceeding for writ of mandate to compel his restoration to position, held not entitled to allowance and payment of salary from date of discharge to issuance of writ.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Proceeding by William A. Shannon for a writ of mandate to the City of Los Angeles and J. J. Backus, as Superintendent of Building of the Department of Building and Safety, of said city. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed as to defendant city, and reversed as to defendant Superintendent, with direction.

Superseding opinion, 268 P. 399.

G. F. Boreman, of Los Angeles (Anthony Jurich, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Herman Mohr and Jerrell Babb, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiff instituted this proceeding in the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, seeking the issuance of a writ of mandate directed to the department of building and safety of the city of Los Angeles, through the superintendent of said department, named with the said city of Los Angeles as the respondents in his petition for said writ, to compel said respondents to restore him to his position as a clerk in said department, and to permit him to resume and continue to discharge his duties in said position and to replace his name upon the pay roll of said department, in order to enable him to draw and be paid his salary for his services as such clerk therein. The petitioner also sought the issuance of said writ to be directed to the city of Los Angeles, ordering the payment of his said salary during the period of his alleged debarment from his said position. In support of his application, the petitioner alleged that for some time prior to the 8th day of February, 1926, he had held and was then holding the position of general clerk in the electrical division of the department of building and safety of said city of Los Angeles, which position was one under the classified civil service of said city under and by virtue of article 9 of the charter thereof; that on said 8th day of February, 1926, when the petitioner presented himself for duty at his place of employment in the aforesaid division of said department, he was not permitted by the superintendent of said department to resume or enter upon or further discharge his said duties, but was excluded therefrom by said official, and was then and there informed that he had been discharged from his said position; that from that time thenceforth his name was removed and omitted from the pay roll of said department, and he was refused payment of his salary as an employee of said city; that on February 13, 1926, the following notice, together with the certificate appended thereto, was transmitted by the said superintendent of said department to the board of civil service commissioners of the city of Los Angeles, to wit:

"Los Angeles, Cal., February 13, 1926.

"To the Honorable the Board of Civil Service Commissioners, Normal Hill Center, Los Angeles, Cal.—Gentlemen:

"You are hereby notified that I have this day discharged W. A. Shannon from his position as general clerk (2353 M-C) in the Electrical Division Dept. of Building & Safety Department of the city for the following causes, to wit:

"Violation of rule 10, section 1.

"Absence from duty without leave. (Second offense.)

"Note.—Mr. Shannon was given a thirty-day suspension on October 5th, 1925, with a notice that recurrence of this offense would mean his dismissal, on January 28th, 1926, he failed to report and was absent until Feb. 8th, 1926, and when asked to resign, refused to do so.

"This discharge effective as of January 28th, 1926.

"Respectfully yours,

"[Signature] J. J. Backus.

"[Title] Supt. of Building.

"I hereby certify that a copy of the foregoing statement was mailed to the last-known address of W. A. Shannon on 13th day of February, 1926, at 11 o'clock a. m.

"[Signature] C. E. Gartman."

The petitioner further avers in his petition that no copy of the aforesaid notice or statement was ever served upon him personally nor by leaving the same at petitioner's place of residence, which he avers at all of said times to have been "Room 16, Pembroke Hotel, 339 South Hill street," in said city of Los Angeles, nor was any copy of said notice ever mailed to petitioner at his said place of residence, which he avers at all of said times to have been his post office address as shown upon the records of said division where he was so employed; that instead thereof a copy of said notice was by said superintendent of said department, on or about said date, addressed to said petitioner and mailed to "307½ West 2nd street, Los Angeles, California," which was not and had never been his place of residence. For the foregoing reasons the petitioner avers that he was unlawfully discharged from his aforesaid civil service position and is entitled to a writ of mandate directing his reinstatement therein.

The respondents demurred to the said petition upon several grounds, chief of which is that the said petition did not state facts sufficient to entitle the petitioner to the relief prayed for therein. The trial court, upon the hearing upon said demurrer, sustained the same generally, with leave to amend, which, the petitioner declining to do, the court directed judgment to be given, made, and entered in the respondents' favor and for their costs. It is from such judgment that this appeal has been taken.

[1-4] Directing our consideration first to the aforesaid general ground of demurrer, we are of the opinion that the trial court was in error in sustaining the same. The provisions of the Los Angeles Charter having relation to the removal or discharge of persons in the classified civil service of said city are embodied in section 112 (a) of article 9 thereof, which, at the time of the petitioner's discharge, read as follows:

"Any board or officer having the power of appointment of officers, members and employees in any department of the government of the city, shall have the power to remove, discharge or suspend any officer, member or employee of such department; but no person in the classified civil service of the city, other than an unskilled laborer employed by the day, shall be removed, discharged or suspended except for cause, which shall be stated in writing by the board or officer having the power to make such removal, discharge or suspension, and filed with the board of civil service commissioners, with certification that a copy of such statement has been served upon the person so removed, discharged or suspended, personally, or by leaving a copy thereof at his last known place of residence if he cannot be found.

"Upon such filing such removal, discharge or suspension shall take effect."

It is apparent that the requirements of the foregoing provision of the city charter were neither actually nor substantially complied with in the petitioner's case. That he was entitled to have the rules and regulations of the city charter, safeguarding him in his civil service position, fairly invoked and applied before his discharge from such position could become effectual was held by this court in the case of Garvin v. Chambers, 195 Cal. 212, 225, 232 P. 696. The oral statement made to the petitioner by the respondent Backus to the effect that he was discharged was ineffectual for any purpose, since mere knowledge of a fact regarding which formal notice is expressly required cannot be held to be a substitute for such service. Chaplin v. Superior Court, 81 Cal. App. 367, 253 P. 954. Neither would the transmission by said Backus to the board of civil service commissioners of the written notice of the petitioner's discharge, however regular in the form of such notice, become effectual to accomplish such discharge unless and until the further provision of the charter requiring service of such notice and designating the form and method of such service should have been complied with. A vital and inseparable portion of the written notice provided for in section 112 (a) of article 9 of the city charter is the certification to be attached thereto showing the required service thereof upon the person affected by the discharge; and it is only upon the transmission of such notice with its appended certification that the discharge or suspension of a civil service employee provided for in said section becomes effectual for any purpose. According to the averments of the petitioner's application, which upon demurrer must be taken to be true, the said notice or statement of the petitioner's discharge was neither served upon him personally nor by the substituted method of "leaving a copy thereof at his last known place of residence, if he cannot be found." The only pretense of a compliance with these requirements of said section consists in a certification that "a copy of the foregoing statement was mailed to last-known address of W. A. Shannon on 13th day of February, 1926, at 11 o'clock a. m." Service by mail of the notice or statement in question is not provided for in said section (see Blalock v. Ridgway et al. [Cal. App.] 267 P. 713); but, even if permissible, such service as is thus certified to would be ineffective in the light of the affirmative allegations of the petitioner that such mailing was not made to his place of residence at all, but to an address where he had not resided; and this when it was shown by the records of said department where he actually resided at the time of such attempted service.

[5] Upon the face of his petition it thus fairly appears that the petitioner was not served with the notice or statement of his said discharge by either of the methods provided for in said section, nor, in fact, at all. This being so, it must be concluded that the petitioner was never properly nor lawfully discharged from his position, and, not having been thus discharged, it was neither his duty nor his right to make application to the board of civil service commissioners for an investigation of the grounds of his removal or discharge, in accordance with the procedure provided for, in the case of discharged employees, in said section of the charter. It is the contention of the respondents herein that the petitioner is not entitled to the issuance of a writ of mandate herein in so far as his reinstatement would be effected thereby, for the reason that the foregoing provision of said section of the charter afforded the petitioner a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, viz. that of an appeal to the board of civil service commissioners as provided therein. The fallacy underlying this contention consists in the fact that it is only such civil service employees as have been actually and lawfully discharged through the procedure theretofore specified in said section who are either required or entitled to apply to said board of civil service commissioners for a hearing upon the facts relied upon as grounds for the discharge. Not having been thus lawfully discharged, the petitioner was entitled to stand upon his statutory right to his position and to invoke the writ of mandate to compel his admission to and continuance therein until such time as the law relating to the procedure for his removal had been obeyed.

[6] There are several special grounds of demurrer upon which the respondents herein relied at the hearing thereon and still rely. Most of these consist in mere amplifications of the general ground of demurrer which has already been disposed of. There is one of these special grounds of demurrer which requires notice. It is the ground of misjoinder of parties respondent; the claim being that the city of Los Angeles has been improperly made a party to this proceeding. We deem this ground of special demurrer, however, to be without merit, for the reason that the city of Los Angeles is the municipality of which the department of building and safety is merely a subordinate department, and its superintendent, Backus, a subordinate official, and whose action is, after all, but the action of the municipality itself. It would therefore be a proper, though perhaps not a necessary, party to proceedings of this character, wherein the action of its subordinate officials is sought to be compelled as a duty arising out of their particular office or department. There was therefore no demurrable misjoinder of parties respondent in this proceeding.

[7] A more serious question, however, arises when we come to consider the extent and scope of the remedy sought by the petitioner herein, since he seeks not only to compel restoration to his position at the hands of the particular department which has sought to effect his discharge, but he is also seeking to compel by the city of Los Angeles itself the allowance and payment of the accumulated amount of his salary from the date of his purported discharge to the date of issuance of this writ. To this relief the petitioner is clearly not entitled upon the averments of his petition in the present proceeding, for the obvious reason that he has not alleged compliance with those provisions of the charter of said city which regulate the procedure for the allowance and payment of salaries and of claims and demands generally against said municipality (see section 360 et seq., art. 28, of said charter); nor has he made the several departments and officials of said city, whose duty it might become to comply successively with the last-named charter provision, parties to this proceeding. The special demurrer of the city of Los Angeles was therefore properly sustained, and, the petitioner declining to amend, it follows that the judgment herein as to the city of Los Angeles must be affirmed.

Our conclusion, therefore, is that, as to the respondent city of Los Angeles, the judgment is affirmed, but as to the respondent Backus the judgment herein should be and is hereby reversed, with direction to the trial court to set aside its order generally sustaining the demurrer of the respondent Backus herein, and to overrule the demurrer of the said respondent, with leave to answer within the time allowed by law or by the order of said court.

CAMP v. OAKLAND MORTGAGE & FINANCE CO. (S. F. 12905.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 5, 1928.

Appeal and error $\Rightarrow$ 78(2), 870(2)—Order substituting adverse claimants of fund in defendant's hands as parties defendant is not appealable, but reviewable only on appeal from judgment (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 386, 963, subds. 1-3; § 956).

An order substituting adverse claimants of fund in defendant's hands as parties defendant, under Code Civ. Proc. § 386, is not appealable under section 963, subd. 2 or 3, nor under subdivision 1 as "final judgment," but may be reviewed only on appeal from judgment under section 956.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Final Judgment.]

In Bank.

Action by M. A. Camp against the Oakland Mortgage & Finance Company. From an order granting defendant's motion to dismiss it and substitute others as parties defendant, plaintiff appeals. On motions to dismiss the appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Soren X. Christensen and J. O. Wood, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Dunn, White & Aiken and W. M. Nold, all of Oakland, for respondent Oakland Mortgage & Finance Co.

Melville C. McDonough, of Oakland, for respondents Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York and M. M. Friedman.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff instituted this action to recover the residue or balance of a loan fund remaining in defendant's hands; the loan having been theretofore arranged for and negotiated by one George Phillips and wife to meet progress payments on certain improvement work undertaken by them. Plaintiff's claim to this balance is founded upon what is described in the complaint as a "draft" drawn by Phillips and wife to the plaintiff's order. It appears, however, that several other persons, including the assignee of Phillips and wife, had also made demand upon defendant for the $2,000 in controversy. Being unable to determine to whom it should pay this money, the defendant, in accordance with the requirements of section 386 of the Code of Civil Procedure, moved the court below, before answer filed, for an order discharging it from liability and dismissing it from the action, upon payment into court of the sum in dispute, and substituting as parties defendant in its place and stead all of the adverse claimants. From the order granting this motion, the plaintiff appealed. This proceeding presents two motions, one by the original defendant and the other by one of the substituted defendants, looking to the dismissal of said appeal.

The moving parties urge, among other things, that an order substituting parties defendant, as contemplated by section 386, supra, is not an appealable order. In this we believe there is merit. Such an order is not appealable under subdivisions 2 or 3 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, wherein are enumerated all of the orders from which an appeal lies. Nor do we think the order is appealable under subdivision 1 of said section as a "final judgment." State ex rel. Weinstein v. District Court, 28 Mont. 445, 72 P. 867, 868. From the cited case it appears that section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure of Montana is identical, so far as material here, with our section 386, supra, in that it provides for a substitution of defendants under certain circumstances and for the discharge and dismissal from the action of the original defendant upon his depositing in court the money or other personal property in dispute. Subdivision 1 of section 1722 of the Montana Code, as it read at the time of said decision, is identical with subdivision 1 of our section 963, supra, for it authorized an appeal "from a final judgment entered in an action, or special proceeding. * * *" (Italics added.) In determining that an order of substitution made under the former section was not a "final judgment" within the meaning of subdivision 1 of the latter section so as to be appealable thereunder, the Montana court declared:

"The defendant contends that the order is a final judgment, and is appealable under the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 1722. * * * This contention rests upon the assumption that it is a final determination of the rights of the parties so far as concerns the relator and Travis. With this view we do not agree. The order has none of the essential characteristics of a final judgment. It is not to be executed by a writ or other process; nor is any act required of any of the parties by the doing of which he will be injured in the meantime, in the sense, at least, that he will be finally deprived of any substantial personal or property right, or suffer an invasion thereof, unless he can prosecute an appeal directly from the order itself. From this point of view it does not fall within the principle of the case of State ex rel. Heinze v. District Court, 28 Mont. 227, 72 P. 613, but is merely an interlocutory or intermediate order, and falls within the class of orders which may be reviewed upon appeal from the final judgment in the case, upon exception reserved; * * * otherwise, this and all similar orders, incidentally determinative of some right of a party to an action, must be held to be final judgments, within the definition of that term as laid down in section 1000 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Therefore no direct appeal lies under section 1722, supra."

In Cassidy v. Norton, 25 Cal. App. 433, 435, 143 P. 1057, 1058, it was sought by certiorari to review an order of substitution made under section 386, supra, and the court held that, if the order was improperly and erroneously made, "the error could not be corrected on certiorari, but must be reached by an appeal from the final judgment in the case." (Italics ours.) The very brief opinion filed in the early case of Beck v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 375, declares that:

"An appeal does not lie from an order of the chancellor making a new party defendant. It may be revised on error, when the whole case is properly brought up."

We are satisfied that the order herein attempted to be appealed from is not a "final judgment" within the meaning of subdivision 1 of section 963, supra, as interpreted by our decisions, for such order did not in any manner purport to dispose of the merits of the controversy or to adjudicate the rights of the parties in and to the subject-matter of the action. It is our conclusion, therefore, that such order may be reviewed only on appeal from the judgment. Section 956 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, in part, that:

"Upon an appeal from a judgment the court may review the verdict or decision, and any intermediate ruling, proceeding, order or decision which involves the merits or necessarily affects the judgment, or which substantially affects the rights of a party. * * *"

Research discloses that an appeal was taken in Youtz v. Farmers', etc., Bank, 31 Cal. App. 370, 160 P. 855, from an order such as is herein involved. No question was therein raised, however, as to the propriety of the appeal.

For the foregoing reasons, the appeal is dismissed.

ATTKISSON v. REYNOLDS.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 28, 1928.

1. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 799—Conclusion in clerk's certificate that time for presenting and filing transcript and bill of exceptions had passed was not statement of the facts required by statute (Civ. Proc. § 953d, added by St. 1927, p. 86).

Conclusion in county clerk's certificate that time for presenting and filing transcript and bill of exceptions had long since passed was not statement of the facts required to be set forth by Code Civ. Proc. § 953d, added by St. 1927, p. 86.

2. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 799—Appellee not having shown that time within which transcript might be prepared had expired, appeal will not be dismissed (Civ. Proc. § 953a, and section 953d, added by St. 1927, p. 86, Supreme and District Courts of Appeal Rule 6).

Where appellee did not show by clerk's certificate or by affidavit whether or not time within which transcript on appeal might be prepared under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, had expired, since clerk's certificate did not show that notice required by last sentence of section 953a was given, or that notice of entry of judgment was given under section 953d, added by St. 1927, p. 86, motion to dismiss appeal must be denied under rule 6 of Supreme and District Courts of Appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Action by W. B. Attkisson against Thomas E. Reynolds. From the judgment, defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss. Motion denied.

Thomas E. Reynolds, of Vacaville, for appellant.

W. U. Goodman, of Fairfield, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. [1, 2] This cause is before us upon motion of the plaintiff and respondent to dismiss the defendant's appeal. The motion is based upon the county clerk's certificate setting forth the following specifications, to wit:

"That said defendant and appellant has filed no request to the clerk to prepare a transcript; that no proceedings are pending for the settlement of a bill of exceptions and no bill of exceptions has been prepared or filed and the time for presenting and filing same has long since passed.

"That no proceedings for the preparation of a transcript, under section 953a of the Civil Code of Procedure, are pending and no such proceeding was ever instituted and the time to institute same has long since expired.

"That no motion for a new trial was ever made and that the time for making such motion for a new trial has long since expired."

As authority for the motion, attention is called to rules 5 and 6 of rules governing practice in the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal of the state of California, in effect on and after September 1, 1928. By reason of the omission of the clerk's certificate, as hereinafter pointed out, it is only necessary to consider the application of the last sentence of rule 6, which reads:

"It shall be incumbent upon the party moving to dismiss to show by such certificate or by affidavit, that no proceeding for a bill of exceptions or transcript under section 953a, is pending in the trial court, and if no such proceeding was ever instituted, that the time to institute the same has expired."

The first paragraph of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, after providing for the filing of a notice with the clerk specifying the particular matters which the applicant desires to have set forth in a transcript on appeal, fixes the time for giving the notice to the clerk in these words:

"Said notice must be filed within ten days after notice of entry of the judgment, order or decree, or if a proceeding on motion for new trial be pending, within ten days after notice of decision denying said motion, or of other termination thereof."

From the time of the adoption of this paragraph of section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, until the year 1927, the question of whether notice to the clerk to prepare a transcript on appeal had or had not been given in time, was being presented to appellate courts and the determination of whether the notice required by the section to prepare a transcript had been given on time was always clouded with the uncertainty as to whether the appellant had or had not given notice or whether notice was waived of the entry of the judgment, order or decree from which the appeal was being taken. In order to settle this vexed question, the Legislature, by an act approved April 4, 1927 (St. 1927, p. 86), added a new section to the Code of Civil Procedure, to be known as section 953d, which reads as follows:

"Any notice of entry of judgment, or of order granting or denying a motion for a new trial, required by the provisions of section 650, section 659 or section 953a of this Code, must be given in writing, unless written notice thereof be waived in writing or by oral stipulation made in open court and entered in the minutes."

By this section of the Code of Civil Procedure all the motions heretofore decided on the presumption that the appellant had had notice of the entry of judgment or of the order appealed from are rendered inapplicable. A definite method is now provided by which appellate courts are to be governed in ascertaining whether a moving party has placed himself in position to terminate the litigation by having the appeal of the opposite party summarily dismissed. In order to fix the time within which the notice to prepare the transcript, as provided in section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, the successful party in the trial court must comply with section 953d of the same Code and see to it that all uncertainty in this particular has been removed. The last sentence of rule 6 governing this court to which attention has been called requires that the moving party shall present to us proof that the time to give notice to prepare a transcript on appeal has expired. This brings us to a consideration of the three paragraphs set forth in the clerk's transcript, made the basis of the appellant's motion. There is nothing in the clerk's certificate showing that the notice required to be given by the last sentence of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure has been given, nor is there anything in the clerk's certificate showing that the provisions of section 953d of the Code of Civil Procedure have been complied with. The certificate does not show that any notice has been given in writing, nor does it show the entry of any oral stipulation made in open court and entered in the minutes thereof, or otherwise, as required by said section. The conclusion in the first paragraph of the clerk's certificate that "the time for presenting and filing same has long since passed" is not a statement of the facts required to be set forth by section 953d, Code of Civil Procedure. It is merely the conclusion of the certifying clerk, whose attention may not have been called to the recent act of the Legislature. Whether the time has or has not expired within which the transcript on appeal may be prepared in this case has not been made to appear either by the clerk's certificate or by any affidavit, and not having been made to appear, as required by the rules of this court and the sections of the Code to which we have referred, it follows that the respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal herein must be denied, and it is so ordered.

OLDHAM v. MOODIE. (Civ. 3552.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 21, 1928.

1. Action $\Leftrightarrow$ 6—Complaint for declaratory judgment, alleging controversy over rights of parties and praying they be adjudged, sufficiently stated cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 1060 et seq.).

Though complaint alleged some matters unnecessary to action for declaratory judgment seeking determination of rights of parties in certain bonuses and royalties accruing under agreement, where the prayer therein asked that rights be adjudged, it sufficiently stated cause of action, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1060 et seq., and hence there was no prejudicial error in overruling defendant's demurrer.

2. Assignments $\Leftrightarrow$ 92—Assignee of proportionate interest in matter being litigated by signing compromise, under which assignor took less than entitled to, ratified it.

Where plaintiff, during prior litigation of certain rights under a prospecting permit, assigned a one-eighth interest of his claimed right to defendant and the parties to the prior litigation compromised by plaintiff taking a lesser interest in prospecting permit than he was entitled to, defendant in subsequent action to determine controverted interests therein held to have ratified compromise by signing it.

3. Assignments $\Leftrightarrow$ 92—Assignment of part interest in matter of litigation implied right of compromise, requiring only that plaintiff act in good faith towards assignee.

Where plaintiff, in action to obtain declaratory judgment determining his right in and to certain bonuses and royalties accruing under agreement, assigned to defendant a one-eighth interest in his right to prospecting permit during prior litigation with another party, and in concluding prior suit compromised so that his interest therein was decreased by one-eighth, the assignment to plaintiff during litigation implied the right of compromise on the part of plaintiff, requiring only that he act in good faith towards assignee.

4. Assignments $\Leftrightarrow$ 92—Assignee of proportionate interest in prospecting permit, assigned during its litigation subsequently to another assignment, having signed compromise, cannot complain that assignor had no right to make prior assignment.

In action to determine controverted interest of plaintiff and defendant in prospecting permit, where, during prior litigation, plaintiff assigned to a third party a one-half interest in whatever right he had to it and then subsequently assigned to defendant a one-eighth interest in whatever interest he had, held, that defendant by signing compromise ending prior litigation, under which plaintiff took a lesser interest than he was entitled to, thereby approved the final arrangement and cannot complain that at time of first assignment plaintiff had no interest in subject-matter of litigation for reason that he had not received assignment from party granted original permit, as provided by Department of Interior Oil and Gas Regulations, § 12½.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Erwin W. Owen, Judge.

Action by S. C. Oldham against A. R. Moodie. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Rowen Irwin, Rollin Laird, and Wiley & Harvey, all of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Siemon & Garber, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

WEYAND, Justice pro tem. The plaintiff brought this action under sections 1060 et seq., Code of Civil Procedure, to obtain a declaratory judgment, determining his rights in and to certain bonuses and royalties accruing under an agreement entered into between Matie G. Jones and others, and the Federal Drilling Company, a corporation.

[1] A controversy had arisen between the plaintiff herein, S. C. Oldham, and A. R. Moodie, the defendant in this action, as to the share each should have in said bonuses and royalties. The controversy between the said parties grew out of certain dealings solely between the parties to this action, and did not involve other owners in the venture.

Judgment was rendered by the superior court of Kern county declaring that plaintiff owned a 21/128 interest in said profits, and that defendant owned a 3/128 interest therein. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

Appellant argues to some extent that the trial court erred in overruling the demurrer of defendant. While the complaint alleges some matters perhaps unnecessary to an action for declaratory relief, yet as we understand section 1060 et seq., Code of Civil Procedure, sufficient facts are stated to show that an "actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties" exists between the parties, and growing out of "written instruments." The prayer asks that these rights be adjudged by the court. That is all that is really essential to be averred in such a proceeding. We believe no prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in overruling defendant's demurrer.

[2] The evidence discloses that on or about April 6, 1923, the plaintiff herein was involved in a controversy with one Mrs. Matie G. Jones, as to his rights in a prospecting permit issued by the United States government covering a section of government land near Taft, in Kern county, Cal. This permit was being held in the name of Mrs. Jones or one W. L. Hopkins, and plaintiff herein, Oldham, claimed a one-half interest therein. At or about the last-named date said Oldham had instituted suit against Mrs. Jones to obtain legal recognition of his rights in the prospecting permit.

On April 6, 1923, said Oldham gave to Kaye and Siemon, his then attorneys, an assignment of a one-half interest in and to any interest he then had in and to the said permit. As the litigation with Mrs. Jones progressed, Oldham needed funds to press the same, and on the 27th day of November, 1923, Oldham obtained from the defendant herein the sum of $500, and gave to the defendant herein an assignment of a one-eighth interest in any interest Oldham had in the land covered by the permit.

This controversy between Oldham and Mrs. Jones terminated in a judgment being rendered by the superior court of Kern county adjudging that the plaintiff herein, Oldham, was the owner of a one-half interest in the permit aforesaid. Matie G. Jones, being dissatisfied with that judgment, appealed to the Supreme Court of this state. While that appeal was pending, a compromise was effected whereby it was stipulated that the judgment rendered was to be disregarded; Oldham was to be conveyed by Mrs. Jones a three-eighths interest in the permit. The lands involved were to be leased to the Federal Drilling Company, and they were to prospect the same for oil, gas, and like products. This compromise was effected on September 8, 1924, and the agreement with the Federal Drilling Company was dated on the same day.

On September 30, 1924, plaintiff Oldham gave to Kaye and Siemon another assignment of one-half of the three-eighths interest he received from Mrs. Jones. This assignment recited that the settlement was had with Mrs. Jones, and by said settlement the plaintiff herein had received a three-eighths interest in and to the prospecting permit from Mrs. Jones, and it further made the Oldham-Jones agreement a part of said assignment, by definite reference thereto. Plaintiff Oldham was permitted to testify that this assignment was simply to confirm the assignment of April 6, 1923. The assignment given by plaintiff herein to Kaye and Siemon on April 6, 1923, was not recorded. The dispute between the parties herein hinges upon the meaning of the several assignments, and as to whether or not the defendant knew of the existence of the April 6th assignment to the attorneys of Oldham. The trial court held that defendant Moodie well knew at the time he took an assignment from Oldham on November 27, 1923, that said Oldham had, prior to the execution of the Moodie assignment, made a transfer of one-half of his interest to said attorneys. Plaintiff Oldham when on the stand as a witness testified to the effect that he told Moodie, before making the assignment to Moodie, that he had already given to his attorneys an agreement "on a fifty-fifty proposition," and that he had signed "an ordinary agreement to that effect." Oldham further testified that he told Moodie as to his claims then in litigation with Mrs. Jones. While the answer of defendant Moodie denies knowledge on his part of the existence of the prior assignment to the attorneys, neither Moodie nor any other person testified as to this want of knowledge. It may be well in this connection to observe that the answer of Moodie also denies that he was ever consulted as to the terms of the settlement between Oldham and Mrs. Jones. As to that denial we can but say that Moodie was in error in such part of his answer. The fact was proven, and in no way contradicted, that upon the execution of the Jones et al.-Federal Drilling Company contract, the written consent was had of Moodie and all other owners to its execution. The said drilling company contract recited on its face the fact that litigation had been pending between Oldham and Mrs. Jones; that judgment was rendered in favor of Oldham, adjudging that he owned a one-half interest in the permit; that an appeal had been taken; and that pending the appeal a compromise was effected whereby Oldham was to receive a three-eighths interest in the permit. The consent agreement was worded as follows:

"Agreement of Consent. For and in consideration of the sum of one ($1.00) dollar, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, we the undersigned, hereby consent to and agree to be bound by the terms and conditions of that certain agreement dated the 8th day of September, 1924, by and between Matie G. Jones et al., as first parties, and Federal Drilling Company, as second party, a copy of which is attached hereto.

"[Signed by] W. W. Kaye.

"Alfred Siemon.

"George Appell.

"F. H. Kaufman.

"A. R. Moodie.

"Pierson M. Hall."

Defendant Moodie, by his answer, made a plea of estoppel as against Oldham, in that as Oldham effected a compromise of the litigation between himself and Matie G. Jones without the consent of defendant, and thereby received three-eighths of the property involved instead of one-half thereof, that plaintiff is debarred from now asserting that his interest is less than one-half of the property. In other words, appellant contends that if respondent Oldham compromised by accepting one-eighth thereof less than he was entitled that this reduction should be taken from the ultimate share coming to said Oldham.

The trial court expressly found that defendant was not abridged or limited by any compromise or settlement made by Oldham, without the knowledge or consent of Moodie, but that defendant Moodie ratified and consented to the said compromise.

We believe the trial court decided correctly upon the theory that appellant consented to that compromise, but we also believe that upon the whole situation there present the decision was the only proper one for the trial court.

[3] The interests transferred by the assignment of April 6, 1923, and by the assignment of November 27, 1923, were well understood by the several assignees to be interests in litigation. The nature of the transactions clearly so indicated. It is a most common transaction for one in charge of such litigation to make compromise thereof. The assignment of such rights implies a right of compromise on the part of the claimant of such rights. All that is required of the one prosecuting the claim is that he act in good faith towards his assignee. Here no fraud or bad faith was claimed as against respondent Oldham.

[4] Appellant Moodie also makes the contention that because the agreement of Matie G. Jones, S. C. Oldham, et al., with the Federal Drilling Company, and dated September 8, 1924, recites as a fact that one W. F. Hopkins was owner of the prospecting permit, and that not until June 21, 1923, was his transfer to Mrs. Jones approved by the proper officers of the Interior Department of the United States, therefore on April 6, 1923, the plaintiff herein had no interest in the permit or the land covered thereby to transfer.

Appellant cites section 12½ of the oil and gas regulations issued by the Department of the Interior in support of this claim that on April 6, 1923, Oldham had no interest in the permit that he was privileged to assign. This section provides as follows:

"12½ Assignment of Permits—Permits, after being awarded, may be assigned to qualified persons or corporations upon first obtaining consent of the Secretary of the Interior. Mere rights to receive permits are not assignable."

It must be very plain that although the prospecting permit was on April 6, 1923, in the name of W. F. Hopkins, and on June 21, 1923, consent was given for a transfer to the name of Matie G. Jones, yet during all that time the actual equitable ownership of the property well might have been in Mrs. Jones and Oldham, in equal shares.

The court in Oldham v. Jones adjudicated all those questions; the judgment rendered in said case was only changed as to the amount of interest Oldham was finally to receive, and appellant by his signature to the consent agreement approved that final arrangement.

We cannot, therefore, agree with appellant's contention. As above noted, the trial court decided that Oldham did own a one-half interest. Long before that judgment was rendered said Hopkins had transferred to Mrs. Jones. The compromise based on that judgment was fully set forth in the drilling company agreement, and defendant consented thereto. There is nowhere any showing that Oldham could not, or did not, receive an assignment of an interest in the prospecting permit. Indeed, in the suit of Oldham v. Jones it might well have been a contention of Oldham that by fraud or mistake his name was improperly omitted from the application for the permit, although he was rightfully to have been named as an applicant for such permit, and to have a legal interest therein. The judgment in Oldham v. Jones puts to rest all such questions.

We see no necessity to cite authority in support of our views.

The judgment of the lower court will be affirmed.

2. Contracts $\S$ 5—There is clear distinction between "genuine" or "true contracts" or "contracts implied in fact," and "quasi" or "constructive contracts" or "contracts implied in law."

There is a distinction between "genuine" or "true contracts" or "contracts implied in fact," which are considered in and founded upon intention and will of parties to be bound thereby, and so-called "quasi" or "constructive contracts" or "contracts implied in law," which are in no sense contracts and have none of fundamental elements thereof, but on contrary are mere fictions of law depending for their legal existence not upon the assent of parties sought to be bound but alone upon equitable principles out of which law fashions an obligation and imposes the same upon a party irrespective of fact that he has not assented to it and in most cases has expressly dissented therefrom.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by the Welsbach Company against the State and others to recover taxes. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. A. Sanderson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank L. Guernsey, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

Gaylord & Smith, of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

David Livingston, of San Francisco, amici curiæ in behalf of appellant.

KNIGHT, Acting P. J. During the years 1926 and 1927 appellant, a foreign corporation organized and existing under the laws of New Jersey, paid license taxes to the state of California, under protest, which were imposed and collected pursuant to the provisions of section 3 of the Corporate License Act of California, enacted in the year 1915, and the several subsequent acts amendatory and supplementary thereto. Deering's General Laws 1923, Act 1743, p. 548. Subsequently, in March, 1927, the Supreme Court of this state, in conformity with certain decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States construing similar acts of other states, declared those portions of the California Corporate License Act under the authority of which said taxes had been imposed and collected to be unconstitutional, it being held that the same were violative of the commerce clause of and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Perkins Manufacturing Co. v. Jordan, 200 Cal. 667, 254 P. 551. Thereupon appellant brought this action against the state of California, its secretary of state, and state treasurer to recover the taxes so paid, amounting to $1,100. The complaint contained three counts. In two of them appellant set forth the particular circumstances under which said taxes were paid; and the third was a common count in assumpsit for money had and received. Respondents interposed a demurrer to the complaint and to each cause of action set forth therein upon the grounds that the same did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and that the court had no jurisdiction of the parties or the subject of the action. The demurrer was sustained with leave to amend, but appellant declined to amend and judgment of dismissal was entered, from which judgment this appeal has been taken.

[1, 2] The basic legal principle that a state, being deemed in law a sovereign, cannot be sued without its consent, has been modified in this state by the Constitution wherein it provides that suits may be brought against the state in such manner and in such courts as may be directed by law (section 6, art. 20, Const. of Cal.); and pursuant to the authority thus granted the Legislature of this state in 1893 enacted a statute providing in part as follows:

"All persons who have, or shall hereafter have, claims on contract or for negligence against the state not allowed by the State Board of Examiners, are hereby authorized, on the terms and conditions herein contained, to bring suit thereon against the state in any of the courts of this state of competent jurisdiction, and prosecute the same to final judgment." Stats. 1893, p. 57. (Italics ours.)

The substance of appellant's contention here is that the demand it is suing upon constitutes a claim on contract within the meaning of said statute, and therefore is one upon which recovery may be had thereunder. In a previous case involving the construction of said statute it was held that when an action is brought against the state thereunder "the allegations of the complaint should aver such facts as show distinctly an authorized contract." Melvin v. State, 121 Cal. 16, 53 P. 416. (Italics ours.) Nowhere in the complaint in the present action is it alleged nor does appellant claim that the state ever entered into any contractual relationship with reference to a refund of said taxes; nor is it contended that there is any legislative act imposing upon the state an obligation to surrender money collected under a statute subsequently declared unconstitutional; but appellant argues that the term "claims on contract" as employed in the act of 1893 should be construed to include any equitable demand enforceable as an implied contract, and that since the action herein is one to recover taxes paid to the state under protest pursuant to the provisions of void statute, it is in effect an action based upon an implied contract, and therefore may be maintained against the state on a common count in assumpsit for money had and received.

The right of a foreign corporation to recover from the state corporate taxes involuntarily paid pursuant to the Corporate License Act preceding the act of 1915, and which was also declared unconstitutional, was the question considered in the case of McClellan v. State of California, 35 Cal. App. 605, 170 P. 662; and it was there held that without the consent of the state to bring such an action it could not be maintained, the court saying:

"There is not now, nor has there ever been, any statute of this state authorizing any one to institute against the state, or any of its officers, an action for the recovery of any fee or sum of money of the character here involved."

But, continuing, the court said:

"The only statute permitting the institution of such suits is the act of February 28, 1893 (Stats. 1893, p. 57). This statute authorizes actions against the state by 'all persons who have, or shall hereafter have, claims on contract or for negligence against the state not allowed by the state board of examiners.' This action is admittedly neither an action on contract nor because of negligence, but counsel for appellant claims his right of action has foundation irrespective of any permissive act," etc.

Respondents assert that the decision in that case is determinative of this action, but appellant contends that notwithstanding the action there was similar in its nature to the one here, the language of the decision shows that the case was tried and decided on a theory foreign to the issue of the application of the provisions of the statute in 1893, and that therefore the decision in that case is not conclusive of the present action.

Aside, however, from the question as to whether the decision in that case is determinative of the present action, we are of the opinion that the nature of the demand here sued upon does not come within the purview of the statute of 1893, because obviously there is no contractual relationship involved in the transactions pleaded in the complaint, which we believe must exist before the remedy granted by the statute may be invoked. It may be stated generally in this connection that the law of contracts makes a clear distinction between "genuine" or "true" contracts, or "contracts implied in fact" as they are sometimes called, that is, engagements which are conceived in and founded upon the intention and will of the parties to be bound thereby, and so-called "quasi" or "constructive" contracts, or "contracts implied in law," as they are sometimes referred to, which, as will appear from the authorities herein-after cited, are in no sense contracts and have none of the fundamental elements thereof, but, on the contrary, are mere fictions of law depending for their legal existence, not upon the assent of the party sought to be bound, but alone upon equitable principles out of which the law fashions an obligation and imposes the same upon a party irrespective of the fact that he has not assented to it and in most cases has expressly dissented therefrom. Admittedly, appellant's demand belongs to the latter class, and, therefore, being entirely destitute of any contractual element, cannot be said to constitute such a "claim on contract," as was contemplated by the Legislature in the enactment of said statute.

The distinction above mentioned is clearly pointed out by Professor Keener in his work on Quasi Contracts, wherein he states that the treatment of quasi contracts in the same class with express contracts and contracts implied in fact "is not only unscientific, and therefore theoretically wrong, but is also destructive of clear thinking, and therefore vicious in practice." Continuing, he says:

"It needs no argument to establish the proposition that it is not scientific to treat as one and the same thing, an obligation that exists in every case because of the assent of the defendant, and an obligation that not only does not depend in any case upon his assent, but in many cases exists notwithstanding his dissent. And yet with this wide difference between simple contracts and quasi contracts, the latter are generally treated today as a species of simple contract. * * * A true contract * * * exists as an obligation, because the contracting party has willed, in circumstances to which the law attaches the sanction of an obligation, that he shall be bound. Had he not so willed, he would not be under a contractual obligation. This statement is as true of a contract implied in fact as of an express contract. Indeed the division of simple contracts into 'express contracts' and 'contracts implied in fact' does not involve a consideration of the principles of contracts at all. In the case of a contract implied in fact, as much as in the case of an express contract, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant either made or accepted an offer which resulted in a promise on the defendant's part, and that the promise was not only in fact made, but that a sufficient consideration was given therefor. If the defendant gave in words a promise containing all the terms of the contract which the plaintiff claims that he made, for a consideration expressly requested in words by him, in exchange therefor, then the contract is an express contract. * * * The terms, 'express contracts' and 'contracts implied in fact,' are used, then, to indicate not a distinction in the principles of contract, but a difference in the character of the evidence by which a simple contract is proved. The source of the obligation in each case is the intention of the parties. The term 'contract implied in law' is used, however, to denote, not the nature of the evidence by which the claim of the plaintiff is to be established, but the source of the obligation itself. It is a term used to cover a class of obligations where the law, though the defendant did not intend to assume an obligation, imposes an obligation upon him, notwithstanding the absence of intention on his part, and in many cases in spite of his actual dissent."

The learned author then quotes from Maine on "Ancient Law," wherein it is said that:

It is an error to identify quasi contracts with implied contracts, "for implied contracts are true contracts which quasi contracts are not. In implied contracts, acts and circumstances are the symbols of the same ingredients which are symbolized, in express contracts, by words; and whether a man employs one set of symbols or the other must be a matter of indifference so far as concerns the theory of agreement. But a quasi contract is not a contract at all. The commonest sample of this class is the relation subsisting between two persons, one of whom has paid money to the other through mistake. The law, consulting the interests of morality, imposes an obligation on the receiver to refund; but the very nature of the transaction indicates that it is not a contract, inasmuch as the convention, the most essential ingredient of contract is wanting." Keener on Quasi Contracts, pp. 3 to 5.

In a later treatise on the subject of quasi contracts, Professor Woodward asserts that the persistent refusal to observe the essential dissimilarity of the two obligations "has resulted in confusion and error, and in many cases has wrought serious injustice"; and, continuing, he says:

"It cannot be too strongly emphasized, therefore, that quasi contracts are in no sense genuine contracts. The contractor's obligation is one that he has voluntarily assumed. He is bound because he has made a promise or undertaking that the law will enforce. And the only difference between an express contract and a contract implied in fact is that in the former the promise or undertaking is verbal, while in the latter it is an implication of the promisor's conduct. But quasi contractual obligations are imposed without reference to the obligor's assent. He is bound, not because he has promised to make restitution—it may be that he has explicitly refused to promise—but because he has received a benefit the retention of which would be inequitable." Woodward on Law of Quasi Contracts, sec. 4.

One of the earlier cases supporting the text above quoted is Hertzog v. Hertzog, 29 Pa. 465, cited in County of San Luis Obispo v. Gage, 139 Cal. 398, 73 P. 174, which will be hereinafter more particularly referred to. There the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, speaking through Mr. Justice Lowrie, said:

"There is some looseness of thought in supposing that reason and justice ever dictate any contracts between parties, or impose such upon them. All true contracts grow out of the intentions of the parties to transactions, and are dictated only by their mutual and accordant wills. When this intention is expressed, we call the contract an express one. When it is not expressed, it may be inferred, implied, or presumed, from circumstances as really existing, and then the contract, thus ascertained, is called an implied one."

And then, after referring to that class of obligations created by law, not by act of the parties, the decision continues:

"The latter class are merely constructive contracts, while the former are truly implied ones. In one case the contract is mere fiction, a form imposed in order to adapt the case to a given remedy; in the other it is a fact legitimately inferred. In one, the intention is disregarded; in the other, it is ascertained and enforced. In one, the duty defines the contract; in the other, the contract defines the duty."

The distinction is also noted in People ex rel. Dusenbury v. Speir, 77 N. Y. 144, wherein the court says:

"There is a class of cases where the law prescribes the rights and liabilities of persons who have not in reality entered into any contract at all with one another, but between whom circumstances have arisen which make it just that one should have a right, and the other should be subject to a liability similar to the rights and liabilities in certain cases of express contract. Thus, if one man has obtained money from another, through the medium of oppression, imposition, extortion, or deceit, or by the commission of a trespass, such money may be recovered back, for the law implies a promise from the wrongdoer to restore it to the rightful owner, although it is obvious that this is the very opposite of his intention. Implied or constructive contracts of this nature are similar to the constructive trusts of courts of equity, and in fact are not contracts at all."

Bearing in mind, therefore, the well-established principle of jurisprudence heretofore referred to that a state may not be sued without its consent, it becomes evident, we think, that when the Legislature in 1893, by statute, relaxed said principle by consenting that the state be sued upon "claims on contract," it contemplated giving its consent to be sued only on that class of contracts to which the state had consented to become a party, and, so far as this phase of the statute is concerned, intended to restrict the remedy granted therein to claims arising out of genuine or true contracts; in other words, to conventions which the state had voluntarily entered into with the intention of being bound thereby.

It is of course conceded that, as applying to individuals, the doctrine of the enforcement of quasi or constructive contracts has received recognition in this state, as in others; but we are of the opinion that until the Legislature by statute expressly declares that as against a sovereign a recovery may be had on that class of demand, the character of action here instituted cannot be maintained. The state of Indiana has such a statute. It reads as follows: "That any person or persons having or claiming to have a money demand against the state of Indiana, arising at law or in equity, out of contract express or implied, * * * may bring suit against the state therefor. * * *". Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 1485. And consequently in the case of State v. New York Mutual Life Ins. Co. (175 Ind. 59) 93 N. E. 213, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 256, it was held that the terms of that act included quasi contracts or contracts implied in law of the kind here sued upon. But a comparison of the terms of the Indiana statute with those of our own clearly demonstrates that if the Legislature of this state had intended to extend the operation of its statute to cover not only such contracts as the state itself might make, but also those which the courts, by fiction of law, might make for it, the language of our statute, like that of the statute in Indiana, would surely have been made broad enough to indicate such intention; and the fact that a statute of limited meaning was adopted may be taken, we think, as a clear manifestation of a purpose to exclude from its operation the class of demands here sued upon.

Moreover, whenever the statute of 1893 has been brought before the Supreme Court for interpretation in relation to transactions different from the one now under consideration, the language employed by the court in dealing with the subject fairly indicates, we believe, that the construction we have placed upon the statute is the proper one. For instance, in the case of County of San Luis Obispo v. Gage, supra, which was an action instituted by the county against the state to recover money paid by the county for the maintenance of orphans, half orphans, and abandoned children pursuant to the terms of a statute enacted in 1880 (Stats. 1880, p. 13), the decision in favor of the county was placed upon the ground that the state, by virtue of the terms of said act, had "in effect promised to each county in the state that if it should thereafter maintain and support persons of a class mentioned in the act, the state would appropriate and pay to such county the sums of money therein stated. This," the Supreme Court said, "was the equivalent of an offer upon condition, and upon the performance of the condition by any county the offer became a promise, and binding as such upon the state"; and therefore it was held that the liability sued upon was contractual, the court saying, "Contracts may be made or evidenced by a statute, and by conduct ensuing thereupon, as well as by other means or evidence," and that money accruing under such contracts was recoverable in actions in assumpsit unless some other remedy was expressly provided. It will be observed, therefore, that the case was decided upon the theory of a genuine contract having been entered into by the state, that is, one having its source in the consent of the state, expressed through the medium of a statute, to be bound thereby. But in so deciding the court was careful to differentiate genuine contracts from so-called quasi contracts or contracts implied in law such as we have here, for with respect to the latter the court said:

"It is not necessary to decide, and we do not wish to be understood to hold, that the act of 1893 is to be construed to mean that an action may be maintained against the state in every case where an action of assumpsit would lie at common law. There were many cases where assumpsit was allowed, although there was in fact no contract made, nor any dealings whatever between the parties, the law implying a contract out of necessity, and because without such fictitious creation none of the legal forms of action would apply and the party would be remediless. There is a clear distinction between such a case and one where the making of a contract or agreement is implied, as a matter of evidence. Hertzog v. Hertzog, 29 Pa. 465. There might be strong reasons in favor of the proposition that the Legislature, in referring to 'claims on contract,' meant real contracts, not fictitious ones. Melvin v. State, 121 Cal. 23 (53 P. 416)."

Again, in the case of Melvin v. State, supra, wherein the court declined to apply the provisions of the statute of 1893 to a case of negligence, it was said with reference to their applicability to cases of contracts:

"* * * The allegations of the complaint should aver such facts as show distinctly an authorized contract." (All italics ours.)

The only inference which can be reasonably drawn from the word "authorized" as there used is that the court meant such contracts as had their inception in the will of the state to be bound thereby.

The case of Chapman v. State, 104 Cal. 690, 38 P. 457, 43 Am. St. Rep. 158, upon which appellant seems to rely to sustain its position, is not in conflict with the two foregoing cases, nor is it out of harmony with the interpretation we have given the statute. There the state, through its board of harbor commissioners, acting under the express authority of statute, engaged in the business of a wharfinger, and as such entered into a contract of bailment with plaintiff's assignor. The personal property which was the subject of the contract of bailment was destroyed as the result of the alleged negligence on the part of the state's agents, and an action was brought against the state to recover the value of the property. It was held, first, that under the law of bailments a wharfinger was bound by his contract to return or deliver the goods, and that for a negligent loss of the same he was liable for a breach of contract, enforceable at common law by an action in assumpsit and under our practice by the owner or the consignee in an action upon the contract for damages sustained by reason of such negligence; secondly, that since the state had voluntarily engaged in the business of a wharfinger under the authority of law and as such had entered into a contract of bailment "it was bound thereby to the same extent as a private person engaged in conducting the business of a wharfinger would be under a similar contract." It will be seen, therefore, that in that case the liability thus fastened upon the state arose out of a genuine or true contract voluntarily entered into by the state for the bailment of the private personal property, and that such liability was in no manner identified with the class of obligation here involved. And in the case of County of Alameda v. Chambers, 35 Cal. App. 537, 170 P. 432, the court, in giving its interpretation of the effect of the decisions in Chapman v. State, supra, and Melvin v. State, supra, said, with reference to the point at issue here, that the principle that the state is bound by the same rules as an individual in measuring its liability on a contract "necessarily presupposes a valid contract with the state."

The recent cases of Great Northern Ry. Co. v. State of Washington (Wash.) 267 P. 506, and Badger v. Crockett (Utah) 259 P. 921, cited to us by amicus curiæ in support of appellant's theory herein, do not touch the point at issue here. Both involved only the constitutionality of the corporate license acts of those states, and the question of the right to sue the state for a return of the taxes was not raised in either case, presumably for the reason that the plain terms of the remedial acts of those states, which are far broader and much more comprehensive than those of our statute of 1893, placed that question beyond doubt.

Under the ruling in Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Jordan, 168 Cal. 270, 142 P. 839, the cause of action attempted to be stated against the secretary of state and state treasurer will not lie. As to them, also, therefore, the demurrer was properly sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

NEW YORK CLOAK & SUIT HOUSE OF LOS ANGELES v. COSTON.
(Civ. 3562.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 21, 1928.

1. Interest $\S$ 10—Interest held properly allowed on money loaned, where court found amounts and dates of several loans (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1914).

In action for money loaned, in which court found amounts and dates of several loans, interest was properly allowed, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1914, as against contention that account was not stated.

2. Interest $\S$ 12—In action for money embezzled, plaintiff held entitled to interest on each amount from date of its conversion (Civ. Code, $\S$ 3336).

In action for money embezzled by defendant, in which court found amount of each embezzlement and date thereof, plaintiff held entitled to interest on each amount from date of its conversion, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 3336, as against contention that account was not stated.

3. Parties $\S$ 11—Plaintiff, suing for moneys which defendant collected and failed to deliver, held trustee of other corporations having same stockholders and officers, authorizing it to maintain action for money due them (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 369).

In action for money collected by defendant, which he failed to deliver to plaintiff, plaintiff held to be trustee of other corporations having same stockholders and officers and operated and managed in connection with plaintiff and from plaintiff's place of business, so as to be entitled to maintain action for moneys due such other corporations from defendant, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 369.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action for money had and received by the New York Cloak & Suit House of Los Angeles against John R. Coston. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John B. Haas and John D. Home, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

H. W. Kidd and W. O. Schell, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The court found that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $600, with interest thereon, for money loaned to him by the plaintiff, and in the further sum of $1,498, and interest thereon, on account of moneys collected by him for the plaintiff and which he failed to deliver to the plaintiff. Judgment was entered accordingly and the defendant has appealed.

The evidence fully supports these findings and the appellant makes no contention to the contrary. The defendant was an employee of the plaintiff and, among other things, it was his duty to deliver merchandise to purchasers and collect the price thereof. He signed a written statement reading in part as follows:

"During the term of my employment with the New York Cloak & Suit House, I, with the intent to defraud, did withhold and fraudulently keep, for my own use, certain sums of money which were paid to me for and on behalf of the New York Cloak & Suit House, by customers for merchandise purchased and delivered to them. * * * I further confess that the total sum of money involved in such defalcation is an amount as to the exact total of which I have no definite knowledge, and I am willing to confess said total to be whatever amount may be determined by the proper authorities and auditors after investigation covering the period of my employment at the New York Cloak & Suit House."

[1, 2] Appellant first contends that the court erred in allowing interest on the money loaned to him and that embezzled by him on the ground that "neither of the accounts were stated." The court found the amounts and dates of the several loans and, nothing to the contrary appearing, it is presumed that the loans were made upon interest. Civ. Code, $\S$ 1914. The court also found the amount of each embezzlement and the date thereof. The plaintiff is entitled to interest on each such amount from the date of its conversion. Civ. Code, $\S$ 3336.

[3] The evidence shows that the Paris Cloak & Suit House and the Palais de Mode, corporations, have the same stockholders and officers as the plaintiff and are operated and managed in connection with the plaintiff and from the plaintiff's place of business. The defendant had no direct transactions with these corporations, but some of the collections for which he failed to account were for merchandise sold by them. The defendant was not employed by them, but by the plaintiff, which acted for itself as well as for the other corporations. All packages from those corporations were taken to the plaintiff's store and "entered on a general sheet" and then delivered by its employees to the Coston Delivery Service, operated by the defendant. All collections for sales accounted for by the defendant were turned in to the plaintiff's cashier and were then credited on its books to the respective corporations which had made the sales. The court found that the plaintiff acted as a trustee for the other corporations and was to hold the moneys collected for them as their trustee. Appellant contends that the foregoing facts do not show that the plaintiff was such trustee and that therefore the plaintiff cannot maintain this action in so far as it involves moneys due the other corporations. There is no merit in the contention. Code Civ. Proc. § 369; Harris v. Clayton, 186 Cal. 445, 449, 199 P. 776.

The answer alleges that, prior to the commencement of this action, the defendant conveyed certain property to an agent of the plaintiff to secure payment of the moneys sued for herein and that the plaintiff's only cause of action is a suit to foreclose his interest in the property so conveyed. The court found on sufficient evidence "that said conveyance was to secure * * * certain indebtedness of the defendant to the plaintiff and to said other persons, but that said conveyance had no connection with the indebtedness * * * sued upon in this action, and was to secure a different and distinct indebtedness, which said indebtedness is not involved in this action."

The judgment is affirmed.

LUNDQUIST et ux. v. LUNDSTROM et al.
(Civ. 6288.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 24, 1928.

1. Statutes §212—Presumption of change of legislative purpose arises from material change in wording of statute.

A material change in wording of a statute raises the presumption of a change of legislative purpose.

2. Statutes §212—Legislature is presumed to know meaning of language.

The Legislature is presumed to know the meaning of language.

3. Automobiles §197(5)—Mother signing license application of minor son held not liable for injury while automobile was driven by another also having license (Motor Vehicle Act 1923, §§ 58, 62[b]).

Since Motor Vehicle Act 1923 (St. 1923, p. 532) § 62(b) providing that negligence of minor licensed in "driving" motor vehicle shall be imputed to person signing application of minor for license, omitted the word "operating," contained in prior statutes, held that mother signing application of minor son is not liable for injuries caused while automobile was being driven by another who held a license to drive motor vehicle, as it will not be presumed that he was driving in violation of section 58, but that he was acting under authority of his own license.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by K. E. Lundquist and wife against Mrs. W. N. Lundstrom and others. A judgment was rendered for plaintiffs against all defendants except defendant named, in whose favor a judgment of nonsuit was entered, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Culver & Nourse, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Robert Young, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BEAUMONT, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit. The action was for damages resulting from the alleged negligent operation by defendants of an automobile in the city of Los Angeles on May 14, 1925. There are four defendants: (1) Marcus Lundstrom, a minor; (2) his mother, Mrs. W. N. Lundstrom, who signed his application for a driver's license; (3) Gilbert Talbot, a minor; and (4) his mother, Alma Talbot, who signed her son's application for an operator's license. Marcus Lundstrom owned the automobile, but at the time of injury to plaintiff Mrs. Lundquist defendant Gilbert Talbot was driving. This was with the consent of the owner, who was seated in the machine. As the automobile approached a street intersection, Mrs. Lundquist and her daughter were attempting to cross the street in the course of the approaching machine. They were coming toward the path of the automobile from the right. The driver, Talbot, according to his own statement, did not see them. The daughter, observing the approaching machine, returned to a place of safety on the curb. Marcus Lundstrom, observing Mrs. Lundquist in a position of danger, shouted, "Look out, there is a lady!" Talbot, the driver, thinking she was coming from the left, turned the machine to the right and struck the plaintiff, Mrs. Lundquist. Each of the above-mentioned minors held a state operator's license. Upon the resting of plaintiff's case, motion for nonsuit was made on behalf of Mrs. Lundstrom on the ground that, as she had been made a defendant solely because she had made application for a driver's license for her son, and the evidence showed conclusively that her son was not driving the automobile at the time the injury occurred, no liability attached to her. The motion was granted. A verdict was rendered for plaintiff against all defendants except Mrs. Lundstrom, in whose favor a judgment of nonsuit was entered.

In Bosse v. Marye, 80 Cal. App. 109, 250 P. 693, Claudine Spreckels, a minor, had been issued, upon the written request of her father, a license to operate a motor vehicle. She invited Helen Marye, also a minor, to drive her automobile. While Miss Marye, who did not hold an operator's license, was driving, the machine collided with and injured Louis Bosse, the plaintiff. In an action for damages, plaintiff alleged negligent operation of said automobile. A verdict was rendered against said Rudolph Spreckels. The court made a distinction upon appeal by Spreckels between "operating" and "driving" an automobile, saying:

"The liability of a parent under the statute mentioned is not limited, however, to negligent acts of the minor resulting from 'driving' an automobile, the statute employing the broader term 'operating or driving,' showing a clear intention to include within such liability any negligent act which is the direct result of the privilege extended by the statute to said minor under his or her operator's license to operate an automobile upon a public highway. [Italics ours.] 'To drive' is defined as meaning, 'to impel the motion and quicken'; whereas 'to operate' means, 'to direct or superintend.' Century Dictionary."

The liability of the parent in Bosse v. Marye was determined upon construction of the statutes of 1919. St. 1919, pp. 223-225, § 14, amending section 24 of Motor Vehicle Act. The Motor Vehicle Act then provided that:

"Any negligence of a minor, so licensed, in operating or driving a motor vehicle upon the public highway, whether as chauffeur or operator, shall be imputed to the person or persons who shall have signed the application of such minor for such license, which person or persons shall be jointly and severally liable with such minor for any damages caused by such negligence."

The Motor Vehicle Act of 1923, upon which the claim of liability of the parent in the present case is based, has been materially changed from that of 1919. The 1923 act (Stats. 1923, p. 531, § 58) declares that it shall be unlawful for any person to drive any motor vehicle upon any public highway unless licensed or exempt under the act. Section 62 (a) provides for the granting of the application. Section 62 (b) of the same act is as follows:

"Any negligence of a minor so licensed in driving [italics ours] a motor vehicle upon a public highway shall be imputed to the person or persons who shall have signed the application of such minor for said license, which person or persons shall be jointly and severally liable with such minor for any damages caused by such negligence."

[1, 2] A change of legislative purpose is to be presumed from a material change in the wording of a statute. McCarthy v. Board of Fire Commissioners, 37 Cal. App. 495, 174 P. 402; Thomas v. Joplin, 14 Cal. App. 662, 112 P. 729. That there is a difference in the meaning of the words "drive" and "operate" is clearly pointed out in Bosse v. Marye, supra. It is elementary that the Legislature is presumed to know the meaning of language. We must assume, therefore, that it was the intention of the Legislature to limit the imputation of negligence, as provided by this act (Motor Vehicle Act of 1923) to that resulting from the actual driving, for the more comprehensive word "operating" is eliminated, leaving only the word "driving," instead of "operating or driving."

[3] The claim against respondent in this case is grounded on the statute. Motor Vehicle Act 1923. No liability could attach to her unless it is shown that the car which caused the injury to appellant was being driven under authority of the license of Marcus Lundstrom. The signing of the application, the issuance of the license, and the alleged driving of the motor vehicle under the authority of the license are the basis of the action against Mrs. Lundstrom, coupled, of course, with the alleged negligence and resultant injuries. It cannot be successfully claimed that the automobile was being driven under the authority of Marcus Lundstrom's license. The evidence shows that at the very time of the accident the driver himself, Gilbert Talbot, held a state license to drive a motor vehicle. It will not be presumed that he was driving in violation of the provisions of section 58 of the Motor Vehicle Act, but, on the other hand, that as a licensee of the state, he was acting under authority of his own license. We are convinced that the action of the trial court in granting the motion for nonsuit was without error. The judgment is affirmed.

BUTLER v. WILLIAMS, County Auditor.★
(Civ. 3607.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 21, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 20, 1928. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Nov. 19, 1928.

1. Counties ~~§~~24—Legislature determines exclusively what county offices are required, and laws providing for additional offices are presumed to have been required by legislative determination of public convenience (Const. art. 11, § 5).

Legislature has exclusive right to determine whether public convenience demands provisions for election or appointment of county officers, and, where Legislature has provided for additional county officers, presumption is that Legislature found such offices were required by "public convenience" under Const. art. 11, § 5.

2. Counties $\S$ 24—Legislative regulation of compensation of county surveyors is subject to constitutional requirement that compensation be determined in proportion to duties (Const. art. 11, § 5; Pol. Code, § 4013).

Office of county surveyor, though not specifically mentioned by Const. art. 11, § 5, is subject to requirement of such constitutional provision for reasonable remuneration for services in proportion to duties, since it is presumed that the office of county surveyor, created in each of the counties of the state under Pol. Code, § 4013, was required by public convenience, which, under constitutional provision, is ground for creation of additional offices.

3. Counties $\S$ 69(1)—Compensation of county officers must be reasonably commensurate with with nature and extent of labor required in proper discharge of their duties; "in proportion to duties" (Const. art. 11, § 5).

Const. art. 11, § 5, authorizing Legislature to regulate compensation of county officers "in proportion to duties," requires return to officers in sum reasonably commensurate with nature and extent of labor which they are compelled in the proper discharge of their duties to perform.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First Series, In Proportion to Duties.]

4. Counties $\S$ 69(1)—To be "adequately compensated," county officers must receive reasonably substantial remuneration, not necessarily based on compensation in private employments (Const. art. 11, § 5).

To be "adequately compensated" under Const. art. 11, § 5, county officers need not be paid upon same basis as persons in private employment, but compensation must be reasonably substantial, even though it may be insufficient compared with compensation paid for services of same general character in private employment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Adequately Compensated.]

5. Constitutional law $\S$ 70(1)—Legislature's determination of compensation of county officers is binding on courts, unless salary provided is utterly disproportionate to duties (Const. art. 11, § 5).

Matter of fixing and adjusting compensation of county officers under Const. art. 11, § 5, authorizing Legislature to provide for public offices and regulate compensation in proportion to duties, is exclusively the function of the Legislature, and its action in that particular is binding upon the courts unless it appears that the salary provided for any county officer is so small and so clearly disproportionate to duties as practically to amount to no compensation at all.

6. Counties $\S$ 69(2)—Court must find statute fixing compensation of county officers unconstitutional, where compensation is so disproportionate to duties imposed as practically to amount to no compensation (Const. art. 11, § 5).

Where compensation of county officer fixed by Legislature is so disproportionate to duties imposed as practically to amount to no compensation at all within the meaning of Const. art. 11, § 5, requiring compensation in proportion to duties, court must declare as matter of law that compensation has not been fixed in obedience to constitutional requirement.

7. Evidence $\S$ 29—Court takes judicial notice of fact that county surveyor's duties were not reduced prior to or contemporaneously with amendment radically reducing surveyor's salary (Pol. Code, §§ 3629, 3634, 4214-4220, and § 4236k as amended by St. 1925, p. 811; St. 1905, p. 102; St. 1907, p. 411; St. 1913, p. 514).

Court takes judicial notice of fact that duties prescribed for county surveyors by Pol. Code, §§ 3629, 3634, 4214-4220, St. 1905, p. 102, St. 1907, p. 411, and St. 1913, p. 514, were not in any respect diminished in counties of seventh class prior to or contemporaneously with 1925 amendment to Pol. Code, § 4236k (St. 1925, p. 811), by which salary of county surveyor in such counties was reduced from $2,400 per annum to $120.

8. Counties $\S$ 74(5)—Amendment reducing county surveyors' salaries in counties of seventh class from \$2,400 to \$120 per annum held void (Pol. Code, §§ 3629, 3634, 4214-4220, and § 4236k, amended by St. 1925, p. 811; Const. art. 11, § 5; St. 1905, p. 102; St. 1907, p. 411; St. 1913, p. 514).

1925 Amendment (St. 1925, p. 811) to Pol. Code, § 4236k, by providing for reduction of salary of county surveyors in counties of seventh class from $2,400 to $120 per annum, held to violate Const. art. 11, § 5, requiring Legislature to regulate compensation of county officers in proportion to duties, since duties of county surveyor prescribed by Pol. Code §§ 3629, 3634, 4214-4220, and St. 1905, p. 102, St. 1907, p. 411, St. 1913, p. 514, are important and burdensome and were not reduced at time of amendment.

9. Counties $\S$ 61—Amendment radically reducing salary of county surveyors in counties of seventh class held ineffectual to abolish office of county surveyor in particular county (Pol. Code, § 4013, and § 4236k amended by St. 1925, p. 811; Const. art. 11, §§ 4, 5).

1925 Amendment (St. 1925, p. 811) of Pol. Code, § 4236k, providing for reduction of salaries of county surveyors in counties of seventh class from $2,400 to $120 per annum, held ineffective and void as attempt to abolish office of county surveyor in Sacramento county, because in violation of requirement of Const. art. 11, §§ 4, 5, that system of county government established by Legislature shall be uniform throughout the state; office of county surveyor being created by Pol. Code, § 4013.

10. Counties $\S$ 20 $\frac{1}{2}$ —Uniform system of county government cannot be impaired by legislation authorizing difference in functions in different counties (Const. art. 11, §§ 4, 5).

Const. art. 11, §§ 4, 5, authorizing Legislature to provide for county offices and enjoining duty of establishing system of county government uniform throughout the state, requires that Legislature must establish and maintain uniform system of county government, which may not be impaired by any subsequent legislation authorizing material difference in manner of performing governmental functions in different counties.

11. Counties $\Rightarrow$ 113(6)—County supervisors held without authority to employ private persons to perform duties of county surveyor, irrespective of county surveyor's professional capacity (Pol. Code, §§ 4013-4220; Const. art. 11, § 5).

County board of supervisors held without authority to transfer duties of county surveyor or to employ private persons to perform his duties, since office is created by Legislature, Pol. Code, § 4013, pursuant to Const. art. 11, § 5, and duties are prescribed by sections 4014-4220; county surveyor's professional capacity being immaterial on this point.

12. Officers $\Rightarrow$ 77—Salaried public offices created by Legislature are not held by contract, and are subject to full legislative control, in absence of constitutional restrictions.

Salaried public offices created by Legislature are not held by contract, but, in absence of constitutional restrictions, are subject to full legislative control, and may be abolished, and duties thereof increased or salaries reduced.

13. Estoppel $\Rightarrow$ 90(5)—One who sought election to office of county surveyor after passage of amendment reducing salary was not precluded, on ground of estoppel, from asserting unconstitutionality of amendment (Pol. Code, § 4013, and § 4236k amended by St. 1925, p. 811; Const. art. 11, § 5).

One who sought election to office of county surveyor, with knowledge that 1925 Amendment (St. 1925, p. 811) of Pol. Code, § 4236k, called for reduction of salary, was not precluded on ground of contract or estoppel from asserting that amendment reducing salary was in violation of Const. art. 11, § 5, requiring compensation in proportion to duties, since office of county surveyor is legislative office under Pol. Code, § 4013, and doctrine of estoppel is inapplicable.

14. Counties $\Rightarrow$ 74(5)—Original statute fixing county surveyors' salaries held not repealed by invalid amendment attempting salary reduction (Pol. Code, § 4236k amended by St. 1925, p. 811).

Pol. Code, § 4236k, fixing salary of county surveyors at $2,400 per annum, was not repealed by 1925 Amendment (St. 1925, p. 811), reducing salary to $120 per annum, and original act continued to determine salary of county surveyor on account of invalidity of amendment.

Application by Drury Butler for writ of mandate to be directed to L. P. Williams, as County Auditor of Sacramento County. Writ granted.

Butler, Van Dyke & Desmond, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Neil R. McAllister, Dist. Atty., and Alex J. Ashen, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an original application by the petitioner for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent, as auditor of the county of Sacramento, to draw his warrant in favor of the petitioner upon the county treasurer of said county for the payment to the petitioner of the sum of $3,200, the aggregate sum alleged to be due the latter from said county as and for his salary as county surveyor thereof for the period of 16 months, beginning with the 3d day of January, 1927, at the monthly salary of $200.

The petition states that the petitioner is, and at all times herein mentioned, since the 3d day of January, 1927, has been, the duly elected, qualified, and acting county surveyor of the county of Sacramento and is now entitled to receive a salary in the sum of $200 per month. It is further therein alleged that the respondent is, and has been at all the times mentioned herein, the county auditor of Sacramento county, and that that officer has refused and still refuses to draw his warrant on the treasurer of said county, directing the latter to pay the petitioner the aggregate sum above mentioned, notwithstanding (as the petition further alleges) that there are sufficient funds in the treasury with which said sum may be paid.

The return to the petition consists of an answer thereto, in which a number of defenses are set up, all involving questions of law. The respondent also filed a demurrer to the petition upon both general and special grounds.

The controversy involved in this proceeding is the outcome of the amendment by the Legislature of 1925 of so much of the County Government Act as affects the salary of the county surveyor of the county of Sacramento.

For many years down to the session of the Legislature of the year just named, the yearly salary of the county surveyor of counties of the seventh class (Sacramento being the only county in the state embraced within that class) was the sum of $2,400, payable monthly in equal amounts. At the time mentioned, or down to the legislative session of 1925, section 4236k of the Political Code (originally adopted into the County Government Act, in so far as that act applies to counties of the seventh class), provided:

"Sacramento. Surveyor. In counties of the seventh class, the county surveyor shall receive a salary of two thousand four hundred dollars per annum; and in addition thereto all necessary expenses for work performed in the office and all necessary expenses and transportation for work performed in the field."

At the legislative session of 1925 (see Stats. 1925, pp. 811, 812) the above section was so amended as to read as follows:

"In counties of the seventh class, the county surveyor shall receive a salary of two thousand four hundred dollars per annum; and in addition thereto all necessary expenses for work performed in the office and all necessary expenses—es and transportation for work performed in the field; provided, however, commencing January 3, 1927, in counties of the seventh class the county surveyor shall receive a salary of one hundred twenty dollars per annum, and in addition thereto all necessary expenses for work performed in the office and all necessary expenses and transportation for work performed in the field."

As pertinent to a certain proposition which, in view of the conclusion at which we have arrived upon the ultimate question involved herein, must be determined herein, it is important to bear in mind that the Legislature, as will readily be observed, re-enacted the section as it was originally introduced into the County Government Act; the amendment being merely in adding thereto the proviso which purports to reduce the salary of the surveyor to the sum of $120 per year or $10 per month.

The question presented by this proceeding is whether the compensation of the county surveyor of Sacramento county, as reduced by the amendment of section 4236k of the Political Code by the Legislature of 1925, amounts to such compensation as is contemplated by section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution. Said section, in so far as it is important in the present consideration, reads as follows:

"The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election or appointment, in the several counties, of boards of supervisors, sheriffs, county clerks, district attorneys, and such other county, township, and municipal officers as public convenience may require, and shall prescribe their duties and fix their term of office. It shall regulate the compensation of all such officers, in proportion to duties, * * * and for this purpose may classify the counties by population."

[1-3] It will be noted that the only officers whose election or appointment said section expressly enjoins upon the Legislature are "boards of supervisors, sheriffs, county clerks, and district attorneys"; but it will also be noted that by the same section the Legislature is vested with the power and discretion of providing for the election of "such other county * * * officers as public convenience may require." Under the last clause of said section, the Legislature, at a very early date in the history of our state government, not only provided, as it was its bounden duty to do, for the election of those officers specifically enumerated in said section and prescribed their duties, but, in the exercise of the power or authority vested in it by said section, also provided for the election and the fixing of the duties of certain county officers not embraced within the enumerated officers for whose election or appointment such provision is so required to be made. Among these is the office of county surveyor in each of the counties of the state. Pol. Code, § 4013. The only limitation upon the exercise of that power or authority by the Legislature is that provision for the election or appointment of county officers other than those specifically named in the said section of the Constitution must be made in response only to the requirements of "public convenience." And whether, in any such case, "public convenience" demands that provision for the election or appointment of a county officer be made, is a matter entirely or solely with the Legislature to determine. It is also true that when the Legislature has made provision for the election of a county officer other than those provided for by the Constitution itself, the presumption is that the lawmaking body, upon due deliberation and consideration, found that "public convenience"—that is, the proper administration of the governmental affairs of the counties—required that such provision should be made. In consideration of the ultimate question to be determined herein, we are therefore to proceed upon the established hypothesis that "public convenience," or, in other words, the necessity for the convenient, or proper, administration of the public affairs of the counties of the state, requires that, among other officers, each of said counties shall have a county surveyor, and that such officer is no less a county officer than is any of those officers for whose election or appointment the Constitution specifically declares the Legislature shall make provision. The meaning of the language of section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution is not open to controversy, so far as is concerned the duty imposed by said section upon the Legislature to fix and adjust the compensation of county officers of the several counties of the state. It plainly means that the Legislature must fix such compensation of the several county officers of each of the counties of the state in accord with what the Legislature might find would be a reasonable remuneration for the quantum and character of the services which the duties imposed upon such officers by law would or may require, and for that purpose, since the duties of such officers may be more onerous or less onerous in some counties than in others, may classify the counties according to the population thereof. In other words, the "compensation" referred to in said section means such return or reward to such officers in consideration of the rendition of the services exacted by the duties which the law enjoins upon them in a sum reasonably commensurate with the nature and extent of the labor they are compelled, in the proper discharge of those duties, to perform. Anything materially short of such compensation in such cases would be in plain defiance of the obvious intent and purpose of section 5, article 11, of the Constitution. Gwynn v. McKinley, 30 Cal. App. 381, 389, 158 P. 1059, was a case in which the Legislature of 1913, undoubtedly through inadvertence, omitted to provide in the County Government Act, then before the Legislature for amendment, for the payment of any compensation to justices of the peace of Placer county, or the counties of the class to which that county belonged. In 1915, the Legislature made provision for such compensation, but opposition to the payment of compensation to such officers under the act of 1915 was interposed on the ground that such payment would amount to an increase in the compensation of justices of the peace of said county after their election and during their terms of office, contrary to the terms of section 9, article 11, of the Constitution. This court held that, since the justices of the peace of said county were then allowed no compensation whatever, there could not be, within the meaning of the provision of the Constitution referred to, any "increase" by reason of the compensation provided for them by the County Government Act of 1915; that there was nothing to "increase" or add to or enlarge, as the word "increase" signifies. Among other things, it was said in the opinion:

"The constitutional provision in question is founded in good sense and justice, but it cannot justly be so construed as to prevent the legislature from supplying a manifest ellipsis in the law—to correct an obvious inadvertence whose result, if permitted to remain uncorrected, must be to hamper in no inconsiderable degree the proper administration of public affairs under a system established by the people themselves through their Constitution. There is nothing in the Constitution implying that persons performing public services shall not be compensated and adequately compensated therefor. On the contrary, that instrument contemplates that all public servants shall be justly compensated for their public services."

[4-6] By "adequately compensated," as that phrase is used in the above excerpt, it is not to be understood that it is meant that such compensation is to be allowed county or other public officers upon the same basis or standard as that by or according to which the matter of compensation in private employments is governed or regulated, since compensation in the latter instances, for obvious reasons, might reasonably be much higher, or, in some cases, much lower, than is allowed for services of the same general kind rendered by county officers. Compensation of county officers is adequate only when it may be said to be reasonably substantial, although it may not be sufficient, considering the nature and the extent of the duties to be performed in comparison with the compensation paid for services of the same general character prevailing and regarded as reasonable in private employments. But, at any rate, it is the duty of the Legislature, under section 5, article 11, of the Constitution, to provide for a proper compensation of the county officers of the several counties of the state, based upon the nature and the volume of the duties imposed upon them by law. It is true that the matter of fixing and adjusting the compensation of such officers, "in proportion to duties," is exclusively the function of the Legislature, and its action in that particular is binding upon the courts (Longan v. Solano County, 65 Cal. 122, 125, 3 P. 463; Green v. County of Fresno, 95 Cal. 329, 332, 30 P. 544; Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 28 P. 834, 29 P. 1092, 16 L. R. A. 161), unless it appears that the salary provided for any county officer is so small in amount and, therefore, so clearly disproportionate to the duties imposed upon such officer as practically to amount to no compensation at all, within the meaning and intent of section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution, in which case the courts may and, indeed, would be required to declare, as a matter of law, that the Legislature had not fixed such compensation in obedience to the requirement of section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution. In the beginning, it is well enough to say that our opinion is that the compensation provided by the Legislature in 1925 for the county surveyor of counties of the seventh class is so small, when compared to the duties which the law requires him to perform, as to reduce the action of the Legislature in so fixing such compensation to a palpable absurdity.

Let us now see what duties the law requires a county surveyor to perform in all the counties of the state. In the first place, it is to be said that a surveyor of a county must be a licensed land surveyor of the state (Pol. Code, § 4214), and he must make such surveys of county roads and perform such other engineering work as the board of supervisors may direct (Pol. Code, § 4219), from which requirements it is plainly evident that only such persons are deemed by the law eligible to hold that office as are skilled in technical work of a surveyor and that of an engineer. Under said section (4214) it is his duty to "make any survey that may be required by order of court or of the board of supervisors, or upon application of any person; keep a correct and fair record of all surveys made by him, number them in the order made, and preserve a copy of the field notes and calculations of each survey, and indorse thereon its proper number; a copy of the same, and a fair and accurate plat, together with a certificate of survey, must, upon application, be furnished by him to any person, upon payment of the fees allowed by law."

Under the section secondly named (4219) he is required to file in his office all maps and field notes of surveys made by him, and all such maps and field notes "shall thereafter be and remain the property of the county."

Section 4215 of the same Code provides:

"Any person owning or claiming lands which are divided by county lines, and wishing to have the same surveyed, may apply to the surveyor of any county in which any part of such land is situated, and on such application being made the surveyor must make the survey, which is as valid as though the lands were situated entirely within the county."

By section 4216, where the title to land in dispute before any court is divided by a county line, such court may require and direct the surveyor of any county in which any part of the land is situated to make a survey thereof.

Section 4217 makes it the duty of a county surveyor, when required, to aid and assist the surveyor general of the state in making surveys within the county for which he (the county surveyor) has been elected and is acting as such.

Section 4220 provides:

"Each surveyor, immediately after making any survey, except surveys of city or town lots, must make out a copy of the field notes and plat, and transmit the same to the surveyor general, indicating plainly upon the plat at what point of any line any river or stream or county line is touched or crossed. He must communicate to the surveyor general such information concerning surveys made by him, and other matters connected with the duties of his office, as may be required."

Section 4218 requires the county surveyor to "copy, plat, or trace all maps filed for record in the office of the recorder of the county for which he shall be elected, * * * provided, however, that all maps or plats filed by a licensed land surveyor, and such other maps and plats as are filed and are thereby made a record, are exempt from the provisions of this section. The surveyor shall plat, trace, blueprint or otherwise make all county, township, road, district, and all other maps, and all assessors' block-books, for the county of which he is surveyor"

Section 3634 provides that where the county assessor is not provided by the owner with such a description of certain land as is necessary for its assessment according to law (Pol. Code, § 3629), that officer may cite such owner or owners before the superior court of the county in which such land is situated, and if such court, after due investigation, finds "that the land has not been surveyed or divided into subdivisions of six hundred and forty acres, or less, so that each part or parcel may be described by metes and bounds, then the court shall, by order duly entered in open court, direct the county surveyor to make a survey, and define the boundaries and location of said land by parcels or subdivisions not exceeding six hundred and forty acres each, and deliver the same to the county assessor."

In addition to the duties of a county surveyor prescribed and required to be discharged by the foregoing sections of the Political Code, the Legislature at its sessions of 1905 (Stats. 1905, p. 102), 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 411), and 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 514), has charged the county surveyor with other duties equally as important and burdensome as those set forth in said Code sections.

It is thus readily to be perceived that a county surveyor is charged by law with the performance of a multiplicity of duties, in the discharge of which skill or capacity of a superior quality is imperatively required. It is generally true that, when the Legislature has fixed the compensation of a county officer, it is to be presumed that such compensation has thus been allowed in proportion to the duties required of him; that is, that such duties are such in nature and volume as to make the compensation so fixed substantially the reasonable value of the services required by such duties. But that presumption loses its force where, as here, the "compensation" of any county officer has been fixed at a sum so small as to show upon its face that it amounts to no compensation at all, considering that the numerous, onerous, and responsible duties of the county surveyor of counties of said class remain substantially the same as they existed prior to the action of the Legislature of 1925 in adding to section 4236k of the Political Code and the proviso whereby the salary of that officer was reduced from the sum of $2,400 per annum to the sum of $120 per annum. See Code sections and other statutes hereinabove noticed. Indeed, it is practically admitted by the respondent in his answer to the petition herein that the duties of the county surveyor of counties of the seventh class as prescribed by law are now no less numerous and exacting than they were prior to the amendment of section 4236k of the Political Code in 1925. The answer alleges:

"That the board of supervisors of the county of Sacramento does now and has ever since June 3, 1927, employed a competent engineer and other engineering assistants in drawing plans and specifications for the construction of highways, bridges, and other structures built by said Sacramento county; that by reason thereof said Drury Butler, as county surveyor, has not been called upon by the board of supervisors of Sacramento county to do any of the engineering work pertaining thereto."

[7, 8] But we take judicial notice of the fact that the duties prescribed for the county surveyor of counties of the seventh class by the Code sections and other statutes hereinabove considered were not in any respect diminished prior to or contemporaneously with the adding of the amendment to section 4236k of the Political Code, but were allowed to stand as they had stood for many years prior to the enactment of said amendment. It is therefore clearly true that the Legislature in reducing the salary of the county surveyor of Sacramento county to the sum of $120 per annum did not attempt, nor evidently even pretend, to be controlled by the mandate of section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution. The validity of this conclusion is reinforced by the consideration that in every other county in the state the compensation of the surveyor has been allowed to remain substantially as it had always been, the same ranging in amount (save in those counties in which the compensation of that officer has been adjusted upon a fee or per diem basis) from $1,000 to $6,000 per annum, fixed, presumptively, in proportion to the duties required to be performed by the surveyor of each of the counties.

Manifestly, if the salary which the Legislature of 1925, by the amendment of section 4236k, attempted to fix for the surveyor of Sacramento county were to be sustained as a valid legislative enactment, the virtual abolition of that office in counties of the class to which said county has been assigned would inevitably follow, for it would be absurd to suppose that any licensed land surveyor possessing the qualifications of a civil engineer would seek election to that office to which the Legislature had annexed, as a salary, the mere pittance of $120 per annum.

[9, 10] If it was the object of the Legislature (and apparently it was) practically to abolish the office of county surveyor in Sacramento county in adding the proviso in question to section 4236k of the Political Code, the attempt to attain that object was abortive. No proposition could be less subject to controversy than that a public office cannot be abolished in that manner. It would involve an attempt by the Legislature to do by indirection what it is inhibited by the Constitution from doing directly (Coulter v. Pool, 187 Cal. 181, 201 P. 120; Reid v. Smoulter, 128 Pa. 324, 18 A. 445, 5 L. R. A. 517; People ex rel. Burby v. Howland, 155 N. Y. 275, 49 N. E. 775, 41 L. R. A. 838), since it is true that the abolition of any of the county offices enumerated in section 4013 of the Political Code in one county only would involve an act in direct conflict with section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution, which enjoins upon the Legislature the duty of establishing a system of county governments and, further, that such system so established "shall be uniform throughout the state." That provision of the organic law "means one system applicable alike in all its parts and continuously operating equally in all the counties of the state. * * * The Legislature itself must by its own enactment establish in the first instance a system of county government uniform throughout the state, and it necessarily follows that such system, when once established, must, in so far as its uniformity is concerned, be kept intact by the Legislature and must not be impaired by any subsequent legislation authorizing in counties a material difference in the manner of performing functions of government intrusted to them." Coulter v. Pool, supra. That case involved the question of the constitutional validity of an act of the Legislature purporting or attempting to create the office of county engineer in all the counties of the state, but leaving to the board of supervisors of any of the counties the matter of determining whether any such county would adopt the provisions thereof, and if so, upon the appointment of such engineer, the office of county surveyor should be immediately abolished, if the appointee is at the time of such appointment the incumbent of the office of surveyor, or, in case he is not, then such office should be abolished upon the expiration of the term of the person then holding the same. The Supreme Court held that said legislative act was unconstitutional and void, because it would necessarily tend to interfere with that uniformity throughout the state in the system of county governments which is contemplated or required by section 4 of article 11 of the Constitution. Coulter v. Pool is important here for the reason that the opinion clearly expounds the meaning of section 4 of article 11 and shows that the Legislature cannot directly or indirectly (as is the attempt here) abolish in any one county alone any of the county offices which have been created by the Legislature and which are enumerated in section 4013 of the Political Code. Clearly, the Legislature could by direct action abolish the office of county surveyor, or it may change the name of the office to that of county engineer; but such a course in either case would have to apply to all the counties in the state.

[11] The allegation in the answer to the petition that the board of supervisors of the county of Sacramento has not called upon the petitioner to perform certain work in connection with the duties of a surveyor or engineer, but has employed a competent engineer and other engineering assistants to perform such work, is manifestly without legal force. The board of supervisors has no right or authority to transfer the duties of the county surveyor to any other officer or person. It has no right to employ a private person to perform the duties of any county officer. Severance v. Ball, Treasurer (Cal. App.) 268 P. 1068. If the county surveyor of any county is not competent by reason of a want of professional capacity or skill to discharge the duties of his office, there is an appropriate legal method for removing him and selecting for the office a person with the educational qualifications which the law and the very nature of the duties of a surveyor and engineer require in such officer.

[12, 13] The contention of the respondent, as indicated by his answer to the petition here and as urged in his briefs, that the fact that the petitioner voluntarily, or upon his own initiative, sought election to the office of county surveyor of Sacramento county with full knowledge that section 4236k had long prior thereto been so amended as to reduce his salary from the sum of $2,400 to $120 per annum, constitutes indubitable evidence of an agreement and a willingness by him to accept the office and discharge the duties thereof for the salary last named, and that therefore he should be compelled to accept such salary as in full compensation for any services as such surveyor that he might perform, is obviously devoid of any legal foundation for its support. The contention necessarily proceeds upon the erroneous theory that the petitioner holds the office by contract, or, perhaps, having sought election and having been elected to the office of surveyor, knowing that the salary had previously been reduced to $120 per annum, an estoppel arose against any claim he might make to the salary attached to the office prior to the lowering thereof by the Legislature of 1925. But "salaried public offices, created by the Legislature, are not held by contract or grant. The Legislature has full control over them, unless restricted by the Constitution, and may abolish them altogether, or impose upon them new duties or reduce their salaries." Miller v. Kister, 68 Cal. 144, 8 P. 814; Pennie v. Reis, 80 Cal. 266, 269, 22 P. 176, 177; Mansfield v. Chambers, 26 Cal. App. 499, 504, 147 P. 595, 597. The office of county surveyor, as seen, is a creature of the Legislature. Obviously, the doctrine of estoppel, in any of its known or conceivable forms, is not applicable to or permissible in such a situation as is presented here.

[14] The proviso added to section 4236k of the Political Code by the Legislature of 1925 being void for the reasons above explained, it results that the petitioner is entitled to receive as his compensation as county surveyor of Sacramento county the sum of $2,400 per annum, or $200 per month. This is true for the obvious reason that the attempt to amend section 4236k by adding thereto the proviso purporting to reduce the compensation of said surveyor to the sum of $120 per annum was futile, and said proviso was therefore void ab initio. The situation is as though no amendment of said section was made. There is no interdependency between the section as it stood before the attempt was made to amend it and the purported proviso which constitutes the attempted amendment. It will be borne in mind that the Legislature of 1925 did not expressly repeal section 4236k, but merely added the proviso in question. Hence, it is clear that, at the time the Legislature of 1925 sought in vain to amend the section, there was no intention on the part of the lawmaking body to repeal the section as it then read. See 5 Cal. Jur. pp. 645, 646, and cases therein named.

It is not disputed, but inferentially admitted, that the aggregate amount to which the petitioner is entitled is as it is alleged in the petition.

Accordingly, it is hereby ordered that a writ of mandate issue out of this court, addressed to the respondent, directing him to issue and deliver to the petitioner his (respondent's) warrant or warrants on the county treasurer of Sacramento county authorizing said treasurer to pay to the petitioner the aggregate sum or sums constituting the aggregate amount alleged in the petition to be due petitioner as his compensation as county surveyor of said county for the period of time alleged in the petition.

FRAHER v. EISENMANN. (Civ. 6302.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 19, 1928.

As Modified on Denial of Petition for Rehearing, Oct. 22, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 8, 1928.

1. Evidence ⇐589—Jury is privileged to believe plaintiff's testimony and reject that offered by defendant.

In personal injury action, there being conflict between theories of plaintiff and defendant as to cause of injury and existence of negligence, jury was privileged to believe testimony offered by plaintiff, and to reject that offered by defendant.

2. Negligence ⇐136(26)—Contributory negligence is for jury, when depending on circumstances and is question upon which reasonable minds might differ.

When question of contributory negligence of plaintiff depends upon surrounding circumstances and is one on which reasonable minds might differ, it should be left to the jury.

3. Automobiles ⇐234—Insurance carrier was properly joined as defendant, if policy or ordinance pursuant to which policy was issued provided it should inure to benefit of public.

Where policy insuring jitney driver was issued pursuant to city and county ordinance, insurance carrier was properly joined as a party defendant in action for injuries from operation of jitney, provided insurance policy or ordinance provided that it should inure to the benefit of the public.

4. Automobiles ⇐238(1) — Demurrer on ground of misjoinder of insurance carrier held properly overruled, where complaint alleged that policy issued pursuant to ordinance inured to benefit of public.

Where complaint, in action against jitney driver and insurance carrier for injury from operation of jitney, alleged that policy, which was issued pursuant to ordinance, inured to benefit of public, demurrer on ground of misjoinder of insurance carrier was properly overruled.

5. Trial ⇐83(2)—Ordinance pursuant to which insurance policy on jitney bus was issued held properly admitted over objection that it was irrelevant.

In action against jitney bus driver and insurance carrier for injuries from operation of jitney bus, ordinance pursuant to which insurance policy was issued, which was pertinent to allegations of complaint, held properly admitted over general objection that it was irrelevant.

6. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 90—Objection to admission of application for jitney bus permit and insurance policies deemed waived, where motion to strike out was not made.

In action against jitney driver and insurance carrier for injuries from operation of jitney, where admission of application for jitney bus permit and insurance policy was objected to on ground that proper foundation had not been made, and court admitted documents subject to motion to strike out, but such motion was not made, held, that point will be deemed waived.

7. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 1050(1)—Admission of insurance policy ordinance and application for permit held not to have prejudiced jitney bus driver in action for injuries.

In action against jitney bus driver and insurance carrier for injuries from operation of jitney bus, admission of insurance policy ordinance pursuant to which policy was issued and application for jitney bus permit held not to have prejudiced defendant jitney bus driver, on ground that it brought to attention of jury fact that he was insured against loss, since jury had notice that law required driver to procure license and file bond or policy of insurance, and made it penal offense to operate jitney bus without doing so.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Margaret Fraher against Frank Eisenmann and another, wherein nonsuit was granted as to such other defendant. From a judgment for plaintiff, named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Barry J. Colding and Theodore Hale, both of San Francisco, and B. P. Gibbs, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank J. Creede and Thomas W. Slaven, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for personal injuries suffered by reason of being knocked down by an automobile driven by defendant Eisenmann while the plaintiff was crossing Mission street near its intersection with New Montgomery street in the city and county of San Francisco. The California Highway Indemnity Exchange was joined as a defendant by reason of a policy of insurance issued by it to its codefendant under the terms of an ordinance of the city and county. The cause was tried before the court sitting with a jury, and at the close of plaintiff's case a nonsuit was granted to the Indemnity Exchange and the trial was continued as to the defendant Eisenmann, resulting in a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $5,000. This defendant has appealed upon a typewritten record.

The story of the accident, as related by the plaintiff and witnesses called in her behalf, is that at the hour of 8:15 a. m. on January 21, 1925, after alighting from an east-bound Mission street car, at the intersection of Mission with New Montgomery street, and after waiting for the car to pass across the intersection, she started to walk across Mission street from the safety station located near the westerly line of New Montgomery; that as she reached the northerly rail of the northerly set of tracks on Mission street she stopped to allow an automobile to pass her; and that while standing at this point she was suddenly struck down by appellant's automobile, which was following the other at a high rate of speed, the rear end of which swerved or careened towards her from the line of traffic which it was following. There are, as is usual in cases of this kind, some contradictions of this testimony on the part of the appellant, but it would serve no purpose to refer to these, as the jury evidently believed the evidence offered on the part of the respondent.

[1] On this appeal the appellant urges first the ground that there was no evidence of negligence on his part. The theory of respondent is that the appellant was traveling at an excessive rate of speed over an intersection in a closely built-up portion of the city, and that the accident was caused by appellant's circling an obstruction in the street at this intersection at such a high rate of speed as to cause the rear end of his automobile to skid, careen or swerve to its left. There was sufficient evidence to support this theory, and appellant does not argue that negligence could not be predicated upon these facts; but his position is that his own testimony as to the rate of speed at which he was traveling and as to the actions of the respondent at the time of the impact failed to show negligence on his part. It is sufficient to say that the jury was privileged to believe the testimony offered by the respondent and to reject that offered by the appellant.

[2] It is argued that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence per se. Here the argument is based upon the testimony offered by the appellant when taken in the light most favorable to him. But the evidence which the jury believed was that the respondent stopped while crossing the street at an intersection where foot passengers were accustomed to cross, and that while standing still the appellant's machine suddenly, and without warning, swerved or skidded into her. It is sufficient to say that when the question of contributory negligence depends so much upon the surrounding circumstances and is one upon which reasonable minds differ it should be left to the jury. Erdevig v. Market Street R. R. Co. (Cal.) 264 P. 252; Collins v. California Street Cable R. R. Co. (Cal. App.) 267 P. 731.

[3, 4] The appellant complains that the trial court erred in permitting the jury to learn that he was insured against loss by his co-defendant. The insurance carrier was joined as a party defendant on the theory that the policy of insurance inured directly to the public under the rule of Gugliemetti v. Graham, 50 Cal. App. 268, 270, 195 P. 64, and Malachowski v. Varro, 76 Cal. App. 207, 213, 244 P. 936. The policy having been issued pursuant to an ordinance of the city and county, the insurance carrier was properly joined as a party defendant, if the policy itself or the ordinance provided that it should inure to the benefit of the public. See cases just cited, and Milliron v. Dittman, 180 Cal. 443-445, 181 P. 779; Kruger v. California Highway Indemnity Exchange, 201 Cal. 672-678, 258 P. 602. The point was raised upon separate demurrers interposed by the appellant and the insurance carrier. Both demurrers were overruled, and this is now assigned as error. The appellant's demurrer on the ground of the misjoinder of his codefendant was properly overruled, unless it appeared from the face of the complaint that he was prejudiced thereby. Gardner v. Samuels, 116 Cal. 84-90, 47 P. 935, 58 Am. St. Rep. 135; O'Connell v. Rogers, 72 Cal. App. 539-542, 237 P. 775. The argument is that the appellant was prejudiced because the joinder of the insurance carrier brought knowledge to the jury that he was insured as a protection against loss and that this knowledge might have influenced the jury in reaching its verdict against him. The policy was required by a special ordinance of which the jury would be presumed to have notice. Milliron v. Dittman, 180 Cal. 443-446, 181 P. 779. But the demurrers were to be determined upon what appeared upon the face of the complaint, and not upon what might be developed during the trial of the case. As the complaint alleged that this policy inured to the benefit of the public, the case came squarely within the rule of the cases above cited, and the demurrers were properly overruled.

[5, 6] But the appellant insists that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence the ordinance, the policy of insurance, and the appellant's application for a jitney bus permit. The ordinance was pertinent to the allegations of the complaint, which endeavored to fix liability upon the insurance carrier and was properly admitted over the general objection that it was irrelevant. If a separate objection had been made on the part of the appellant, the evidence might have been limited to the defendant insurance carrier; but such objection was not made. The application for a permit and policy of insurance were also a part of plaintiff's case against the insurance carrier. The objections made when they were offered were that the proper foundation had not been laid. The trial court admitted the documents subject to a motion to strike out. But such motion was not made, and the point will be deemed waived. Estate of Wempe, 185 Cal. 557-564, 197 P. 949.

[7] Respondent was unable to prove, in the presentation of her case in chief, that the appellant was actually operating the car in the jitney service at the time of the accident (the policy of insurance covered loss while engaged in that service only), and the trial court, for that reason, granted the insurance carrier a nonsuit. As the carrier has not appealed, the objection to the admission of these documents is urged by the appellant Eisenmann alone. After the nonsuit had been granted, the appellant appeared as a witness in his own behalf. The respondent then proved that, at the time of the accident, he was driving the car in the jitney service within the terms of the ordinance and the policy of insurance. His complaint now is that the admission of these documents brought to the attention of the jury the fact that he was insured against loss, but, as pointed out in the Milliron Case, this was a fact of which the jury had notice; that is to say, the jury had notice that the law required appellant to procure a license and file a bond or policy of insurance, and made it a penal offense to operate a jitney bus without doing so. The jury would not presume that the appellant had committed a crime, and it does not seem reasonable that he could be prejudiced by evidence tending to prove that he had not.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. STERN. (Cr. 1679.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 21, 1928.

1. Arson $\S$ 40—Where much of evidence was consistent with defendant's innocence, duty of determining guilt or innocence of defendant rested with jury.

In prosecution for arson, where much of evidence was consistent with innocence of defendant, duty of judging facts and determining ultimate question of defendant's guilt or innocence rested with jury.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 159(2)—Appellate court is concerned only with sufficiency of evidence to justify verdict.

An appellate court is concerned only with sufficiency of evidence to justify verdict.

3. Arson $\S$ 37(1)—Evidence held sufficient to support conviction for burning insured property.

In prosecution for crime of burning insured property, evidence held sufficient to support conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward Henderson, Judge.

Harry Stern was convicted of burning insured property, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph M. Wapner and Max Lewis, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the crime of burning insured property and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1-3] The first point made by appellant for reversal of the judgment is that the verdict of the jury was not supported by the evidence. Among other facts, many of which at least were not antagonistic to a conclusion that defendant was wholly innocent of wrongdoing, the following may be mentioned as bearing upon the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, to wit: Defendant was the proprietor of a millinery store. Referring to the stock of goods in the store, each of two witnesses for the prosecution testified in effect that immediately after the fire, "practically all of it were saturated with gasoline"; and that although several articles of such stock of goods which gave off the odor of gasoline were produced as exhibits on the trial of the action, "not anywheres near all of it" was present in court. In addition thereto, a cardboard box which was inside a carton "containing scraps of material" was found in the storeroom, which box not only gave off the odor of gasoline, but which "contained a small quantity of gasoline that had not been saturated into the fibers of the box." Defendant stated that he had no enemy against whom suspicion might be directed as to the person who had started the fire. There was but one set of keys to the store, which keys were carried by defendant. "The material that was burned was on the south side of the room around the sewing machine table, and on top of the sewing machine table, and under the table which set just west of the sewing machine. * * * There was fire under the table which set just west"—which table was about six or eight feet from where the sewing machine table was located. Although the business of defendant was "on the mend," at the time the fire occurred, it was "none too good." The stock of goods, furniture, and equipment of the business was of the reasonable value of $3,650.80, while it was all insured for the sum of $5,000. The fire occurred on a Saturday afternoon, about 2½ hours after all the employees in the store had quit work; defendant's departure from the place of business having preceded the fire by approximately 20 or 30 minutes.

While, as hereinbefore indicated, much of the evidence, not herein referred to, was consistent with the innocence of defendant, the duty of judging the facts and determining the ultimate question of the guilt or the innocence of defendant rested with the jury. In that connection, the rule is universal that an appellate court is concerned only with the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict; and while that part of the evidence to which reference has been had was none too strong, nevertheless this court is of the opinion that, from a legal standpoint, it was sufficient; from which it follows that the point made by appellant cannot be sustained.

[4] Prejudicial error is also predicated upon the refusal of the trial court to give to the jury certain instructions requested by defendant. Two of such requested instructions related to the effect of circumstantial evidence; while the third instruction had to do with the weight and importance to be attached by the jury to evidence of the good character of defendant. If it be conceded that each of such instructions respectively correctly stated the law as to the subject which was purportedly covered by such instruction, nevertheless it also satisfactorily appears that the substantial rights of defendant in the premises were fully protected by other instructions which the trial court gave to the jury. In such circumstances, the defendant is in no position to complain. People v. Wolfgang, 192 Cal. 754, 763, 221 P. 907; People v. Champion, 193 Cal. 441, 449, 225 P. 278.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record, it is ordered that the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial be, and they are, affirmed.

In re HILL'S ESTATE. (Civ. 6381.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 24, 1928.

1. Executors and administrators ☞314(3)—Whether estate is "but little indebted" is fact question for court.

Whether an estate of decedent is "but little indebted" is question of fact to be determined by court.

2. Executors and administrators ☞314(3)—Evidence held to support finding that estate was but little indebted.

Evidence held to support finding that estate was but little indebted, where inventory and appraisement showed property of appraised value of $354,287.27, approved claims of $9,646.24, and claim for $750 which had not been allowed; other items alleged to comprise indebtedness not being clearly set out in record.

3. Executors and administrators ☞316—Where court ordered executor to deposit money with county treasurer for paying inheritance tax, amount of which appraiser had estimated, decree of partial distribution will not be reversed because no tax had been paid or ascertained.

Decree directing partial distribution will not be reversed on ground that no inheritance tax had been paid or ascertained, where court ordered executor to deposit certain sums with county treasurer for purpose of paying inheritance tax; inheritance tax appraisers having completed appraisement of property and having estimated tax payable.

4. Executors and administrators ☞315(9)—Decree directing partial distribution to persons not entitled, except under will, will be reversed where additional testimony shows will contest (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1658-1661).

Where, after appeal was taken from decree directing partial distribution to persons who could take only under will additional testimony was taken showing will contest, decree will be reversed, since appellate court stands in place of superior court acting as court of probate, and in exercising probate jurisdiction proceeds on principles of equity, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1661, must be construed with sections 1658-1660.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Lucile Knowland and Hill, deceased. From a decree directing partial distribution, Robert Lewis Hill and another appeal. Reversed, with directions.

H. S. Henion and Snook, Snook & Chase, all of Oakland, for appellants.

E. K. Taylor, of Alameda, for respondents.

BEAUMONT, Justice pro tem. Lucile Knowland Hill died testate December 25, 1926. Among the legatees named in her will were the following: Robert Lewis Hill, her husband; William F. (Russell) Knowland; E.

Harold Dana; and Louise Hoover Dunbar. The only heirs at law of decedent were Robert Lewis Hill and Joseph R. Knowland, a brother. Petitions for partial distribution were filed by E. Harold Dana and Louise Hoover Dunbar, residuary legatees, praying for distribution to each of $15,000. These were resisted by said Robert Lewis Hill and Joseph R. Knowland. Following the hearing on the petitions, the court ordered distribution to each in the sum of $10,000, less $4,000, which latter sum was to be retained from each distributee's share for the payment of inheritance tax. The court further ordered each to give a bond in the sum of $2,500 for the payment of his proportion of the debts due from the estate. William F. Knowland and Robert Lewis Hill have appealed from the decrees. By stipulation the appeals are to be determined on one record.

[1, 2] Appellants urge as a ground for reversal that the evidence did not justify the finding that the estate is but little indebted. The inventory and appraisement show real and personal property of the appraised value of $354,287.27. Claims in the sum of $9,646.24 were allowed and approved. There was another claim for $750 which had not been allowed. Statements are variously made in the briefs of respective parties as to certain other alleged indebtedness, but the items alleged to comprise such indebtedness are not clearly set out in the record. Whether an estate is "but little indebted" is a question of fact to be determined by the court (Estate of Chesney, 1 Cal. App. 30, 81 P. 679), and we are of the opinion that the evidence fully supports this finding.

[3] Another ground upon which appellants seek reversal of the decree is that no inheritance tax had been paid or ascertained at the time the order was made. In their brief they set forth certain testimony which shows that the inheritance tax appraiser had completed appraisement of the property of the estate and had estimated the tax payable by Louise H. Dunbar at $3,940.50, and by E. Harold Dana at $3,603.69. The court ordered the executor to retain from each distributive share the sum of $4,000, and to deposit it with the county treasurer for the purpose of paying the inheritance tax. This "is sufficient to satisfy the court," as was said in Estate of Ross, 187 Cal. 467, 202 P. 646, "that the taxes will be fully paid by the time the order is executed."

[4] After the appeal had been perfected, there was filed in this court on behalf of appellant Knowland an application for an order allowing additional testimony to be taken. It was the purpose of appellant to show that subsequent to the entering of the order for partial distribution actions had been begun to revoke the probate of the will. One such contest was by Robert Lewis Hill and one by Joseph R. Knowland. At the hearing before this court the parties stipulated as to the fact of the contests; that a copy of the contest pleadings might be considered by the court, these showing that the proceedings to revoke the probate of the will and to declare the same invalid had been instituted in the superior court of Alameda county, the court from which the appeals were taken, within the statutory time. It was represented to this court that the contest of Joseph R. Knowland was, at the time of the hearing, listed on the trial calendar of the said superior court. In view of this additional testimony and the provisions of section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure as added by St. 1927, p. 583, we find contrary to the trial court as to the existence of a contest of the will. Instead of the finding (No. 8) that there was no contest, it is ordered that the following be substituted, to wit: That Robert Lewis Hill, an heir at law of decedent, has filed an action contesting the validity of the will; that Joseph R. Knowland, an heir at law of decedent, has filed an action contesting the validity of the will.

This case, considered in the light of the present findings, is that partial distribution has been ordered while a contest of the will is pending; that the persons who are seeking to revoke the probate of the will are the heirs at law; that the distributees are not heirs at law and will not take anything of the estate of decedent unless the will is upheld.

Counsel for respondent cites as authority for upholding the judgments the decisions in Estate of Pritchett, 51 Cal. 568, and Id., 52 Cal. 94. In that estate no contest was filed, there being only a possibility of such contest, as was the situation in the present matter when it was before the trial court.

Respondents also cite Estate of Hinkel, 176 Cal. 563, 169 P. 70, as a proceeding wherein a contest was actually pending at the time of partial distribution. We are of the opinion that that case is not controlling here. It holds substantially that the fact the will was still open to contest did not preclude partial distribution where other heirs had made an agreement for distribution under which a sufficient amount was to be retained by one heir to pay the claim of contestant should he succeed. The court therein said that "the fact that a will is still open to contest at the suit of a minor or a nonresident does not necessarily [italics ours] preclude a distribution," and cites Estate of Pritchett, supra.

Hantz v. Sealy, 6 Bin. (Pa.) 405, was an action by a widow against the executor of her husband's will to recover the amount of personal estate bequeathed to her by the will. It was held that the executor was not liable for a legacy where the probate of will is suspended by appeal. The court used the following language:

"It was not the duty of the defendant to pay anything, which depended on the will, until it was decided whether the will existed."

The petition for distribution here was filed under section 1658 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that, after the lapse of four months from the issuance of letters testamentary or of administration, any heir, devisee, or legatee may present his petition to the court for the legacy or share of the estate to which he is entitled, or any portion thereof, to be given to him upon his giving bonds. Sections 1659 and 1660 provide for the giving of notices to all persons interested in the estate and that they may appear and resist the application. Section 1661 must be construed with the foregoing sections. The court is not, therefore, limited to a consideration of whether it appears that the estate "is but little indebted, and that the share of the party applying may be allowed to him without loss to the creditors of the estate" (section 1661, Code Civ. Proc.), but shall also consider whether the person applying is entitled to the share claimed.

In Estate of Painter, 115 Cal. 635, 639, 640, 47 P. 700, 701, an appeal from an order denying partial distribution, the court said:

"It is also obvious that the court may be called upon to determine other questions than those pertaining to the interests of creditors; as, for instance, whether the applicant is entitled [italics ours] to a share of the estate, and if so, what share is necessarily involved."

In Wm. Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359, 48 P. 323, it was said that "the 'distribution' of an estate includes the determination of the persons who by law are entitled thereto. * * *" Although that case involved a final distribution, the same considerations apply to a distribution under sections 1658, 1660, and 1661, for before the court can make an order for partial distribution, it is necessary to know whether the petitioner is entitled to any part of the estate. Estate of Ross, 187 Cal. 454, 466, 202 P. 641.

In considering the question presented by the stipulated testimony and the new finding, the appellate court stands in the place of the superior court acting as a court of probate. In the exercise of probate jurisdiction the court proceeds upon principles of equity. Estate of Glenn, 153 Cal. 77, 94 P. 230; Estate of Moore, 96 Cal. 522, 31 P. 584. By withholding the partial distribution herein sought, no ultimate harm is likely to ensue. If distribution is ordered, great loss may result if the will is declared invalid. In such event, if the distributees do not voluntarily return to the estate the shares received, actions will be necessitated. If there is financial inability on the part of either distributee to pay any judgment that might be obtained against him, pecuniary loss will be suffered by the heirs. It is, of course, not only the policy of our laws to do ultimate justice, but to do it expeditiously, with as little cost to the parties as is reasonably possible and to avoid unnecessary litigation.

A reading of the decisions of our state courts leads us to the conclusion that those decisions do not attempt to construe the statutes providing for distribution of estates by an inflexible rule, but rather that each case should be viewed in the light of its own particular facts. As was said by Mr. Justice Temple in the Estate of Painter, supra:

"There are all sorts and conditions of estates. Probably in not one in a hundred would the court be justified in ordering a distribution within four months after the issuance of letters. Yet there are estates in which it would be quite obvious that there would be no danger in so doing."

Previously, in the same opinion he had remarked that—

"It is evident that persons interested in the estate have very little protection in this proceeding, except in the discretion of the probate judge; and he should, therefore, proceed with the greatest caution."

The petitioners (respondents) based their prayer for distribution solely upon the terms of the will. They will take nothing if the will is invalid. The validity of the will has been attacked. We are of the opinion that petitioners then should not, as a matter of right, receive anything until at least one of the contests is determined and the will upheld.

By reason of the conclusion herein reached, it is not necessary to consider the other points urged by appellant.

The orders are reversed, with the direction to the lower court to suspend distribution in accordance with the expressions herein contained.

LOS ANGELES FIRST NAT. TRUST & SAVINGS BANK v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (Civ. 6062.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 20, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 19, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 19, 1928.

1. Wills ⇨221—Superior court acquired jurisdiction of subject-matter on filing of petition for revocation of probate.

The superior court acquired jurisdiction of subject-matter of petition for revocation of will and codicil upon the filing of the petition.

2. Wills ⇨270—Jurisdiction of parties is not acquired in absence of citation or by issuance of void one.

In absence of any citation, or by the issuance of a void one, court does not acquire jurisdiction of parties or power to try issues presented by petition for revocation of probate.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨441—Omission to cite executor in representative capacity does not invalidate citation.

A mere omission to cite an executor in his representative capacity does not invalidate a citation if from its entirety it appears that it was issued to the proper party as such executor.

4. Wills ⇨270—Citation does not give jurisdiction of person not named therein (Code Civ. Proc. § 1328).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1328, citation does not give jurisdiction of person who was not named therein.

5. Process ⇨45—Court properly permitted issuance of alias citation, where original citation was withheld during protracted but conscientious endeavor to obtain compromise (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1711, 1328).

Where object of contestant, filing petition for revocation of will and codicil, in withholding service of citation beyond period allowed under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1711, 1328, arose from protracted but conscientious and constant endeavor to obtain compromise and avoid litigation, superior court in the exercise of its discretion properly viewed such conduct as excusable and permitted the issuance of alias citation.

Original application for a writ of prohibition by the Los Angeles First National Trust & Savings Bank, as executor of the estate of Annvernette M. Crombie, deceased, against the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. Writ denied.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court: WASTE, C. J., and SHENK, J., voting for a hearing.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, and E. H. Conley, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Warren Lee Pierson, Newby & Newby, and Dee Holder, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The last will and testament, together with a codicil thereto, of Annvernette M. Crombie, deceased, was admitted to probate by the superior court of Los Angeles county on February 18, 1926, Donald J. Frick and others being named therein as beneficiaries, and the petitioner in this proceeding being nominated and appointed executor. On September 8, 1926, one Linda Hill Burrell filed a petition for revocation of the will and codicil, which was set for hearing October 15, 1926, was continued to November 2, 1926, and thereafter permitted to go off calendar. No citation was issued thereon. On November 17, 1926, an amended petition for revocation of the will and codicil was filed, which was set for hearing on December 7, 1926, continued from time to time to February 4, 1927, and also went off calendar; hearing on the amended petition was reset for hearing on August 26, 1927, and again was removed from the calendar. On the date of the filing of the amended petition a citation issued, directed to all beneficiaries other than Frick, and to the bank, petitioner herein, but neither Frick nor the bank as executor was named therein. Neither the executor nor any of the beneficiaries had legal notice of the fact that a citation had been issued. On February 21, 1928, the executor appeared specially by formal notice of motion, based upon affidavits reciting, among others, the foregoing facts, praying that the petition for revocation of probate be dismissed, upon the grounds that no citation had been issued or served, and that the contestant had not prosecuted her proceeding with diligence. Thereafter and prior to the hearing of said motion, the contestant returned and filed the citation, without service, together with a motion for the issuance of an alias citation, "upon the ground that the citation heretofore issued herein was, through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect of the said Linda Lee Burrell's counsel not served upon the said executor." Both motions were presented together, whereupon the court denied the motion for dismissal of the contest, and directed that an alias citation issue. The executor institutes this proceeding, praying a writ of prohibition restraining all further proceedings under the petition for revocation, insisting that an alias citation is not allowable upon the facts presented below, and that the superior court is without jurisdiction in the premises. It is contended by respondent that the superior court still retains jurisdiction, and that petitioner has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law by appeal, after trial.

[1-4] Jurisdiction of the subject-matter was acquired upon the filing of the petition for revocation of probate. Estate of Simmons, 168 Cal. 390, 143 P. 697. However, in the absence of any citation, or by the issuance of a void one, the court would not have acquired jurisdiction of the parties or power to try the issues presented by said petition. Estate of Hite, 155 Cal. 390, 101 P. 8; Estate of Maescher, 78 Cal. App. 189, 248 P. 537. A mere omission to cite an executor in his representative capacity does not invalidate a citation, if from its entirety it appears that it was issued to the proper party as such executor. Matter of Ricks, 160 Cal. 467, 117 P. 539. We think the citation was sufficient in this respect, though it did not give jurisdiction of Donald J. Frick, who was not named therein. Code Civ. Proc. § 1328. But from the observations following, it becomes unnecessary to consider at length the defects in the original citation.

It appears without contradiction that the contestant was a resident of the state of New York, and that other litigation was there pending between her and parties by the name of Newton, an amicable settlement of which would also result in a termination of the controversy in California. Counsel on both coasts were striving for an adjustment of Mrs. Burrell's claims, and were in constant correspondence. Much time and money were expended in that behalf, and in interviewing witnesses and assembling evidence in preparation for a possible trial of the issues presented by the litigation in this state. In July, 1927, Mrs. Burrell came to California, and assisted in the negotiations and preparation for trial, and it is alleged that she and her counsel were at all times, until petitioner moved to dismiss her petition, endeavoring to accomplish a favorable adjustment of the various controversies. It is apparent from the pleadings and affidavits that petitioner was aware of the existence of other wills, and was constantly advised, by letter and otherwise, of the filing of the petition for revocation, and of all steps which were being taken both here and in the East toward a settlement of the contestant's claims. She was offered $2,000, which she declined to accept. She avers that citation was not issued for many months, and when issued was not served, lest it should jeopardize a desired compromise.

It is the petitioner's contention that although the original citation was issued within one year after the will was probated, since it was not served, an alias citation could not be issued and served within the time specified by the statutes and decisions, if, indeed, there be any authority for the issuance of a citation in any event. Sections 1711 and 1328 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and early decisions of the Supreme Court, wherein the facts were not analogous to those here presented, are cited to this proposition. Said sections respectively provide as follows:

"When no other time is specially prescribed in this title, citations must be served at least five days before the return day thereof."

"Upon filing the petition, and within one year after such probate, a citation must be issued to the executor of the will, * * * and to all the legatees and devisees mentioned in the will, and heirs residing in the state, * * * to show cause why the probate of the will should not be revoked."

In San Francisco Protestant Orphan Asylum v. Superior Court, 116 Cal. 443, 48 P. 379, it was argued that after the expiration of one year from the date of probate the court was without jurisdiction to issue an alias citation to a party whose name had through oversight or inadvertence been omitted from the original. It was held that the court had a right to have him brought in within a year, both under equitable principles and practice, and that it did not lose jurisdiction through want of diligence in that respect. In Estate of Logan, 171 Cal. 357, 153 P. 388, our Supreme Court said:

"The jurisdiction of the court to entertain a proceeding for the revocation of the will does not depend upon the issuance and service of a citation within a year after the probate of the will. Jurisdiction of the court attaches on the filing of the petition inaugurating the contest.

The office of the citation is only that of a summons—to give the court jurisdiction of the parties who would be affected by its revocation. It is not essential to the jurisdiction of the court that the citation be issued and served within a year. The only penalty for failure to have it issued within that time is that the court may dismiss the contest. And even where there has been a failure to have it issued within the year, the court may nevertheless relieve the contestant for his failure to do so and thereupon order a citation issued and served. Estate of Simmons, 168 Cal. 390, 143 P. 697. It is to be observed, further, that though it is required that the citation be issued within a year, there is no provision of the law prescribing when it shall be served. As the court may relieve for failure entirely to have a citation issued and served within the year, it certainly can relieve from a failure to serve where it is at least issued within a year."

In Estate of Simmons, cited supra, it appeared that the contest had been filed eight months after the date of probate of a will and codicil, and no citation issued until thirteen days after the expiration of the year. A notice of motion to dismiss the contest was filed, whereupon the contestant interposed a counter motion for relief upon the ground of excusable neglect of herself and her counsel. The two motions were heard at the same time, and, the motion for dismissal being granted, the contestant appealed. In distinguishing earlier decisions and reversing the order of dismissal, the rules were announced in the following language:

"While the issuance of citation within the year is requisite to the maintenance of the contest, and a failure to have it thus issued would, in the absence of an appearance by adverse parties, justify the dismissal of the contest (Estate of Hite, 155 Cal. 390, 101 P. 8; Estate of Ricks, 160 Cal. 467, 117 P. 539), the proceeding is none the less commenced by the filing of the petition, and the court's jurisdiction of the contest attaches upon such filing. Bacigalupo v. Superior Court, 108 Cal. 92, 40 P. 1055, relied on by respondent, merely holds that, where the petition for revocation had been dismissed, the court was without jurisdiction, after the expiration of a year from probate, to revive the lapsed petition and order a citation issued. While section 1328 requires that the citation shall be issued within the year, there is no provision, as there now is in the case of a summons (Code Civ. Proc. § 581a), prohibiting further prosecution of the proceeding, and requiring a dismissal, for failure to comply with the requirement.

"In view of these considerations, we think it must be held that the court had power, under section 473, to relieve a contestant, whose petition for revocation, duly filed, has not been dismissed, from the failure to have citation issued and served within the year. The proceeding (i. e., the contest) has been instituted, and jurisdiction over it has attached. The 'default' sought to be excused is a failure to take, within time, one of the requisite steps in the prosecution of the proceeding thus pending.

The analogies to be drawn from the decided cases point to the conclusion that, in such a case, the granting of relief is permissible under section 473. As we have heretofore had occasion to point out, this court has given a very liberal interpretation to the provisions of this section."

To the same effect are Davis v. Superior Court, 35 Cal. App. 473, 170 P. 437, and Estate of Maescher, 78 Cal. App. 189, 248 P. 537.

[5] While in the instant case there may have existed but slight evidences of mistake or inadvertence, the trial court may well have concluded that all of the conditions and circumstances surrounding the contestant constituted excusable neglect. It is not denied that her only object in withholding service of the citation arose from a protracted but conscientious, constant, and expensive endeavor to obtain a compromise and to avoid litigation. We cannot say as a matter of law that such conduct was inexcusable rather than logical and judicious. This course of conduct upon her part being the sole basis of the present proceeding, we are constrained to uphold the ruling of the superior court in liberally exercising its discretionary powers with a view to bringing about a determination of the issues upon their merits. Haviland v. Southern Cal. Edison Co., 172 Cal. 601, 158 P. 328.

The writ of prohibition is denied.

PEOPLE v. RODGERS. (Cr. 1051.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 25, 1928.

1. Criminal law § 511(2)—Evidence sustained conviction of burglary as against contention there was no evidence connecting defendant with crime except unsupported testimony of accomplice (Pen. Code, § 460, subd. 2; § 1111).

In prosecution for burglary under Pen. Code, § 460, subd. 2, evidence held sufficient to support conviction, as against contention that there was no evidence tending to connect accused with commission of crime except uncorroborated testimony of accomplice, which section 1111 requires must be corroborated.

2. Criminal law § 511(2)—Corroborating evidence is sufficient if it tends to connect defendant with offense, although standing by itself it is entitled to little consideration (Pen. Code, § 1111).

Corroborating evidence is sufficient under Pen. Code, § 1111, if it of itself tends to connect defendant with commission of offense, although it is slight and entitled, when standing by itself, to but little consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

James Rodgers was convicted of burglary in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

H. K. Landram, of Merced, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was convicted in the superior court of Merced county of the crime of burglary of the second degree. Pen. Code, § 460, subd. 2. The appeals here presented by him are from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The only point urged by the defendant for a reversal is that the verdict is not supported by any evidence introduced by the people, in that there is no evidence tending to connect him with the commission of the crime except the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice.

The crime charged in the information was committed "on or about" Saturday, the 21st day of April, 1928, in the town of Dos Palos, in Merced county, at some time between, approximately, the hour of 8 p. m. of the day named and the early morning of the following day, which, of course, was Sunday. The building entered was occupied by a general merchandise store of which one E. T. Stewart was the owner.

It appears from the testimony of said Stewart that, either on Saturday, the 21st of April, or the preceding day (Friday), and prior to the usual time for closing the store for the day, the defendant, accompanied by a boy of the age of 15 years, as the latter testified was his age, and who gave his name as William Martin, entered the Stewart store, looked about for a brief time, then made a small purchase of candy, and thereupon left the store. On the evening of the 21st of April, near the hour of 8 o'clock, Stewart, after taking the money which had accumulated in the till from the day's sales, transferred it to his safe, locked and barred the doors and windows of the store, and went to his home. Between half past 6 and 7 the following morning (Sunday), Stewart returned to the store, and, before entering it, noticed that one of the panes of glass in the front door had been removed. He stepped into the store, and upon an investigation discovered that a miscellaneous quantity of merchandise (shoes, cigarettes, watches, pocketknives, postage stamps, gloves, and also some pennies which he had left in the till) had been stolen and taken from the store. The witness found on the outside of the store near the back window one of a pair of gloves which had been taken with the other articles mentioned. Later, the witness testified, the mate to the glove was delivered to him. Immediately after discovering that his store had been robbed, Stewart telephoned to John Campbell, the constable of the township, and informed him of the commission of the crime. Campbell immediately proceeded to make an investigation, and finally discovered the goods underneath a warehouse in or near a corral in Dos Palos. Stewart identified the goods so found as being those that had been taken from his store on the occasion referred to. Stewart further testified that after the discovery of the stolen property and the arrest of the defendant and Martin, Constable Campbell brought the latter into the presence of the witness. Stewart stated that he asked the two men to state the truth regarding the charge, and that if they were the parties who had entered his store to say so, or words to that effect; that either the defendant or Martin (it does not appear which) asked Stewart what charge would be preferred against them, to which Stewart replied that he did not know. Stewart testified that neither defendant nor Martin would admit having committed the crime. He did not remember whether the defendant expressly denied connection with the offense. His best recollection was that the defendant would neither "admit nor confirm" the charge against him, but that "they wanted me to say just what I would do, what charge I would place, and I would not tell them what charge I would place until they came clean and tell the whole story first."

William Martin, the young man spoken of above as having been seen with the defendant previously to the commission of the crime, testified that he and the defendant committed the act. He said that on the night of April 21st, after the store had been closed (the hour not given by the witness), he and Rodgers went to the store and removed the pane of glass from the front door and thus effected an entrance; that they picked up some grass and wiped the window for the purpose of obliterating the finger prints; that the first thing they did was to look for and secure a pair of gloves to be used for the purpose of preventing the imprint of their fingers upon any article; that they took two pairs of gloves; that they gathered the articles above mentioned, left the store by the back way, and started to leave the town; that after going a short distance from the town they observed an automobile parked on the road; that they went to the automobile and undertook to start it, but failed; that while there they dropped a pair of gloves; that they then returned to Dos Palos and went to a warehouse and secreted the goods thereunder; that they thereafter went to Los Banos, a town a short distance from Dos Palos, remained there "half an hour or an hour or so," and then again went to Dos Palos. The witness did not testify at what time he returned to Dos Palos from Los Banos, but did state that they loitered about a corral near which the warehouse where they had secreted the goods was located; this warehouse being, as stated, in Dos Palos. Asked why they returned to Dos Palos at that time, Martin stated that "we came back to get the stuff." It was while they were in the corral that they were arrested by Campbell, the constable. The witness stated that he and Rodgers were together at all of the times mentioned by him in his testimony.

Constable Campbell testified that, immediately upon being apprised of the burglary, he went to the store and made an investigation of the situation; that he called the sheriff's office and gave information there of the commission of the crime; and that a Mr. Morse of that office went over to the store with the equipments for taking any finger prints which might be found on any of the articles or about the windows, doors, or furniture of the establishment; that they did not find any finger prints on any of the articles inside the store or the windows, but "we did find a pair of gloves that the party that went into the store had used. One of the gloves was just outside of the window, about halfway back from the building, from the front part of the store; that there is a little office there, and one of these gloves was found inside the office, and the other one just outside the window." He stated that the gloves just referred to were light-colored buckskin and resembled the pair of gloves that were introduced in evidence as one of the pair that had been taken from the store. He further stated that a mark on the back of one of the gloves appeared to have been made by the use of matches. "We checked up on the stuff that was missing," proceeded the constable, "and looking for the finger prints on everything around the store, which we did not find, and then it was reported to us that Nicoletti's car had been taken out of the yard, some one was trying to get away with it, and I went over to investigate that, and we found a pair of gloves in the car." The witness was shown a pair of gloves by the district attorney, and he identified them as being the pair that he found in the car. He further testified that, on several occasions about three or four days before the burglary, he saw the defendant and young Martin together walking about Dos Palos; that after the burglary he saw them on the evening of the 25th of April; that they were then in a cattle corral at South Dos Palos; that the corral was about 150 or 200 feet west of the warehouse underneath which the stolen goods were secreted. It was at this place that the defendant and young Martin were placed under arrest and confined in the county jail.

The witness Buchanan, who resides about a mile outside of Dos Palos, stated that on the 21st day of April he saw the defendant and Martin going into Dos Palos in a machine, and that he saw them get out of the car; that he also saw them together the next morning.

V. Guidi stated that he saw the defendant and Martin in South Dos Palos during the daytime of April 21st, and that the next day—the day following that upon which the burglary was committed—he saw the two together in Los Banos.

W. T. White, sheriff of Merced county, testified that while the defendant was confined in the county jail he (the sheriff) received information that "a couple of men in jail were trying to make their escape by sawing out, and we conducted a search of the building, searched everything, and found some articles that should not have been there. * * * They consisted of a file, a pair of pliers, and a pocketknife." That they had evidently been used on the bars of one of the cells; that he called some of the prisoners in and questioned them about the matter; and that the defendant, while this investigation was going on, called the sheriff and "said he wanted to see me, and I went over there, and he said: 'Don't blame these fellows for anything that is done, I brought these things (referring to the file, pliers, etc.) down from upstairs myself.'"

The foregoing statement involves, in substance, a recital of all the important facts and circumstances brought out at the trial.

If there was no testimony corroborating that of the accomplice, Martin, to the effect that he entered the store and abstracted therefrom the goods above mentioned, it is very clear that there would be no legal support to the verdict. But the identification by Stewart of the gloves, which the accomplice stated were among the articles taken from the store by him and the defendant and left by them in the car which Martin said he and the defendant undertook to start, certainly tends to support and corroborate the testimony of Martin that he himself did participate in the commission of the crime. Indeed, the finding of the other articles under the warehouse where Martin testified that he and the defendant secreted them is also a circumstance corroborative of the confession of the accomplice of his own participation in the commission of the crime. This being so, Martin's testimony that the defendant was also connected with the commission of the offense seems to us to be corroborated by the following facts and circumstances brought out by testimony other than that of the accomplice: (1) That on every occasion when the defendant was seen in Dos Palos and Los Banos he was in the company of Martin, the accomplice. (2) That in the daytime of either the 20th or the 21st of April, 1928, the defendant and the accomplice, in the company of each other, went into the store which was burglarized, and, after looking about the store for a brief time, purchased a small amount of candy. (3) That they were seen getting in an automobile when first they made their appearance in Dos Palos. (4) That the day after the crime was committed, they were seen together loitering about a corral, located at a point between 150 and 200 feet from the warehouse underneath which Martin testified that he and the defendant secreted the stolen property and where it was found by the constable and seen and taken to the store by Stewart. (5) The fact that he did not deny that he took part in the commission of the crime, when interviewed by Stewart in the presence of Constable Campbell and when advised by Stewart that hope for lenient consideration in the matter of punishment for the offense could rest only on their confession of guilt, if they were guilty, to which suggestion the only reply offered by either (whether one or both does not appear, yet the suggestion was made to both in the presence of each other) being in an inquiry as to the nature of the charge which would probably be laid against them. (6) The circumstance referred to by Sheriff White of the attempted jail break, and the defendant's admission that he took into the jail the implements with which an attempt was made to break open the jail doors, and the further statement by the defendant to the sheriff that he was alone responsible for "anything that was done," and that he should not "blame these fellows (referring to the prisoners that the sheriff was questioning regarding the attempted break) for anything that is done."

It is also to be considered that the accomplice in this case was a mere boy of about the age of 15 years, and the jury could reasonably conclude, in considering that fact with the other circumstances to which we have just referred, that the boy would probably not have attempted to commit such a crime without the aid of some one, and that person the defendant, with whom it was shown he was the constant associate and companion all the period of time that they were in the neighborhood of Dos Palos. Of course, it is to be conceded that the circumstances just narrated are not sufficient to establish the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, and it is not necessary that they should be. And it is to be conceded that each circumstance, taken alone, would be entitled to but little consideration; but, when all are considered together, it seems to us that there can be no doubt but that the result is that they sufficiently meet the requirement of section 1111 of the Penal Code as to the quantum and quality of the evidence necessary to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice in order that a conviction of the accused may legally be had.

[2] Explaining the meaning, intention, and scope, of said section, the Supreme Court, in People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 480, 482, 24 P. 32, after declaring that the corroborative evidence in that case was not strong, said that—

"Although more is required by way of corroboration than to raise a mere suspicion (see People v. Thompson, 50 Cal. 480), yet the corroborating evidence is sufficient if it, of itself, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, although it is slight, and entitled, when standing by itself, to but little consideration. (People v. Melvane, 39 Cal. 616; People v. Clough, 73 Cal. 351 [15 P. 5].)"

The McLean Case, on the question of the quantum of proof necessary to meet the requirement of section 1111 of the Penal Code as to the corroboration of an accomplice, has been cited in and approved by many subsequent cases of the Supreme and appellate courts of this state, many of which cases are of very recent date.

We think the foregoing review of the situation in this case as it is made by the evidence plainly shows that the accused was legally convicted.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. DAVIS. (Cr. 1027.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 28, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 27, 1928.

1. Jury $\S$ 33(2)—Separate consecutive trials before same jury of issues of guilt and insanity held not to deny defendant's right to impartial jury (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1016, and section 1026, added by St. 1927, p. 1149).

Trial of defendant on issues raised by plea of not guilty on which verdict was returned, immediately followed by trial before same jury of issue raised by plea of insanity, pursuant to Pen. Code, $\S$ 1016, and section 1026, added by St. 1927, p. 1149, held not to deny right of defendant to trial by jury.

2. Jury $\S$ 131(1)—Refusal to permit examination of jury after their return of conviction and before trial of issue of insanity held proper (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1016, and section 1026, added by St. 1927, p. 1149).

In prosecution for murder, in which issues involving plea of not guilty were first tried and issues on plea of insanity were tried subsequently before same jury under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1016, and section 1026, added by St. 1927, p. 1149, refusal of court to permit examination of jurors after the return of verdict of guilty and before trial of issue of insanity held proper, since examination should have been made during selection of jury at beginning of trial.

3. Jury $\S$ 95—Jury having convicted defendant on trial of issue of guilt was not thereby disqualified from trying insanity issue (Pen. Code $\S$ 1016, and section 1026, added by St. 1927, p. 1149).

Jury having found defendant guilty of second degree murder on trial of issues under plea of not guilty was not thereby disqualified from trying him on issue of insanity under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1016, and section 1026, added by St. 1927, p. 1149.

4. Homicide $\S$ 339—In murder prosecution, exclusion of evidence of insanity held not prejudicial, where insanity was separately tried and conviction was for second degree murder only (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1016, and section 1026, added by St. 1927, p. 1149).

In prosecution for murder in which issues of guilt and insanity were separately tried under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1016, and section 1026, added by St. 1927, p. 1149, refusal of court, on trial under plea of not guilty, to permit evidence of insanity rendering defendant incapable of forming specific intent, if error, held not prejudicial, where defendant was convicted of second degree murder only.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 823(7)—Instruction that defendant was conclusively presumed sane held not prejudicial, in view of instructions on separate trial of issue of insanity (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1016, and section 1026, added by St. 1927, p. 1149).

In prosecution for murder in which issues of guilt and insanity were separately tried under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1016, and section 1026, added by St. 1927, p. 1149, instruction given on trial under the general plea of not guilty, that defendant was conclusively presumed to have been sane, held not prejudicial, where jury was fully instructed on question of insanity on separate trial of that issue.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Winfred Davis was convicted of second degree murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

H. R. McNoble, of Stockton, and Ray T. Coughlin, of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. [1] The defendant was charged with the crime of murder. He interposed a general plea of not guilty and a special plea of not guilty by reason of insanity. He was first tried on the issues raised by his plea of not guilty and the jury found him guilty of murder of the second degree. Immediately after the rendition of this verdict the issue raised by his special plea was tried before the same jury and a verdict was returned finding that he "was sane at the time that he is alleged to have committed the unlawful act, as alleged in the indictment herein." This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying a new trial. The most important contention of the appellant is that section 1016 and section 1026 (added by St. 1927, p. 1149) of the Penal Code are unconstitutional. The validity of the provisions of sections 1016 and 1026 which relate to the trial of a defendant who interposes the single plea of not guilty by reason of insanity were upheld in People v. Hickman (Cal. Sup.) 268 P. 909, where the constitutional right of trial by jury is discussed at considerable length. In so far as applicable to the facts of this case, those sections read as follows:

"1016. There are five kinds of pleas to an indictment or information: 1. Guilty. 2. Not guilty. * * * 5. Not guilty by reason of insanity."

"1026. When a defendant pleads not guilty by reason of insanity, and also joins with it another plea or pleas, he shall first be tried as if he had entered such other plea or pleas only, and in such trial he shall be conclusively presumed to have been sane at the time the offense is alleged to have been committed. If the jury shall find the defendant guilty, * * * then the question whether the defendant was sane or insane at the time the offense was committed shall be promptly tried, either before the same jury or before a new jury, in the discretion of the court. In such trial the jury shall return a verdict either that the defendant was sane at the time the offense was committed or that he was insane at the time the offense was committed. If the verdict or finding be that the defendant was sane at the time the offense was committed, the court shall sentence the defendant as provided by law. If the verdict or finding be that the defendant was insane at the time the offense was committed, the court unless it shall appear to the court that the defendant has fully recovered his sanity shall direct that the defendant be confined in the state hospital for the criminal insane, or if there be no such state hospital, then that he be confined in some other state hospital for the insane."

The trial court strictly followed the procedure prescribed by the sections quoted. Since the issues raised by the general and special pleas were tried before a single jury, it is unnecessary to consider the validity of the provision authorizing the trial of the question of insanity "before a new jury, in the discretion of the court." In Bennett v. State, 57 Wis. 69, 14 N. W. 912, 46 Am. Rep. 26, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin upheld the validity of a statute requiring that a defendant specially plead insanity, when relied on as a defense; that the issue on the special plea shall be first tried; that if the verdict of the jury is that the defendant was sane at the time of the commission of the offense, then his trial upon the plea of not guilty shall at once proceed before the same jury; and that the finding of the jury on the special plea shall be final and conclusive. The court said:

"Section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution declares that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall, among other things, 'have the right to a speedy public trial by an impartial jury.' * * * There is no constitutional objection to the statute which requires the accused to plead insanity at the time of the commission of the offense charged, as a separate defense to the information, together with the plea of not guilty. The only other objection made to the act is that it requires the jury to dispose of this plea by a verdict thereon before the trial shall proceed upon the plea of not guilty. This, we think, is a matter which relates merely to the form of a jury trial, and not to the substance. * * * It may be said * * * that the defendant cannot be required, against his consent, to make a special issue upon that fact [insanity], and proceed to try it separately, and be concluded by the verdict thereon when he is tried on the plea of not guilty; that if he can be compelled to be tried upon such issue separately, he may be compelled to plead separately, in all indictments or informations for murder or homicide, that the killing was in self-defense, or that it happened by misadventure or accident, and thus require the accused, in every case of homicide where he did not deny the killing, to plead specially his defense. Even if the support of this statute goes to that extent, we do not see how this takes away the defendant's right to a jury trial. Such a statute would simply regulate the pleadings and mode of procedure, and not go to the substance of a trial by jury. All the issues would still be tried by a jury, in the same way they are now tried. * * * It is clear, if the legislature have the power to compel the defendant to plead insanity as a defense, or waive it, then it has the power to prescribe the manner of disposing of that issue on the trial so long as it leaves the accused a trial by jury upon such issue."

See, also, Hempton v. State, 111 Wis. 127, 86 N. W. 596; Schissler v. State, 122 Wis. 365, 99 N. W. 593; Oborn v. State, 143 Wis. 349, 126 N. W. 737, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966.

The reasoning of the Wisconsin court appears to be sound. No decisions other than those of that court, relating to separate trials of the issues in criminal cases, have been discovered, but in some of the other states the defense of insanity is waived by a defendant by his failure to specially plead it, and if he pleads insanity the jury must specially find thereon. Baker v. State, 209 Ala. 142, 95 So. 467; Andrews v. State, 17 Ala. App. 456, 85 So. 840; Fritz v. State, 178 Ind. 463, 99 N. E. 727; State v. Saffron, 146 Wash. 202, 262 P. 970. The Court of Appeals of New York, however, in a civil action, upheld the provision of section 973 of the Code of that state reading as follows: "The court in its discretion may order one or more issues to be separately tried prior to any trial of the other issues in the case." Objection was made that the provision quoted impairs the constitutional right to a jury trial. The court said:

"The constitutional provision invoked against the act is, 'The trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used shall remain inviolate forever,' etc. This, of course, as asserted by appellant's counsel, secures the right of trial before a common-law jury of twelve men of certain classes of issues, which include the ones here involved. It is well settled that the object of such a provision is to preserve the substance of the right of trial by jury rather than to prescribe the details of the methods by which it shall be exercised and enjoyed.

* * * Even if we assume, as I think we should, that this section of the code permits separate trials of separate issues at different times, before different juries, it seems very clear that it does not destroy or impair the substantial right of a litigant to have his case tried before a proper jury, but only prescribes the method in which this may be done. Every issue is submitted to the verdict of a jury. This is the substance of the right. As a matter of convenience the court may order some issues to be tried before others are taken up. This is a matter of procedure and detail." Smith v. Western P. R. Co., 203 N. Y. 499, 96 N. E. 1106, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 137, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 264.

In Oborn v. State, supra, while upholding the provision for a trial of the issue of insanity before that raised by the plea of not guilty, the court held that a defendant in a criminal case has the "constitutional right to have all the issues in his case, including any special issue of fact, particularly as to his sanity, tried before a single common-law jury." Since all the issues in this case were tried before a single jury, no further discussion of the constitutional question involved is deemed necessary.

[2] During the examination of prospective jurors no questions were asked concerning the attitude of any of them towards the defense of insanity. After the jury returned a verdict of guilty and before the trial of the issue of insanity, counsel for defendant asked leave to examine the jurors "to determine their state of mind on the present issue." The court refused to permit such examination. The ruling was clearly right. Such examination, if desired, should have been made during the selection of the jury at the beginning of the trial. The trial was one continuous proceeding and it would be highly impracticable to examine the jurors as to their qualifications during the stages of its progress. Schissler v. State, supra.

[3] Appellant contends that by the trial of the issue of insanity before the same jury which had found him guilty of the offense charged he was "forced to accept a jury, each member of which had already heard the facts of the case and had formed and expressed an opinion thereon; each member of which was subject to challenge for actual bias." In support of this contention he cites French v. State, 85 Wis. 400, 55 N. W. 566, 21 L. R. A. 402, 39 Am. St. Rep. 855. In that case the jurors were unable to reach an agreement on the special issue of insanity. The trial court thereupon discharged the jury and then ordered the trial to proceed before the same jury on both the special plea of insanity and the general plea of not guilty. This was manifestly error, the jury having theretofore sat in the trial of the special issue. In the later case of Schissler v. State, supra, it was held that the jury was not disqualified to try the question of the guilt of the defendant after having found him sane on the trial of the special issue of insanity.

[4] On the trial of the issue raised by the plea of not guilty the court sustained objections to all evidence offered by the defendant tending to show that he was insane at the time of the homicide. Such evidence was admitted on the trial of the issue of insanity. The defendant was thereby given the full benefit of such evidence as a defense to the crime with which he was charged. He was subject to punishment only upon a finding by the jury that he "was sane at the time the offense was committed." Pen. Code, § 1026. Was evidence of mental weakness or derangement, not constituting insanity, admissible as affecting the degree of the crime? In Hempton v. State, supra, it was held that, while the verdict of the jury against the defendant on the special issue of insanity precluded further inquiry as to mental impairment as a complete defense, evidence tending to show mental impairment rendering the defendant incapable of forming the specific intent involved in murder of the first degree was admissible on the trial under the plea of not guilty. There are other authorities to the effect that such evidence is admissible for the purpose stated. Wharton's Criminal Law (11th Ed.) § 64; 1 Wharton & Stille's Medical Jurisprudence, § 188. Whether the same rule is to be applied in this state may, at least, be seriously doubted. People v. Sloper, 198 Cal. 238, 244 P. 362; People v. Perry, 195 Cal. 623, 639, 234 P. 890. No further discussion of the question is necessary, however, because the defendant was convicted of murder of the second degree only. In this state it has always been held that to reduce a killing from murder of the second degree to manslaughter on the ground of sudden quarrel or heat of passion "this heat of passion must be such a passion as would naturally be aroused in the mind of an ordinarily reasonable person under the given facts and circumstances, and that, consequently, no defendant may set up his own standard of conduct and justify or excuse himself because in fact his passions were aroused, unless further the jury believe that the facts and circumstances were sufficient to arouse the passions of the ordinarily reasonable man." People v. Logan, 175 Cal. 45, 49, 164 P. 1121, 1122; People v. Hurtado, 63 Cal. 288, 292; People v. Golsh, 63 Cal. App. 609, 614, 219 P. 456. In the Hurtado Case it is said:

"If defendant was so far in possession of his mental faculties as to be capable of knowing that the act of killing was wrong, any partial defect of understanding which might cause him more readily to give way to passion than a man ordinarily reasonable, cannot be considered for any purpose."

[5] Complaint is made of the following instruction given by the court on the trial under the general plea of not guilty:

"For the purposes of this case the defendant is conclusively presumed to have been sane at the time of the commission of the alleged offense herein, and the jury are instructed that they must consider that at all times mentioned in this case, the defendant was sane."

It is urged:

"The foregoing instruction was not limited in its application to any particular phase of the case and in effect told the jury that no amount or kind of evidence would serve to show defendant's insanity."

More appropriate words might well have been used instead of the words "this case," but the jurors doubtless understood the instruction to refer to the trial of the issues then before them for consideration. The instruction could not have misled the jury in the trial of the issue of insanity. In the trial of that issue the court fully and correctly instructed the jury on the subject of insanity and specifically, at the defendant's request, that if it was proved, "by a preponderance of evidence, that he was insane at the time of the commission of the act charged against him by the indictment, he is entitled to a verdict at your hands that he was insane at the time the offense was committed."

No prejudicial error appears in the record, and the defendant's rights were fully protected by the trial court.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

94 Cal. App. 66

NELSON et al. v. MYERS. (Civ. 3532.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 19, 1928.

1. Landlord and tenant §169(3)—Plaintiffs, offering no evidence that gas heater vent pipe was disconnected as alleged or heater lighted when tenant's body was discovered, could not recover from landlord for death by gas poisoning.

Plaintiffs, offering no evidence that gas heater vent pipe, displacement of which, so as to discharge noxious gases into bathroom, was relied on in complaint as proximate cause of tenant's death, was disconnected, or even that gas heater was lighted, when body was discovered, could not recover from defendant landlord.

2. Death §57—Substantial material variance between allegations and proof of proximate cause of death precludes recovery therefor.

A substantial and material variance between allegations of complaint and proof as to proximate cause of death will defeat recovery therefor, as jury cannot be permitted to speculate.

3. Landlord and tenant §168(1)—Tenant's contributory negligence bars recovery for injuries or death from defects known to him.

Contributory negligence of tenant will bar recovery for injuries or death resulting from defects of which he had knowledge.

4. Negligence §136(26)—Contributory negligence is ordinarily for jury.

Contributory negligence is ordinarily a matter to be determined by the jury.

5. Appeal and error §930(4)—By verdict for defendant landlord, in action for tenant's death, jury is presumed to have found deceased contributorily negligent as alleged by defendant.

By verdict for landlord in action for tenant's death from asphyxiation, caused by defective automatic gas heater in bathroom, jury is presumed to have found that deceased was guilty of contributory negligence sufficiently pleaded and relied on as defense.

6. Appeal and error §1001(1)—Jury's finding, supported by any substantial evidence, that decedent was contributorily negligent, will be upheld on appeal.

Where there is any substantial evidence to support jury's finding in death action that deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, it will be upheld on appeal.

7. Landlord and tenant §103(3), 152(10)—Lessee's only remedy for landlord's failure to make minor repairs costing less than month's rent is to vacate premises or make repairs and charge expense to rent account (Civ. Code, § 1942).

When defects in premises are trivial and cost of repairing them less than one month's rent, lessee's only remedy for landlord's breach of covenant to repair is to vacate premises or make repairs and charge expense to rent account, pursuant to Civ. Code, § 1942.

8. Landlord and tenant §164(2)—In absence of fraudulent concealment of known latent defects, not discoverable by reasonable diligence, landlord not directly covenanting to make repairs is not liable to tenants or others for resulting injuries; not being insurer.

In absence of fraud or deceit in concealing known latent defects not discoverable by reasonable diligence on lessee's part, landlord not directly covenanting to make repairs is not liable to tenant or others for injuries resulting from defects in rented premises; landlord not being insurer of premises against damages or injuries.

9. Landlord and tenant §164(7)—Renter must inspect premises with reasonable care and diligence before renting.

It is duty of renter to exercise reasonable care and diligence in inspecting premises which he proposes to rent; the doctrine of caveat emptor ordinarily applying to leasing of premises.

10. Landlord and tenant §168(1)—Lessee cannot recover for injuries to which his own negligence proximately contributed, even if landlord covenanted to repair defects or voluntarily concealed hidden defects.

Even when landlord has covenanted to repair defects or is guilty of constructive fraud in concealing hidden defects of which he has knowledge, lessee may not recover damages for injuries, to which his own negligence proximately contributed.

11. Landlord and tenant §164(3)—Landlord voluntarily attempting to repair defects, irrespective of contract, is liable for injuries caused by careless or unskillful workmanship.

A landlord voluntarily attempting to repair defective premises, whether he has contracted to do so or not, must exercise reasonable care therein, and is liable for injuries caused by his careless or unskillful workmanship.

12. Landlord and tenant §164(2)—Landlord sending agent to repair or clean gas heater several times held not liable for tenant's death from asphyxiation, in absence of evidence of unskillful or careless workmanship.

Landlord sending agent to repair or clean gas heater on several occasions held not liable for death of tenant from asphyxiation caused by defect therein, in absence of evidence of unskillful or careless workmanship.

13. Trial §260(8)—Refusal of instruction that landlord, undertaking to repair gas heater, was bound to exercise reasonable care to make it safe, held not error, in view of instruction given.

In action against landlord for tenant's death from asphyxiation caused by defective gas heater in bathroom, refusal of instruction that defendant, having undertaken to repair heater, was bound to exercise reasonable care to make it safe, held not error, in view of instruction that, if heater was in dangerous and unsafe condition when premises were leased and defendant undertook to repair it under lease, he was bound to exercise reasonable care to make it safe for uses intended.

14. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 296(4, 5)—Instruction not informing jury that tenant need exercise only ordinary care to discover defects held not error, in view of instructions given.

In action against landlord for tenant's death from asphyxiation caused by defective gas heater in bathroom, instructions not informing jury that renter need only use ordinary care to discover defects held not error, in view of instructions requiring finding that reasonably careful person would not have entered bathroom under like circumstances with same knowledge of dangers, that law presumes that deceased exercised due caution for his own safety, and that burden was on defendant to show his lack of ordinary care.

15. Death $\hookrightarrow$ 58(1)—In death action there is legal presumption, to be weighed with all other evidence, that deceased exercised due diligence for his own safety.

In action against landlord for tenant's death from asphyxiation caused by defective gas heater in bathroom, plaintiffs were entitled to benefit of legal presumption that deceased exercised due diligence for his own safety, to be weighed by jury as established fact, together with all other evidence in case, in determining whether he was negligent.

16. Landlord and tenant $\hookrightarrow$ 169(11)—Tenant's contributory negligence in entering dark bathroom and using gas heater with knowledge of its defective condition held for jury, in action for his death from asphyxiation.

Whether tenant, entering bathroom and using gas heater in darkness, with knowledge of its defective condition by reason of displacement of vent pipe, was guilty of contributory negligence precluding recovery for his death from asphyxiation, held for jury.

17. Death $\hookrightarrow$ 104(2)—Instruction to find for defendant in death action, if impossible to ascertain cause of death, held proper, under pleadings and evidence.

In action against landlord for tenant's death from asphyxiation because of defective gas heater in bathroom, instruction to find for defendant, if impossible to ascertain cause of death from evidence, held proper, though weight of evidence indicated that he died as result of inhaling carbon monoxide, where answer denied that death was so caused, there was evidence of ailment from which he suffered just before his death, and autopsy was not conducted with use of spectroscope or aided by chemical analysis of blood.

18. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 203(1)—Instructions on any valid theory made issue by pleadings or trial are proper.

It is proper to give instructions on any valid theory which is made an issue either by the pleadings or the trial of the case.

19. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 296(3)—Instructions omitting principle that landlord voluntarily undertaking to repair defect is liable for negligence causing injuries to renter held not error, in view of instruction given.

In action against landlord for tenant's death from asphyxiation caused by defective gas heater in bathroom, instructions omitting principle that landlord voluntarily undertaking to repair defects is liable for carelessness in workmanship causing injury to renter held not error, in view of instruction that, if heater was in dangerous condition when premises were leased and defendant thereafter undertook to repair it, he was bound to exercise reasonable care to make it safe for uses intended and liable for death if caused by his negligent failure to do so.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action by Lovica Nelson and others against S. A. Myers. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

William P. O'Connor, Bertrand J. Wellman, and Perky, McConnell & Hill, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Scott McReynolds and Don G. Bowker, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from the verdict of a jury in favor of the defendant in an action against the landlord of an apartment house, for the death of a subtenant resulting from asphyxiation caused by a defective automatic gas heater which was used in a bathroom.

The respondent owned the Sunnyside Apartments at Ventura, Cal., which were leased November 8, 1923, to Nannie Swanwick. The lease contained the following clause: "The lessee agrees to make all minor repairs at her own expense." Appellants' intestate, Arthur P. Nelson, and his family were tenants of the lessee at the time of his death. He was a strong, healthy man 40 years of age, and was engaged as an oil driller. A few days prior to his death, the deceased wrenched his back in attempting to adjust an automobile wheel, and did not return to his work. The night before his death he was taken to a physician for treatment, but the record fails to disclose the nature or seriousness of this ailment. The afternoon of July 13, 1924, Mrs. Swanwick assisted him in ascending the stairway to his room. She testified:

"He came in and sat down on a couch in the hall, * * * then * * * he went up stairs. * * * I walked by the side of him—I went with him. Q. Did you help him up stairs? A. Yes, sir. * * * He seemed a little weak; his back hurt him a little."

Later in the day she saw him in the hallway upstairs, coming from the bathroom. He was weak, and she again assisted him to his room and took off his shoes. She said:

"He complained a little bit of his back, and he was weak. * * * I think I took off his shoes. Q. What did he (then) do? A. He lay down. * * * He said he wanted to go to work. * * * He put his hand to his back, and said, 'I guess I won't; maybe I'm hurt a little more than I think I am.'"

That night Arthur Nelson was found dead in the bathtub. The appellants allege that the deceased met his death from carbon monoxide which escaped from the automatic gas heater used in the bathroom; that this heater contained a latent defect consisting of a loose disconnected vent pipe extending from the top of the heater to an aperture in the ceiling, provided for the purpose of carrying off the noxious gases generated by imperfect combustion. From the evidence it appears that the apparatus complained of was a Humphrey heater which was installed in the bathroom of the Sunnyside Apartments several years before the accident by Mrs. Baldwin, a former lessee of the premises; that it was a model of gas heater in common use at that time, consisting of coils and burners inclosed in a metal case, stationed upon brackets in the bathroom. On the top of the heater there was a cap, in the center of which there was an opening surrounded with an iron collar over which a galvanized iron pipe fitted, extending through an aperture in the ceiling to carry off the poisonous gases. This heater was 2½ feet in height and 14 inches in diameter. Both the heater and the vent pipe were in plain view of any occupant of the bathroom, and their purpose was within the common knowledge of all. The lessee and her renters, including the deceased, were familiar with this gas heater, and knew that it had previously caused some trouble in operation. Mrs. Swanwick had talked with the deceased about it. There is a sharp conflict as to whether the respondent knew that it was claimed this particular gas heater was defective or dangerous. Mrs. Swanwick and other witnesses testified that they notified respondent of the danger of using this heater. Mr. Sly, a building inspector, claimed that on December 6, 1923, he served respondent with a written notice that—

"The heaters at Sunnyside Apartments are found to be in a very dangerous condition. Repairs are requested at your earliest convenience, as I have this date notified the parties to discontinue the use of the same until repairs can be made."

The respondent emphatically denied the receipt of this written notice, but admitted that Mr. Sly orally notified him of danger from fire which might be caused by another heater which was situated on the floor above the bathroom where the accident occurred. He claimed that Mrs. Swanwick complained only of the gas heaters in general, because they failed to heat the bath water with sufficient speed or quantity to efficiently serve their needs, and urged him to install a large heater in the basement which she argued would supply all the bathrooms in the house better and at less expense than the old ones. This he promised to do, and ordered the new heater shortly before the accident occurred, but it was not actually installed until afterwards. The respondent denied that it was his responsibility to keep the heaters in repair; yet it appears that on several previous occasions when the lessee complained to him about them he promptly sent an expert to adjust them. Mr. Johnson, with 25 years of experience as a plumber, who was acting as deputy building inspector for his principal who had succeeded Mr. Sly in that capacity, testified that at the request of respondent he visited Sunnyside Apartments December 8, 1923, and June 30, 1924, and found an accumulation of rust and foreign substance about the burners, and the screen rusted out. This prevented the obtaining of sufficient oxygen for proper combustion of the gas. He replaced the screen, cleaned the burners, lit the gas and experimented with the heater, saying, "We tested it out for half an hour, and found that it burned perfectly." He declared that the heater was in good condition, but that it had been neglected. Mr. Leach, a friend of the respondent, testified that, upon one of these occasions when Mr. Myers was away, Mrs. Swanwick phoned to him that the gas heater had blown up, and that she wanted a plumber. He promptly summoned Mr. Johnson, and they went to the apartments, but found nothing wrong with the heater except that the vent pipe had been displaced by the explosion of the gas. This pipe was promptly adjusted, and the heater was tested and found to be all right. He said that Mrs. Swanwick told them that a renter had turned on the gas, and, finding that he was without a match to light it, returned to his room to get one. In attempting to ignite the gas upon his return to the bathroom an explosion occurred, dislodging the pipe. Mr. Johnson testified that it was a simple matter to replace the pipe, which they speedily did, and found that the heater worked in good condition. He was asked, "Would this blowing off of the vent indicate a defective heater?" To which he replied, "No, * * * it would indicate carelessness on the part of the operator." Johnson instructed the lessee how to keep the burners and screens clean and free from corrosion and dirt.

Owing to the evidence of the ailment from which the deceased was suffering immediately prior to the time when his body was found in the bathroom, there may be a serious doubt as to whether the jury believed that he died from the effects of carbon monoxide. The record fails to indicate whether the physicians who participated in the post mortem examination had any knowledge of his previous ailment, or whether they examined the body with any object in view except to ascertain whether he had died from the effects of carbon monoxide. In this examination no spectroscope was used, and no chemical analysis of the blood was made. The skin of the deceased was found to be ruddy, his blood retained a cherry red appearance, and his features were composed, indicating that death was accompanied with no severe pain. From these symptoms it was assumed that death resulted from inhaling carbon monoxide, which is composed of equal parts of carbon and oxygen, one-half of 1 per cent. of which, mingled with air, will usually produce giddiness, unconsciousness, and painless speedy death. It is an odorless, colorless deadly poison, 100 times the density of air, and burns with a lambent blue flame. It causes death by combining its noxious property with the hæmoglobin of the blood, thereby destroying the efficiency of that fluid as an oxygen-carrying medium, stifling the victim. Dr. Stookey, however, testified that he was reasonably certain that the deceased died from the inhaling of carbon monoxide. Dr. Bianchi testified that, while the autopsy was unsatisfactory, and there was a possibility of death having resulted from other causes, judging from the peculiar appearance of the blood and muscles, viewed in the light of the circumstances surrounding his death, it was his belief that Nelson died from the result of the presence of carbon monoxide. But assuming that the record satisfactorily established the cause of death as a result of inhaling carbon monoxide, we are still of the opinion that the liability of the respondent has not been shown, and that the motion for nonsuit should have been granted.

[1, 2] As a proximate cause of death, the appellants relied upon their theory that the ventilating pipe, which was intended to connect the gas heater with the aperture in the ceiling and thus convey the noxious gases into the outer air, had been displaced so as to discharge the poison into the bathroom. The complaint alleged:

That "there existed on the water heater * * * a vent pipe * * * intended to collect said noxious gases * * * and convey the same into a flue (communicating) with the outside air. * * * That said water heater and gas flame were in a bad state of repair and dangerous in this, that the said vent pipe had become disconnected and * * * conveyed the said noxious and deadly gases so generated by said gas flame and discharged the same into said bathroom."

The appellants utterly failed to prove the displacement of this vent pipe at the time of the accident. There is no evidence in the record that the vent pipe was found disconnected, or even that the gas heater was found lighted when the body of the deceased was discovered. Upon the contrary, there is evidence that the transom over the bathroom door was found to be open a few inches, and there was no evidence of the odor of gas in the room. The total failure to prove the proximate cause of death as alleged and relied upon by the appellants is fatal to their cause. In 20 Standard Encyclopedia of Procedure, 322, it is said: "A variance between the allegations of the complaint, and the proof as to the proximate cause of the injury is fatal." Certainly a substantial and material variance in that regard will defeat the recovery of a complainant. The jury may not be permitted to speculate as to the producing cause of death. 19 Cal. Jur. 696, § 118; Puckhaber v. Southern Pac. Co., 132 Cal. 363, 64 P. 480; Hopkins v. Heller, 59 Cal. App. 447, 210 P. 975.

[3-6] The respondent sufficiently pleaded and relied upon the defense of contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. Both the lessee and the deceased were familiar with the alleged defects of the gas heater. Mrs. Swanwick had talked to the deceased about it. He was employed regularly as an oil well driller, and must be presumed to have been familiar with the danger of noxious fumes incident to the improper combustion of gas. Neither the gas heater nor the alleged disconnected vent pipe may be deemed to be latent or hidden dangers under the facts of this case. The condition of both was open and visible to any occupant of the bathroom. A casual glance at the pipe would have revealed the defect, if it had been misplaced. Moreover, the evidence discloses the fact that, in spite of the knowledge of the deceased with respect to the alleged defects of the gas heater, he entered and used the bathroom in darkness, for Mrs. Swanwick testified that the electric light globe in the bathroom had burned out prior to the accident, and that she had failed to replace it. With the bathroom lighted, and with the exercise of ordinary care, the defect of a misplaced vent pipe would have been discovered. These circumstances strongly indicate contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. The contributory negligence of a tenant will bar his recovery for injuries sustained from defects of which he has knowledge. 16 R. C. L. 1049, § 568. Contributory negligence is ordinarily a matter to be determined by the jury. 1 Thompson on Negligence, 408, § 425; 29 Cyc. 631; Kelly v. Santa Barbara R. Co., 171 Cal. 423, 153 P. 903, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 67; Hoffman v. Southern Pac. Co. (Cal. App.) 258 P. 397; Phillips v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (Cal. App.) 264 P. 538. In 16 Ruling Case Law, 1058, it is said:

"It has been held that (the question as to) whether the tenant is guilty of contributory negligence in using the premises after the need for repairs becomes apparent is a question for the jury."

By their verdict in the present case the jury is presumed to have found that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence. Where there is any substantial evidence to support this finding it will be upheld on appeal.

[7-10] The chief contention of the appellant in this case is that the respondent, as the landlord of Sunnyside Apartments, is liable for damages resulting to a tenant from defects of a gas heater used as a part of the equipment of the rented premises, particularly since he assumed the responsibility of repairing such defects. It is doubtful whether the respondent was required to clean or repair the gas heater under the covenants of the lease which provided, "The lessee agrees to make all minor repairs at his own expense." Cleaning the gas burners, replacing the screen, or adjusting the vent pipe appear to be "minor repairs," which could be done with little labor, at small expense. When such minor repairs cost less than one month's rent of the premises, the lessee is authorized to make the repairs and charges the expense against his rent account. Civ. Code § 1942. When the defects are trivial, and the cost of repairing them amounts to less than one month's rent of the premises, regardless of a landlord's covenant to repair, the only remedies which the lessee has for the landlord's failure to repair is to either vacate the premises or make the repairs and charge the expense to the rent account pursuant to section 1942, Civil Code. It is the settled law of this state that, in the absence of fraud or deceit on the part of the landlord in concealing latent defects of which he has knowledge, and in the absence of a direct covenant to make repairs, the lessor is not liable to the tenant or others for injuries resulting from defects in the rented premises. 15 Cal. Jur. 704; 16 R. C. L. 1059, § 580; 1 Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, 556, §§ 86, 87; Carty v. Blauth, 169 Cal. 713, 716, 147 P. 949; Gately v. Campbell, 124 Cal. 520, 57 P. 567; Daley v. Quick, 99 Cal. 179, 33 P. 859; De Motte v. Arkell, 77 Cal. App. 610, 621, 247 P. 254; Hassell v. Denning (Cal. App.) 258 P. 426; Smelser v. Deutsche, etc., Kirche (Cal. App.) 263 P. 838. A landlord is not an insurer of his demised premises against damages or injuries. He becomes liable for injuries or damages only when his conduct amounts to fraud or deceit, such as a failure to disclose the existence of hidden defects of which he has knowledge, and which may not be discovered by the use of reasonable diligence on the part of the lessee. The doctrine of caveat emptor ordinarily applies to the leasing of premises. It is the duty of the renter to exercise reasonable care and diligence in inspecting the premises which he proposes to rent. Even when the landlord has covenanted to repair defects, or is guilty of constructive fraud in concealing hidden defects of which he has knowledge, the lessee may not recover damages when his own negligence proximately contributed to the injuries sustained.

[11, 12] It is true that a landlord who voluntarily attempts to repair defective premises, whether he has contracted to do so or not, will be required by law to exercise reasonable care therein, and will become liable for injuries caused by his careless or unskillful workmanship. 1 Tiffany on Landlord and

Tenant, 608, § 87; 16 R. C. L. 1045, § 565; 36 C. J. 217, § 900; Callahan v. Loughran, 102 Cal. 476, 36 P. 835; Seid Pak Sing v. Barker, 197 Cal. 321, 355, 240 P. 765. But in the present case, while it is true that the respondent did send his agent to repair or clean the gas heater upon several occasions, there is no evidence of unskillful or careless workmanship on their part which would make him liable. The record contains substantial evidence from which the jury was warranted in determining just the contrary. The foregoing exception to the rule respecting the liability of a landlord for injuries sustained from defective premises is therefore not applicable.

[13] The appellants seek a reversal of the judgment for the alleged erroneous giving and refusing of certain instructions. The following instruction was refused:

"The defendant, having undertaken to repair the heater in question, was bound to exercise reasonable care in the repair and replacement of the same to make it safe. * * *

This was a correct statement of the law, but was fully covered by appellants' instruction No. 11, which was given as follows:

"If, when defendant leased the premises to Mrs. Swanwick, the said heater was in a dangerous and unsafe condition, and if following that he undertook to repair the same under his lease, then he was bound to exercise reasonable care to make the same safe for the uses for which it was intended, and, if he negligently failed to do so, and because thereof the deceased met his death, without contributory negligence on the part of the deceased, then your verdict will be for the plaintiff. * * *

[14] Defendant's instructions Nos. 18 and 22 are challenged because they omitted to inform the jury that the law requires a renter to use only ordinary care to discover the defects which resulted in his injury. No. 18 reads:

"I instruct you * * * that, even if the water heater was in a bad state of repair and known to be so by the defendant, and that he negligently failed to repair it, still, if the defect was one that was clearly patent, open, and observable by the deceased or any one using the bathroom, then the law charges the deceased with knowledge of the danger, and the defendant cannot be held responsible for such defect."

Instruction No. 22 reads:

"I further instruct you that, if you believe that the said Albert P. Nelson knew of the defective condition of the heater, if it was defective, and that he thereafter used the same, that he thereby assumed the risk of such defective condition so far as it was known to him."

The omitted element of these instructions, to the effect that the deceased was liable only for a failure to use reasonable care for his own safety, was supplied by instruction No. 13, which was given as follows:

"If the defendant was negligent as charged in the complaint, the fact that the deceased may have known there was some danger in entering the bathroom will not, in and of itself, defeat the plaintiff's right to recovery, but you must find that a reasonably careful person would not have entered the bathroom under like circumstances, and with the same knowledge he had of the danger."

In this regard, the jury was further instructed:

"The test is, Did the deceased do what a reasonably careful person would have done under the same situation, facts, and circumstances, viewing it as the deceased did? * * *

[15,16] These instructions were further supplemented by informing the jury in the language of the statute that, in the absence of an eyewitness to the accident which caused the death of the deceased, the law presumes that he exercised due caution for his own safety, and that the burden was upon the defendant to show his lack of ordinary care. These instructions, taken as a whole, fairly informed the jury that the deceased was required to exercise only ordinary care for his own safety, and that the burden rested upon the defendant to prove a lack of such diligence. The deceased was entitled to the benefit of the legal presumption that he exercised due diligence for his own safety, to be weighed by the jury as an established fact, together with all the other evidence in the case in determining whether he was guilty of negligence. The appellant contends that this presumption was controlling, and that it absolutely refutes the theory that he was guilty of contributory negligence. There was, however, substantial evidence of his negligence, which was a matter solely for the jury to determine. He knew of the alleged defective condition of the heater. Mrs. Swanwick testified that she had discussed it with him about a week before his death. "Q. You had some discussion with Mr. Nelson about the condition of the heater? A. Yes, sir. Q. When was that? * * * A. I would judge a week or more * * * before his death." The defect in the heater relied upon by appellant was the frequent displacement of the vent pipe which carried off the noxious gases. In spite of his knowledge of the alleged defective condition of the heater, he entered the bathroom, and apparently used this heater in the darkness, without an electric light. Mr. Reardon, the undertaker, testified:

"Q. Now you may tell when it was, and where, that you first saw him after his death. A. In the bathtub at Sunnyside Apartments. * * * It was just about dark, or just before dark, and there was no light in the room, so that you couldn't decipher the expression on his face."

[17-19] Appellants also challenge defendant's instruction No. 21, contending that there was no dispute as to the actual cause of death. This instruction reads:

"If the jury believe from the evidence that it is impossible to ascertain what was the cause of the death of Mr. Nelson, then your verdict should be for the defendant."

We are of the opinion that the appellants are in error regarding their claim that the cause of death was not disputed. The answer "denies that the said Arthur P. Nelson then and there died as a result of breathing said noxious or deadly gases, or as a proximate result of the negligence of the defendant." It is true that the weight of the evidence indicates that he died as a result of inhaling carbon monoxide. But there was evidence of an ailment from which he suffered just before his death. The autopsy was not conducted with the use of a spectroscope or aided by a chemical analysis of the blood. The jury had a right to consider these circumstances in determining the cause of death. It is proper to give instructions upon any valid theory which is made an issue either by the pleadings or the trial of the case. This instruction was therefore proper. The appellants also complain of the giving of defendant's instructions Nos. 23, 24, and 26, on account of their omission of the principle of law heretofore announced to the effect that, when a landlord voluntarily undertakes to make repairs of defects, he will be held liable for negligence or carelessness in the workmanship which causes the injury to the renter. We are of the opinion that instruction No. 11, which was given, and which was heretofore quoted, sufficiently covers this feature of the law. The jury was fully and fairly instructed upon the doctrines of negligence and contributory negligence in their application to the relationship of landlord and tenant, and we think the record is free from reversible error.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

GODWARD v. BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF MARIPOSA COUNTY UNION HIGH SCHOOL et al. (Civ. 3623.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 25, 1928.

1. Schools and school districts $\S$ 133—High school district trustees cannot employ principal and teachers for longer terms than one year (Pol. Code, $\S$ 1617, subd. 7, as amended, and sections 1741, 1793).

St. 1911, p. 1362, amending Pol. Code, $\S$ 1617, subd. 7, as amended by St. 1881, p. 41, and St. 1917, p. 737, re-enacting section 1617 as section 1609, do not authorize trustees of high school district, who are invested with same powers as those of other school districts by section 1741, to employ high school principal and teachers for longer terms than one year, as in case of city superintendents, under section 1793.

2. Statutes $\S$ 219—State education department's long-continued practical construction of statute as authorizing school trustees to employ principals for one-year terms only is entitled to great weight (Pol. Code, $\S$ 1617, subd. 7, as amended, and section 1741).

Long-continued practical construction of Pol. Code, $\S$ 1617, subd. 7, as amended by St. 1881, p. 41, Stats. 1889, 1891, 1893, 1906, 1909, and St. 1911, p. 1362, and re-enacted by St. 1917, p. 737, as section 1609, by state department of education as authorizing school trustees, including high school boards invested with same powers as those of other school districts by section 1741, to employ principals for terms of only one year, is entitled to great weight, though not conclusive; presumption being that it was brought to Legislature's attention.

Original application by W. A. Godward for a writ of mandate to the Board of Trustees of the Mariposa County Union High School and the members of such Board. Writ denied.

F. M. Ostrander and Stephen P. Galvin, both of Merced, for petitioner.

Louis T. Milburn, Dist. Atty., of Mariposa, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This is an original application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondents to reinstate the petitioner as principal and teacher of the Mariposa County union high school. October 12, 1926, the respondent board adopted a motion to employ the petitioner "for a period of three years, beginning September 13, 1926, and ending June 30, 1929." He thereafter acted as principal of the school and teacher of algebra, geometry, and physics until the close of the term ending in May, 1928. During the same period five other teachers were continuously employed in the school. June 9, 1928, the board notified the petitioner that his services were no longer required.

The only question to be considered is whether the board of trustees had authority to employ the petitioner for a longer term than one year. Prior to 1911 the power to employ a principal was included in the general authorization to employ teachers. Section 1617 of the Political Code, as amended in 1881, provided:

"The powers and duties of trustees of school districts, and of boards of education in cities, are as follows: * * * Seventh—To employ the teachers, janitors, and employes of schools; * * * provided, that no board of trustees shall enter into any contract with such employes to extend beyond the thirtieth day of June next ensuing." Stats. 1881, p. 41.

In Kennedy v. Board of Education, 82 Cal. 483, 489, 22 P. 1042, 1044, it is said:

"This section contains no limitation as to the time for which a board of education in a city may employ a teacher. There is such a limitation, but it is confined in terms to boards of trustees."

Section 1617 was amended in 1889, 1891, 1893, 1906, and 1909, but no material change was made in the foregoing provisions. In 1911 the seventh subdivision of section 1617 was amended to read as follows:

"(a) To employ a principal for each school under their control, and in schools employing eight teachers or more, they may employ a supervising principal for one or more schools under their control, and in each city school district governed by a city board of education to employ a city superintendent of schools and, when necessary, deputy or assistant city superintendent of schools; * * * provided, that any supervising principal, or city superintendent, or deputy, or assistant city superintendent, who shall be employed after the passage of this act, may be employed for four years.

"(b) To employ the teachers, * * * also to employ janitors and other employees of the school; * * * provided, that no board of trustees shall enter into any contract with such employees to extend beyond the close of the next ensuing school year; except that teachers may be elected on or after June first for the next ensuing school year, and each teacher so elected shall be deemed reelected from year to year thereafter unless the governing body of the school district shall on or before the tenth day of June give notice in writing to such teacher that his services will not be required for the ensuing school year." Stats. 1911, p. 1362.

Section 1617 was again amended in 1913, but no material changes were made in the parts quoted. In 1917 the provisions of section 1617 were amended and re-enacted as section 1609, reading in part as follows:

"Boards of school trustees and city boards of education shall have power, and it shall be their duty:

"First—To employ a principal for each school under their control, and they may employ a district superintendent for one or more schools employing eight teachers or more under their control. In each city school district governed by a city board of education, such board may employ a city superintendent of schools and such deputy or assistant city superintendents as it may deem necessary. * * * Any deputy city superintendent of schools, or assistant city superintendent of schools, or district superintendent may be elected for a term of four years.

"Second—To employ the teachers, * * * also to employ janitors and other employees of the school; * * * provided, that no board shall enter into any contract with such employees to extend beyond the close of the next ensuing school year; except that teachers may be elected on or after June first for the next ensuing school year, and each teacher so elected shall be deemed re-elected from year to year thereafter unless the governing body of the school district shall on or before the tenth day of June give notice in writing to such teacher that his services will not be required for the ensuing school year." Stats. 1917, p. 737.

Section 1609 was amended in 1921 and again in 1927, but the first subdivision thereof has not been changed, and, while the phraseology of the second subdivision has been changed, the foregoing provisions thereof have been retained. Section 1793 provides that "city superintendents of public schools, elected by city boards of education, shall be elected for a term of four years." Section 1741 invests high school boards with the same powers as those of school districts.

[1] From the foregoing it clearly appears that prior to 1911 high school trustees had no authority to employ a principal for a term longer than one year. At all times since 1911 either subdivision (a) of section 1617 or the first subdivision of section 1609 has provided for the employment of principals, supervising principals or district superintendents, city superintendents, and deputy and assistant superintendents, and, without further mention of principals, has, specifically, provided that all the others enumerated may be employed for terms of four years. Applying the maxim, "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius," it does not appear that it was the intention to authorize the employment of a principal by the trustees of a school district for a longer term than one year, the maximum term authorized by the law prior to the amendment of 1911.

[2] The state department of education has at all times, both before and after the amendment of 1911, construed the various provisions quoted as authorizing school trustees to enter into contracts employing principals for terms of only one year. It must be presumed that this long-continued practical construction was brought to the attention of the Legislature and that, if contrary to the legislative intent, some of the numerous amendments mentioned would have made specific provision for the employment of a principal for a term of more than one year. While such contemporaneous construction is not conclusive of the question under consideration, it is entitled to great weight. Riley v. Forbes, 193 Cal. 740, 745, 227 P. 768; Riley v. Thompson, 193 Cal. 773, 778, 227 P. 772.

It appears from the agreed statement of facts that the petitioner was employed as teacher as well as principal. It clearly appears from a mere reading of the statutory provisions quoted that school trustees are not authorized to employ teachers for terms of more than one year.

Viewed from any standpoint, the employment of the petitioner for a term of three years was unauthorized by the law.

The petition is denied.

AMBASSADOR HOTEL CORPORATION v.
LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (Civ. 3561.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 25, 1928.

1. Taxation $\Rightarrow$ 348—Failure of assessor in computing value of hotel by cubic contents to deduct excess contents of light spaces held not to invalidate assessment, not excessive or discriminatory.

Fact that assessor in computing valuation of hotel for assessment, purposes according to cubic content included contents of light and air spaces without excluding portion of such spaces exceeding 10 per cent. of entire cubic contents of building, in accordance with alleged rule for computing value, held not to render assessment illegal or void, where it was not shown that the valuation arrived at was excessive, unjust, or discriminatory.

2. Taxation $\Rightarrow$ 347—Assessor's mistake in computing valuation does not injure taxpayer unless resulting tax is excessive or discriminatory.

Taxpayer is not injured by error of assessor in computing valuation of property taxed, unless tax exacted is excessive, unjust, or discriminatory.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by the Ambassador Hotel Corporation against Los Angeles County. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Roger Marchetti, and H. R. Collins, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and J. A. Tucker, and W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., Deputy County Counsels, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. By this action the plaintiff sought to recover the sum of $9,084.87, alleged excess in taxes paid the county of Los Angeles for the years 1922, 1923, and 1924. Judgment was entered for the defendant after the defendant's demurrer to the second amended complaint had been sustained. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff is the lessee and in possession of certain real property situate in the county of Los Angeles known as and called the Alexandria Hotel property. A description of the property is set forth in the complaint, showing that the hotel is so erected as to leave certain light wells or open spaces to give light and air to the rooms contained in said building; that the light spaces referred to have walls on only three sides. It is then set forth that for the purposes of determining the assessable value of said property, the assessor of the county of Los Angeles adopted the method of computing the cubic contents of the building erected upon the real property possessed by the plaintiff; that in so doing the assessor included all the light and air courts existing between the extra walls of the building, and figured the same as though said light and air courts were built in with solid construction, etc., the same as the rooms contained in the hotel building. It is then alleged that it was the rule of the assessor, in determining the method of computation for assessment purposes, to exclude from his computation all of that portion of the light and air courts the cubic contents of which exceed 10 per cent. of the entire cubic contents of buildings. It is further alleged by the plaintiff upon information and belief that the cubic contents of the light and air courts in the building erected upon the real property described in plaintiff's complaint is considerably in excess of 10 per cent. of the entire cubic contents of the buildings erected upon the real property. It is then alleged that the assessor, in making his computation, failed to exclude from the cubic contents of the hotel building all that portion of the light and air courts in excess of 10 per cent., etc.; that the failure to exclude such portion of the light and air courts by the assessor was owing to the mistaken belief of the assessor that in his calculations, the cubic contents of the light and air spaces had been excluded. The complaint then sets forth that the alleged error in computation was not discovered by the plaintiff until in April, 1925, after the taxes referred to had all been paid, and that the plaintiff could not have discovered the mistake by reasonable diligence; that the plaintiff paid said taxes, together with the erroneous tax or the amount assessed by the assessor upon said light and air courts without knowledge, at the time of the payment, that the taxes were erroneously assessed and without knowledge that the taxes were assessed upon the said spaces, etc. The complaint then sets forth a schedule of the property assessed, showing that the property referred to was described on the assessment roll as follows:

This is followed by the amount of taxes for the respective years, which is not material herein.

The complaint contains no allegation that any application was ever made to the board of equalization for a reduction in value of any of the properties assessed. The whole cause of complaint is based upon the assumption that the assessments were made upon nonexisting property.

[1,2] There is nothing in the complaint from which the conclusion can be drawn that there was any discrimination made by the assessor in assessing the Alexandria Hotel property. The complaint is entirely silent as to whether other like property was or was not, during the same period of time, assessed in the same manner. There is no allegation in the complaint that the amount of taxes paid by the plaintiff was in excess of the amount of taxes which should have been paid by the plaintiff on the true assessable value of the properties involved. In fact, the cause of complaint is not that the plaintiff has paid more taxes than it should have paid, that the property has been assessed too high, that the assessor was guilty of any discrimination, or that any other like property has been assessed at a lower figure. The only cause of complaint is that in determining the assessable value of the property, the assessor included in his calculations air and light spaces, whereas it is alleged:

"It was the rule of said assessor, in determining the said method of computation for assessment purposes, to exclude from his computation all of that portion of said light and air courts the cubic contents of which exceeded ten per cent. of the entire cubic contents of the building or buildings."

It does not appear from the complaint that the assessor followed that rule during any of the years referred to, or that any other buildings were assessed by the assessor of Los Angeles county by figuring the cubic contents thereof, and then excluded the air and light spaces exceeding 10 per cent., etc. The copy of the assessment roll contained in the complaint which we have set forth herein shows clearly that the assessment was levied only against the real estate and the improvements thereon possessed by the plaintiff, the improvements being described only as to the value. The accuracy of this value is not contested. If the assessment is not too great, if the value placed upon the improvements is not disproportionate to other like property in the county of Los Angeles, if there has been no discrimination between the property possessed by the plaintiff, and other property of like character, if no extra burden has been cast upon the plaintiff over and above that borne by other taxpayers, it does not appear in just what manner the plaintiff has been injured or how the assessment has been rendered discriminatory, illegal or unjust. It may be true, as contended by the appellant, that if the light and air spaces had been excluded from the cubic contents of the Alexandria Hotel, a somewhat lessened value might have been placed upon the improvements referred to, but that does not lead to the conclusion that the assessment is excessive or is unjust or is discriminatory. The question to be determined is not whether the assessor used an erroneous method, or even whether the assessor made a mistake in the method employed by him in ascertaining the value of the property to be assessed, but whether the plaintiff has paid taxes upon his property which in law and in justice should not have been paid. True, the complaint alleges that by reason of the mistake of the assessor taxes were illegally assessed, and that there has been unlawfully set down and collected from plaintiff during the years referred to the aggregate amount for which the plaintiff prayed judgment; but the conclusions drawn by the appellant are not supported by the facts. There is nothing illegal or void or unlawful in the assessment so far as the complaint sets forth any facts, nor is there any double assessment, as concluded by the pleader. All that is set forth is contained in the simple statement, if the allegations be correct, that the method of computing the cubic contents of the Alexandria

Hotel was erroneous in not excluding the open-air spaces. If the assessed value of the property is just, and there is no allegation that it is unjust, there is no basis for the conclusion that the assessment was either "erroneous, fraudulent, illegal or void." There is nothing in the complaint from which the trial court could conclude that the plaintiff had been required to pay a tax based upon an unjust assessment or based upon an assessment which assessed the plaintiff's property at a higher value than other like property, or based upon an assessment discriminatory in any manner whatever. The only conclusion at which the trial court could arrive from the allegations in the complaint would be (following strictly the allegations of the complaint) that perhaps plaintiff would not have been required to pay all the taxes that it did pay had the assessor excluded the open-air spaces, and not that the plaintiff had paid or been required to pay excessive taxes or any amount of taxes that it should not have paid. The complaint is entirely wanting as to any facts from which a trial court could conclude that the Alexandria Hotel, for assessment purposes, was not worth every dollar of the value placed upon it by the assessor, and justly subject to the taxes levied thereon. If it be conceded that the assessor made a mistake in not excluding the open-air spaces, and that he had intended to exclude the open-air spaces in figuring the cubic contents of the Alexandria Hotel, yet as there has been no complaint made that the value of the hotel as ascertained by the assessor, was excessive no legal cause of action is set forth. In order for the plaintiff to have been injured, the plaintiff must have been required to pay taxes in excess of that which it should have paid, not merely that by reason of an error in computation made by the assessor it was required to pay more than otherwise would have been the case.

The answer to plaintiff's contention may be stated in a different manner: If the assessed valuation of plaintiff's property is not greater than it should have been, the plaintiff has not been legally injured because, perchance, it might have been relieved of the payment of some of its taxes had the assessor not committed the alleged mistake. That is the sum and substance of the plaintiff's alleged cause of action. We do not find anything in section 3804, of the Political Code which would relieve the plaintiff under such circumstances. The reasoning of this court and the authorities cited in the case of Wild Goose Country Club v. County of Butte, 60 Cal. App. 339, 212 P. 711, is a complete answer to plaintiff's contention. Among other things, it is said in that case, in speaking of the determination of the equalization board, that it "cannot be avoided unless the board has proceeded arbitrarily and in willful disregard of the law intended for its guidance and control, with the evident purpose of imposing unequal burdens upon certain of the taxpayers," is most pertinent to the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint in this action, nothing of that kind being alleged. The opinion further contains the following language: "In the absence of evidence tending to show the value of plaintiff's lands or of other lands in the county, the premises were wanting from which a conclusion could be drawn by the board that inequality of assessments existed" (citing authorities). This applies with striking force to the plaintiff's complaint. Nothing is said about the value of other property. Not a single fact is set forth showing that other property was not likewise assessed during the three years involved. The plaintiff has not shown by any facts alleged that its property was assessed at a higher rate or higher proportion of its value than other property in the county of Los Angeles. We do not think it necessary to review the authorities cited by appellant, further than to state that a reading thereof shows that they were all based upon dissimilar circumstances, to wit, excessive valuation of property, discrimination or inequalities in assessment by which an unjust burden had been cast upon the complaining taxpayer.

An extended review of the authorities is unnecessary. It is sufficient to state that the following cases, among others, support the judgment of the trial court, to wit: Birch v. Orange County (Cal. App.) 262 P. 788; Wild Goose Country Club v. County of Butte, 60 Cal. App. 339, 212 P. 711; Globe Grain & Milling Co. v. Los Angeles County, 62 Cal. App. 297, 216 P. 631; Luce v. City of San Diego, 198 Cal. 405, 245 P. 196; Los Angeles G. & E. v. County of Los Angeles, 162 Cal. 164, 121 P. 384, 9 A. L. R. 1277.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

WHALEN v. YANK, County Clerk.
(Civ. 3620.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 25, 1928.

Mandamus $\S$ 3(3)—Mandamus would not lie to compel clerk to enter judgment for treble damages, where actual damages were awarded legal remedy being adequate (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1086).

Where plaintiff in action for negligently setting fire to her property was awarded verdict for actual damages only, clerk on application to enter judgment in her favor for treble damages was without authority to either enlarge or abridge scope of judgment, and writ of mandate to compel him to enter treble damages, therefore, would not lie, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1086; plaintiff having a speedy and adequate remedy at law.

Application by Eva M. Whalen for writ of mandate prayed to be directed to Errol A. Yank, as County Clerk of the County of Shasta, State of California, and ex officio Clerk of the Superior Court thereof, to compel him to enter judgment for treble damages in her favor, based on a judgment recovered by her. Writ denied.

Carter & Smith, of Redding, for petitioner.
Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an original application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent to enter judgment for treble damages in favor of petitioner in an action prosecuted by her against the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company and others. The case was tried before the court, without a jury, and the court found that, on August 8, 1926, the defendants negligently set fire to "weeds, grass, and vegetation" growing on the plaintiff's land and negligently suffered the fire to spread and destroy the plaintiff's barn; that by reason of such negligence "plaintiff has suffered the loss of her said barn and has thereby suffered actual damages in the sum of $573.38," the actual value of the barn. The court made the following conclusions of law and direction for entry of judgment:

"That plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the defendants * * * in the sum of $573.38 as actual damages suffered by her as the result of the destruction of her barn, as hereinabove found, together with her costs of suit incurred in this action.

"Let judgment be entered accordingly."

It appears from respondent's return to the alternative writ of mandate herein that the conclusions of law, as originally drafted, contained the following:

"That the defendants are liable to the plaintiff to treble damages in the premises, pursuant to the provisions of section 3346a of the Civil Code and section 3344 of the Political Code of the state of California."

The return further shows that the trial judge struck this paragraph from the draft of the findings and conclusions before the same were filed; that immediately after the findings were filed the respondent entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $573.38; that "the judgment so entered * * * was prepared and presented to respondent, for use in entering judgment in said action, by counsel for plaintiff, the petitioner herein."

Six days after the entry of such judgment the petitioner made demand upon respondent to enter judgment in her favor in the sum of $1,720.14, being for treble damages. On respondent's refusal to comply with the demand, this proceeding was commenced. Thereafter, September 1, 1928, the petitioner herein, as plaintiff in the action for damages, filed a notice of appeal to this court from the judgment entered by the clerk in that action. Section 3346a of the Civil Code and section 3344 of the Political Code are identical in language and read as follows:

"Every person negligently setting fire to his own woods, or negligently suffering any fire to extend beyond his own land, is liable in treble damages to the party injured."

Since the case is on appeal to this court from the judgment entered therein by the clerk, on the hearing of which appeal the matters involved may be more fully presented, it is not deemed proper unnecessarily to express an opinion whether or not the plaintiff is entitled, under the provisions quoted, to treble damages. The facts found by the court do not bring the case within the strict terms of those provisions, because the fire was not set on the defendants' land and did not extend therefrom to plaintiff's or other lands. Those facts apparently bring the case within the terms of the Forestry Act. Stats. 1905, p. 235. Section 14 of that act provides:

"Every person, who willfully, maliciously or negligently sets on fire or causes or procures to be set on fire any woods, brush, prairies, grass, grain or stubble on any lands not his own, * * * whereby any property of another is injured or destroyed, * * * shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

Section 18, as amended in 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 234), provides:

"In addition to the penalties provided in sections fourteen, fifteen, sixteen and seventeen of this act, the United States, state, county, or private owners, whose property is injured or destroyed by such fires may recover in a civil action, double the amount of damages suffered if the fires occurred through willfulness, malice or negligence."

On the submission of the case for decision it became the duty of the trial court to determine whether the case made by the plaintiff warranted a recovery of treble damages under the sections of the Civil and Political Codes, of double damages under the provisions of the Forestry Act, or of actual damages only under general provisions of law, and the court evidently decided in favor of such actual damages. If it be conceded that the court erroneously construed the law applicable to the facts, it does not follow that a ministerial officer has authority to correct the erroneous judicial act of the trial court. "The written findings of fact and conclusions of law constitute the decision of the court and judgment must be entered in accordance therewith." Prothero v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 439, 238 P. 357. "Since, in entering a judgment on a verdict or findings, the clerk performs a ministerial duty, he may neither enlarge nor abridge the scope of the judgment. * * * In so far as he departs from the decision rendered, his action is void and may be set aside and corrected at any time." 14 Cal. Jur. 920; City and County v. Brown, 153 Cal. 644, 650, 96 P. 281. "In the generality of cases, to an intelligent clerk, the conclusions of law will be sufficient guidance for the entry of a correct judgment." Takekawa v. Hole, 170 Cal. 323, 324, 149 P. 593. The judgment entered by the clerk in this case is in strict accordance with the conclusions of law and he has no authority to vacate it and enter a different judgment.

It may be observed further that a writ of mandate should issue only in "cases where there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, in the ordinary course of law." Code Civ. Proc. § 1086. A motion in the action affords a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy for the correction of a judgment entered by the clerk contrary to the decision of the court. City and County v. Brown, supra.

The petition for a writ of mandate is denied.

NEWTON et al. v. MARSH, Judge of the Superior Court. (Civ. 6171.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 25, 1928.

1. Exceptions, bill of ~~53~~(7)—In original proceeding to compel judge to settle bill of exceptions differently, court held confined to question whether there was testimony supporting statements objected to.

In original proceeding for writ of mandate to compel judge of superior court to settle bill of exceptions different from the one allowed by him, court was confined to question whether there is testimony supporting statements contained in portion of bill of exceptions giving rise to proceedings, in absence of showing that petitioners suggested any statement in lieu of portion to which objection was lodged or of any showing that any matter explanatory of or in limitation of any part thereof was requested.

2. Exceptions, bill of ~~51~~—Trial judge should certify correct bill of exceptions to give litigants every reasonable opportunity of presenting cases on merits.

It is the function of the trial judge to certify a correct bill of exceptions, and he should lean in favor of giving to litigants every reasonable opportunity of presenting their cases on the merits.

Application of Jesse Newton and another for writ of mandate to be directed to S. M. Marsh, Judge of the Superior Court of San Diego County, to compel said judge to settle bill of exceptions different from that allowed by him. Writ denied.

F. L. Richardson, of San Diego, for petitioners.

J. C. Hizar, of San Diego, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an original proceeding by which it is sought, through the medium of the writ of mandate, to compel the respondent judge to settle a bill of exceptions different from the one allowed by him on the claim of petitioners that a portion of the present bill is "contrary and diametrically opposed to the evidence introduced." The portion objected to reads as follows:

"That from the testimony of John H. Landes, city clerk, and H. D. Brodie, former city clerk and one of the defendants, and from the books of the city of Oceanside, that there was in the 'Water Fund' on the 1st day of January, 1924, an overdraft, or deficit, in the amount of $1,229.95; that on December 31, 1924, there was in said 'Water Fund' $2,025.26; that on December 31, 1925, there was in said 'Water Fund' $2,982.07, and that there was in said 'Water Fund' on December 31, 1926, $3,640.88. That there was collected and paid into the 'Redemption Fund' for taxes of the year 1924, collected in the year 1925, $514.29; in the year 1926, $1,754.98, and in the year 1927, $533.91."

We have examined the transcript of the testimony, in accordance with the understanding between counsel, and deem it material to summarize the state of the record with respect to the disputed points, but before doing so it may aid in a general understanding of the subject-matter to say that the action in which judgment went against these petitioners in the trial court was one to compel the city trustees to pay into the treasury about $2,000 which they had ordered paid from the water fund of the city of Oceanside in satisfaction of a judgment obtained against the city for water pipe sold and delivered to it. With this preliminary statement it appears that at the trial the cashbook of the city for the years 1924, 1925, 1926, and 1927 was introduced with the statement by the respondent judge that counsel had better call the attention of the witness J. H. Landes to any portions of the book which he desired "looked into or emphasized." Referring to some record (which we must presume was the cashbook), this witness testified that there was in the water fund $2,025.26 on December 31, 1924; $2,982.07 on December 31, 1925; and $3,640.88 on December 31, 1926. The witness Brodie testified that in the year 1925 there was paid into the city in the redemption of taxes of 1924, including interest, and penalties, $514.29 and in 1926 for the same purposes $1,754.89, and estimated that in 1927 $533.91 was paid in for like purposes. The witness Landes testified that limiting the figures to taxes, the amounts named by Brodie were not correct, and attempted an explanation which he was not permitted to make, but did say that there was a difference between taxes and special assessments, and that he took the actual amount of the taxes for the year 1924, without counting interest or penalty. On cross-examination the witness Brodie testified that these taxes were not delinquent until "after '24 had expired," and in answer to another question that "the '24 was levied for the expense of '25."

[1, 2] In the absence of a showing that the petitioners here suggested any statement in lieu of the portion to which objection is lodged, and in the absence of any showing that any matter explanatory of or in limitation of any part thereof was requested, we are confined undoubtedly to the question of whether there is testimony supporting the statements contained in the paragraph which gives rise to this proceeding. Certainly we cannot be required to search the record and draft either for counsel, or the court below, what might seem to us to be a more literal and proper statement to be included in the bill. It is the function of the trial judge to certify a correct bill, and, as has been said, he should "lean in favor of giving to litigants every reasonable opportunity of presenting their cases on the merits * * *" (Flagg v. Puterbaugh, 98 Cal. 134, 32 P. 863); but where, as here, every statement included in the portion objected to is literally true and there has been no refusal to include other testimony or to settle and certify a true bill, it must be held that petitioners have failed to instance a cause wherein this court should assume to command.

Writ denied.

In re MESMER'S ESTATE. (Civ. 6380.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 22, 1928.

As Modified on Denial of Petition for Rehearing Oct. 24, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 19, 1928.

1. Divorce ⇨236, 249(2)—Agreement as to alimony and disposition of property held binding.

Agreement between parties to divorce action, by which husband was given community property and monthly payments for wife's allowance were provided for as "allowed by the court," subject to stated maximum, with provision for selection of site for house by designated third party in case of disagreement, held competent and binding on the parties.

2. Divorce ⇨247—Agreement of husband to pay alimony allowed by court, together with court's order for payment monthly during wife's lifetime, required payment after husband's death (Civ. Code, § 1647).

Agreement between parties to divorce suit, by which husband received all community property and agreed to pay wife alimony which court should allow, together with order of court in divorce suit, approving agreement and requiring payment of monthly sum to wife during her lifetime, or until she remarried, entitled wife to recover monthly payments so provided for after husband's death, in view of interpretation placed on agreement, construction of contract being determined in light of circumstances and subject-matter under Civ. Code, § 1647.

3. Divorce ⇨236—Husband may by agreement bind his personal representatives for payment of alimony during wife's lifetime.

Husband may by agreement bind his personal representatives for the payment of alimony to his wife during her lifetime; amount, terms of payment, and length of time of payment of alimony being determinable by consent of parties, subject to ratification of the court.

4. Divorce ⇨247—Order directing monthly payments to wife during her lifetime held binding on estate of husband, who had previously consented to pay alimony allowed by court.

Where husband in divorce suit entered into agreement with wife, in which he consented to pay wife alimony allowed by the court, court's order, directing monthly payments of alimony for each month thereafter during her lifetime, was binding on husband's estate after his death.

5. Executors and administrators ⇨102—Husband's executors, on allowance of monthly alimony to wife, should set aside or invest sufficient funds, but purchase of annuity was improper.

On allowance against husband's estate of wife's claim for $75 per month alimony during her lifetime, purchase of annuity by executors was improper, because involving loss of large sum belonging to the estate, and executors were required instead to set aside sufficient funds of the estate to make monthly payments, or to invest funds income from which would be sufficient to pay alimony.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Proceeding by Elizabeth G. Mesmer against the estate of A. J. Mesmer, deceased, for the allowance of a claim, opposed by Roy W. Ballard. From an order approving the claim, and directing the executors to purchase an annuity in claimant's favor, contestant appeals. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part, with directions.

Wallace Rutherford, of Napa, for appellant. Mahoney & Sweeney, of San Francisco, for respondent Mesmer.

Gillogley, Crofton & Payne, of San Francisco, for respondents Smith and Burdick.

BEAUMONT, Justice pro tem. A. J. Mesmer, decedent herein, and Elizabeth G. Mesmer, were married in June, 1897. In August, 1917, while an action for divorce, instituted by the wife, was pending, the parties entered into an agreement regarding their property and providing for the maintenance of the wife. This agreement was apparently carefully drawn, and covers 11 pages of the printed record. It goes into detail concerning the property, and sets out minutely items concerning certain expenses and taxes. By the terms of the agreement all of the community property was conveyed to defendant. The agreement provides in effect that defendant will pay plaintiff "alimony, and costs and attorney's fees allowed by the court, such alimony not to exceed the sum of $200 cash and $75 per month." The defendant further agreed that he would make a will in which he would leave plaintiff one-fourth of all the property of which he might die possessed, provided plaintiff should survive him. It was also agreed that the parties were, within a fixed period, to select a lot with a house thereon, which was to be used as a home for plaintiff; that this was to cost not less than $2,000, and not more than $2,750; that, if the parties could not agree upon a place, then B. A. Smith was to select a location, and his selection was to be binding on the parties; that the property was to be purchased by the defendant in his own name and at his own expense, and that he was to convey to plaintiff a life estate therein; that defendant, during his lifetime, was to pay taxes, insurance, and repairs within a fixed limit. "In consideration of the foregoing agreement" (referring to the agreement between the said plaintiff and defendant) and certain valuable consideration, B. A. Smith guaranteed that defendant would pay for the maintenance of said Elizabeth G. Mesmer at the times and in the manner required by the terms of said agreement, and any decree "that might be entered in the said divorce action," but limited his guaranty to payments that would become due during the lifetime of defendant. At the end of this guaranty agreement, said Smith states that all his liability shall end, "except as to such liability as may have been incurred hereunder previous to the death of said Alphonse J. Mesmer, and which was due and payable previous to the death of said Alphonse J. Mesmer."

On the day of the execution of both of the foregoing agreements, August 23, 1917, the divorce action was tried. The court found the agreement settling the rights of the parties was reasonable, and approved it, and further found that by reason of this agreement there was "no community property of the marriage of the said plaintiff and defendant to be divided between the parties to this action, or to be assigned to either of the parties." The court ordered defendant "to pay to said Elizabeth G. Mesmer, the sum of $200 * * * upon the entry of this decree, and the further sum of $75 per month in gold coin of the United States hereafter during the lifetime of the said plaintiff, or until she remarries." The decree was granted on the ground of extreme cruelty, and recites as follows:

"Findings herein and notice of decision and judgment having been expressly waived by the respective parties to this action, by oral consent in open court, entered in the minutes of the court."

The decree was never modified, annulled, nor appealed from. A. J. Mesmer made all the payments required under the decree until the date of his death, more than eight years thereafter. A. J. Mesmer made a will, and by the terms of this will Elizabeth G. Mesmer was to have one-fourth of said A. J. Mesmer's estate, the remainder to go to Clara Mesmer, who was his wife at the time of his death. Clara Mesmer, while the matter of her husband's estate was pending, married Roy W. Ballard. Before distribution was ordered, Clara Ballard died. Said Roy W. Ballard appears herein as residuary legatee and executor of his wife's will.

Elizabeth G. Mesmer filed her claim against the estate for payment to her of $75 a month during her life. This claim was allowed by the executors, one of whom is B. A. Smith, the former partner of the decedent, and the same B. A. Smith named in the agreements referred to herein. When the matter of settling the final account was before the court, testimony was taken. One of the witnesses was B. A. Smith, who testified he had known A. J. Mesmer for more than 30 years; that he and decedent Mesmer were for some years partners in business, and that decedent, at the time of the property settlement with Elizabeth G. Mesmer, was worth approximately $100,000. The court approved the claim, ordered that the payments due since the death of Alphonse J. Mesmer be paid, and directed the executors to purchase an annuity from some responsible life insurance company for the payment of $75 per month to Elizabeth G. Mesmer, or that the executors pay in cash to said Elizabeth G. Mesmer a less amount than the amount required to purchase such annuity. Roy W. Ballard has appealed from the order allowing the claim, and from that part of the order directing the executors to purchase an annuity.

[1] Appellant sets out in his brief numerous points for reversal of the orders. All of these, however, are but variations of two contentions. The first is that the decree in the divorce action directing payments to Elizabeth G. Mesmer had no binding effect after the death of A. J. Mesmer. The agreement between the parties in the divorce action shows that plaintiff relinquished all her right in the community property; that, in consideration thereof, defendant was to make certain arrangements for the support of plaintiff. Most of the provisions of this agreement were definite, evidencing the fact that the parties had reached conclusions thereon. Some of them, however, were incomplete. For example, it was not certain as to the selection of a location for a home for plaintiff. If the parties could not agree as to this, then B. A. Smith was to make the selection, and his choice was to be binding on the parties. Likewise the amounts, time, and duration of the payments for the maintenance of plaintiff were not determined, but were to be such as were "allowed by the court, such alimony not to exceed $200 cash and $75 per month." It was proper for these matters, both as to the selection of a home for plaintiff and as to provisions for support of plaintiff, the parties so desiring, to be left to the judgment of other persons, and the action of such persons is binding upon the parties to such agreement. M. E. Church v. Seitz, 74 Cal. 287, 15 P. 839. "An agreement that the question of alimony should be referred to a member of the court is not objectionable." 19 C. J. 252. In Carson v. Murray, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 483, the court said:

"I cannot see that there is anything in the contract, as proved, to render it invalid. It appears to have been an agreement for an immediate separation; the amount of alimony to the wife, and the particular mode of carrying it into effect, to be settled by arbitrators selected by the parties."

[2] As an aid to the construction of the contract, we may take into consideration the circumstances under which it was made and the matter to which it relates. Civ. Code, § 1647. Elizabeth G. Mesmer had sued for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. There was community property, consisting of real property in Oakland and Richmond, a partnership interest in a shoe business, and stock in various corporations. Her husband was worth $100,000. She had lived with him as the wife of his youth until middle age, more than 20 years. If she should secure a decree of divorce, she had reason to expect to receive more than one-half of the community property. Gorman v. Gorman, 134 Cal. 378, 66 P. 313. By her agreement, made in consideration of relinquishing all right in the community property, she was to receive, in addition to the payments to be ordered by the court and the promise of defendant to leave one-fourth of his estate to her, a life estate in a home. On the whole, the contract bespeaks a desire on the part of A. J. Mesmer to provide for his then wife for her lifetime, and the order of the court to that end, fixing the duration of the payments for life or until she should remarry, was consistent with the tenor of the agreement, as well as within the specific covenant that the court should determine the allowance she was to receive.

The acts of the parties as set forth in the statement of facts herein show the interpretation they placed on the agreement. Without taking the time to advert to all of these, we shall point out that the record discloses that the parties, by oral consent in open court, waived findings and notice of decision; that B. A. Smith, whose agreement of guaranty was attached to the contract between the parties and was made "in consideration" thereof, expressly limited himself to payments that might be due previous to the death of A. J. Mesmer, thereby indicating that he contemplated payments might become due and payable subsequent to Mesmer's death. The same B. A. Smith was one of the executors of decedent's will, and as such executor allowed the claim of Elizabeth G. Mesmer, again placing his construction upon the agreement.

In Storey v. Storey, 125 Ill. 608, 18 N. E. 329, 1 L. R. A. 320, 8 Am. St. Rep. 417, the husband having consented to the entry of a decree for the payment of a certain sum per annum to his wife "for so long as she may be and remain sole and unmarried," the court held the estate of the deceased husband responsible for the payments due after his death. In that case a bond and trust deed were given to secure the payments ordered in the decree. The court said:

"The decree, the bond, and the trust deed, which all bear the same date, must be regarded as one transaction, and must be construed together in determining the intention of the parties in making their agreement for alimony."

Again, in the same case, the court remarked:

"Here the equities in appellant's favor appeal strongly against the withdrawal of the support provided for her by the agreement of her husband. * * * By her and his joint exertions the value of his fortune had reached nearly a half million of dollars at the time of the divorce."

[3] "It is generally held that the husband may, by agreement, bind his personal representatives for the payment of alimony to the wife during her life." 19 C. J. 279. "While it is true that husband and wife cannot lawfully enter into an agreement for divorce, yet it is well settled that the amount of alimony which the husband is to pay to the wife, the terms of the payment and the length of time during which such payment is to continue, may be all arranged between them by consent, subject to the ratification of the court. * * * Similarly, where by the consent of the parties alimony is awarded for the natural life of the wife, it continues to subsist even after the husband's death." 1 R. C. L. 935, and cases cited.

In Stratton v. Stratton, 77 Me. 373, 52 Am. Rep. 779, the parties entered into an agreement that two referees should determine what alimony a wife should receive and how she should receive it and that the decision should be binding on the parties. In the decree of divorce the court ordered that the payments should be as provided in the award of the referees. After the defendant's death no payments were made. Action was brought against his administrator. On appeal, it was said that:

"The court, in adopting the award of the referees as a part of its decree, gave alimony to the wife 'during her natural life.'"

[4] This case presents a quite similar situation to that before the court in Parker v. Parker, 193 Cal. 478, 225 P. 447, as to the question of consent of the parties. There the parties stipulated that:

"If a decree for divorce should be awarded to either party, the court, instead of dividing the property of said parties between them, might provide for the separate maintenance of defendant by awarding to her certain property for life, and that plaintiff pay defendant such monthly allowance and secure the same by a lien upon such property of plaintiff as in the discretion of the court should seem proper."

Thereupon the court ordered that:

"Plaintiff pay to said defendant the sum of $50 on the 1st day of each and every month during the remainder of her natural life."

The judgment was upheld on appeal, the Supreme Court saying relative to the award:

"It rests, not upon the obligation which the law imposes upon a husband to support his wife, but upon the contract of the parties thereto."

Here we find that because of the agreement between the parties there was no community property to divide, but that the defendant, having been given, by the terms of said agreement, all of the community property, had consented that the court should fix the payments he was to make for the support of his then wife. This the court did, ordering payments to be made on the 10th day of each month thereafter during the lifetime of the wife. The decedent husband having consented to be bound by any order the court should make, his estate is bound by the order the court did make.

[5] Appellant's second contention is that the court should not have directed the purchase of an annuity, for the reason that the sum necessary therefor, about $13,000, will be lost entirely to the estate. We are of the opinion that this is sound. The purpose of A. J. Mesmer will be subserved by having the executors make the payments prescribed by the court. These payments will have to be made from the general assets of the estate, no provision therefor having been made in the will. In the interest of justice, therefore, it seems to us proper that the executors be directed to set aside sufficient of the funds of the estate to pay $75 per month to Elizabeth G. Mesmer as long as she lives, or until she remarries, or invest such sum, under approval of the superior court acting in its probate jurisdiction, as will produce sufficient income to make such payments.

As to the allowance of the claim of Elizabeth G. Mesmer, the order is affirmed. As to that part of the order directing the purchase of an annuity, it is reversed, with directions to proceed in accordance with the opinion expressed herein.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

94 Cal. App. 124

SALTER v. MARSH. (Civ. 3557.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 24, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 22, 1928.

1. Compromise and settlement §23(3)—Evidence held to show mistake in computation of amount due plaintiff from defendant, and that acceptance of computed amount was not by way of compromise.

Evidence held to sustain finding of mistake in computation of amount due plaintiff from defendant, and that payment of computed amount by defendant was not accepted by plaintiff by way of compromise in full satisfaction of debt.

2. Escrows §5—Escrow instruction held not to have constituted compromise agreement whereby plaintiff accepted in full payment amount less than due (Civ. Code, § 1542).

Escrow instruction delivered to title guaranty company held not to have constituted an agreement of compromise whereby plaintiff accepted in full payment less than amount owing to her by defendant, but at most amounted only to a form of release which, under Civ. Code, § 1542, would have released defendant only upon payment of full amount due.

3. Assumpsit, action of §7—Assumpsit will lie to recover sum mistakenly omitted in computing amount due plaintiff by defendant on theory of implied promise.

Where plaintiff accepted from defendant amount less than sum actually owing, by reason of mistake in computation of such amount, held, that an action of assumpsit to recover remainder of amount due will lie, since law raises implied promise to pay amount owed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Amanda Meta Salter against Robert Marsh for money had and received. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Clyde C. Shoemaker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, of Los Angeles (John N. Cramer, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff had judgment in an action of assumpsit for the sum of $10,000 and interest thereon from the 13th day of February, 1924, from which judgment the defendant appeals.

The complaint in the action contains three counts. The first count in the complaint alleges that on June 13, 1924, the defendant was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $42,612.50, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from February 13, 1924, amounting to the sum of $994.29. That on said last-mentioned date defendant paid to plaintiff on account thereof the sum of $33,379.80, leaving a balance due plaintiff of $10,000, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from February 13, 1924. That said last-mentioned sum has not been paid and is wholly due. The second cause of action alleges that on June 13, 1924, defendant was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $10,233.33, for and on account of the money received by defendant to the use of plaintiff, no part of which has been paid.

The court sustained a motion for nonsuit as to the third cause of action, and as the propriety of said motion is not involved upon this appeal, the third alleged cause of action is omitted.

The original answer of the defendant denies the indebtedness to the plaintiff, and then, by an amended answer, sets up that on or about the 11th day of June, 1924, the plaintiff, by way of compromise, agreed to accept the sum of $32,612.50, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from February 13, 1924, in full satisfaction of the indebtedness then owing by the defendant to the plaintiff.

[1] The court found that on the 13th day of June, 1924, the defendant was justly indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $42,612.50, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from February 13, 1924. That on said 13th day of June, 1924, the defendant paid to the plaintiff on account thereof the sum of $33,379.80, leaving a balance due the plaintiff in the sum of $10,000, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 13th day of February, 1924, and that no part thereof had since been paid, and the same was wholly due. The court further found that there was no compromise or agreement or settlement entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant whereby the plaintiff, for a valuable consideration, or otherwise, agreed to accept from the defendant, in full satisfaction of the indebtedness owing to her by the defendant, the sum of $32,615.50, with interest thereon from the 13th day of February, 1924, in lieu of the total indebtedness which then existed in the sum of $42,612.50. The court further found that the plaintiff accepted the said sum of $32,615.50, with interest thereon, instead of the sum of $42,612.50, by reason of a mistake made by one W. E. Mitchell in computing the amount due the plaintiff from the defendant. The court further found that it was not true, as alleged in the defendant's answer, that the plaintiff and defendant had entered into an agreement of compromise whereby the plaintiff agreed to accept said sum of $32,612.50, with interest, in full payment of the sum of $42,612.50, with interest, owing by the defendant to the plaintiff. The court also found that the paper hereinafter set forth called "escrow agreement" was signed by the plaintiff in ignorance of the full amount due, and also in ignorance of the fact that W. E. Mitchell had made a mistake in calculating the amount owing from the defendant to the plaintiff, and that such mistake was not discovered by either W. E. Mitchell or the plaintiff until after the 19th day of June, 1924. The court also found that the defendant was aware of the mistake herein referred to. We have not followed the language of the findings, but have set forth the substance and effect thereof. Upon this appeal the appellant urges that an action in assumpsit will not lie, and also that the findings of the court are not sustained by the evidence.

The facts disclosed by the record are substantially as follows:

On the 13th day of February, 1924, there was pending in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles an action numbered 104,972, between the parties to this action, wherein the plaintiff in this action was plaintiff and the defendant in this action was also defendant. In that action the plaintiff was demanding judgment from the defendant for the sum of $90,000, with interest thereon from June 19, 1921, for attorney's fees and costs, and that certain pledged property be ordered sold. On the date mentioned the plaintiff and the defendant in this action entered into an agreement of compromise and settlement whereby the defendant paid to the plaintiff the sum of $40,000 in cash and agreed to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $10,- 000 on or before September 1, 1924, $10,000 on or before February 1, 1925, $15,000 on or before September 1, 1925, and $7,612.50 on or before February 1, 1926, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum until paid, in full satisfaction and discharge of the indebtedness claimed by the plaintiff in the action numbered 104,972, a list of securities hereinafter mentioned being held by the plaintiff to insure the payment of the sums herein mentioned, which sums aggregate $42,612.50, as the principal sum owing. Prior to the 11th day of June, 1924, the defendant had made some proposals to the plaintiff to accept other securities than those held by her, but these proposals were never acted upon. On the 11th day of June, 1924, the defendant stated to the plaintiff, according to the plaintiff's statement, that he wanted to pay her what he owed her, but wanted her to take some certificates of deposit. What the defendant claimed as a version of this conversation will appear by his testimony later set forth. The plaintiff told the defendant she did not know what the certificates were and did not care to take anything with which she was not familiar. The defendant stated that if she did not want to accept the certificates he would give her cash. It appears that the plaintiff and the defendant went to the office of Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, and in the presence of Mr. Hunsaker some conversation was had relative to paying the amount still owing on the contract of settlement to which we have heretofore referred; Mr. W. J. Hunsaker stating that Mr. Mitchell had attended to the matter, that Mr. Mitchell was out of the office, but that he would telephone to him; the plaintiff testifying that in the presence of Mr. Hunsaker and Mr. Marsh she stated that Mr. Marsh was going to pay the plaintiff what he owed her, together with interest, but desired her to accept in part payment some certificates of deposit, that she did not know what they were, and did not want to take anything she did not know about. Mr. Hunsaker, after saying that Mr. Mitchell had attended to all previous matters connected with the business under consideration, proceeded to call Mr. Mitchell, who returned to the office of Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove. It appears that upon the return of Mr. Mitchell, the plaintiff, the defendant, and Mr. Mitchell went to the private office of Mr. Mitchell; that Mr. Mitchell took the contract to which we have hereinbefore referred, calling for the payment of $42,612.50, together with interest thereon from the date named in the instrument, following the plaintiff's statement that the defendant was proposing to pay her the amount owing and also wanting her to accept as part payment the certificate referred to, and proceeded to compute the amount owing as of the date of June 11, 1924. This computation was made by Mr. Mitchell and set down by him upon a piece of paper which was introduced in evidence and practically beyond question proven to be in the handwriting of Mr. Mitchell. The computation made by Mr. Mitchell on the date mentioned is as follows:

Statement to June 11/24

After this computation was made, the plaintiff, the defendant, and Mr. Mitchell went to the office of the Security Trust & Savings Bank and had some conversation relative to the certificates. It appears that the certificates bore interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum but did not mature for about six months. After some conversation the plaintiff declined to accept the certificates, and stated that she would accept the cash, stating the amount which Mr. Mitchell had computed as being due, to wit, $32,612.50 as principal and interest thereon from the 13th day of February, 1924. The defendant thereupon stated that he would pay the cash, and the writing called the "escrow agreement" was made out, giving the defendant ten days within which to pay said sum. The writing just referred to is in the following words and figures:

"Escrow Instructions No. 545600

"Los Angeles, Cal., June 11, 1924.

"Title Guarantee & Trust Company:

"I hand you herewith note for $100,000.00 executed by Robert Marsh in favor of A. M. Salter, dated September 19th, 1924, and

"Certificate of stock No. 29 for 3,333 $\frac{1}{3}$ shares of the Main, Broadway & Hill Street Investment Company, also "A release of interest until Title Insurance & Trust Company, Trust No. 4232, which you are authorized and instructed to deliver to Robert Marsh or his order when you can hold for my account the sum of \$32,612.50 plus interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum from February 13, 1924, to date of payment to me, and you shall deposit the same in my account in the name of Mrs. A. M. Salter in the main office of the Security Trust & Savings Bank, Los Angeles, Cal., and notify my below mentioned attorneys.

"Your company is hereby relieved of all liability and responsibility in connection with the validity and legality of the certificate of stock above referred to or the transfer of same on the books of the company, and it is understood and agreed that your company is relieved of all liability in connection with the $100,000.00 note above referred to except as to the delivery of same.

"This escrow is to run for a period of ten days from date hereof unless the time limit is extended by mutual written consent of the parties hereto. In the event that the escrow is not consummated within the 10-day period and no such extension has been had, all papers and documents deposited by me herein are to be returned to Hunsaker, Britt and Cosgrove or to Mrs. A. M. Salter on demand of either of them.

"It is agreed and understood that all charges and expenses incurred in connection with this escrow are to be paid by Robert Marsh.

"In the event that the conditions of this escrow have not been complied with at the expiration of the time provided for herein, you are instructed to complete the same at your earliest possible date thereafter, unless I shall have made written demand upon you for the return of all instruments deposited by me.

"Signature: Mrs. A. M. Salter.

"Address: 533 No. Mariposa Ave. L.A.

"Phone: 593201.

"I have read, understood and hereby approved instructions as given above and have examined and approve the instruments and documents called for to be delivered to me, and hereby relieve your company of all liability and responsibility in connection with same except with delivery thereof. Robert Marsh."

During the period mentioned in this writing, the defendant paid the sum therein mentioned, the securities referred to were delivered to him, and the original action which we have heretofore mentioned was dismissed.

Following the discovery of the mistake made by Mr. Mitchell in computing the amount due, this action was commenced; the defendant having previously declined to pay the further sum of $10,000 and the interest accrued thereon.

The answer to the contention that the findings of the court as to the mistake in the computation of the amount owing, and that there was no compromise or agreement to accept less than the amount owing, is completely answered by a summary of the testimony.

William J. Hunsaker, one of the witnesses for the plaintiff, testified that he had been acquainted with W. E. Mitchell for many years; that Mitchell had been connected with the law firm of which the witness Hunsaker was a member, for a long period of time; that he was perfectly familiar with the handwriting of Mr. Mitchell; that the paper containing the computation as hereinbefore set forth in this opinion was wholly in the handwriting of Mr. Mitchell. The witness also testified that he had known the plaintiff for a considerable period of time; that on June 11, 1924, the plaintiff and the defendant came to his office; that upon coming to his office Mr. Marsh stated as follows: "Judge, I am trying to pay or going to pay Mrs. Salter what I owe her, and I want her to take some $25,000 in certificates of deposit of the Continental National Bank, and she wants to talk to you about it." I can't recall all that was said; there was considerable discussion on that subject. I remember that I said to Mr. Marsh, or inquired of Mr. Marsh, why he wanted to give her certificates of deposit; if he could get the certificates of deposit, why couldn't he pay cash. And he said he was making some sort of a three-cornered deal and it was important to him to do it that way. At some stage of the conversation, I telephoned to Mr. Mitchell to come over. When Mr. Mitchell arrived, I said to him that Mr. Marsh was about to settle with Mrs. Salter; that he was familiar with the transaction, having taken care of the compromise, and I would ask him to take the matter, and I think I had, either before they came in or after Mrs. Salter telephoned me, or while they were there, sent out for the office file, and I believe I handed the file to Mr. Mitchell and asked him to take care of the matter. That while Mr. Marsh and Mrs. Salter were in his office discussing the matter with him, there was not anything said or any suggestion made by any one present that Mr. Marsh was to pay or that Mrs. Salter was to receive anything else or other than the full amount of principal and interest to which she was entitled under the compromise agreement of February 13, 1924. The witness further testified that Mr. Mitchell was deceased. The plaintiff testified, in substance, that she and Mr. Marsh went to the office of Mr. Hunsaker; that she stated to Mr. Hunsaker that Mr. Marsh was going to pay off what he owed up to date, with interest, and wanted her to accept in part payment some certificates of deposit; that she did not know anything about certificates; that Mr. Hunsaker stated that Mr. Mitchell had taken care of the transaction for a good many years, and he would call him; that when Mr. Mitchell came in he was told what we were there for; that Mr. Marsh was going to settle up what he owed. Mr. Mitchell was asked to look after the matter. That we then went into Mr. Mitchell's office; upon arriving there I informed him what we were there for. I said Mr. Marsh wanted to pay me in full with interest but he wanted me to accept certain certificates of deposit and I did not know anything about them. Mr. Mitchell said that was for the two of us to decide what we were going to do, and he did not care to decide for either one of us. He said that some officer of some bank should be asked about it and take his word for it. Mr. Mitchell said that we could go over to the Security Trust & Savings Bank, and that he would be over in a few minutes. On arriving at the bank we consulted an officer of the bank. Mr. Marsh said to Mr. Mitchell that it would be quite an accommodation for me to take the certificates of deposit; that they were just as good as cash. While we were in Mr. Mitchell's office, he had the papers before him; I do not know what the papers were that he was examining. He had a pencil in his hand while he was sitting at his desk; I do not remember whether I saw what he was doing; I think I saw him making some marks on the paper but I did not know what they were. Mr. Marsh and I then went over to the Security Trust Bank, and Mr. Mitchell joined us in a few minutes. We spoke about going over to the bank to ask some officer about the certificates of deposit. At the bank Mr. Marsh said to one of the officers that he wanted to offer me some certificates of deposit in part payment of settlement, and I did not seem to feel that I knew what they were, and were not they just as good as cash. Mr. Toll, the officer, said: "Why don't you just give her the money, if she would rather have the money, instead of giving her the certificates of deposit?" Mr. Marsh stated that he could not understand why I wouldn't accept them, and then I told Mr. Toll I did not know anything about them, and I felt I would rather have the cash, and would he accept them, or would he take cash, and he said he wouldn't accept them; that there was no reason why I shouldn't have the cash; and then Mr. Marsh asked him if he wouldn't accept them, and he said no, and then I decided I didn't want them. At the time I saw Mr. Mitchell in his office he was writing on something; I think it was on a white piece of paper; I remember seeing the paper at the Security Bank; he had a little memorandum with him and I recall him saying, "This is the amount." He said, "These are the amounts that are due." I saw the paper again at the Title Guaranty office. The paper was handed to me on June 11th by Mr. Mitchell.

The record shows that, following this conversation, the paper called the "escrow" was made out, the amount entered therein corresponding to Mr. Mitchell's figures.

The witness further testified, in substance, that not one word was ever said to her by Mr. Marsh on June 11, 1924, about the plaintiff accepting less than the amount owing to her, as set forth in the compromise agreement of February 13, 1924. We may here state that the record does not show that the defendant ever made any such proposition to the plaintiff during said period of time, nor does the record show that the defendant ever made any proposition of compromise or settlement on June 11th, at the time of the execution of the so-called escrow paper, asking, suggesting, or intimating to the plaintiff that in paying cash he wanted her to discount the amount owing, or to accept any sum whatever in payment or settlement less than $42,612.50, with interest thereon, as evidenced by the settlement dated February 13, 1924. This all appears from his own testimony, as the following summary will show. The defendant testified: I said, "Mrs. Salter, I would like to submit to you a proposition of paying off and anticipating the contract." She says, "What do you mean?" I said, "Rather than to hold that continuing contract that you have, I would like to submit some contracts that we have on hand and some mortgages in payment of it." "Well," she said, "I wouldn't mind listening to any proposition, and what have you to offer?" I mentioned several contracts on National Boulevard Heights and mortgages. This was preceding the 11th day of June, 1924. Nothing came of these conversations. On June 11th I called up Mrs. Salter and told her I was prepared now to discuss the question of settlement of the contract on a cash basis, and in part payment of cash I had certificates of deposit I wanted her to entertain as part of the cash. She said she did not understand what certificates of deposit were, but would meet me and then go to her attorneys and decide definitely what she would do. She asked me to meet her in the safe deposit department of the Security Trust & Savings Bank where she had her deposit box. After we met, Mrs. Salter said, "What are these certificates of deposit?" I said they were the same as cash to this extent; it was the obligation of the bank to pay money but had to run for a period of six months. And I said, "Mrs. Salter, in discussing these certificates of deposit I consider them the same as cash, so when I am speaking of certificates of deposit, I feel that I am talking cash to you." She asked me what interest they paid, and I told her 4 per cent., but that difference I would pay; I would pay her the difference between 4 and 7 per cent., which would make it identical with cash in so far as the interest was concerned. Mrs. Salter said, "Well, we will go up and see Mr. Mitchell and will decide definitely what cash we will take in complete settlement." We went up to Mr. Hunsaker's office. I said, "How do you do, Mr. Hunsaker?" I said, "We are up with Mrs. Salter regarding a settlement, and as I stated to Mr. Hunsaker, a cash settlement with the exception that I am offering her some certificates of deposit which she wanted to ask Mr. Mitchell or yourself about." Mr. Hunsaker said, "Mr. Mitchell is not in; he is over at the Pacific Finance Building; but I can get him on the phone and have him come over, and he is the man to discuss this matter with because he has handled the matter from the start." So Mr. Hunsaker phoned for Mr. Mitchell to come over. Mr. Hunsaker said, "You are speaking of certificates of deposit, Mr. Marsh. Why don't you use cash instead?" "Well," I said, "I am making a three-cornered deal and taking these certificates of deposit; that is the reason I want to use them." We discussed the matter in a few words. I said I had told Mrs. Salter in discussing it with her that they were the same as cash. In a short time Mr. Mitchell came in. That was all the conversation between Mr. Hunsaker and me. Mrs. Salter and I stayed there and talked just as you will when sitting waiting for some one, and while sitting there, she turned to me and said, "Mr. Marsh, what is the face of the contract or the amount of the full contract?" I said, "About $40,000." I do not recall anything else, only she said, "I don't think very much of certificates of deposit, because I don't know anything about them." When Mr. Mitchell came in, Mr. Hunsaker said, "Mr. Mitchell, Mrs. Salter is here with Mr. Marsh. Mr. Marsh wants to make a settlement with her. Will you handle the proposition?" We then went to Mr. Mitchell's office. Nothing was said about paying the balance in full. The witness further denied that anything was said to Mr. Mitchell that he was there to pay the amount of the contract with interest; Mr. Mitchell gave Mrs. Salter a chair adjoining his desk and sat down at his chair at his desk. Mr. Mitchell asked, "What about these certificates of deposit?" And I explained to him, as I had explained to Mrs. Salter. He said, "What do you mean?" I said, "These certificates of deposit run for six months and bear 4 per cent." I said to Mrs. Salter, "They are the same as cash." He said, "Well, anything that is not cash is not the same as cash;" that they are the obligation of the bank; the only difference is that they bear 4 per cent., and that I would make up the difference. I then turned to Mrs. Salter and said, "Why don't you call up Mr. Toll down to the bank?" She said: "We might do that; that would be the thing to do, because I am satisfied that he could explain it thoroughly." Mr. Mitchell suggested that we go over to the bank and that he would join us a little later on. I did not say to Mr. Mitchell that I wanted to pay the balance in full. I did not, in his office, use any words, in substance, to that effect. After going to the bank, the witness testified that Mr. Mitchell and the plaintiff had a short conversation when they were standing a few feet away from where he was, and then the plaintiff came up with Mr. Mitchell and said, "Well, Mr. Marsh, I have discussed it with Mr. Mitchell. I don't want the certificate of deposit." And he stepped up and said, "Yes, I have so advised her." But she says: "What I will do will be to take cash, and I don't want you to talk to me about any certificates of deposit or anything else but the cash. I will take this amount if you are able to raise the cash. Now, can you do that?" She mentioned the amount and it was $32,612.50. I said, "I can raise the cash." She says, "Well, we will make an escrow right here at the bank." I said, "No, if you are going to make it an escrow, I would rather have you make the escrow at the Continental Bank, because I am arranging a loan there." He says: "I don't know them there at all. I wouldn't advise Mrs. Salter to go to the Continental." He says, "We will either make it here or at the Title Insurance." I said, "Then let's make it the Title Guaranty." He said, "All right." The witness then stated that they then went over to the office of the Title Guaranty Company. Mr. Mitchell said to Mr. Wilson (an officer at the office of the Title Guaranty Company), "We have an escrow that we would like to have you take." He said, "All right; what sort of an escrow is it?" Mr. Mitchell said, "We are making a settlement here and I want to hand you a note and some securities, and Mr. Marsh is to hand in certain moneys." And Mr. Wilson called a stenographer and took out a long pad of yellow paper and began to make notes. Then Mr. Mitchell gave him the details of the transaction and dictated to the stenographer. The escrow was then typewritten. It was handed to Mr. Mitchell, and he read it over aloud, and then we signed it.

The foregoing summary of the testimony contains all that is material and shows beyond controversy that nothing whatever was said between the plaintiff and the defendant at any time, or between the plaintiff and the defendant and Mr. Mitchell, relative to any discount of the amount owing, in order to effect a cash settlement. The whole subject-matter of the conversation hinged about the certificates of deposit, and when the amount of the calculation made by Mr. Mitchell was stated to the defendant, he immediately accepted the same and the ten days was allowed for him to raise the cash. It cannot even be contended that the defendant was negotiating for a discount, as he never even mentioned the subject to the plaintiff. He was talking to her all the time about the certificates and knew all the while that the amount owing was something over $40,000, and when the amount owing was erroneously stated to him by the plaintiff at $32,612.50, instead of $42,612.50, he simply remained quiet and stated he could pay the cash. Was the statement as to the amount owing made by the plaintiff to the defendant the result of a mistake? As heretofore stated, the plaintiff stated to the defendant the amount owing, basing her statement upon what had just been said to her by Mr. Mitchell. We have only to examine the paper upon which Mr. Mitchell made his computation to verify the finding of the court as to the mistake. In the upper left-hand corner of that statement we find the figures: 10,000, 10,000, 15,000, and 7,612.50, added as aggregating 32,612.50. To argue that a mistake is not apparent in this addition is an insult to intelligence. The computations further contained on the paper to which we are referring show that the interest was calculated upon the mistaken principal of $32,612.50. The paper also discloses a further important fact: There is no indication whatever that any discount was carried into the computation. The paper shows the amount of the principal as erroneously computed, the interest thereon, and then the proposed payment of certificates in the sum of $25,000 and the balance that would remain as cash. Thus, the only conclusion that could be arrived at by the trial judge was that when Mrs. Salter stated to the defendant what she would accept, she was simply eliminating the certificates and saying that she would take the cash according to the erroneous computation, nothing more, nothing less, not indicating in the slightest degree that the plaintiff was contemplating a discount or a rebate on the amount owing of a sum between $10,000 and $11,000. We do not very well see how any trial judge could find other than the trial judge did in this case in so far as the question of mistake, in so far as the absence of any compromise, and in so far as every material circumstance relating thereto is involved.

[2] It is further argued that the writing called "Escrow Instruction Number 545,600," left with the Title Guaranty Company, constituted an agreement of compromise. A reading of this instrument leads unavoidably to the conclusion that the trial court was correct in rejecting this contention. The writing is in no sense an agreement of any kind. It is simply a direction to the Title Guaranty Company that, if so much money is paid to them for the account of the plaintiff within ten days, all the securities mentioned therein, and then and there placed in the custody of the Title Guaranty Company, may be delivered to the defendant. There is not a single word in this writing indicating that the plaintiff, on the one hand, was accepting in full payment, less than the amount owing to her, or that the defendant was making advance payments on account of receiving a discount on the amount owing. The whole argument of the appellant is based upon the untenable assumption that this instrument, in and of itself, is a compromise agreement, and therefore the only action that could be maintained would be an action in rescission. At best, it only amounts to a form of release, and had it expressed the true amount, would have operated as a release to the defendant upon paying the full amount, and comes directly within the terms of section 1542 of the Civil Code, which reads:

"A general release does not extend to claims which the creditor does not know or suspect to exist in his favor at the time of executing the release, which if known by him must have materially affected his settlement with the debtor."

And, as held in Rued v. Cooper, 119 Cal. 463, 51 P. 704, this section does not limit relief to actions based upon fraud or concealment by the debtor, but includes actions based upon mistake.

There being no compromise agreement, there appearing nothing in the record from which it can be concluded either that the parties, by reason of any oral contract or written agreement, intended to discount or reduce the amount of the principal owing on June 11, 1924, the authorities cited by counsel relative to compromises are wholly inapplicable and do not need to be reviewed herein. What constitutes a compromise that would be effective and bar further action is set forth in 5 California Jurisprudence, p. 399, § 14. A reading of this section and the authorities there cited shows that the case at bar is readily distinguishable from the basis upon which the defendant's appeal is founded, and that the argument advanced in support of the appeal is at variance with the law governing this action.

[3] That an action of assumpsit to recover the omitted item of $10,000 will lie is clearly established by applying the rule of law set forth in the case of White v. Thompson, 40 Cal. App. 447 [180 P. 953] in an opinion written by Mr. Justice Waste. This case refers to items omitted in the settlement of an account. Here we have four different items that should have been added together in order to ascertain the amount of principal owing. In making the calculation the calculator failed to follow the rule of carrying one when making his computation, and therefore just omitted the sum of $10,000. In the case of White v. Thompson, supra, the court said, in an action to recover upon the omitted item instead of for rescission, that—

"It appears to us that the action at bar is merely a legal action in assumpsit to recover an item of indebtedness owing from defendants to plaintiff's assignor, which was entirely omitted in the negotiation leading to the account stated. 'While a suit to open, surcharge or falsify an account is one proper for equitable jurisdiction, yet the rule seems to be established that a stated account need not be impeached by a direct suit brought for that purpose. It may be impeached for fraud or mistake either at law or in equity whenever it is brought forward as a defense or cause of action'"—citing 1 Cor. Jur. 715.

And, also, the court further said:

"An action in assumpsit will lie to recover for items of indebtedness omitted by mistake on the settlement of an account, if there is no other objection"—citing a number of authorities.

And further:

"An account stated does not bar a recovery for items not within the contemplation of the parties when the settlement was made."

We do not need to cite any further authorities to support the rules of law stated in this case. We need not cite any authorities to the effect that where one, through mistake, obtains a release and surrender of securities for a sum less than the amount owing, the law raises an implied promise to pay the amount owed. The subject, however, is dealt with in 3 California Jurisprudence, 374.

We do not need to give any attention to the argument, pro and con, by counsel as to the character of the defense set up in this action, or as to the attempt of the defendant to escape payment of his just obligations, but prefer to let the record itself stand as the uncontrovertible support of the trial court's findings in this cause.

The summary of the facts which we have hereinbefore set forth relieves us of the necessity of reviewing the numerous cases cited in the voluminous briefs submitted to us for consideration.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

SHEPARD v. YALE. (Civ. 6260.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 22, 1928.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 695(1)—Sufficiency of evidence to sustain findings could not be considered on appeal, where all evidence was not in record.

Appellate court could not consider sufficiency of evidence to sustain findings, where all evidence was not included in record on appeal.

2. Trial $\S$ 397(6)—Finding of truth of allegations of cross-complaint that defendant owned realty held to negative claim realty was partnership property.

Where defendant's cross-complaint, in suit by former partner for accounting, alleged that defendant owned real property described in complaint and that it was not a part of partnership assets, trial court's finding that all allegations of cross-complaint were true held to negative any mistake on plaintiff's part, or misrepresentation by defendant of any material fact in respect to ownership of realty.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 931(3), 1071(6)—Judgment will not be reversed for failure to make express finding, if finding is necessarily implied from findings made or would have been against appellant.

Judgment will not be reversed because of the failure to make an express finding on an issue, if finding thereof is necessarily implied from findings made, or where, if finding had been made, it would have been against appellant.

4. Evidence $\S$ 376(12)—Evidence held to lay sufficient foundation for introduction of partnership books in evidence in suit for accounting.

Where former partner, suing for accounting, testified that during entire partnership he kept account of partnership business, that he informed defendant that he was keeping these accounts, and that defendant at all times during existence of partnership had access to books, a sufficient foundation was laid for introduction of books in evidence.

5. Evidence $\S$ 354(11)—Partnership books are admissible to show state of partnership affairs, even when kept by one partner alone, if each partner has access thereto.

Partnership books are admissible in evidence to show state of partnership affairs, even when entries are made by one partner alone, if each partner has access to books at or soon after time entries are made.

6. Appeal and error $\S$ 1058(1)—Error in excluding evidence was harmless, where fact sought to be established thereby was proved by other competent evidence.

Error in excluding partnership books from evidence in former partner's action for accounting held harmless, where fact sought to be established thereby was proved by other competent evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Stanley Y. Shepard against William H. Yale. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frederick Schneider, of Palo Alto, for respondent.

BEAUMONT, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff and defendant entered into a partnership for the purpose of raising and selling pigeons. After approximately a year of partnership business, a dissolution was had. About two years thereafter plaintiff began this suit for an accounting and settlement. The complaint alleged that the property of the partnership consisted of certain real and personal property; that there had been a dissolution of the partnership; but that no accounting had been had. Defendant's answer admitted the dissolution, denying there had been no accounting, and denied the ownership by the partnership of said real property. Defendant, by way of special defense, set up certain new matter which will be referred to later herein. Defendant also filed a cross-complaint to quiet title to the real property. Plaintiff, ex industria, filed an answer not only to the cross-complaint, but to the special defense. Defendant had judgment on the complaint, and on his cross-complaint obtained a decree quieting title as prayed. Plaintiff appeals.

[1] Appellant urges many points for reversal of the judgment. Seven of these alleged that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings. After a thorough study of the record, we are of the opinion that the evidence is amply sufficient to sustain the findings. Even if we were not of this opinion, we would not be in position to hold that the evidence is insufficient, in view of the state of the record. Testimony was taken on two days. No reporter was present the first day. The record so shows, and the certificate of the judge attached to the transcript is to the same effect. Without the benefit of the entire record we could not say that the testimony was insufficient to support the findings. Foster v. Young, 172 Cal. 317, 156 P. 476; Ross v. Burr, 69 Cal. App. 286, 230 P. 986. California Jurisprudence (vol. 2, p. 697) states:

"The appellate court will not consider a question of the sufficiency of the evidence, unless all the evidence is included in the record on appeal."

[2, 3] The point most strongly urged by appellant for a reversal of the judgment is that the court failed to find upon the issue of mistake. In his special defense respondent alleged that he was the owner of the real property described in the complaint, and that it was not a part of the partnership assets; that when the dissolution was had, the partnership affairs were adjusted, and a complete settlement effected; that at the time of dissolution he agreed to sell, and appellant agreed to buy, the real property, a copy of the contract being attached to his answer. Appellant, though not required to do so, as the law supplies the denial necessary to raise an issue upon new matter contained in an answer (section 462, Code Civ. Proc.), filed a replication. In this he admitted the execution of the contract, but alleged that he was mistaken as to his rights when he executed it, and that respondent had represented to him that he (appellant) had no interest in the real property, for the reason that he did not have a deed to a half interest thereof. Respondent in his cross-complaint alleged that at the time of the execution of the contract above mentioned, and for a long time prior thereto, he was the owner of the real property; that said contract was for a valuable consideration; and that said agreement was "reasonable, fair, and just, and the price for said land and premises was reasonable, fair, and adequate, and all of which was well known to plaintiff herein." The court found that all the allegations of the cross-complaint were true. This alone is sufficient to negative any mistake on the part of appellant or that respondent had misrepresented any material fact. Estate of McClelland, 181 Cal. 227, 183 P. 798; New Blue Point Mining Co. v. Weissbein et al., 198 Cal. 261, 244 P. 325, 45 A. L. R. 781. In addition, the court specifically found that the real property was not a part of the partnership assets, but was the individual property of respondent; that it had been purchased with the individual funds of respondent; that upon the dissolution of the partnership an accounting was had, a settlement made, and that appellant thereupon agreed to buy the property from respondent. In this case the findings fully support the judgment. It is well established that such a judgment will not be reversed because of a failure to make an express finding upon an issue, if a finding thereon is necessarily implied from the findings made. 24 Cal. Jur. 974, and cases cited. Even if the inference as to the implied finding be illogical, still the judgment should not be set aside on this phase of the case, for failure to find on an issue is not ground for reversal of a judgment where, if the finding had been made, it would have been against appellant. Hulen v. Stuart, 191 Cal. 562, 572, 217 P. 750; Krasky v. Wollpert, 134 Cal. 338, 66 P. 309. From the evidence in the record, from the facts found, and from the judgment ordered, it is evident that had the findings been more complete they would have been adverse to the contention of appellant.

[4-6] Another specification of error is the exclusion of offered testimony. Appellant testified that throughout the life of the partnership he kept account of the partnership business, entering in a book the items of receipts and expenditures; that he informed respondent that he was keeping these accounts and that the books were open to respondent's inspection; that respondent, at all times during the existence of the partnership, had access to the books. We are of the opinion that in view of this testimony, a sufficient foundation was laid for the introduction of the books. Partnership books are admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing the state of partnership affairs, even when the entries are made by one partner alone, provided each partner has access to the books at or soon after the time the entries are made. 20 Cal. Jur. 782; Clark v. Gridley, 49 Cal. 105; 30 Cyc. 743; 20 R. C. L. 934-935. We are of the opinion, however that the exclusion of the proffered testimony was not prejudicial to appellant, as apparently from the record the offer was for the purpose of showing there was a record of the purchase of the land made in the partnership books, and that an entry relative to the land was placed therein with other entries pertaining to partnership business. This had already been shown in various parts of the testimony and was definitely in evidence when the books were offered. There was, at the time the offer was made, also testimony as to the balance shown by the books; the exact amount of the profits being given. The exclusion of the evidence was harmless where the fact sought to be established thereby was proved by other competent evidence. 2 Cal. Jur. 1022; Ash v. Soo Sing Lung, 177 Cal. 356, 170 P. 843; Duffy v. Duffy, 71 Cal. App. 251-261, 235 P. 62. We cannot determine whether there was anything else of material testimony in the books tendered in evidence, as a copy of the offered exhibit does not accompany the record. In such case we cannot say that there was error, having determined, of course, that the only apparently material testimony therein contained was clearly before the court at the time of the offer. McCormick Saeltzler Co. v. Grizzly Creek Lbr. Co., 74 Cal. App. 278, 240 P. 32; S. F. Commercial Agcy. v. Hogan Co., 6 Cal. App. 408, 92 P. 312.

We do not deem it necessary to consider other points argued by appellant.

Judgment is affirmed.

STAMM v. COLVIN. (Civ. 3553.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 28, 1928.

1. Specific performance ⇐51—Where defendant in ejectment asked plaintiff's performance of contract between defendant and third person, plaintiff cannot dispute justness of contract when third party defaulted.

In action in ejectment, in which defendant sought to compel specific performance by plaintiff of contract between defendant and third person, plaintiff held not entitled to dispute justness of such contract when third person had defaulted as to averments of fairness thereof.

2. Specific performance ⇐28(2)—Contract for transfer of land held not too uncertain to be specifically performed (Civ. Code, § 3390, subd. 6).

Contract for transfer of land held not so ambiguous and uncertain as to bar specific performance under Civ. Code, § 3390, subd. 6, notwithstanding provision as to obtaining from third person extension of mortgage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action in ejectment by Clara Vivian Stamm against B. E. Colvin. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

E. A. Lane, of Los Angeles, and R. R. Sleeper, of Venice, for appellant.

Joseph N. Owen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WEYAND, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff and respondent, Clara Vivian Stamm, originally brought this action in ejectment against the defendant and appellant, B. E. Colvin. By cross-complaint said defendant and appellant sought to compel specific performance by plaintiff of a contract between defendant and one Colin N. Clinch. Colin N. Clinch was, on May 11, 1924, the owner of the premises in controversy, and both plaintiff and defendant derive their respective titles, if any they have, through said Clinch.

On May 11, 1924, Colin N. Clinch made and executed a written offer to exchange properties, which said offer was in words as follows:

"Los Angeles, California, May 11, 1924. Mr. J. K. Delozier, 515 Hillstreet Bldg., Los Angeles, California. Dear Sir: I will deed lot 1, tract 5155, to B. E. Colvin subject to incumbrance and liens of record, and agree to pay off same down to $8,000; also to pay interest on all incumbrance, until it is reduced to the $8,000. And let Colvin take immediate possession of said property. Providing B. E. Colvin, will deed to me or my assigns, lot 5, of Ivareen Terrace tract, and extend note of $8,000, and return same when incumbrance on lot 1 is reduced to the $8,000.

"The $8,000, on lot 1, of Tract 5155, is not to become due within two and a half years, and the interest rate not to exceed 7 per cent. Yours very truly, C. L. Clinch."

Colvin at the time of making said offer was in Willows, Cal. The said J. G. Delozier to whom said offer was addressed, was at said time a partner of said Colvin, and lived in Los Angeles, Cal. Prior to the making of said written offer Clinch and Colvin had discussed the making of such a trade, and Clinch took Colvin to see the property in controversy. Upon receipt by Delozier of the written offer, Delozier at the request of Clinch, forwarded the written offer to Colvin at Willows and thereupon Colvin returned to Los Angeles, accepted Clinch's offer, and about June 15, 1924, was by Clinch put into possession of the Clinch property, and has lived upon the same with his family ever since.

On or about February 5, 1925, while Colvin and his family were living on the property, and in sole and exclusive occupation thereof, Clinch conveyed the said premises to the plaintiff herein, Clara Vivian Stamm, and said plaintiff first demanded rent from defendant, Colvin, and thereafter possession of the premises. Defendant Colvin has always refused to pay rent, and has refused to deliver possession to the plaintiff. Colvin has frequently offered to perform under the contract, and by his pleadings offers to fulfill the conditions, agreement, and stipulations, as set forth in the written offer.

On May 11, 1924, the date of the written offer, Colvin owned and held a promissory note of Colin N. Clinch and Nan K. Clinch, his wife, dated September 6, 1923, in the sum of $8,000, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and payable 120 days after date. On May 11, 1924, said Colvin owned the said lot 5 of Ivareen Terrace tract, described in the written offer. This lot was of the value of $5,000. The lot 1 of tract 5155, held by Clinch on May 11th, was of the value of not to exceed $13,000.

By cross-complaint of defendant the plaintiff, Clara Vivian Stamm, and her husband, H. E. Stamm, and Colin N. Clinch and his wife, Nan K. Clinch, were named as cross-defendants, and the record discloses that the default of all of said cross-defendants was regularly entered, save and except as to the cross-defendant Clara Vivian Stamm, which said cross-defendant alone answered.

The court made two separate findings, which form the basis for the entry of the judgment herein in favor of the original plaintiff, Clara Vivian Stamm. These two findings are as follows:

"V. The court further finds with reference to said alleged contract upon which the defendant and cross-complainant relies, that it is too ambiguous and uncertain, and is lacking in such details as to the manner, time and methods of performance as are essential and necessary to enable the court to specifically perform the same.

"VI. The court further finds that said contract as to said Colin N. Clinch and his successor in interest, the plaintiff, is not just and reasonable, and that there is not sufficient or adequate consideration on the part of said defendant and cross-complainant, B. E. Colvin, to entitle him to have said contract performed as against said Colin N. Clinch and the plaintiff."

[1] We will treat of these findings in their reverse order. Finding No. VI is not supported by the evidence, but is directly contrary thereto. Defendant by his affirmative defense alleged that the agreement with Clinch was fair and equitable, and alleged that the lot 1 of tract 5155 was of a value not greater than $13,000, and that the Ivareen Terrace lot was worth $5,000. By special admission of the attorneys it was agreed and stipulated at the trial "that the affirmative facts as alleged by the defendant are true, and that they may be considered as proven." The record fails to disclose any testimony to the contrary. Quite beside all this, it should hardly be for the present plaintiff to dispute the justness of the trade, when the real party to said trade had defaulted as to averments of the fairness thereof. So we cannot assent to said finding of the trial court.

[2] As to finding V, the record discloses that Colin N. Clinch and his wife defaulted as to all the allegations of the cross-complaint. In other words, Clinch and his wife made no claims that the provisions of the written offer were "too ambiguous and uncertain" to enable them to understand just what they were to do in the matter of the execution of the offer. They made no plea that they could not perform. The only provision about which there could be question was the one as to obtaining from another person an extension of the mortgage on the Clinch lot. As to that nothing appears to show that Colvin insisted upon that extension. It was a provision presumably in favor of Colvin.

As before stated Clinch was at the time owing to Colvin $8,000, which was some time past due. Colvin was placed in possession of the property by Clinch. Colvin was extending to Clinch forbearance as to Clinch's note. We cannot agree that under the circumstances the contract of Clinch presented any such difficulties that could not be definitely and fully adjudicated between the party making the offer, and the acceptor of such offer.

It is true that when a contract lacks essentials such as those enumerated in finding V, its specific performance cannot be enforced. Subd. 6, § 3390, Civ. Code. Under the facts as here presented this could not have been a difficulty such as would prevent an adjudication of the rights of the respective parties to the agreement.

In the cases cited by respondent it generally appears that the promisor was the one making objection that he could not perform under the agreement. The instant case presents the peculiar situation of a stranger to the original agreement, making the contention that the contract was so indefinite that its maker cannot be forced to perform its covenants.

In section 1424 of Williston on Sales, it is said:

"It is necessary not only that the defendant's duty under the contract shall be certain, but the plaintiff's also, since the decree must provide for that performance as well as the defendant's. But if there is sufficient expressed to make a legally valid contract, a court of equity can make certain by its decree, within reasonable limits, subordinate details of performance which the contract itself did not state. Thus where no time of performance is stated in the contract, the court may by its decree fix a reasonable time. In cases where specific performance of only part of an agreement is in question, it should also be observed that such uncertainty in another portion of the contract as would preclude specific performance of the latter portion will not destroy the plaintiff's claim for specific performance of the former part, if partial enforcement is otherwise allowable. It seems probable that the difficulty regarding uncertainty has been over-emphasized. It should not be allowed to hamper equitable relief further than necessity requires."

We cannot believe that this written offer, as made by the one owning the property, presents such a lack of details as to leave a court powerless to enforce its terms.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment of the trial court be reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

Action by W. T. Lass against Edward R. Eliassen. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Knight, Boland & Christin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Crosby, Naus & Crosby, and Milton W. Sevier, all of Oakland, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action by vendee to recover the rental value of certain land purchased under a probate sale. A demurrer to the complaint was interposed and sustained. Plaintiff refused to amend and judgment went in favor of defendant. This is an appeal from such judgment.

The complaint alleges defendant to be the duly appointed, qualified, and acting executor of the last will and testament of one Richard Flaherty, deceased. During the month of September, 1923, defendant, as such executor, caused a notice of sale to be published of his intention to sell a described parcel of real property to the highest bidder, subject to confirmation of the probate court. On the 10th day of October, following, plaintiff submitted a bid in writing signed by himself in the amount of $33,300. This was the highest bid received, and defendant accepted the same on October 19, 1923. On the same day plaintiff paid defendant the sum of $3,300 as deposit and part payment of the purchase price, whereupon defendant immediately filed a duly verified return to the probate court and petitioned for confirmation. At the hearing the court erroneously and contrary to law refused to confirm the transaction and ordered a new sale. From such order plaintiff took an appeal to the Supreme Court. After due hearing, the District Court of Appeal, to which court the cause was transferred, reversed the trial court and directed it to confirm the sale and cause the property to be conveyed to plaintiff pursuant to the return of sale. Estate of Flaherty, 69 Cal. App. 429, 231 P. 591. This judgment of the District Court of Appeal was confirmed by the Supreme Court upon its denial to grant a hearing. Subsequently, on February 15, 1925, some 16 months after the original hearing upon confirmation, the probate court made an order confirming the sale as directed. On February 20th, following, plaintiff paid to defendant as executor of said estate the balance due upon the purchase amounting to the sum of $30,000, and on the same day defendant, as executor of the estate, caused to be prepared and delivered to plaintiff a deed conveying the real estate so sold. During the period from the time of the sale to the date of the delivery of the deed, defendant was in the possession of the property and collected the rents and profits. The rents so collected by him amounted to the sum of $3,367.98, to recover which this action is prosecuted.

It will be noticed that the action is not brought against defendant in his representative capacity, but individually. Upon this state of facts the trial court was of the opinion that no cause of action existed. Appellant claims in support of his appeal that inasmuch as the confirmation should have been made by the probate court on the return of the sale and was erroneously refused through no fault of his, equity will consider that done which ought to have been done, and will hold that confirmation when made was effective as of the time it should have been made. He also contends that irrespective of the error of the probate court, by the doctrine of relation, confirmation when made related back to the date of sale so as to entitle plaintiff to the immediate rents. The further claim is urged that irrespective of these two points, and in any event, plaintiff, being the equitable owner from the date of the sale, was entitled to the rents and profits from the time he became such owner. While this question has received consideration in other jurisdictions, it seems to be one of first impression in this state. In some jurisdictions when the sale has been duly confirmed the purchaser is entitled to the rents and profits from the time of the sale; in others, from the time of confirmation; and, in still others, from the time of confirmation and the payment of the purchase price. 35 C. J. 86. The reason given for the first rule, as pointed out by the learned trial court, is that courts proceed upon the theory that the purchaser's title on confirmation relates back to the time of sale, while the rule holding that the purchaser is not entitled to the rents and profits until confirmation is based on the theory that he acquires no title until that time. A review of these conflicting authorities would answer no useful purpose. Section 1517 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that all sales of property must be under oath, reported to and confirmed by the court, before the title to the property passes.

[1-3] Under the statute the representative of an estate has no authority to transfer property of a decedent, without authority of the probate court. Bovard v. Dickenson, 131 Cal. 162, 63 P. 162. Without confirmation such sales are ineffectual and no title or estate passes. Horton v. Jack, 115 Cal. 29, 46 P. 920. In such a case it is only when all acts are performed which result in a sale that a purchaser has any interest in the property sold. Then, and not until then, has he any title so as to entitle him to a conveyance. Budelman v. Am. Ins. Co., 297 Ill. 222, 130 N. E. 513; Standard Leather Co. v. Mercantile, etc., Co., 131 Mo. App. 701, 111 S. W. 631. Confirmation having been denied, defendant was therefore guilty of no breach of duty, statutory or otherwise, for prior to actual confirmation he had no power to execute an effectual conveyance. Nor did he have power to control the action of the probate court in the determination of the application for confirmation. He was a stranger to this act of the court. While the equitable doctrines invoked by appellant are regarded with favor and will be vigorously applied in proper cases between the parties, they will never be applied for the purpose of defeating equity or doing an injustice, nor will they be applied against an innocent stranger to a proceeding. Lewis v. Hall, 38 Cal. App. 329, 176 P. 171; Cronbach v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 153 Tenn. 362, 284 S. W. 73.

[4-6] The doctrines are designed to promote justice and to give effect to the lawful obligations of a party against whom complaint is made for refusing to perform some duty imposed upon him. Here, upon confirmation, defendant immediately executed the requisite conveyance, and he was under no legal duty to do so before that time. Then, again, no maxim nor any fiction can be applied to defeat the express terms of a statute. Section 1517 of the Code of Civil Procedure in express terms declares that no title passes until confirmation. The case is not one, therefore, for the application of equitable doctrines, but rather one for the construction of an act of the Legislature. Rules of equity cannot be intruded in matters that are plain and fully covered by positive statute. Bee-son v. Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, etc., 101 Kan. 399, 166 P. 466. Neither a fiction nor a maxim may nullify a statute. Harrison Machine Works v. Aufderheide [Mo. App.] 280 S. W. 711. Nor will a court of equity ever lend its aid to accomplish by indirection what the law or its clearly defined policy forbids to be done directly. Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521, 537, 23 P. 695. Here defendant performed every authorized act required by him. Having done so, plaintiff has no cause of action against him in his representative capacity, much less as an individual. Respondent urges the principle of unjust enrichment as a further ground for support of the judgment, claiming that as plaintiff has been in the enjoyment of the purchase price during the period the case has been litigated, it should be deemed an equivalent to the rents and profits. The conclusion we have reached renders unnecessary a discussion of this question.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GOODWIN. (Cr. 1657.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 26, 1928.

1. Homicide $\S$ 253(1)—Evidence held to sustain conviction for murder, first degree.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of murder in the first degree.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 564(1)—Evidence held to establish venue of murder case in county where prosecution was had.

In prosecution for murder, evidence held sufficient to establish venue in county in which prosecution was had.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; E. J. Marks, Judge.

Philip A. Goodwin was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Buel R. Wood, of Los Angeles, and O. A. Jacobs, of Santa Ana, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., Z. B. West, Jr., Dist. Atty., of Santa Ana, and L. W. Blodget, Deputy Dist. Atty., of Los Angeles, for the People.

YORK, J. This appeal is prosecuted from a second trial wherein the defendant, Philip A. Goodwin, was again convicted of murder in the first degree and was in said second trial sentenced to life imprisonment. On the first trial he was found guilty of murder in the first degree and sentenced to death, in which first case the judgment and order denying a new trial were appealed from and the order denying a motion for a new trial was reversed and a new trial was granted ([Cal. Sup.] 261 P. 1009), which new trial resulted in the present verdict and order which were both appealed from in this matter now before this court.

[1] It is useless to discuss the circumstantial evidence, as it was unquestionably sufficiently strong for the jury to have believed the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree.

[2] As to the claim of appellant that there was a lack of proof of venue, it is true it was not absolutely proven, but there was sufficient evidence for the jury to find, as it must have found (to have found the defendant guilty under the instructions), that the murder was committed in Orange county.

We can see nothing in the charge of misconduct on the part of the court and as to the charge of misconduct on the part of the district attorney—there is less to criticize in the remarks of the district attorney in this matter than in the average criminal case that comes before this court.

The alleged error in refusing to give instructions relative to admissions of defendant brings up a rather novel point by presenting apparently a claim of the defendant that the people are bound to accept the truth of statements made by defendant concerning admissions of a crime if the prosecution sees fit to show by their witnesses that the defendant made false and inconsistent statements. Quotations of parts or portions of evidence by themselves might substantiate the necessity of a greatly modified form of the instruction requested, but an examination of the entire transcript and all of the evidence discloses no such necessity, and in fact shows that the giving of the instruction which was refused by the court and requested by the defendant would have been misleading and confusing to the jury, as it is, to say the least, involved and uncertain. It is expressly provided by section 1870, subdivision 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, that the declaration of a party is admissible as evidence against such party.

The expert witness as to handwriting, it is true, did, in explaining how he drew certain conclusions, refer to matters that were not proper; yet the court, when his attention was called to them in each instance, promptly instructed the jury to disregard same, so that no prejudice to the defendant can be presumed.

An examination of the entire evidence shows that it was amply sufficient to sustain the conviction. We do not find any errors prejudicial to the defendant in the trial of the case, and the instructions of the court taken as a whole amply and sufficiently stated the law of the case to the jury.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

CONREY, P. J. I concur in the judgment. The contention of appellant that the venue of the crime was not proved to be within the county of Orange seems to be entirely without merit. Not only was the body of the deceased found at a place well within the county limits, but the condition of the body, together with the surrounding circumstances, were strongly convincing of the fact that the murder had taken place on the same premises and within a few feet from the spot where the body was found. People v. Watts, 198 Cal. 776, 789, 247 P. 884.

Almost equally without merit is the contention that the evidence is not sufficient to justify the verdict or to prove that appellant participated in the commission of the crime. The disappearance of Patterson and the probable date of his death was March 15, 1926. Four days before that time, in the city of Los Angeles, appellant opened a bank account by using a forged check of Patterson, drawn to an assumed name used by appellant in that transaction. Next we find that on March 13th appellant and Gaines (who was separately tried and convicted of this murder) went to San Diego in an automobile hired by appellant, and, according to some testimony, a third man was with them. Mrs. Rockett, in whose house Patterson was a roomer, testified that on that day Patterson, carrying his suitcase, went away with two men. All are agreed that Patterson and Gaines and Goodwin were seen together in San Diego. It was at some time during Patterson's attempted return to Los Angeles that he was murdered. Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to prove that Patterson was with appellant and Gaines when they left San Diego on their own drive back to Los Angeles, or that appellant had any share in the planning or action of the murder. No witness at this trial testified to the presence of Patterson with appellant and Gaines on their return trip. Gaines was brought down from the penitentiary and offered by the state as a witness, but he refused to testify. It is an established fact that, a few days after the murder, appellant sold valuable securities which had belonged to Patterson; that such sale was accomplished by forging Patterson's signature; and that the proceeds were divided between Gaines and appellant. The foregoing statements are by no means a complete history of the case, but they indicate some of the circumstances of the transactions described at the trial.

The suggestion made by counsel for appellant that the Supreme Court, when it reversed the judgment after the first trial (People v. Goodwin, 261 P. 1009), held that the evidence at that trial was insufficient to sustain the verdict, and the further suggestion that the evidence produced at the second trial was weaker than at the first trial, and that therefore the case is really settled in appellant's favor by the Supreme Court decision, is all based upon a misconception of the intention and effect of the former decision on appeal. The Supreme Court, in its opinion, specifically withheld expression of the view which has been imputed to it that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. Aside from a holding that the court had committed an error in one of its instructions to the jury (an error not repeated in the present record), the principal reason for reversal of the first judgment was that the superior court should have granted appellant's motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence not available or known to appellant at the time of the first trial. Appellant had produced in support of that motion affidavits showing that these newly discovered witnesses would have testified in support of defendant's story; particularly in reference to occurrences at San Diego on the night when appellant claims to have remained at San Diego, while waiting for Gaines to return from a pretended trip to Tia Juana. The Supreme Court, in its decision, indicated that if the testimony of those witnesses had been given and had been such testimony as was shown by the affidavits, this might have produced an important effect in favor of appellant and might have led to his acquittal. In view of that decision, and especially because counsel for appellant have emphasized it, I have looked into the transcript in order to read the actual testimony of those witnesses when produced at the second trial, but, so far as I can discover, none of those names is in the record now before us.

HOUSER, J. I concur in the judgment.

TROWER et al. v. RENTSCH et al.
(Civ. 5792.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 26, 1928.

As Modified Oct. 16, 1923.

1. Quietting title §51—Assignee of contractor, joined as defendant in owner's suit to quiet title, in which no damages for detention were claimed, held not entitled to recover value of improvements.

Assignee of contractor held not entitled, in owner's suit to quiet title to property, to receive compensation for value of improvements placed thereon by him and his assignor, where plaintiff made no claim for damages and defendant had no color of title, since Code Civ. Proc. §§ 738, 741, permit allowance of value of improvements to defendants in action to quiet title only where plaintiff claims damages for withholding property and where improvements have been made by defendants holding adversely, in good faith, and under color of title.

2. Equity §54—Equitable principles in contravention of provisions of positive statute cannot prevail.

Equitable principles cannot be permitted to prevail, when contrary to provisions of a positive statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action by Hilda Trower and another against George A. Rentsch, John A. Novotny, and others, in which defendant last named filed a cross-complaint. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed with directions.

Lewis J. Utt, of San Diego, for appellants.

O. J. Novotny and E. S. Torrance, both of San Diego, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. The outstanding facts upon which this appeal is predicated are that plaintiffs were the owners of certain real property which they sold on an installment contract to defendant Rentsch for the sum of $700, of which amount the sum of $100 only was paid on account of the purchase price of the property. Thereafter Rentsch entered into an agreement with defendant Carpenter for the construction by him of a building thereon. After such construction had progressed to some extent, owing to some financial embarrassment, defendant Carpenter, being unable to complete his said contract, assigned all his right, title, and interest therein to defendant Novotny. Prior to the commencement of building operations on the property, in at least attempted compliance with the provisions of section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure, plaintiffs posted on the property a notice to the effect that they would not be responsible for the payment of the labor or materials used in the construction of the proposed building, and thereafter filed for record a copy of such notice in the office of the county recorder of the county in which the property was situated, notwithstanding which certain lien claimants (other than defendant Novotny) filed for record their respective claims of lien against the property on account of either labor performed or materials furnished by them in the construction of the building. Rentsch, who was the person who had contracted with plaintiffs for the purchase of the property, defaulted in the payment of the purchase price thereof and repudiated his said agreement of purchase. Thereupon plaintiffs rescinded said contract, but offered to defendant Novotny to sell the property to him for the balance of $600 due on the original contract of sale between plaintiffs and Rentsch, "together with accrued interest, taxes, and assessments, plus the sum of $15 for bringing down the title to said land and $1 revenue stamps," making a total of $663.57, which offer defendant Novotny failed to accept within a reasonable time thereafter. Some time prior to the happening of the last-mentioned fact defendant Rentsch executed and caused to be recorded a trust deed of the property herein involved, wherein defendant Carpenter was named as beneficiary, purporting to secure the payment to said defendant Carpenter of the sum of $1,400. In such circumstances, plaintiffs commenced an action to quiet title to the property. Therein no claim of damages of any sort, whether by reason of detention or withholding of the property, or otherwise, was made by plaintiffs against any of the defendants. Besides Rentsch, Carpenter, Novotny, and Bruffy, to which last-named person Novotny (without any title in him whatsoever) had sold the property, the various lien claimants were made parties defendant. With the exception of defendant Novotny, all the defendants defaulted, and judgment was rendered against them. Defendant Novotny answered the complaint and filed a cross-complaint, by which, as later amended, among other things, he sought to have plaintiffs reimburse him for the value of the improvements placed upon the property by him and Carpenter, his predecessor in the building contract.

Other than that the building was constructed by Carpenter and Novotny in good faith, but nevertheless with full knowledge on the part of each of them as to the condition of the title of the property and all facts as hereinbefore set forth, no finding of fact was made by the trial court in favor of any of the allegations contained either in the answer or the cross-complaint of defendant Novotny, and nothing was awarded to him by reason thereof. Preliminarily, as a condition precedent to any relief to be granted to plaintiffs, it was ordered by the trial court that within a fixed time plaintiffs pay to defendant Novotny the value of the improvements placed by him and his predecessor in interest on the property, amounting to the net sum of $1,949.16. Plaintiffs declined to make such payment. Thereupon judgment was ordered that plaintiffs take nothing as against defendant Novotny and that defendant Novotny recover the costs expended by him in the action.

[1, 2] As hereinbefore stated, defendant Novotny made no claim of lien against the property by reason of any labor performed or material furnished in the construction of the improvements. His defense, as well as his asserted cause of action, rested entirely upon the equitable principle that "he who seeks equity must do equity"; and it was solely upon that basis that the judgment of the lower court was rendered in his favor.

Chapter III of title 10 of part 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure is devoted to "actions to determine conflicting claims to real property, and other provisions relating to actions concerning real estate." By the first section (section 738, Code Civ. Proc.) of that chapter, among other things, provision is made for an action such as was brought by plaintiffs herein—to quiet title to the real property. In the same chapter, and in the fourth section thereof (section 741, Code Civ. Proc.), it is provided that:

"When damages are claimed for withholding the property recovered, upon which permanent improvements have been made by a defendant, or those under whom he claims, holding under color of title adversely to the claim of the plaintiff, in good faith, the value of such improvements must be allowed as a set-off against such damages."

It may be noted that, before the "value of such improvements" may be allowed to the defendant in an action of the nature of that before the court, the presence of certain conditions precedent must be shown to exist, in that damages must be claimed by the plaintiff for the withholding by the defendant of the property involved, and the improvements must have been made by the defendant, or by his predecessor in interest, holding adversely, in good faith, and under color of title.

In the instant case none of such conditions favorable to defendant Novotny is present. No damages were claimed by plaintiffs against any of the defendants for withholding of the property; neither defendant Novotny, nor his predecessor in interest, had color of title to the property; neither of them held a title of any kind to the property adversely to the claim of plaintiffs, either in good faith or at all. As hereinbefore stated, the basis of the judgment in favor of defendant Novotny was rested on the principle of equity, to which attention has been directed. But admitting the general application of such principle, it cannot prevail when contrary to the provisions of a positive statute. Considering the language of the statute, and the fact that all issues were decided by the trial court against the allegations contained in the cross-complaint of defendant Novotny, it would seem clear that an incorrect conclusion was reached. The principle involved is announced in the case of Wood v. Henley, 55 Cal. App. Dec. 304, 263 P. 870 (syllabus), that—

"In an action to quiet title the defendant cannot be allowed reimbursement for improvements made by him upon the property sought to be quieted, except by way of set-off against any damages which may be claimed by the plaintiff for the withholding of the property; and where no damages are pleaded or asked for by the plaintiff reimbursement cannot be had."

To the same effect is Huse v. Den, 85 Cal. 390, 24 P. 790, 20 Am. St. Rep. 232.

In view of the fact that none of the allegations contained in the cross-complaint of defendant Novotny with reference to his claimed right to be compensated for the value of the improvements placed on the property foundation was laid upon which such compensatory relief ordered by the trial court in favor of defendant Novotny could be predicated. For illustration of the principle, see O'Brien v. O'Brien, 197 Cal. 577, 584, 241 P. 861; Martin v. Bartmus, 189 Cal. 87, 207 P. 550; Wilson v. Smith, 69 Cal. App. 211, 230 P. 963.

It follows that the judgment should be reversed. It is directed that the superior court enter judgment quieting the plaintiff's title to the property described in her complaint, and in accordance with the prayer of the complaint. It is so ordered.

HAMMOND LUMBER CO. v. RICHARDSON
et al. (Civ. 6289.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 24, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 23, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 22, 1928.

1. Mechanics' liens ⇨134—Purpose of mechanic's lien claim is to give owner constructive notice of claimed lien and to facilitate investigation respecting its merits (Code Civ. Proc. § 1187).

Purpose of claim of mechanic's lien required to be filed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, providing that lien claimant must designate name of person by whom he was employed or to whom he furnished materials, is, in so far as it concerns owner of property against which lien is claimed, to give him constructive notice of claimed lien, to inform him as to nature and extent of claim, and to facilitate investigation as to its merits.

2. Mechanics' liens ⇨5—Mechanics' lien statutes are to be liberally construed to effectuate their objects and promote justice (Const. art. 20, § 15).

Mechanics' and materialmen's lien statutes providing procedure for carrying out right of mechanics and materialmen to liens granted by Const. art. 20, § 15, on property on which they have bestowed labor or furnished material, are to be liberally construed with a view to effect their objects and promote justice.

3. Mechanics' liens ⇨135—Claim of lien filed by materialman held not insufficient because corporate contractor was mistakenly designated as individual (Code Civ. Proc. § 1187).

Claim of lien recorded by materialman, which designated contractor as individual doing business under fictitious name and style, held not insufficient under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, because contractor was in fact a corporation, in absence of showing that owner was misled to his injury thereby, injury not being presumed.

4. Trial ⇨396(2)—Trial court properly found against defendant on issue raised by answer not supported by any evidence.

Where there was no evidence offered in support of issue raised by defendant in his answer, trial court properly found against him thereon.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pearl E. Keeler, Judge.

Action to foreclose a mechanic's lien by the Hammond Lumber Company against Burt Richardson, individually and as doing business under the fictitious name and style of Richardson Building & Engineering Company, S. N. Reiss, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Reiss appeals. Affirmed.

Zach Lamar Cobb and Earl A. Littlejohns, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BEAUMONT, Justice pro tem. This is an action for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien upon real property in the city of Los Angeles. S. N. Reiss, defendant, owner of the property upon which the lien was claimed, entered into a contract with the Richardson Building & Engineering Co., Inc., a corporation, for the erection of a building. The plaintiff Hammond Lumber Company furnished the materials which were used in the construction of the building. Not being paid for such materials, plaintiff within the statutory time recorded a claim of lien, and subsequently brought this action. Plaintiff had judgment decreeing foreclosure, and from such judgment defendant Reiss has appealed.

Respondent had for some time before the date of the execution of the contract between the Richardson Building & Engineering Co., Inc., and appellant, done business with, and sold materials to, the Richardson Building & Engineering Company, believing that it was a fictitious name used by Burt Richardson. Without knowledge that a corporation had been formed or that appellant had entered into a contract with the Richardson Building & Engineering Company as a corporation, it continued to do business with the "Richardson Building & Engineering Company," and furnished the materials that were actually used in constructing the building on appellant's property. Burt Richardson was the president of the corporation, and his name appears as such officer on the contract entered into with the owner. In respondent's books the account covering the materials used was carried in the name of "Richardson Building & Engineering Company." The evidence shows that after the incorporation business was continued with respondent under the same name as before, and that the materials used in appellant's said building were supplied under the same name theretofore used, to wit, "Richardson Building & Engineering Company," and that no mention was made that the corporation had been formed, although such materials were in reality being furnished the corporation. One of the officers of the corporation testified that the name "Richardson Building & Engineering Company" was the name usually used in transacting the corporation's business, and that he, as general manager thereof, had bought the materials in question under that name.

The caption of the claim of lien recorded was as follows:

"Hammond Lumber Company, a Corporation, Claimant, v. Burt Richardson Doing Business under the Fictitious Name and Style of Richardson Building & Engineering Company and S. N. Reiss, Owners and Reputed Owners—Mechanic's Lien."

And in the body of said claim there appears: "(4) Names of persons to whom claimant furnished said materials are the Richardson Building & Engineering Company, above named." No question is raised as to the claim of lien, except as to its sufficiency in stating the name of the person to whom the materials were furnished.

[1] Appellant has four specifications of error, but they are all in effect stated in the first specification, which is as follows:

"Claim of lien is insufficient in that it did not truly state the name of person to whom plaintiff furnished the materials and because there was a fatal variance between the notice of lien and the proof."

Section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires, among other things, that a lien claimant must in his claim of lien designate therein the name of the person by whom he was employed or to whom he furnished the materials. The purpose of the claim of lien, as contemplated in the Mechanic's Lien Law, in so far as it concerns the owner of the property against which the lien is claimed, is to give him constructive notice of the claimed lien, to inform him as to the nature and extent of the claim, and to facilitate investigation as to its merits. Trout v. Siegel (Cal. Sup.) 262 P. 320; Wagner v. Hansen, 103 Cal. 104, 37 P. 195.

[2] The right of mechanics and materialmen to liens upon property upon which they have bestowed labor or furnished materials is constitutional. Cal. Const. art. 20, § 15. It is the function of the Legislature to provide procedure for carrying this right into effect, and the statutes relating thereto are to be liberally construed with a view to effect their objects and promote justice. McClung v. Paradise Gold Mining Co., 164 Cal. 517, 129 P. 774; Hammond Lumber Co. v. Barth Inv. Corp. (Cal. Sup.) 262 P. 31; Heberling v. Day, 59 Cal. App. 13, 22, 209 P. 908.

[3] There is nothing in the evidence in the present case to show that the owner was misled to his injury in any way by the failure of the claimant to state precisely the name of the corporation with which the contract was made, and to which the materials were furnished. It will not be presumed, in the absence of evidence to that effect, that he was so misled. Putnam v. Ross, 46 Mo. 337. Indeed, it is obvious that he was not misled, and the trial court so found. A general statement of this phase of the Mechanic's Lien Law is given in Corpus Juris (volume 40, pp. 235, 236) as follows:

"As a rule a mistake in the statement as to the name of the person with whom plaintiff contracted or by whom he was employed * * * will not defeat the lien, where there was no intention to deceive and no one has been misled to his detriment." First Presbyterian Church v. Santy, 52 Kan. 462, 34 P. 974; H. F. Cady Lumber Co. v. Conkling, 70 Neb. 807, 98 N. W. 42; Eberle v. Drennan, 40 Okl. 59, 136 P. 162; Osborn v. Logus, 28 Or. 302, 37 P. 456, 38 P. 190, and 42 P. 997, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 68.

Our own state courts have followed the general rule. Tibbetts v. Moore, 23 Cal. 208; Jewell v. McKay, 82 Cal. 144, 23 P. 139; Hazard, Gould & Co. v. Rosenberg, 177 Cal. 295, 170 P. 612.

In Osborn v. Logus, 28 Or. 302, 42 P. 997, supra, the contract for construction was executed by the defendant Logus, owner of certain property, with C. N. Holm & Co. The claim of lien stated that the materials were furnished to "J. W. Holm & Bro." It was alleged in the complaint that the materials were furnished to J. O. Holm and C. N. Holm, partners, doing business under the firm name of J. O. Holm & Bro. After referring to certain of the evidence the court said:

"But, however this may all be, it is clearly apparent that defendant Logus, who alone is contesting this appeal, has not been misled to his injury in any respect by the allegations in the complaint touching these parties or their firm name, and we are therefore not inclined to hold that there is such a disagreement between the proofs and the allegations as to constitute a variance fatal to plaintiff's case."

Further in the same opinion, in referring to the sufficiency of the claim of lien, the court points out that it is not apparent that the defendant has been misled to his injury, and states:

"The name 'J. W. Holm & Bro.' was evidently placed in the claim of lien in good faith by Osborn. The account was kept with the contractors under that name. * * * The lien claimant having acted in entire good faith in filing his lien, it ought to be clearly manifest that parties have been misled to their injury before a slight misnomer of the contractors' firm name should be allowed to defeat the lien. This last objection is not well taken."

In Lichtenstein v. Grossman Construction Corp., 221 App. Div. 527, 225 N. Y. S. 118, the sufficiency of the lien was questioned. The court said:

"The Lien Law, § 9, requires that the name of the person by whom the lienor was employed or to whom he furnished materials must be specified in the lien. The notice in question contains the statements: * * * The name of the person to whom he * * * furnished or is * * * to furnish materials is Morris Margowitz, president of Grossman Construction Corporation. * * * This is a sufficient compliance with the statute. The lienors have named the defendant Grossman Construction Corporation, but in effect the lien states that the contract was made with the president of that corporation, whose name appears. Even if this were error, it might well be disregarded, since there is not a total failure of compliance with the requirements of the statute in this respect."

The claim of lien in the present case was sufficient to give the owner the notice contemplated by the statute. Defendant was not misled to his injury, as heretofore pointed out; and there was no material variance between the claim of lien and the proof.

[4] Appellant alleges in his fourth specification of error that the finding of the court that appellant was not misled by the use of Richardson Building & Engineering Company, instead of Richardson Building & Engineering Company, Inc., in the claim of lien is not supported by the evidence. While this specification is in effect disposed of in the foregoing part of the opinion, we particularly call attention to the fact that appellant is not in position to complain of the finding for the reason that this question was put in issue by appellant in his answer, and that no evidence was offered in support thereof. In such case the court properly found against him. 24 Cal. Jur. 945; Monterey County v. Cushing, 83 Cal. 507, 23 P. 700. "Where no evidence is introduced in regard to an issue, or the evidence * * * is insufficient to support it, the finding thereon should be against the party having the burden of proof." 38 Cyc., p. 1985.

We deem it unnecessary to advert to the remaining specifications of error, as they are in substance but a restatement of specification 1. Judgment affirmed.

ceased, in which the Southern Trust & Commerce Bank intervened as substituted guardian of said minor. From a judgment for defendant and intervener, plaintiff individually appeals. Affirmed.

R. J. Reynolds, of Great Falls, and Titus & Macomber, of San Diego, for appellant.

Wright & McKee and C. M. Monroe, all of San Diego, for respondent.

George H. Stone, of San Diego, for intervener.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiff and appellant herein commenced this action on his own behalf and also in his capacity as guardian of the person and estate of William H. Conrad, his minor son, for the purpose of having it declared that a certain sum of money which constituted the estate of one La Nita Conrad, deceased, who had formerly been the wife of the plaintiff, had been held by her, and was being held by her estate, in trust for the support, education, and maintenance during his minority of their minor son; the balance remaining thereof after said minor attained his majority to become the property of the plaintiff. While said action was still pending and untried in the trial court, the plaintiff's minor son, having reached the proper age, procured the removal by order of court of the plaintiff as his guardian, and the substitution as such guardian of the Southern Trust & Commerce Bank, and thereafter said bank as guardian of said minor presented and procured to be filed a complaint in intervention, opposing the right of the plaintiff to any share or ownership in his deceased wife's estate. Upon the trial and submission of the cause the trial court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law against the plaintiff and rendered judgment thereon that the plaintiff take nothing by his action, and that the defendant and intervener have judgment for their costs. It is from such judgment that the plaintiff and appellant herein, acting in his individual right alone, has prosecuted this appeal.

The facts of this case are practically undisputed and are briefly these: In October, 1916, La Nita Conrad, now deceased, procured a decree of divorce to be entered against her husband, the plaintiff and appellant herein, in the state of Montana, wherein it was adjudged that in addition to her divorce the plaintiff in that action was entitled to be awarded the custody and control of William H. Conrad, the minor child of the parties to said action; and it was further adjudged and decreed that the plaintiff therein was entitled to receive and was thereby awarded out of the property and estate of her husband, which was stated to be of large value, among other certain properties, the sum of $64,056. The award of said sum in said decree was ab-

Divorce ⚭243—Divorce decree awarding wife stated sum held not to create trust during son's minority, with remainder reverting to husband on wife's death.

Divorce decree of Montana court, awarding wife stated sum absolutely out of husband's estate, held not to create a trust for parties' son during his minority, with amount remaining on attainment of his majority reverting to husband on wife's death; amount awarded being wife's sole and separate estate, of which she could dispose by will to entire exclusion of husband.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cory, Judge.

Action by Arthur F. Conrad, individually and as guardian of the person and estate of William H. Conrad, his minor son, against Marguerite Randell, as executrix of the last will and testament of La Nita Conrad, de-solute, and while the plaintiff in said action was by the judgment therein given no allowance for alimony for the support of said minor child, the said money judgment in her favor was not by said decree charged with any trust whatever relating to the custody, care, or control of said minor child. The amount of said judgment was presently paid over by the defendant to the plaintiff in said action and no appeal was taken from said decree. Thereafter the plaintiff in said action, La Nita Conrad, moved to California, and with her minor son took up her residence in the county of San Diego, where, in about the year 1924, she died, leaving a last will and testament, by the terms of which she disposed of her estate, which consisted in the main of the aforesaid sum of money, leaving no portion thereof to her former husband, but making her minor son the principal devisee of that portion of her estate. Upon the admission of said will to probate and the appointment of Marguerite Randell as the executrix, under said will, of said estate, the plaintiff herein, individually and as the guardian of the person and estate of his aforesaid minor son, presented for allowance a claim against said estate for the remaining balance of said sum of $64,056, wherein he asserted that the decedent had held said sum in trust for the benefit of himself individually and of their minor son, of whom he was at that time guardian. The executrix disallowed said claim whereupon this action ensued, with the result above set forth.

It is the sole contention of the appellant upon this appeal that the award to his deceased wife of the sum of $64,056 by the Montana court was an award in lieu of and in the nature of an allowance for the support of the minor child in said action during his minority, and that a trust was thereby created by which said minor was to be the beneficiary of said sum during his minority, and that upon the attainment of his majority whatever amount remained of said sum was to revert to himself upon the death of his former wife. An examination of the decree of the Montana court convinces us that there is no basis for and no merit in the appellant's contention, since it expressly appears that the award of said sum to the plaintiff in said action was made after a calculation by that court of the amount and value of the properties of the defendant in said action, and was made as and for the rightful sum to be allotted to the wife out of the properties, and that the allowance of said sum was neither expressly nor impliedly charged with any trust whatever. The appellant cites no authority in support of his aforesaid contention, and we are satisfied that none exists. The money thus awarded to the appellant's deceased wife by the decree of said court, the marriage being terminated, became her sole and separate estate, which she was entitled to dispose of and did dispose of by will, to the entire exclusion of the plaintiff and appellant herein. With the rights of William H. Conrad in relation to said sum of money during the period of his minority or thereafter we have upon this appeal no concern.

The judgment is affirmed.

BANK OF ITALY v. CADENASSO et al.*
(S. F. 11861.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 18, 1928.

Hearing Granted in Bank Nov. 19, 1928.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 989—On defendants' appeal, where evidence was conflicting, court must accept plaintiff's case and reject defendant's conflicting evidence.

On defendants' appeal from judgment for plaintiff, where evidence was conflicting, Supreme Court must accept case as proven by plaintiff and reject all evidence of defendants in substantial conflict with that of plaintiff.

2. Estoppel $\S$ 83(2)—Defendants, representing that party obtaining loan from plaintiff owned cheese in defendant's warehouse, were estopped to claim secret lien on same.

Defendants, having represented that party, who later assigned his rights in cheese to plaintiff, was owner of cheese in defendant's warehouse, in order to induce plaintiff to make loan to such party, were estopped to claim that they had secret lien against large part of cheese under written agreement as security for money loaned.

3. Assignments $\S$ 90—Assignee of owner's rights and title in cheese in possession of defendants, warehousemen, were entitled to proceeds thereof after defendants sold same.

Plaintiff, having succeeded to all rights of owner of cheese stored with defendants, warehousemen, under assignment from owner, was entitled to proceeds thereof after same was sold by defendants, who claimed that they had a lien on the cheese.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action for money had and received by the Bank of Italy against E. N. Cadenasso and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of E. N. Cadenasso, and another, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. J. Solinsky and Edward R. Solinsky, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Louis Ferrari and J. J. Posner, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. [1] This is an action for money had and received by defendants for and on behalf of plaintiff. The trial court found in favor of the plaintiff. The evidence is conflicting. We must therefore accept the case as proven by the plaintiff and reject all evidence of the defendants which is in substantial conflict with that of the plaintiff. This controversy grew out of the dealings of the parties hereto with Domenico Caso. The latter had a cheese factory, which he was operating at Newman, Cal. On October 1, 1920, he entered into a written contract with the defendants, whereby the latter agreed to advance or loan to Caso the sum of $5,000. Caso was to deliver to defendants quantities of cheese, which the latter were to sell, and the proceeds up to 28 cents per pound were to be applied to Caso's indebtedness to defendants, and the excess of such proceeds, if any, was to belong equally to the parties to said contract. The contract further provided that, should said defendants loan to Caso any additional sums of money, the terms and conditions applicable to said loan of $5,000 should apply to any additional sums loaned to Caso.

The defendants at the time of the execution of this written contract advanced to Caso the sum of $3,500 under the terms thereof, and thereafter made him additional advancements, all of which advancements or loans amounted to $15,652.17; of this amount defendants were paid the sum of $2,366.56, leaving a balance due from Caso to defendants of $13,285.61. A few days after the execution of the contract referred to above, and on October 7, 1920, Caso desired further capital in his business. He was introduced by the defendant E. N. Cadenasso to certain officers of the plaintiff and made application for and was granted a loan of $25,000. This loan was secured, in part at least, upon a financial statement of Caso's assets and liabilities prepared by the defendant E. N. Cadenasso, from which there was omitted from Caso's liabilities the indebtedness due defendants, nor was there any reference in said statement made to the written contract between Caso and defendants. Representations were made at the time of securing this loan from the plaintiff of the amount of cheese then owned by Caso and in the possession of the defendants, and there was evidence to the effect that said loan was made on the strength of the representation that Caso was the owner of said cheese. Caso testified that the loan was made on the cheese. The cheese was kept in the warehouse of the defendants, and the officers of the plaintiff made frequent trips to the said warehouse for the purpose of inspecting the cheese, and were admitted by the defendants, who pointed out the cheese to said officers, but on the occasion of none of said visits did either of said defendants make any claim to said cheese or to any lien thereon. The parties interested were not able to sell the cheese at a price satisfactory to them, and the same was kept upon defendants' premises until sold as hereinafter set forth. On November 16, 1921, Caso made a written assignment of his interest in the cheese to the plaintiff bank, of which the following is a copy:

"November 16, 1921.

"E. N. Cadenasso & Company—Gentlemen: Please take notice that I have assigned to the Bank of Italy all my right, title and interest in and to that certain block of cheese, approximately 150,000 pounds, held by you for the purpose of sale for my account and you are hereby directed to hold the same and all proceeds thereof subject to the order of the said Bank of Italy.

"Yours truly,

D. Caso."

On the same day the defendants wrote and signed a written acceptance of said order as follows: "Accepted, November 16, 1921, E. N. Cadenasso & Company, by E. N. Cadenasso." In April, 1922, Caso made and delivered to the plaintiff a bill of sale to all of said cheese. It was not until after this bill of sale was delivered to the bank that the defendants notified the officers of the bank that they (the defendants) claimed a lien upon the cheese, under the written agreement of October 1, 1920, and that their lien was prior in time and superior to the claim of the bank. Thereafter the defendants sold the cheese in different lots and at different times, and during the next few months immediately following the delivery of said bill of sale. On receiving the proceeds of said several sales, the defendants deducted the expense of making said sale, and the balance remaining was divided by defendants between themselves and the bank, by retaining for themselves 32 per cent. of said net proceeds, and remitting to the bank 68 per cent. of said net proceeds. The cheese sold for a total amount of $13,181.15. After deducting the expenses of sale, there was left a balance of $10,778.37. Of this amount the defendants remitted to the plaintiff $6,662.77, and retained for themselves the sum of $4,115.60. This action was brought to recover said sum of $4,115.60 from defendants. Defendants in their answer denied any indebtedness to plaintiff. They also interposed a cross-complaint by which they sought to recover back said sum of $6,662.77 paid by them to plaintiff as aforesaid. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount demanded in its complaint, and denied defendants any relief whatever under their cross-complaint. From this judgment the defendants have appealed. Of the sum of $25,000 borrowed of plaintiff by Caso on October 7, 1920, $5,000 had been paid, leaving of the principal $20,000 unpaid. This amount was still unpaid until up to the time defendants began selling said cheese and making remittances thereon to plaintiff. As we have already seen, the amount due defendants from Caso was $13,285.61, and this amount was unpaid at the time the defendants began the sale of said cheese. The indebtedness of Caso to plaintiff had not been reduced at the time of the trial except as to the amounts plaintiff had received thereon from defendants, and Caso's indebtedness to defendants at the time of the trial was said sum of $13,285.61, less the amounts defendants had received on the sale of said cheese, as just stated. The division of the proceeds of the sale of said cheese was made by defendants between itself and plaintiff substantially in the proportion that their respective claims bore to the aggregate amount of said indebtedness. The defendants claimed, and defendant E. N. Cadenasso testified, that this was done under an agreement between himself and plaintiff, and that defendants had assented to said agreement and division of the proceeds of said sale "in order to keep peace and not force Caso into bankruptcy." This evidence of defendants is contradicted by the testimony of the officers of the bank, and by certain correspondence admitted in evidence. The trial court found against this claim of defendants and its finding thereon must be accepted by this court.

[2] The defendants base their claim to the money involved herein upon the terms of the written agreement, of date October 1, 1920, entered into by them with Caso. They insist that by the terms of this agreement they were given a lien upon all cheese delivered into their possession by Caso under said agreement to the extent of any and all unpaid indebtedness of Caso to them. As we view the case, however, it is not necessary to pass upon this question. Conceding that defendants were given such a lien, it is the contention of plaintiff that the defendants are estopped by their subsequent action from asserting said claim of lien as against the claims of the plaintiff. This contention of plaintiff we think must be sustained. The evidence on behalf of plaintiff, which, in view of the findings of the trial court in plaintiff's favor, we must accept, shows that it was through and by means of the efforts of defendant E. N. Cadenasso that plaintiff loaned to Caso the sum of $25,000, and that this loan was made to Caso by reason of the fact that he was the owner of this large quantity of cheese. To put it in the words of Caso, "The loan was made on the cheese." While E. N. Cadenasso was assisting in making these arrangements, which resulted in the bank parting with this large sum of money upon the strength of Caso's ownership of this cheese, he did not at any time by word or action intimate that he, or his firm, had a lien upon this same property to secure a large present and a much larger prospective indebtedness, which, as later developments showed, exceeded the proceeds finally derived from the sale of the cheese. To now permit him, or his firm, to assert that they held a secret lien against a large part of the property, which they represented Caso was the owner of, and which was the inducing cause of the bank making Caso the loan, would be to countenance a fraud against the bank of the rankest kind. The conclusion is irresistible from uncontradicted evidence that, had Cadenasso disclosed to the bank at the time he and Caso applied for the loan that his firm held a written agreement of Caso, giving them a first lien upon all cheese belonging to Caso as security for such sums of money as they had already loaned him or might loan him in the future, the bank would not have acceded to their request for a loan, nor would it have loaned Caso any money whatever. The facts bring the case clearly within the rules of estoppel, so clearly that a citation of authorities is unnecessary. The weakness of defendants' position is further borne out by their subsequent agreement to pay to the bank 62 per cent. of the net proceeds of the cheese. If their written agreement with Caso gave them a first lien against the cheese in their possession, then they would have been entitled to the full amount of said proceeds to the extent of all loans made by them to Caso. By paying to the bank 62 per cent. of these proceeds and only reserving to themselves 38 per cent., which was entirely inadequate to meet the amount of their claim against Caso, they showed how fully they recognized the insecurity of their claim. This payment was made voluntarily and after the repeated assertions by the officers of the bank that they accepted the same without prejudice on the part of the bank to recover the full amount of said net proceeds. Their only asserted reason for voluntarily turning over to the bank 62 per cent. of the money, which, if their claim was correct, belonged wholly to them, was "to keep peace and not force Caso into bankruptcy." This reason seems not to have impressed the trial court, and accordingly it can have no weight in an appeal from the judgment of that court.

The defendants contend that Caso was well acquainted with the officials of the plaintiff at the time he secured the loan from them on October 7, 1920, and that he was indebted to said bank in a large sum of money. This is partially but not wholly true. The evidence shows that plaintiff had a branch bank at Modesto, Cal., and that in May, 1920, Caso had borrowed $5,600 from this branch bank to take care of an unsecured indebtedness at the home office, and that this loan was later increased to $10,000, which was paid in August, 1920. While this evidence does show that Caso had an acquaintance with "the home office," it does not in any manner overcome the evidence that E. N. Cadenasso went with Caso at the time the latter secured the loan of $25,000, and that the loan was made upon the representations of Caso and Cadenasso that Caso owned this large quantity of cheese which made him a safe risk for the bank, and that E. N. Cadenasso at no time during the negotiations leading up to the making of the loan informed the bank of his claim of lien against the cheese.

Much of the briefs of the parties is devoted to a discussion of the legal effect of the written agreement, of date October 1, 1920, between Caso and the defendants. The defendants claim that by the terms of this agreement they were given a first lien upon all cheese delivered into their possession under said agreement by Caso, while the plaintiff denies that the agreement is susceptible of any such construction, and contends that the effect of such agreement was to make Caso and Cadenasso copartners in the disposition and sale of said cheese. Plaintiff further contends that, as they were copartners in said business, the money loaned by plaintiff was loaned to such copartnership for the purpose of carrying on said business, even though the note was signed by Caso only. Under this contention the plaintiff claims that the defendants were personally liable for the amount of said loan as members of said partnership. As already suggested, we consider it unnecessary to pass upon these various and conflicting contentions of the parties to this action. We are satisfied that, even if the defendants are right in the construction which they place upon said written agreement, they are estopped from claiming any lien under said written agreement by their subsequent actions, which resulted in the plaintiff loaning to Caso said sum of $25,000 under the circumstances already related. Therefore the legal effect of said written agreement, as between the parties thereto, becomes of no material consequence in determining the rights of the parties in this action under the facts as above set forth.

[3] The plaintiff, having succeeded to all rights of Caso in and to the cheese in the possession of the defendants, was entitled to the proceeds thereof after the same was sold by defendants. These facts proven at the trial were sufficient to sustain the findings of the court in favor of the plaintiff.

The judgment should therefore be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

SCOVILL v. GUY. (L. A. 9524.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 16, 1928.

1. Contracts $\S$ 99(1)—Fraud $\S$ 50—One suing to rescind contract and recover damages for fraud need not show confidential relation creating trusteeship (Civ. Code, $\S$ 2219).

In action to rescind contract and recover damages for fraud and deceit in procuring it, plaintiff need not show such a degree of confidential relation between parties as would create a trusteeship, within Civ. Code, $\S$ 2219, but need only show existence of such friendly relations for several years as would entitle him to place confidence in defendant's integrity and honesty and the truth of his representations.

2. Contracts $\S$ 94(1)—Fraud $\S$ 23—Party misled by representations of friend, concerning matters of which friend had particular knowledge, may rescind agreement and recover in damages sums paid.

A party misled by representations of another, with whom he has had such friendly relations for a period of years as entitles him to place confidence in such other's integrity and honesty, as to matters concerning which the latter had particular knowledge not readily accessible to the former, may rescind agreement thus procured and recover in damages whatever sums he was induced to pay thereunder.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 1010(1)—Judgment on findings and conclusions, supported by evidence of false representations relied on in making contract rescinded, must be affirmed.

Where evidence in action to rescind contract and recover damages for fraud amply showed that misrepresentations inducing plaintiff to enter into contract were falsely made and fully relied on by plaintiff, who would not have made agreement otherwise, judgment for plaintiff, based on findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with such evidence, must be affirmed as against contention that facts might have been held to comport equally with honesty and fair dealing as with fraud and deceit.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Robert E. Abbott, Judge pro tem.

Action by M. S. Scovill against Ralph I. Guy. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Theodore Stensland, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Kemp, Partridge & Kemp, Thatcher J. Kemp, and Homer N. Boardman, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This action was instituted by the plaintiff for the rescission of a certain agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant upon the ground of fraud and deceit on the part of the latter in procuring such agreement and the payment of certain moneys thereunder, which the plaintiff seeks also to recover in the form of damages for such fraud and deceit. The cause proceeded to trial upon the amended complaint of the plaintiff and the defendant's answer thereto, putting in issue the averments of said amended complaint as to any acts of wrongdoing on the part of the defendant. Upon the trial and submission of the cause the trial court made its findings of fact, wherein it set forth in full the correspondence between the parties, which not only embodied their agreement, but also contained the statements and representations which the plaintiff asserted were, and which the trial court found to have been, falsely and fraudulently made, and to have been acted upon by the plaintiff in the belief that they were true to the extent of paying to the defendant the sum of money which he now seeks to recover. Upon such findings of fact and the conclusions of law drawn therefrom, judgment was entered in the plaintiff's favor for the relief sought in his amended complaint. It is from such judgment that the defendant has prosecuted this appeal.

[1] The first contention of the appellant is that there was no evidence presented at the trial sufficient to show that any confidential relation existed between the parties prior to and at the time the representations of the defendant, which resulted in said agreement, were made. It may be conceded that the evidence in the case did not disclose the existence of such a confidential relation between the parties as would bring the case within the provisions of section 2219 of the Civil Code; but it was not essential to a recovery by the plaintiff in this case that such a degree of confidential relation between the parties as would create a trusteeship within the provisions of said section of the code should exist. It was sufficient for the plaintiff to show the existence of such friendly relations during a period of several years between himself and the defendant as would entitle the plaintiff to place confidence in the integrity and honesty of the defendant and in the truth of whatever representations the latter was making to him with regard to the transaction and to the particular business wherein the defendant by his correspondence was proposing that the plaintiff and himself should jointly engage.

[2] There is ample evidence in the record that such relation existed as would have entitled the plaintiff to rely upon the representations which the defendant made to him as to matters concerning which the defendant had particular knowledge and with regard to which information was not readily accessible to the plaintiff. The authorities are ample to the effect that a party who holds such relation and has been misled by the representations of the other, which are to form the basis of a mutual agreement, and the truth of which is known to the opposite party, and unknown or not easily accessible to him, may rescind the agreement which has been thus procured, and recover in damages whatever sums he may have been induced to pay over under the agreement thus fraudulently obtained. Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal. 383, 92 P. 1011; Dow v. Swain, 125 Cal. 674, 58 P. 271; Koblick v. Larson, 57 Cal. App. 462, 207 P. 929; Sullivan v. Helbing, 66 Cal. App. 478, 226 P. 803. The cases of Ruhl v. Mott, 120 Cal. 668, 53 P. 304, and Bacon v. Soule, 19 Cal. App. 428, 126 P. 384, upon which, to sustain this point the appellant most strongly relies, will not be found, when read in full, to sustain his contention, but rather they uphold the contention of the respondent. We find no merit, therefore, in this contention of the appellant.

The appellant's next contention is that the material alleged misrepresentation upon which the plaintiff relied, and which the trial court found to have been made, while sufficiently supported by the evidence in the case, was not shown by such evidence to have been relied upon by the plaintiff. The record does not support the appellant in this contention, but, on the other hand, does afford sufficient evidence to sustain the finding of the trial court that such misrepresentation was made and was relied upon by the plaintiff as one of the main facts inducing him to enter into the agreement which he sought to rescind.

[3] The final point made by the appellant is that the trial court had presented to it in the circumstances attending the transaction in question a state of facts which might have been held to comport equally with honesty and fair dealing as with fraud and deceit, and that, this being so, the trial court should not have imputed fraud to the defendant upon the facts as shown. But, again, as to this final contention we fail to find that the record supports the appellant in making it, since the evidence amply showed both that the misrepresentations which induced the plaintiff to enter into the agreement were made, and falsely made, but that they were fully relied upon by the plaintiff, and that otherwise the agreement would not have been made. The findings of the trial court were fully supported by the evidence.

The conclusion of law based upon such findings of fact was correct, and it follows necessarily that the judgment of the trial court, based upon such findings and conclusion of law, should be and the same is hereby affirmed.

PER CURIAM. The above-entitled actions, consolidated for purposes of trial and appeal, were brought to recover money alleged to have been misappropriated by the defendant

Edwards while serving simultaneously as tax collector and treasurer, respectively, of the plaintiff irrigation district. That there existed a shortage of $18,612.58, the amount sued for in each complaint, in Edwards' accounts at the time of his resignation from these offices in September, 1923, is not now disputed. So far as the defendant Edwards himself is concerned, both offices having been united in him, it is a matter of little importance in what capacity he is chargeable. But as he was required to furnish two official bonds with sureties, one for the faithful performance of his duties as tax collector and the other for a similar performance of his duties as treasurer, and as the sureties for him in one capacity differed from those who are sureties in the other, justice to the sureties requires that he should not be liable on his bond as tax collector for breaches of duty committed as treasurer and vice versa. Upon the conclusion of the joint trial, at which practically the only testimony adduced was that of a certified public accountant who had audited Edwards' books, the court below granted a motion for nonsuit as to the surety on Edwards' bond as treasurer and thereafter found, upon the evidence, that the entire defalcation had occurred in the office of tax collector. From the judgment of dismissal following upon the granting of the nonsuit to the treasurer's surety the irrigation district has appealed, while the sureties on Edwards' bond as tax collector have appealed from the judgment placing the whole burden of his peculations upon them. These appeals, as stated, have been consolidated. The sureties on Edwards' bond as tax collector concede that as tax collector he was in default at the time of his resignation to the extent of $2,278.35, for which they, as sureties on his bond in that capacity, are liable. It is urged, however, that the trial court erred in entering judgment against them for the remaining sum of $16,334.23, which, it is asserted, was misappropriated by Edwards as treasurer, thus placing responsibility therefor on his surety in that capacity. The surety on the treasurer's bond, on the other hand, argues that it was properly granted a nonsuit, for the entire misappropriation is asserted to have occurred in the office of tax collector. In order to properly protect and safeguard its rights in the premises, the irrigation district is placed in the anomalous position of having to contend, at one and the same time, that the judgment of nonsuit and dismissal was improperly granted as to the surety on the treasurer's bond, and that the judgment for the full sum embezzled was properly entered as against the sureties on the tax collector's bond. Concretely stated, our problem is to determine whether the sum of $16,334.23, the difference between the full amount misappropriated and that conceded to have been misappropriated in the tax collector's office, was embezzled by Edwards as treasurer or tax collector.

The business of the plaintiff district is managed and conducted by a board of directors, an assessor, tax collector, treasurer, and secretary, the latter performing functions somewhat similar to those of a county auditor. These several offices are, of course, separate and distinct, and the fact that Edwards simultaneously occupied two of them is immaterial here so far as the rights and obligations of the respective sureties are concerned. It had been the practice in the district to charge the tax collector at the proper time with the assessment roll. Each month thereafter he would declare under oath to the secretary the amount of his collections, for which he would then be given a "permit" to deposit said collections with the treasurer. Upon his subsequent presentation to the secretary of the treasurer's receipt, the collector would then be credited as against the assessment roll with the amount so deposited and a charge therefor made against the treasurer on the secretary's books. In the present case, as disclosed by the evidence, the treasurer's books reveal that from September 30, 1921, until and including August 31, 1922, his monthly reports of cash on hand exactly checked with and equaled in amount the total of his bank deposits. During this period there apparently existed no shortage in Edwards' treasury account. However, on September 30, 1922, his books as treasurer disclose that his bank deposits were $16,334.23 less than the cash reported on hand, the exact amount here in controversy. This discrepancy between the cash reported on hand by the treasurer and his bank deposits continued through the months of October, November, and December, 1922. At the close of January, 1923, however, the bank deposits of the treasurer again equaled in amount the cash reported by him to be on hand.

Passing now to a consideration of Edwards' books as tax collector, it appears from the record that in the period from December 10, 1922, to January 6, 1923, he collected $186,975.93. This entire amount, as evidenced by the certificates of deposit purchased by him and deposited to his account as treasurer, was actually paid over by Edwards as tax collector to himself as treasurer. As tax collector, however, he reported to the secretary that his collections for this period were only $170,641.70, and consequently received "permits" from the secretary to deposit only this latter sum, though, as stated, he actually paid into the treasury as tax collector the full $186,975.93 collected by him. It is significant to note that the difference between the exact amount collected as tax collector and actually deposited to the credit of the treasurer during this period and the amount reported to have been collected and for which "permits" were issued by the secretary and receipts given by the treasurer equaled in amount the sum here in dispute, viz., $16,334.23. This evidence, in our opinion, tends strongly to indicate that the apparent shortage of $16,334.23 appearing in the treasurer's account from September to December, 1922, and which disappeared in January of 1923 was attempted to be concealed by having the tax collector, who was also treasurer, actually deposit to his account as treasurer all of the moneys collected by him for the period ending January 6, 1923, but reporting said collections to the secretary as being $16,334.23 less than the amount so collected and deposited.

[1] It is urged by the surety on the treasurer's bond that there is no provision in the act under which the plaintiff district was formed requiring its treasurer to keep all funds received by him in such capacity on deposit and that, as a consequence, it cannot be assumed that any discrepancy in the months of September to December, 1922, between the cash reported on hand by the treasurer and that actually kept on deposit by him resulted from any defalcation of the treasurer. In other words, it is contended by the treasurer's surety that he may have had in his safe or his desk or elsewhere during these several months a sum equal to the amount ($16,334.23) representing the difference between the cash reported on hand by the treasurer during this period and that actually on deposit. For the purpose of this decision we will assume that such was the case, and that any discrepancy in the treasurer's books during the latter part of the year 1922 between the cash reported on hand and that on deposit did not represent or constitute a defalcation on that officer's part. However, this assumption does not, in our opinion, serve to relieve the treasurer or his surety from all responsibility or justify the dismissal of the action as to them. There is no dispute, as already stated, but that Edwards' conduct, either as tax collector or treasurer, or both, resulted in a loss to the plaintiff district of $18,612.58. A portion of this sum has been accounted for and charged to him as tax collector, for which his sureties in that capacity are liable. To place the burden and responsibility for the residue of this amount upon these same sureties it is, of course, necessary that the evidence show that Edwards, as tax collector, refused and failed to pay over to the treasury moneys collected by him to this amount, viz., $16,334.23. There is no evidence to this effect in the entire record. On the contrary, it therein appears that, excluding the sum of $2,278.35 already accounted for, Edwards, as tax collector, deposited to his account as treasurer every cent of money collected by him in the former capacity. It is true that he represented to the secretary that his collections were $16,334.23 less than the actuality and that he, therefore, received "permits" to deposit only the lesser sum of $170,641.70. This course, while a suspicious circumstance, does not of itself establish, as the surety on the treasurer's bond would have us believe, a shortage or defalcation in the tax collector's office when in truth and in fact that officer deposited to the account of the treasurer the actual amount collected by him. It would seem, therefore, that Edwards as tax collector having so deposited all moneys then in his possession had fulfilled his duty in this regard, though in an admittedly irregular manner. That the treasury office might have applied or appropriated this $16,334.23, actually deposited, but for which a treasury receipt was not given, in an improper or unaccounted for way, should not make the sureties on the tax collector's bond liable therefor. In U. S. v. Irving, 42 U. S. (1 How.) 250, 261, 262 (11 L. Ed. 120), it is declared that—

"If there was no misapplication of the public money by the collector, and he paid over to the government, or to its order, all the moneys he received during the official term for which the defendants were his sureties, however such payments may have been appropriated by the Treasury, the sureties are discharged."

That the tax collector failed to observe the strict letter of the law and deposited in an irregular manner this $16,334.23 to his account as treasurer should not place the burden of liability on his sureties as tax collector. In arriving at this conclusion we are not embarrassed by the case of County of Mendocino v. Johnson, 125 Cal. 337, 341, 58 P. 5, cited by the surety on the treasurer's bond to the effect that an irregular method of payment of public funds does not serve to relieve an official of liability therefor. In that case the plaintiff had by its evidence supported its allegation that the defendant tax collector had not paid into the treasury some $3,000 of public moneys coming into his hands. As a defense the tax collector offered to prove that he had actually paid the moneys into the treasury without following the forms of payment prescribed by the county government act. The trial court refused to permit the introduction of evidence of payment into the treasury unless the defendant could establish and show that such payment was made in conformity with the provisions of the county government act. In reversing the judgment for plaintiff because of the trial court's refusal to permit the introduction of evidence tending to show payment, though in an irregular manner, into the treasury of the moneys sued for, this court declared:

"A payment to the treasurer in a mode other than that expressly provided by law would not exonerate the tax collector or his bondsmen from an action at the instance of the county, unless proof were made that the county actually received the money. In other words, the tax collector, or any other debtor of the county, is entitled to his acquittance from the county only when he has complied with the forms of law governing his payments into the treasury. If he sees fit to adopt an unauthorized mode of payment, he will be exonerated when he can make it appear, not only that he has paid the money, but that the county has received it. The mere deposit with the treasurer would not be proof sufficient thus to exonerate him. It would be in the nature of an individual deposit made at the party's private risk. But, nevertheless, if the tax collector could show that he had in fact paid the money to the treasurer, and that the county had obtained the benefit of it, then, notwithstanding the irregularity, no loss of funds would have resulted, and neither the tax collector nor his bondsmen could be properly charged in an action such as this for speculation or misappropriation. Therefore, although the offered evidence of the irregular payment would not have been sufficient of itself to exonerate the defendants, it was a step in that direction, and it was error upon the part of the court to refuse to accept the evidence without proof first made of a compliance with the terms of the County Government Act, since that proof, from the loose methods seemingly employed by the treasurer and auditor, as well as the tax collector, could never be made at all, not only as to the $3,000 here in question, but perhaps also as to the whole $132,000 charged upon."

In the case at bar, as we have pointed out, the evidence sufficiently establishes that the $16,334.23 now in dispute had been actually deposited by the tax collector to the credit of the treasury department of the plaintiff district. The district, momentarily at least, may be said to have actually received this money and to have received the benefit of it so far as the defendant tax collector and his bondsmen are concerned. It is therefore chargeable to the treasurer and his surety in that capacity, even though not "officially" receipted for by said treasurer, and any subsequent disposition or appropriation thereof should be explained by them. To state the proposition in a different way, the treasurer, while having accounted for all of the moneys "receipted" for by him, has apparently failed to account for all of the moneys of the district actually received by him. The judgment of nonsuit and dismissal was therefore improperly granted as to the treasurer and his surety.

The case of People v. Hammond, 109 Cal. 384, 392, 42 P. 36, is clearly distinguishable from this case. The general rule is there recognized that where a person succeeds himself in office and during his second term appropriates moneys received by him officially to make good a default committed by him in the first or other prior term, the sureties upon his bond for the second or other subsequent term will be liable. This is so, however, merely because the officer has been guilty of a second embezzlement or wrongful application of funds by employing public moneys received by him during a subsequent term of office to cover the peculations of a prior term. Such is not the case here, for, as shown, Edwards as tax collector actually deposited the $16,334.23 here in dispute to the account of the treasurer and there could not, therefore, have been any defalcation as to this sum in his office as tax collector. The conclusions herein announced are based solely on the record now before us and, of course, nothing said in this opinion is intended to preclude the treasurer's surety on the retrial of these causes from offering, by way of defense, any proof it might have tending to show that the peculations resulting in the loss of this $16,334.23 antedate anything now appearing in the record.

[2] We are not here concerned with any so-called "book shortage" of $11,619.59 appearing upon the face of Edwards' books as treasurer, for it is the fact and not the condition of the books which fixes the liability of the defendants. Anaheim U. W. Co. v. Parker, 101 Cal. 483, 493, 35 P. 1048. With this conclusion the surety on Edwards' bond as treasurer must necessarily agree, for it concedes in its brief that "the 'books' were wrong and did not represent the true facts. * * *"

For the foregoing reasons it is ordered that the judgment in action numbered Sac. 4116 be and the same is reversed. It is further ordered that the judgment of nonsuit and dismissal entered in action numbered Sac. 3957 be and the same is reversed.

IN RE HOUSTON'S ESTATE.
ROSEBOROUGH v. HOUSTON.
(L. A. 9898.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 28, 1928.

1. Executors and administrators ⚡507(4)—Referee's findings that account contained full statement of moneys received and disbursed, etc., disposed of irregularities charged in account of executrix.

Referee's findings that account contained just and full statement of moneys received and disbursed by executrix, and that all items of expenditure were supported by proper vouchers, and that canceled checks were filed in lieu of misplaced vouchers, and that all items of indebtedness paid were paid in good faith and were legal charge against estate, supported by evidence, held to dispose of irregularities in account charged to effect that it was defective, insufficient, incomplete, inconsistent, contradictory, and on its face untrue, and that there were specific irregularities mentioned.

2. Executors and administrators ⚡503—Where executrix delivered vouchers, thereafter lost, into court clerk's custody, court properly allowed items found to be legal charges against estate (Code Civ. Proc. § 1632).

Where executrix delivered vouchers into custody of clerk of court, and they were thereafter lost or mislaid without fault on part of executrix, court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1632, properly exercised its discretion in allowing such items as it found to be legal charges against estate and paid in good faith.

3. Executors and administrators ⚡231—Disbursements made by executrix without claim filed held properly allowed in settlement of account, where estate was then solvent and debts were justly due, etc. (Code Civ. Proc. § 1632).

Where disbursements by executrix without claim filed fulfilled all requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1632, requiring that debts be justly due and paid in good faith, etc., court properly allowed them in settlement of account of executrix.

4. Executors and administrators ⚡411—Where claimant abandoned claim against estate and later instituted ex delicto action after time for presenting claims expired, insolvency caused by judgment cannot retroactively invalidate executrix's previous payments of debts.

Where claimant abandoned claim against estate and thereafter executrix proceeded with administration of estate, time for presenting claims having expired, and claimant later commenced ex delicto action in federal court and recovered judgment several years later, insolvency of estate caused in part by such judgment cannot be held to retroactively invalidate previous payments of debts of estate made by executrix while estate was solvent.

5. Equity ⚡64—Equity will not come to aid of claimant allowing rights against decedent's estate to sleep, by holding executrix should have included possible amount of his judgment as part of indebtedness.

Equity will not come to aid of one allowing rights against decedent's estate to sleep by abandoning claim and later bringing action ex delicto after time for presenting claims had expired, and after executrix had paid debts of estate while estate was solvent, by holding that executrix should have considered his latent rights with possibility of their ripening into judgment and including possible amount of such judgment as part of indebtedness of estate.

6. Executors and administrators ⚡468—Proceeding for settlement of executrix's accounts is of equitable nature and court may allow executrix reimbursement for personal advancements in endeavoring to carry on decedent's business.

Proceeding for settlement of executrix's accounts is primarily of equitable nature and court had power to protect executrix in endeavor to carry on decedent's business and conserve estate and to allow executrix reimbursement for personal advancements in this behalf.

7. Executors and administrators ⚡176—Court could award family allowance to executrix, and, estate being solvent, duration of allowance was not limited to one year (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1464 et seq., 1466).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1464 et seq., court had power to award family allowance to executrix, and, where estate was solvent, duration of allowance was not limited to one year under section 1466.

8. Executors and administrators ⇨184—Remarriage of executrix having minor children was no bar to continuance of allowance for their benefit (Code Civ. Proc. § 1464 et seq.).

Remarriage of decedent's widow, the executrix, who still had minor children to support, was no bar to continuance of an allowance, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1464 et seq., for their benefit.

9. Executors and administrators ⇨197—Modification of award of family allowance cannot operate retroactively (Code Civ. Proc. § 1464 et seq.).

Modification of an award for family allowance under Code Civ. Proc. § 1464 et seq., cannot operate retroactively, and contestant, not having undertaken to secure modification of award at time it was made, cannot urge his objections to amount thereof in proceeding for settling accounts of executrix.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Otho S. Houston, deceased. Proceeding for the settlement of the accounts of Elizabeth Houston, as executrix of the estate of Otho S. Houston, in which J. M. Roseborough attacks the accounts. From an order settling the accounts, the contestant appeals. Affirmed.

Westall & Wallace and Joseph F. Westall, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lucius K. Chase and J. B. Tatlow, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Appeal from order settling the accounts of respondent as executrix. Otho S. Houston died May 8, 1917. He left surviving him four minor children, the oldest of whom was 18 years of age and the youngest 8 years, and his widow, respondent herein, whom he named in his will as the sole beneficiary and executrix of his estate. Proceedings for the probate of his estate were duly instituted and an inventory and appraisal was filed September 25, 1918, valuing said estate at the sum of $75,806.68. Creditors' claims were presented and allowed in the sum of $28,893.55. Claims of appellant, aggregating $10,304, were presented April 22, 1918, and disallowed on June 29, 1918. On November 7, 1918, appellant brought suit on said claims in the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, upon the theory that his recourse in the transaction which gave rise to said claims was ex contractu. It was found, however, that a complaint could not be sustained upon that theory, and, on March 28, 1919, said suit was abandoned. Thereafter, and on June 29, 1919, the period of ten months for notice to creditors expired and said executrix, both before and after said date, proceeded with the administration of said estate, which was largely involved in indebtedness. The first intimation she had that appellant had not permanently abandoned his claim was on October 10, 1919, when he commenced an action, as a nonresident, in the federal court of that district, in the form of a suit for damages, based upon the same liability that had been asserted by him in the action brought in the state court on said rejected claims. On October 17, 1922, he recovered judgment against said executrix in the sum of $10,060, abstract of which was duly filed in this proceeding on October 27, 1922, in accordance with the provisions of section 1504 of the Code of Civil Procedure, thus establishing it as an allowed claim against said estate. In other words, appellant waited until more than fifteen months had expired after the time for presentation of claims of creditors and until more than six months had elapsed after dismissal of his suit in the state court, before commencing his action in the federal court, and it was not until three years later that he recovered said judgment upon which this proceeding is predicated. It was stipulated by counsel on April 7, 1926, and the court also found, that this action was an action ex delicto and was not based upon any claim filed in said estate by appellant.

During all of the times mentioned there appears to have been a constant effort on the part of respondent executrix to get said estate out of debt, and for this purpose she made various advancements to the estate out of her personal funds, totaling $15,357.32. On July 3, 1919, February 26 and March 28, 1924, she filed accounts which show that prior to July, 1919, that is, several months before the commencement of said suit in the federal court, she had paid claims aggregating $67,742.18. On August 2, 1924, said executrix filed the account now before us for settlement, which is entitled an amended and supplemental account current and report, in lieu of all accounts previously filed. She is charged therein with the total amount of the inventory of said estate, $75,806.68, plus receipts on account of the estate, $4,041.35, and money advanced by her personally, $15,357.32, a total of $95,205.35. She claims credit for disbursements in amount of $81,215.55 and for property remaining in her possession and belonging to the estate of the appraised value of $13,989.80; total $95,205.35. The court found upon competent evidence that said sum of $15,357.32 was advanced to said estate and passed through the hands of said executrix in payment of estate debts and administration expenses, no repayment of which had been made, and that amount is set forth as a preferred claim against the estate, as is also the claim of said executrix for the accrued amount of her family allowance, $21,500, from May 8, 1917, to July 8, 1924, less $434 paid on account thereof. Thus it is seen that as the assets of the estate are valued only at the sum of $13,989.80, if either of said preferred claims is allowed, and the account is approved, there will be no funds from which to satisfy the claim of appellant.

Appellant attacks the account on numerous grounds. He claims that it is defective, insufficient, incomplete, inconsistent, contradictory, and on its face untrue. He complains of numerous alleged irregularities and makes specific attack against many individual items which we are not required to detail. He claims that said executrix received credit, to which she was not entitled, for debts paid by her for which no claims were filed or allowed; that she is not entitled to credit for advancements made by her personally and used in paying estate debts; that she borrowed money on her personal note and afterwards paid her own personal debt with estate funds; that she failed to file vouchers in support of her payments and such vouchers as were filed are defective; that she failed to list the assets at their true value; that appellant, as the holder of an allowed claim, is as much entitled to payment in full as other holders of allowed claims of equal rank which have been paid in full; that no settlement of the account should be approved which would prevent him from sharing, at least pro rata, with the holders of other properly allowed claims of equal rank; that the family allowance should not be allowed; that said executrix attempted without authority to carry on the business of decedent, etc.

A referee was appointed by the court to examine thoroughly the accounts of said executrix and to take evidence and determine the merits of appellant's claims. He found the facts to be substantially as hereinabove set forth, and in addition he made findings which are, in our opinion, amply supported by the evidence, and which resolve in favor of said executrix every contention made by appellant with respect to irregularities in said account. An order was thereafter entered confirming the report and findings of said referee and settling the account from which order appellant prosecutes this appeal.

Said referee, in addition to the facts hereinabove set forth, found that said account contained a just and full statement of all the moneys received and disbursed by said executrix and that each and all of the facts therein stated were true; that all of the items of expenditure were supported by proper vouchers; that while certain of said vouchers had been mislaid, and by reason of lapse of time it was impossible to obtain duplicates thereof, yet canceled checks evidencing payment were produced and filed by said executrix in lieu of such misplaced vouchers; "that each and all of the items set forth in said account as expenditures are either proper items of expenditure incurred in the operation of said estate, or are the debts of the decedent paid by the executrix; that each and all of the items of indebtedness so paid were paid in good faith and for the best interests of the estate, and were a legal charge against said estate; that each and all of the disbursements set forth in said account were paid prior to July of 1919"; that the estate was at the time said payments were made and is now solvent; that appellant negligently failed to institute his aforesaid action ex delicto until more than two years after the death of decedent and more than two years after the issuance of letters testamentary to said executrix, and more than one year after the expiration of the time within which claims might have been filed against the estate, and that said executrix was justified in making the payments of the indebtedness of said deceased which were made by her and had no knowledge or means of knowledge that appellant had or claimed to have an action ex delicto against said estate. The findings likewise dispose of the specific items objected to by appellant. Said findings, and the order, charge said executrix with having on hand property of the appraised value of $13,989.80, as against which there are outstanding the following valid and allowed claims: Preferred claims of said executrix for $15,357.32, covering her personal advancements, and $21,066 for family allowance; preferred charges against the remaining corpus of said estate of $650 for services of the referee, and $227.50 for court reporters' fees; claim of appellant for $10,060 upon his aforesaid judgment.

We are not here required to decree a preference between said allowed claims outstanding against the estate. That matter may be determined at the time of hearing and final settlement. In other words, if we approve the action of the trial court in settling the account, the question of proper application of the assets of $13,989.80 upon said indebtedness will receive attention at the time the final account of said executrix comes before the court.

[1] We hold, as above stated, that the findings correctly state the facts shown by the evidence and dispose of the various irregularities charged in the account; therefore the settlement of said account as a whole has our approval. But two matters require further discussion, to wit: (1) In confirming payment of certain debts, without claim filed, by virtue of section 1632 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a requirement of which is that an estate be solvent, did the court give proper weight to the effect of appellant's right, which existed but was unasserted at the time said payments were made, to file an ex delicto action against said estate? and (2) Did the court err in allowing respondent's claim for family allowance, taking into consideration her early remarriage and the fact that she had minor children?

[2] Section 1632 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that—

"If it appears by the oath to the account and is proven by competent evidence to the satisfaction of the court, that a voucher for any disbursement * * * has been lost * * * and that it is impossible to obtain a duplicate thereof and that such item or items were paid in good faith and for the best interests of the estate, and such item or items were legal charges against said estate, then the executor or administrator shall be allowed such item or items."

Here the evidence shows that the vouchers were delivered into the custody of the clerk of the court and thereafter lost or mislaid without knowledge or fault on the part of said executrix. Under the above section the court properly exercised its discretion in allowing such items as it found to be legal charges against the estate and paid in good faith.

[3] As to payment of estate debts without affidavit and allowance, said section 1632 further provides that—

"If, upon such settlement of accounts, * * * it shall be proven by competent evidence to the satisfaction of the court that such debts were justly due, were paid in good faith, that the amount paid was the true amount of such indebtedness over and above all payments or set-offs, and that the estate is solvent, it shall be the duty of the said court to allow the said sums so paid in the settlement of said accounts."

The referee found, as above stated, that the disbursements, without claim filed, made by said executrix, fulfilled all the requirements of the above provision; that they were all made prior to July, 1919; that the estate was then solvent, and allowed them in the settlement of the account.

[4, 5] But appellant contends, even though at that time he had abandoned his claim and had not yet instituted his ex delicto action, that said executrix should have taken into consideration his latent rights with a possibility of their ripening into a judgment, and, including the possible amount of said judgment as a part of the indebtedness of said estate, should have realized that it would render the estate insolvent and necessitate a pro rata distribution of assets to creditors. The mere statement of the contention reveals that it would be inequitable and unjust to uphold it. Said executrix, knowing that she was the sole legatee, acted in good faith in endeavoring to close the estate by clearing up all the indebtedness at a time when, to the best of her knowledge and in fact, it was solvent and apparently could not but remain so, as the period within which creditors could present claims had expired and appellant's claim had been abandoned. She should therefore not be made to suffer by reason of the circumstances which forced the later insolvency, nor can said insolvency be held to retroactively invalidate said payments. Appellant alone is at fault in having negligently allowed his rights to sleep, and hence equity will not come to his aid.

[6] A proceeding of this character is primarily of an equitable nature (In re Clos, 110 Cal. 494, 42 P. 971; Estate of Freud, 131 Cal. 667, 671, 63 P. 1080, 82 Am. St. Rep. 407; Estate of Bell, 168 Cal. 253, 141 P. 1179), and the court had power to protect said executrix in her endeavor to carry on the business of decedent (Estate of Freud, supra, and cases therein cited), and conserve said estate, and to allow said executrix reimbursement for her personal advancements in this behalf (Estate of Carpenter, 146 Cal. 661, 80 P. 1072; In re Clos, supra).

[7] That the court had power to award a family allowance to said executrix is unquestioned (section 1464 et seq., Code Civ. Proc.; In re Walkerley, 77 Cal. 642, 20 P. 150; Estate of Treat, 162 Cal. 250, 121 P. 1003), and, in view of the findings and evidence that said estate was solvent, the duration of said allowance was not limited to one year under the provisions of section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[8] Furthermore, as said executrix still had minor children to support, her remarriage was no bar to the continuance of an allowance for their benefit. This is clearly implied in the cases relied upon by appellant. As said in Re Still, 117 Cal. 509, 514, 49 P. 463, 465:

"No doubt the court could have continued the allowance, if necessary for the benefit of the children, but when she ceased to be the widow of Still she could not claim as a perquisite for herself, or for her new husband, a family allowance from the estate of her former spouse. Estate of Hamilton, 66 Cal. 576 [6 P. 493]."

[9] Appellant is, therefore, in no position to urge the disallowance of the order granting the allowance. At the time said order was made he might, it is true, have opportunely undertaken to secure a modification of the award (Estate of Boselly, 179 Cal. 218, 176 P. 45; Estate of Nelson, 167 Cal. 321, 139 P. 692), but this he failed to do, and, as such modification cannot operate retroactively (Estate of Nelson, supra), it is now too late for him to urge his objections to the amount thereof.

However, as above stated, the decree entered herein reserves for determination by the court upon the settlement of the final account of said executrix the respective rights of said executrix and appellant to the payment of their respective claims, and further consideration of said award for family allowance is therefore really immaterial to the determination of this proceeding.

The order is affirmed.

COUTURE v. OCEAN PARK BANK.
(L. A. 10426.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 1, 1928.

1. Banks and banking ☞138—Bank, paying checks drawn payable to "M. Company" for "J. B. T." to J. B. T., was released from liability to drawer (Code Civ. Proc. § 367; Civ. Code, § 1559).

Where checks were drawn payable to order of "M. Company" for "J. B. T.," bank paying checks to J. B. T. was thereby released from liability to drawer notwithstanding that J. B. T. was not a beneficiary in actual fact, since, in case he had a beneficial interest in money as would appear from face of check, he could have maintained an action in his own name under Code Civ. Proc. § 367, Civ. Code, § 1559, and bank was not under legal obligation before paying checks to ascertain actual rights of parties.

2. Banks and banking ☞138—Drawer executing checks so as to empower another to cash checks and misappropriate money must suffer thereby (Civ. Code, § 3543).

Where drawer of check payable to M. Company for J. B. T. by delivering them into possession of the latter vested in him power to mislead the bank in paying money to him, the drawer must suffer for wrongful act of J. B. T. in cashing checks and misappropriating money, in view of Civ. Code, § 3543, to effect that one of two innocent persons whose negligence caused injury must suffer by act of third.

3. Contracts ☞155—Instrument uncertain as to terms is to be construed most strongly against party causing uncertainty (Civ. Code, § 1654).

In view of Civ. Code, § 1654, an instrument which is uncertain as to its terms is to be construed most strongly against the party who caused such uncertainty to exist.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by Emile J. Couture and another, copartners doing business under the firm name of the Slingluff-Couture Company, against the Ocean Park Bank. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion 263 P. 316.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Weber & Crawford, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. Action brought to recover the sum of $601.02 from the defendant bank, which amount plaintiffs allege they had deposited with said bank to their credit. The defense by the bank is that it paid out said sum upon two checks drawn by the plaintiffs. The evidence shows that the plaintiffs had a checking account with defendant at least in an amount equal to the amount sued for.

The plaintiffs were engaged in the plumbing business, and had in their employ, as foreman of their plumbing department, one J. B. Tailer. They were indebted to the Manual Arts Plumbing Company for materials purchased from said company on account of two jobs, upon which Tailer had acted as foreman. In satisfaction of this indebtedness to the Manual Arts Plumbing Company, they drew two checks and gave them to Tailer, with instructions to deliver them to the Manual Arts Plumbing Company. One of these checks was by mistake made payable to the Manual Arts Hardware Company, instead of the Manual Arts Plumbing Company. The total of these two checks was the amount sued for herein, and said checks, together with their subsequent indorsements, are as follows:

"Ocean Park Bank. 90-193.

"Commercial Savings.

"Santa Monica Branch.

"Santa Monica, Cal., Sept. 2, 1922. No. 103.

"Pay to the order of Manual Arts Hdw. Co. for J. B. Tailer $283.02 two hundred eighty-three and 02/100 dollars.

"The Slingluff-Couture Co.,

"Emile J. Couture."

Indorsement on back of above check as follows:

"James B. Tailer, Manual Art Hard. Co."

"Ocean Park Bank. 90-193.

"Commercial Savings.

"Santa Monica Branch.

"Santa Monica, Cal., Sept. 25, 1922. No. 177.

"Pay to the order of Manual Arts Plumbing Co., for J. B. Tailer $318.00 three hundred eighteen and xxx/100 dollars.

"The Slingluff-Couture Co.,

"Emile J. Couture."

Indorsement on back of above check as follows:

"Manual Arts Plumbing Co. J. B. Tailer."

Tailer, instead of delivering these checks to the Manual Arts Plumbing Company, presented them to the bank himself, and, after indorsing his own name on each of said checks, and forging the name of the Manual Arts Plumbing Company to the check which was made payable to said company, and the words Manual Arts Hardware Company to the other, received the money thereon, and absconded. He never paid the money, or any part thereof, either to plaintiffs or to the Manual Arts Plumbing Company. Upon this state of facts the trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiffs and from a judgment predicated upon said findings of fact the defendant bank has appealed.

The rights of the parties hereto are governed entirely by the terms of the two checks, and cannot in any way be affected or modified by any undertaking or agreement between the plaintiffs and Tailer, nor by reason of the purpose for which the checks were given by the plaintiffs to Tailer, in the absence of any knowledge by the bank of such agreement or purpose. The bank was authorized to act upon the directions given by the plaintiffs as these directions appear upon the face of the checks. If the checks were authorizations on the part of Tailer to receive from the bank the amounts stated in the checks, then the payment of said checks by the bank was legal, and the plaintiffs cannot recover in this action. This would be so even if Tailer forged the name of the Manual Arts Plumbing Company on one check and that of the Manual Arts Hardware Company on the other. For, if the checks can be legally construed as authorizing Tailer to receive the amount named in the checks from the bank, then the indorsement of the Manual Arts Plumbing Company to either of said checks was not necessary in order that the bank pay the amounts called therefor to Tailer.

[1] It will be noted that each check contains an express direction to the bank to pay the amount of money therein named to the Manual Arts Company. In each check the name of the company is immediately followed by the words "for J. B. Tailer." There is no question, had the bank paid the money called for by these checks to the regular payee named therein or upon its legal indorsement, that such payment would have been legal and would have bound respondents, as the drawers of said checks. And this would have been so in the absence of the indorsement, or any other action taken on the part of J. B. Tailer. In other words, the checks as drawn contained an express direction to the bank to pay the same to the Manual Arts Company. What effect, therefore, have the words "for J. B. Tailer" as they appear in the body of the checks? Appellant contends that the legal effect of these words in the checks, at least between the parties hereto, is to make Tailer the beneficiary of the proceeds of said checks. Whether he was the actual beneficiary of said proceeds would depend upon his relations with the Manual Arts Company. Let us suppose that by some working agreement between the plaintiffs and the Manual Arts Company the money called for by the checks was in fact the property or money of Tailer. In such a case there can be no doubt but that Tailer would have a beneficial interest in said money, and at most the Manual Arts Company would simply be the trustee of said funds when collected for Tailer. In such a case Tailer, as the real party in interest, could maintain an action against the bank for said proceeds in case the bank refused to pay the checks. Such action could be maintained by Tailer in his own name. Code of Civil Procedure, § 367; Civil Code, § 1559. On the other hand, by the agreement and understanding of the parties to said checks, Tailer might have no interest therein nor to the proceeds thereof. The evidence in this case shows that such was the agreement and understanding of the parties. But how was the bank to know just what the undisclosed agreement of said parties was? It had the right to act upon what appeared upon the face of the checks as the same were drawn by the plaintiffs and presented to it by Tailer. Apparently, from the face of the checks, the money called for by the checks was ultimately to belong to Tailer. If this were in fact true, the bank would be under legal obligation to pay the same to him. Was the bank, before paying the checks, under the legal necessity of ascertaining the true relations of Tailer to the other parties to said checks, or was it justified in acting upon the apparent relations of the parties as disclosed by the face of the checks? As we have before said, the terms of the checks determine the rights of the parties thereunder. The bank was not, therefore, under any legal obligation before paying the checks to ascertain whether the actual rights of the parties were different from their apparent rights as disclosed by the terms of said checks. Any other construction of the law applicable to this case would cast upon the bank an obligation and duty beyond that generally assumed by a bank toward its depositors. It was not the duty of the appellant bank to decide whether Tailer was the real or only the apparent beneficiary of the funds called for by the checks. It was authorized to act upon the apparent import of the checks as presented to it, and, if it afterwards were proven that the real facts were different from those appearing upon the face of the checks, then the loss, if any, should not fall upon the bank, but upon the plaintiffs, who drew the checks in the form in which they were drawn.

There is but little direct authority to be found upon the question of the legal effect of a check drawn in the form in which the checks involved herein were drawn. In the case of Ridgely Nat. Bank v. Patton & Hamilton, reported in 109 Ill. 479, it was held by the Supreme Court of Illinois, where a check was drawn in favor of Patton & Hamilton for the account of Lewis Coleman & Co., that Patton & Hamilton were the trustees of Lewis Coleman & Co. But in that case the evidence showed that the check was drawn in payment of an account due Lewis Coleman & Co. This account was in the hands of Patton & Hamilton, attorneys, for collection, and the debtor, in payment of the account, drew the checks in favor of the attorneys "for account of Lewis Coleman & Co." Had Lewis Coleman & Co., being the real parties in interest of said check, brought suit thereon against the bank, we think that without doubt, at least under our system of procedure, they could have successfully maintained said action and recovered the amount due thereon from said bank. There is nothing contrary to our views above expressed to be found in Brown v. Cow Creek Sheep Co. (Wyo.) 126 P. 886. In that case the check involved directed the bank to "Pay to the order of Ed. Brown $2,- 500 00/00 twenty-five hundred dollars. For Wilkes." In an action by Brown against the Cow Creek Sheep Company, the drawer of the check, it was claimed that the words "for Wilkes" rendered the check nonnegotiable. The court, however, held that the presence of these words had no such effect, but that "they appear, on the contrary, to be merely a statement of the object for which the check is drawn, or the person or account to which the amount was to be charged." The relative position of the words "for Wilkes" in the check in that case is different from the position of the words "for J. B. Tailer" in the checks drawn by the respondents. They not only follow the direction in the check to pay to Brown the sum of $2,500, but they are separated from the directing sentence of the check by a period. In fact, they are set off by themselves, and the court could in that case reasonably hold that they amounted merely to a memorandum on the check showing "the person or account to which the amount is to be charged." In the present action, the checks, as we have already seen, direct the bank to pay to the Manual Arts Company "for J. B. Tailer," the amount designated in each check respectively. The check in the case just cited materially differs from the checks involved herein. The case of Turner v. Eldridge, 6 Ala. 821, involved a promissory note drawn as follows: "* * * I promise to pay to Jas. W. Camp, for the benefit of Alfred Turner, five hundred dollars. * * * H. B. Turner." Camp thereafter assigned said note to Eldridge, who later instituted suit against H. B. Turner, the maker. The only point claimed to have been decided by the court was that the legal effect of the instrument was merely a promise to pay Camp, and that the beneficiary was not a necessary party to said action. That case actually holds that Alfred Turner was the beneficiary of the proceeds of said note. If he were such beneficiary, he was the real party in interest, and could have maintained an action thereon in this state. The respondents have not presented to our attention any authorities which sustain their position. We agree that there is but little direct authority to support the position of appellant, but, for the reasons before expressed, we are of the opinion that the general rules of law applicable to the facts in this case are in favor of the contentions of the appellant. We therefore conclude that, in causing said checks to be made payable to the Manual Arts Company for J. B. Tailer, the latter was, as between the drawers of said check and the bank upon which they were drawn, the beneficial owner of the proceeds of said checks, and that the payment of the checks to Tailer by the bank was justified by the terms of said checks.

[2, 3] From another angle of the case we think that the respondents should not be permitted to escape their responsibility upon said checks. The checks as drawn are undoubtedly uncertain in their directions as to whom the money for which they were drawn was ultimately to belong. By drawing these checks in the manner in which they did, thus rendering it uncertain from their terms whether they were for the benefit of the Manual Arts Company or J. B. Tailer, and then delivering them into the possession of the latter, the respondents placed it in the power of Tailer to mislead the bank in paying the money to him. In such a case the plaintiffs should suffer for the wrongful acts of Tailer. "Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer." Civil Code, § 3543. The bank could have reasonably inferred, with Tailer in possession of the checks in the form in which they were drawn, that the respondents intended that the proceeds of the checks should belong to him and therefore concluded that it was authorized to pay to him the amount called for by the two checks. It is well settled that, where an instrument is uncertain as to its terms, it is to be construed most strongly against the party thereto who caused such uncertainty to exist. Civil Code, § 1654; Payne v. Neuval, 155 Cal. 46, 99 P. 476; Union Const. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 163 Cal. 298, 125 P. 242; Bennett v. Potter, 180 Cal. 736, 183 P. 156.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

WASTE, C. J. I concur in the judgment of reversal upon the ground last stated in the majority opinion. By drawing the checks in the manner in which they did, and placing them in the possession of J. B. Tailer, the respondents put it within his power to mislead the bank into paying the money to him, and they should therefore suffer for his wrongful act.

I am not sufficiently convinced as to the treatment of the first point in the opinion, which, in effect, holds that the checks can be legally construed as authorizing Tailer to receive the amount named from the bank, to agree with the conclusion therein stated, for which reason I express no opinion on that matter.

CLARK v. TOMPKINS et al. (S. F. 12448.)★

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1928.

Hearing Denied in Bank Nov. 1, 1928.

1. Judgment ⚡846—Assignee of judgment is in no better position than immediate assignor, or other prior owner, in asserting right thereunder.

Assignee of judgment recovered against corporation by existing creditor at time of sale of stock for less than par stands in no better position than immediate assignor, or any other prior owner of claim, in asserting any right thereunder.

2. Corporations ⚡232(1)—Generally, existing creditors cannot recover against purchasers of stock for less than par difference between amount paid and par value.

Generally, existing creditor at time of sale of corporate stock for less than par has no right of action against stockholder purchasing such stock to recover difference of amount paid for stock and its par value, on the theory that existing creditors are not defrauded or injured by an issue of stock as a bonus or on payment of less than its par value in money, or in property, and therefore cannot complain of such a transaction.

3. Corporations ⚡232(1) — Purchasers of stock at less than par, under permit authorizing creditor's bill, were liable for payment of judgment on existing claim (Corporate Securities Act, § 4).

Where permit issued under the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673) § 4, authorizing sale of corporate stock for less than par, expressly provided that purchasers of such stock were liable on creditor's bill in case corporation should become insolvent, such provision became a binding obligation on purchaser, and recovery could be had against purchasers, though claim on which judgment was recovered accrued prior to date they acquired stock.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by R. E. Clark against W. Sydney Tompkins and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Theodore J. Savage, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Samuel D. Hamburg, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. The plaintiff, a judgment creditor of the Elkhorn Oil Company, a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of this state, filed this creditor's action against the defendants as stockholders of said corporation to recover the amount of a judgment rendered against said corporation and in favor of plaintiff's assignor. In the main the facts out of which this controversy arose are not disputed. The corporation became indebted to the Rite-way Printing Company for goods sold and delivered to it between June 21, 1921, and October 21, 1921. The Rite-way Printing Company assigned its account to D. Phillips, who instituted an action on said account, and in said action recovered a judgment against the Elkhorn Oil Company on the 25th day of November, 1924, for the sum of $284.64. Thereafter a writ of execution was issued on said judgment directed to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, which was subsequently by said sheriff returned wholly unsatisfied. No part of said judgment has been paid, and prior to the commencement of this action the said Phillips duly assigned to plaintiff the aforesaid judgment, and plaintiff was the owner thereof at the time of the institution of this action.

The par value of the stock of the Elkhorn Oil Company was $1 per share. The commissioner of corporations of the state of California on December 12, 1922, issued a written permit to said Elkhorn Oil Company to sell a certain amount of its stock at the price of 50 cents per share. The defendant W. Sydney Tompkins on the 26th day of December, 1923, purchased of said company 11,900 shares of its capital stock at 50 cents per share, and the defendant Norman F. Hall, between the 20th day of November, 1922, and the 2d day of October, 1923, purchased of said company 4,000 shares of its capital stock at 50 cents per share. Among other things, said permit as issued by said commissioner contained the following provision:

"Prospective subscribers are advised that holders of shares sold at less than par are liable, if said corporation should become insolvent, to the collection from them of the unpaid residue of the par value of the stock upon a creditor's bill filed for that purpose by the judgment creditors of the corporation."

A copy of this permit was printed upon the reverse side of subscription contracts used by the Elkhorn Oil Company in the sale of its stock, and the subscription contract refers to said permit and recites that said subscription contract is "subject to the conditions of the permit issued by the commissioner of corporations, a copy of which is printed on the reverse side thereof and which I have read."

There was one question upon which there was a dispute at the time of the trial. The defendants claimed, and so set forth in their answer, that at the time they purchased the shares of stock in said corporation said stock was worth no more than 50 cents per share and that they bought the said shares in good faith and paid therefor its full market value at the times at which they made their respective purchases. The court, however, found against defendants upon this claim. Upon the facts as found, which are substantially those recited above, with the one exception just noted, the court rendered judgment in plaintiff's favor against said defendants. Defendants have appealed.

Appellants first contend that no recovery can be had in a creditor's action against a stockholder of a corporation by a person who was a creditor at the time such stockholder purchased his stock. In other words, appellants contend that existing creditors of a corporation have no right of action against a stockholder, who purchases stock in such corporation for less than its par value, to recover the difference between the amount he paid for said stock and its par value. This is undoubtedly the general rule, and it is stated as follows:

"Existing creditors are not defrauded or injured by an issue of stock as a bonus or on payment of less than its par value in money, or in property, labor, or services, and therefore * * * they cannot complain of such a transaction or compel such stockholders to pay the full par value of such stock so issued to them, contrary to their agreement with the corporation, * * * for they could not, by any legal presumption, have trusted the corporation upon the faith of such stock." 14 Corpus Juris, 100.

While the precise point does not appear to have been expressly decided by this court, the following statement taken from a recent decision sets forth in apt language the conditions under which a creditor's action, like the present one, can be maintained in this state:

"The gist of the creditor's action is that he was induced to extend credit to the corporation by the false representations of the corporation respecting the amount paid in by the stockholder to the corporate capital, and the measure of his recovery is the same as in ordinary actions for damages for deceit, namely, the difference between the amount which has actually been paid in by the stockholders to the corporate capital and the amount which would have been paid in had the representations been true. It follows that the creditor cannot recover in this class of cases unless he was actually deceived by the misrepresentations. If he in fact knew that the stock was watered at the time he extended credit to the corporation, he cannot claim to have been misled by the misrepresentations, and therefore cannot recover." Spencer v. Anderson, 193 Cal. 1, 6, 222 P. 355, 357 (35 A. L. R. 822).

If, as stated in the foregoing decision, the gist of a creditor's action, such as the present one, is that the creditor "was induced to extend credit to the corporation by the false representations of the corporation respecting the amount paid in by the stockholder to the corporate capital," then such an action would be available only to a creditor who had become such after a purchase of stock by such stockholder for less than its par. This ruling is in harmony with the decisions of the United States Supreme Court—

"We have no doubt the learned circuit judge held correctly that it was only subsequent creditors who were entitled to enforce their claims against these stockholders, since it is only they who could, by any legal presumption, have trusted the company upon the faith of the increased stock. First National Bank of Deadwood v. Gustin Minerva Consolidated Mining Company [42 Minn. 327] 44 N. W. 198 [6 L. R. A. 676, 18 Am. St. Rep. 510]; 2 Morawetz on Corporations, §§ 832-3; Coit v. N. C. Gold Amalgamating Co. [C. C.] 14 F. 12." Handley v. Stutz, 139 U. S. 417, 435, 11 S. Ct. 530, 537, 35 L. Ed. 227, 237.

[1, 2] In the present action it appears that the claim upon which the respondent recovered judgment against the Elkhorn Oil Company accrued long prior to the dates on which the appellants herein acquired their stock in said corporation. Either respondent, or one of his predecessors in interest in said claim, was an existing creditor at the time appellants purchased stock in the Elkhorn Oil Company. Respondent stands in no better position than his immediate assignor, or any other prior owner of said claim, in asserting any right thereunder. Neither respondent, nor any of his predecessors in interest, therefore, extended credit to the corporation upon the faith that appellants had paid full value for their stock. This action, therefore, is not available to respondent under the general rules of law above stated. The fact that the account for goods sold the corporation has been merged into a judgment does not change the rights of the parties, nor give to the holder of said judgment any rights to maintain a creditor's action that were not possessed by the holder of the claim when it consisted of a mere account, even if said judgment had been rendered after the appellants had made their respective purchases of stock. Respondent advances the contention that the judgment is a new debt, and therefore as owner thereof he was not an existing creditor of the corporation at any date prior to the date of the rendition of the judgment. We think this claim is without merit.

[3] Respondent, however, further contends that while the general rule is as above stated, it has no application to the parties to this action by reason of the fact that the appellants purchased their stock from the Elkhorn Oil Company under a permit which expressly provided that "holders of shares of stock sold at less than par are liable, if said corporation should become insolvent, to the collection from them of the unpaid residue of the par value of the stock upon a creditor's bill filed for that purpose by the judgment creditors of the corporation." This permit was dated December 12, 1922, and it is presumed that it was issued on that date. It was therefore in effect at the time the appellant Tompkins purchased all of his shares of stock from the company, and also when the appellant Hall purchased at least a portion of his shares.

The Corporate Securities Act, under which said permit was issued (Stats. 1917, p. 673), provides in section 4 thereof that—

"The commissioner shall issue to the applicant a permit authorizing it to issue and dispose of securities, as therein provided, in this state, in such amounts and for such considerations and upon such terms and conditions as the commissioner may in said permit provide."

By subdivision 6, § 2, of this act the word "security" includes all shares of stock or other interests or rights into which the capital stock is divided. It is by virtue of section 4 of the Corporate Securities Act that the commissioner of corporations in this state is empowered to authorize the sale of stock in a corporation for less than its par value. If, therefore, in granting a permit to a corporation to issue and sell its stock for less than its par value, the commissioner shall further provide in such permit, in case of the insolvency of the corporation, that those stockholders who purchase their stock below par thereby assume an obligation to become responsible for the debts of the corporation to the extent of the difference between the par value of the stock purchased and the price which they paid for the same, it would appear that the commissioner acted within the express powers granted him under section 4 of said act. To require the appellants to comply with this works no unjust hardship upon them for the reason that this obligation to protect pro tanto the interest of the creditors is one of the conditions of their purchase, and was knowingly and voluntarily assumed by them at the time they made their respective purchases. It is distinctly set forth in the permit under which they purchased their stock and which they are supposed to have read before they made their purchase. If they failed to familiarize themselves with the terms of the permit, then they have no just cause to complain, for it is only by virtue of the permit that the company is authorized to make a sale of its shares of stock. This provision of the permit, making stockholders who purchase stock for less than its par value liable to the creditors of an insolvent concern, being legally a part of the permit under which the defendants purchased their stock, the defendants are conclusively presumed to have assented to it and made it a part of their contract of purchase. It is, therefore, a binding obligation upon them.

Appellants devote a considerable part of their argument to the discussion of the question as to whether the appellants are liable where the evidence shows that they paid for the stock its full market value, and that the transaction was free from fraud. We fail to see how this argument can have any weight in this action where the findings of the court upon these issues were against appellants. But even had the findings upon these issues been in their favor, this claim of appellants could not have availed them, as their purchases were governed by the terms of the permit, issued by the corporation commissioner, which, as we have already seen, cast upon appellants obligations to pay the claims of the corporation's creditors to the extent of that part of the par value of their stock remaining unpaid.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action for goods sold by B. W. Hulsman and another, copartners doing business as the Market Company, against Louis E. Ireland and others, individually and as copartners, doing business as Tubells Company. From the unfavorable portion of the judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Portion of judgment appealed from reversed, with directions.

Superseding opinion in 264 P. 1104.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

J. W. Morin, of Pasadena, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. This appeal presents a question respecting community property rights between a husband and wife and third persons. Appellants argue strenuously for their position, but admit their inability to find authority to support it. Respondent, of course, does not aid them in this difficulty, but contends that the appeal must be dismissed "without hesitation." However, notwithstanding this situation, we are of the opinion that appellants are correct in the contention put forth, for which we have found a measure of authority.

Plaintiffs, as a copartnership, sue defendants individually and as copartners doing business under the firm name of Tubells Company. Defendants Rufus W. Russell and Elizabeth B. Russell are husband and wife. The business conducted under the fictitious name was that of a restaurant and confectionery in Los Angeles. The claim of plaintiffs is for a balance of approximately $8,000 for meats furnished to and consumed in said business between July 1, 1921, and March, 1922. The justice of the claim is not disputed. Plaintiffs had judgment against defendants Ireland and Elizabeth B. Russell. Defendant Rufus W. Russell had judgment in his favor and for his costs. The appeal is by plaintiffs from so much of the judgment as exonerates said Rufus W. Russell from personal liability for said debt. The facts necessary to present the appeal may be taken from findings Nos. 7 and 7½ of the second cause of action, which read as follows:

"(7) The court further finds that some time prior to the 1st day of July, 1921, defendant Louis E. Ireland and defendant Elizabeth B.

Russell entered into an arrangement between themselves whereby they would form a copartnership under the style and firm name of Tubells Company for the purpose of operating, opening, and conducting a restaurant or confectionery business at 821 West Seventh street in the city of Los Angeles; that defendant Louis E. Ireland was to receive one-half of all profits and defendant Elizabeth B. Russell was to receive the other one-half of all profits that might accrue from said business; that defendant Louis E. Ireland contributed a large amount of the partnership capital that was to and which did go into said business, and a large amount of the remaining portion of the partnership capital that was to and which did go into said business, and being at least the sum of $12,000 cash, and not contributed on behalf of defendant Louis E. Ireland, was obtained by Elizabeth B. Russell borrowing $7,500 thereof from the National Bank & Trust Company of Pasadena some time during the spring of 1921 and before the formation of said partnership arrangement and giving her promissory note to evidence the same, which said promissory note was not secured in any manner, and by her borrowing the sum of $4,500 from said National Bank & Trust Company of Pasadena during the month of September, 1921, and giving her promissory note to evidence the same, and securing it by pledging bonds belonging to the said Elizabeth B. Russell and Rufus W. Russell, and being community property of said parties; that said bonds were in a safety deposit box to which both defendants Russell had access; that prior to the opening of said business defendant Rufus W. Russell objected to defendant Elizabeth B. Russell entering into said partnership; that he knew that she did not have separate property of her own with which to make the contribution to said partnership capital which he knew she had made thereto; that he knew that she had contributed partnership capital for and prior to the opening of said business in the month of July, 1921, and that, after the formation of said partnership and the opening up of said business, defendant Rufus W. Russell accepted employment with said partnership and continued to be so engaged until some time during the month of March, 1922, as set out in finding 7½; that defendants Rufus W. Russell and Elizabeth B. Russell at all times herein mentioned were and now are husband and wife and residing together as such husband and wife, and until some time during the spring or summer of the year 1922 said defendants Rufus W. Russell and Elizabeth B. Russell gave all their time and attention to the said restaurant and confectionery business after the formation thereof, the said Rufus W. Russell under conditions set out in finding 7½ except such thereof as was necessary for them to give to the conduct of their hotel business then conducted in the city of Pasadena known as the Crown Hotel, located on East Colorado street in said city; that defendants Rufus W. Russell and Elizabeth B. Russell at no time had any agreement between them respecting the disposition of their community property and their earnings, or concerning any other matter or thing relating to their property interests.

"(7½) The court finds that Rufus W. Russell did not become a partner nor a party to the partnership known as Tubells, but that the said firm of Tubells was a copartnership consisting of defendants, Louis E. Ireland and Elizabeth B. Russell, and no other persons. The court finds that at no time did Rufus W. Russell represent himself as a copartner in the said firm of Tubells, nor did he permit himself to be represented as a copartner in said firm, and the court further finds that at no time did the plaintiffs sell goods to Tubells, the copartnership upon any assumption that Rufus W. Russell was a copartner in said firm, and that at no time was credit extended by plaintiffs upon the assumption that Rufus W. Russell was a member of the firm."

[1-4] It is true that the complaint states a cause of action against the defendant Rufus W. Russell as a copartner with the other defendants under said fictitious name, but, if the facts show him to have been associated in business with the other defendants under said fictitious name, then a personal judgment against him for the debt would be proper (section 388, Code of Civil Procedure); therefore we are not required to actually find that the relationship of a copartner existed. The real problem is: Was the wife, in her actions in the premises, the agent of the husband, the head of the community, and, if so, is not the husband liable not only as head of the community but personally for her acts so done and performed? She could only bind the community as agent of the husband; otherwise he would not be liable for her contract (Civil Code, § 167), except for necessities (Civil Code, § 174). The power of either spouse to act as agent for the other is undeniable. Arnold v. Loomis, 170 Cal. 95, 97, 148 P. 518; Corbit v. Kimball, 107 Cal. 665, 667, 40 P. 1029; Althof v. Conheim, 38 Cal. 230, 99 Am. Dec. 363. It requires even less proof to establish this agency than in other cases. Rauer's Law, etc., Co. v. Berthiaume, 21 Cal. App. 670, 132 P. 596, 833; Wagoner v. Silva, 139 Cal. 559, 73 P. 433. The agency may be proved by circumstances as well as by direct evidence. Puget Sound Lumber Co. v. Krug, 89 Cal. 237, 26 P. 902; Rauer's Law, etc., Co. v. Berthiaume, supra; Clendenin v. White, 62 Cal. App. 664, 217 P. 761. The agency may also be shown by proof of ratification of acts done without previous authority. Schader v. White, 173 Cal. 441, 160 P. 557.

Texas, a community property state, has had cases similar in principle to the one before us, and a reference to some of them may be proper here. In the case of Wetzel v. Simon, 87 Tex. 403, 23 S. W. 942, a husband was trading under his wife's name in the mercantile business. Being unable to meet his debts and believing the goods to be the property of his wife, he caused her to execute a conveyance to creditors as an insolvent debtor. The court held that this assignment so executed was binding as against his attaching creditors, and, discussing the question, said:

"The trial court found that the effects which purported to be transferred belonged to the community estate of N. Wise and his wife. The debts were created in carrying on the business, and were the debts of the husband, as representing the community, and not the debts of the wife. We apprehend that if the original stock of goods had been the property of the wife, since the profits of the business belong to the community estate, debts contracted in the purchase of new goods would be community debts. Such being the case, we are of opinion that when the husband directed the wife to sign the conveyance in her own name, and when, in pursuance of such direction, she did so execute it, it passed the title of the property with the same effect as if he had signed it himself in his own name and had delivered it with his own hand."

Neighbors v. Anderson, 94 Tex. 487, 61 S. W. 145, 62 S. W. 417, was a case where a husband and wife were living together on school land bought from the state, and the purchase was made by the wife. They both continued to live upon said land until litigation arose. The court held that the presumption was that the purchase was made with the consent of the husband, and hence that the obligation for the purchase money was a valid community property debt.

The question was next before the court in Richburg v. Sherwood, 101 Tex. 10, 102 S. W. 905, a case where the wife borrowed money upon her own notes without her husband's knowledge, and used same in purchasing a stock of merchandise for her sons in order that they might carry on the business for themselves. The court recognized the rule here contended for by the use of the following language:

"By authority of the husband expressly given or implied from his acts, the wife may act as his agent, and may make contracts which would bind him and their community estate."

The court, however, held that the facts of that case rendered said rule inapplicable, saying in that respect:

"This case does not come within either of the exceptions to the general rule that a married woman cannot make a binding contract. Mrs. Richburg did not purport to act for herself and her husband in making the note sued upon. She did not purchase the goods for the purpose of carrying on a business which would make the profits community property. She purchased the goods in order that her sons might enter into business and carry it on for themselves. The husband did not know of the purchase of the goods and the giving of the note when it occurred, and in no way signified his consent to or approval of the venture. The fact that he subsequently became aware of the transaction, and did not enter a protest, cannot affect this case, for Sherwood's rights had already accrued, if he had any, before the matter came to Richburg's knowledge. Sherwood knew that the wife was buying the goods for her sons, and he did not look to the husband, B. R. Richburg, for payment of the notes, but expected that they would be paid out of the business by the sons. In such a transaction, there is no foundation for the proposition that the husband is bound because the wife, with his consent, acted as his agent in making the transaction, and that the community estate had been benefited by receiving the proceeds of the business. The cases cited by counsel for appellee do not apply to the facts of this case. They announce proper rules for the cases in which the decisions were made, because facts existed by which the wife was shown to have acted with the consent of her husband, and with the purpose that she should transact the business for their common benefit."

Hall v. Decherd, 62 Tex. Civ. App. 426, 131 S. W. 1133, is in the same category as the case last above cited, being a case where the wife purchased a piano for her two step-children, and it was held that the purchase was not for the benefit of the community estate, and therefore the husband was not liable.

However, we think the case of Althof v. Conheim, supra, a case by our own court, recognizes the principle that is applicable here. In that case defendants were husband and wife. The wife resided in San Francisco and carried on a business in her own name while the husband resided in another state. The wife, desiring to purchase a lot in Oakland, borrowed of plaintiff $520 to make the purchase. She took the deed in her own name. The husband afterwards arrived in the state, and he and his wife took possession of the lot and resided on it during all of the time involved. They sold a portion of it and retained the balance, both uniting in such sale and in the receipt of the purchase money. The prayer of the complaint was for judgment against both of them for the amount loaned by plaintiff, and that it be declared a lien upon the lot. The court said:

"If the wife had no previous authority from the husband to contract the debt to the plaintiff, he adopted and ratified the transaction by using and occupying the lot, selling a portion of it, and appropriating the proceeds to his own use. Whilst dealing with the property as his own, which was in part paid for with the plaintiff's money, borrowed by the wife for that purpose, the law will presume either that the wife had authority to contract the loan, or that the husband has since ratified the transaction and agreed to be bound by it. He will not be allowed to say that he ratifies so much of it as inures to his advantage, by accepting the benefit of a purchase made by his wife partly with the plaintiff's money, but repudiates so much of it as requires the sum advanced by the plaintiff to be refunded. He must take the transaction cum onere, if he adopts it at all. In ratifying the purchase by his wife, he ratifies her engagement to the plaintiff as well, and in adopting one he adopts the other."

The case of Roullard v. Gray, 30 Cal. App. 757, 159 P. 457, while in some respects similar, does not contain the elements of ratification here present.

[5] So, in the case before us, the test of the question involved is: Would the community estate presided over by the husband have been benefited had profits resulted from the venture herein described? We think it is too clear for controversy that such profits would have redounded to its benefit. It is no answer to this contention to say that defendant Ireland and the wife, being partners, profits could not result direct to the husband. If dividends had been declared or profits accumulated and later distributed, the result would be the same as if the profits were directly paid to him. The evidence shows that, before the venture got under way and before the restaurant was operated, the husband returned home and found his wife engaged in this enterprise; he assisted her, had knowledge of her use of the community estate therein, and identified himself with the business and remained with it as long as it lasted. He did what was known to the business as "flooring," which could of itself have done nothing except to create the impression that he was a part of the same and the wife an agent. This presents such a clear case of ratification of the acts of the wife as to leave us in no doubt that her action had his express consent. To allow him to stand by and take the profits, had there been any, without assuming the burdens, would be to support a principle which would work an injustice to creditors dealing in good faith with one spouse as the representative of the other.

[6] There is likewise no merit in the point that plaintiffs may not have known whether the wife was or was not the agent of the community estate. A creditor may sue an undisclosed principal when found, although he may not have known of the existence of such principal at the time the debt was incurred. 21 R. C. L. p. 890, § 63; Schader v. White, supra; Karns v. Olney, 80 Cal. 90, 22 P. 57, 13 Am. St. Rep. 101.

We are also satisfied that the findings themselves require a judgment for the plaintiffs in this case as against all the defendants individually. That portion of the judgment appealed from is therefore reversed, with directions to the court below to enter judgment in favor of plaintiffs and against the defendant Rufus W. Russell for the sum of $7,912.76, together with interest thereon from October 1, 1923, and for their costs.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

LANGDON, J. I dissent. The amended complaint named Ireland and Mr. and Mrs. Russell, individually and as copartners doing business under the firm name of Tubells Company, alleging that they had entered into an agreement to form, and did form, a partnership, and that defendant Ireland had contributed one-half of the capital used in the partnership business and the defendants Russell had contributed the other half out of community funds, and that the profits were to be divided, one-half to defendant Ireland and the other one-half to defendants Russell, as community property. The answer denied that Rufus Russell had entered into said partnership at any time or in any manner, denied that he had any interest therein or was to receive any of the profits thereof, except that he was employed in said business as a servant under the direction of defendant Ireland for some time. This presented a clear-cut issue of fact, which was resolved by the trial court in favor of the defendant Rufus Russell. Whether Russell entered into the partnership directly or through an agent is immaterial, the ultimate fact found is that he did not enter into a partnership. The finding of the trial court on this subject is set forth in the majority opinion, and is to the effect that he did not do so. This is also a finding to the effect that he did not become a partner by ratification.

As all these matters are questions of fact and as the most that can be said for the appellant is that conflicting inferences might be drawn from the evidence appearing in the record, the findings should be binding upon appeal. The majority opinion, in the face of a finding upon undisputed evidence and possible conflicting inferences, holds, practically as a matter of law, that the mere fact that Rufus Russell was the husband of Elizabeth Russell and by law entitled to the control of community property which might be acquired by her business ventures, makes him a partner with any third person with whom she cares to associate herself in any partnership business. Since by virtue of his status as her husband he has no power to control her entrance into partnership ventures, it would indeed be far-reaching in its consequences and inequitable in its operation to lay down as a rule that as a matter of law he is bound thereby. As admitted in appellants' briefs and in the majority opinion, there is no direct authority for such a holding in this state, and I do not wish to subscribe to it as an initial pronouncement.

GREEN et ux. v. GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION. (L. A. 8316.)★

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 1, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 29, 1928.

1. Evidence §9—It is common knowledge that inner earth contains powerful gaseous forces, frequently found in proximity to petroleum deposits.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the inner earth contains powerful gaseous forces, frequently found in proximity to and in connection with deposits of petroleum substances.

2. Common law §9—Injury without liability is contrary to general rule of liability.

Though an injury may exist without liability under some circumstances, such a result is contrary to the general rule of liability.

3. Negligence §28—Person exercising due care in lawful business is not insurer against consequences of his acts, which reasonable care and foresight could not have prevented.

When a person is engaged in a lawful business in exercise of due care, the law does not make him an insurer of others against those consequences of his acts which reasonable care and foresight could not have prevented.

4. Negligence §63—One conducting lawful and proper business does not have obligation of saving others harmless from consequences of inevitable accident.

The law does not impose on one conducting a lawful and proper business the obligation of saving harmless others from the consequences resulting from occurrence of inevitable accident.

5. Negligence §2—Person doing something without legal right, or negligently doing something he may rightfully do, is liable for resulting injury.

Where one person does something he has no legal right to do, to the prejudice of another, or doing something he may rightfully do, does it negligently, or neglects something he should do, and another is injured thereby, the one doing the act or omitting to do it is liable for injury suffered by the other.

6. Nuisance §3(2)—Discovery and production of oil properly carried on and maintained is not nuisance per se.

Discovery and production of oil is a legitimate and lawful business, and when properly carried on and maintained is not a nuisance per se.

7. Adjoining landowners §8—Person proceeding under known conditions in conduct of lawful enterprise, with knowledge that injury may result, will be required to compensate for injury resulting (Civ. Code, § 3514).

In view of Civ. Code, § 3514, to effect that one must so use his own rights as not to infringe on rights of another, person who, in conduct and maintenance of enterprise lawful and proper in itself, deliberately does an act under known conditions and with knowledge that injury may result to another, proceeds, and injury is done to other as direct and proximate consequence of the act, he will in all fairness be required to compensate the other for damage done.

8. Negligence §56(1)—There is absolute liability for consequential damage, caused directly and proximately by contemplated act or thing, without interposition of external or independent agency.

Where an injury arises out of or is caused directly or proximately by contemplated act or thing, without the interposition of any external or independent agency, which was not or could not be foreseen, there is an absolute liability for consequential damage, regardless of any element of negligence.

9. Mines and minerals ⇨121—Adjoining property owner held entitled to recover damages for oil and mud thrown on premises in eruption of oil well.

Though oil well was drilled with proper precautions to prevent explosion of gas, and without negligence in any other respect, adjoining property owner was nevertheless entitled to recover damage resulting when mud and oil was thrown on premises in eruption of well.

10. Mines and minerals ⇨125—Measure of damages to realty from gas well eruption is cost of restoration, if not exceeding value; otherwise, value of property itself.

Proper measure of damages for injury to realty from mud and oil in eruption of gas well on adjoining property is cost of restoration in case such cost is less than value of the property; otherwise, value of property itself is proper measure of damages, without regard to any increased value of property by reason of discovery of oil.

11. Mines and minerals ⇨118—Amount recoverable for physical discomforts in eviction from residence covered with mud and oil by gas well is for discretion of court or jury.

Amount in money necessary to compensate for physical discomforts suffered by reason of eviction from residence, covered with mud and oil in eruption of oil well on adjoining property, must be left to sound judgment, experience, and discretion of court, in view of facts of particular case.

12. Mines and minerals ⇨125—$2,500 for eviction from residence, covered with mud and oil in eruption of oil well, held not excessive.

$2,500 damages as compensation for eviction from residence covered with mud and oil, in eruption of oil well on adjoining property, held not excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by Horace W. Green and wife against the General Petroleum Corporation. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 262 P. 377.

A. L. Weil and Forrest A. Cobb, both of San Francisco (Harris F. Shaw, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Swaffield & Swaffield, of Long Beach, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. Plaintiffs instituted an action to recover damages for injuries to their property, occasioned by the "blowing out" of an oil well during drilling operations by defendant. The trial court, sitting without a jury, gave judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and defendant appealed.

Respondents were the owners of certain improved real property in a residence district outside the city of Long Beach, in Los Angeles county, which they occupied for a number of years as a residence. Appellant had leased the adjoining land and was engaged in drilling a well for the discovery and production of oil. In January, 1922, it had reached a depth of about 2,592 feet. Under the law of this state, in drilling oil wells all water must be shut off before drilling into the oil zone; the work being done under the supervision of the state oil and gas supervisor. The usual method was followed in this case, and the well was cemented at 2,298 feet, or about 300 feet from the bottom of the hole. Just as the drilling crew finished bailing out the water for the purpose of testing the cement job, the well erupted, blowing off the control valves and wrecking the derrick. A stream of oil, gas, mud, and rocks shot into the air and onto respondents' property, which was located about 200 feet from the well. This mixture continued to pour forth from the well for more than 24 hours, covering respondents' property with the deposit to a depth of from 4 to 7 inches, destroying the trees, lawns, and garden, and greatly damaging respondents' dwelling and personal property.

The complaint contained two causes of action—one based upon liability without negligence, due to trespass on plaintiffs' property; the other based upon negligence on the part of the defendant in performing the drilling operations. The trial court expressly found that the defendant had used and exercised ordinary care in the drilling of the well, and was not guilty of negligence in any particular. The evidence amply supports this finding. It was established that the drilling crew were skilled and experienced men; that the best standard of equipment was used, and that prior to the drilling of the well a careful cross-section of the logs of all other wells in that vicinity had been made, from which it was computed that no oil or gas would be encountered in the well for at least 200 feet below the point where the "blow-out" occurred. The court, however, sustained plaintiffs' first cause of action, and held defendant liable in damages for the trespass and injury to the premises. The appeal presents for our determination the question whether, under the existing circumstances of injury without negligence, appellant is liable for the damages suffered by respondents, and, if so, what is the measure of damages.

[1] Appellant contends that it was absolved from all liability for the damages to respondents' property under the finding of the trial court that it had exercised due care and caution in its drilling operations. Respondents rely upon the application of the doctrine, "sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas," to the facts in the case. It is matter of common knowledge that the inner earth contains powerful gaseous forces, frequently found in proximity to and in connection with deposits of petroleum substances. It was a known fact that a tremendous pressure of gas underlay the particular locality in which appellant was carrying on its drilling operations. It proceeded with full knowledge of the situation. As other "blow-outs" of gas had occurred in the field, it installed on the casing head of its well devices adapted to hold such a flow. It endeavored to compute the precise depth at which oil and gas would be encountered, but penetrated the danger zone sooner than was anticipated, with the resulting damage to respondents' property.

Appellant asserts that there were no preliminary indications that a "blow-out" was imminent, and that the well was the "wildest" ever encountered by its drillers in their experience. Assuming that to be so, the fact does not materially affect the consideration of the case, for we are not now dealing with an unforeseen event, or such a happening as, amounting to an "act of God," serves to relieve from responsibility for injury occasioned thereby. In this case, the primary inquiry leads to but one conclusion, and that is that the construction of the well, an enterprise lawful in itself, was the direct and proximate cause of the gas blow-out. The well itself brought the gas, and its accompanying debris, to the surface. If the appellant had actually and intentionally penetrated the volume of gas in the depths of the earth, so that the gas flowed into the well, no one would dispute that the sinking of the well was the cause of that result. It so happened that the gas was nearer the surface than appellant anticipated, and, by its own natural force, broke through. The result was as much the direct and proximate consequence of the sinking of the well as if the volume of gas had been intentionally liberated, as it would have been, had the drilling continued. The well brought to the surface of the earth an uncontrollable element, productive of injury to property located in proximity to the drilling operations carried on by the appellant.

[2-5] Appellant apparently does not contend that respondents must go without redress if their legal rights have been invaded. Its exact contention is that the respondents have no legal rights in the matter, for the reason that the rule of liability without negligence has no place in the law of this state, but, on the contrary, has been expressly repudiated by the decisions of this court. Before it can be held liable for the damage suffered by the respondents, it argues, former adjudications of the court must be overturned. We do not share in that view. That an injury may exist without liability under some circumstances is certain. But such a result is contrary to the general rule of liability. Sussex, etc., Co. v. Midwest Refining Co. (C. C. A.) 294 F. 597, 34 A. L. R. 249. The cases decided by this court correctly apply the law to established facts, but no case exactly like the one now before us has previously been presented for consideration. The rule is laid down in the decisions that a defendant is not liable unless he has been guilty of negligence. It has many variations. For instance, there is found in our Reports the declaration that, when a person engaged in a lawful business exercises due care, the law does not make him an insurer of others against those consequences of his acts which reasonable care and foresight could not have prevented. The rule thus stated was applied in a case involving the duty of a master to a servant. Thompson v. Calif. Const. Co., 148 Cal. 35, 82 P. 367.

Neither is it to be doubted that, where a defendant's business is lawful and proper in its conduct, the law does not impose the obligation of saving harmless others from the consequences resulting from the occurrence of inevitable accident. Such a situation was involved in Sutliff v. Sweetwater Water Co., 182 Cal. 34, 186 P. 766. Appellant contends that the rule that one is not liable for injury to another in the absence of negligence is positive, and that no exceptions to it are recognized in California. All apparent exceptions, it asserts, can, for the most part, be identified as relating to nuisances per se, and, in any event, are cases in which the necessary and direct consequence of the act is an invasion of the property of another. In other words, to render the doer liable in damages, appellant contends the act must, of itself, be unlawful or have been negligently done. Citation of authority is, of course, unnecessary to support the doctrine that, where one person does something he has no legal right to do, to the prejudice of another, or, doing something he may rightfully do, does it negligently, or neglects doing something he should do, and another is injured thereby, the one doing the act, or omitting to do it, is liable for the injury suffered by the other. See Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 782, 786, 127 P. 50.

[6-9] The discovery and production of oil is a legitimate and lawful business, and, when properly carried on and maintained, is not a nuisance per se. Under normal conditions, the drilling operations cause no invasion of the adjacent lands. The fact, therefore, that the well of appellant was properly put down and carefully cared for, appellant contends, eliminates the only factor in the case which would justify a judgment for respondents in the absence of negligence. We do not think so. The present case does not arise from either the conduct of a nuisance per se, or from an inevitable calamity or act of God, but presents a situation to which the doctrine of "sic utere tuo ut alienum non lœdas" may be applied in its broad and fundamental import. That ancient maxim of jurisprudence is incorporated, in substance, in the statutory law of this state. The Civil Code provides (section 3514):

"One must so use his own rights as not to infringe upon the rights of another."

Where one, in the conduct and maintenance of an enterprise lawful and proper in itself, deliberately does an act under known conditions, and, with knowledge that injury may result to another, proceeds, and injury is done to the other as the direct and proximate consequence of the act, however carefully done, the one who does the act and causes the injury should, in all fairness, be required to compensate the other for the damage done. The instant case offers a most excellent example of an actual invasion of the property of one person through the act of another. The fact that the act resulting in the "blow-out" was lawful, and not negligently done, does not, in our opinion, make the covering of respondents' property with oil, sand, mud, and rocks any less an actual invasion of and a trespass upon the premises.

It ought to be, and we are of the view that it is, the rule that, where an injury arises out of, or is caused directly and proximately by the contemplated act or thing in question, without the interposition of any external or independent agency which was not or could not be foreseen, there is an absolute liability for the consequential damage, regardless of any element of negligence either in the doing of the act or in the construction, use, or maintenance of the object or instrumentality that may have caused the injury. In our judgment, no other legal construction can be placed upon the operations of the appellant in this case than that, by its deliberate act of boring its well, it undertook the burden and responsibility of controlling and confining whatever force or power it uncovered. Any other construction would permit one owner, under like circumstances, to use the land of another for his own purpose and benefit, without making compensation for such use. We do not conceive that to be the law.

Appellant's contention that the doctrine of liability without negligence does not exist in this state rests primarily upon its conception of what this court has held in former decisions, in cases involving inevitable calamities, nuisances per se, and the like. Declarations in the form of statements of general principles in those cases must be viewed in the light of the facts under consideration. Neither appellant nor respondents have brought to our attention a decision in a case exactly like this one. We have made an independent examination, and find none. The nuisance per se and inevitable calamity cases have served, for the greater part, to lead us to the conclusion that the rule that injury may exist without liability is, as has been so well stated by another court, "contrary to the general rule of liability where injury is caused; and since, in a sense, it is a preference of the rights of one property owner or user over that of another; and since the law is a jealous guardian of the right to lawfully use property without interference or diminution; and since the rule of 'sic utere ut alienum non lædas' is of broad and fundamental importance—the rule which allows such injury without liability therefor is an exception which is and should be narrowly limited and carefully confined." Sussex, etc., Co. v. Midwest Refining Co., supra, at page 601. The defendant in that case claimed, as does the appellant here, that the legal use of land by the owner is subject to and limited by the right of other property owners to develop the natural resources of their lands in a lawful and prudent manner.

"This contention means," said the court (page 602), "and is intended to mean that a landowner has a legal right to develop the natural resources of his land without liability for damage caused to other landowners thereby, provided he pursues this development in a manner to cause as little damage as possible. We think it clear either that such statement of the rule is too broad or that the application thereof is limited by certain practical and legal considerations. * * * But, elastic as this rule is, both reason and authority have declared certain limitations beyond which it cannot extend. One of these limitations is that it is 'unreasonable' and unlawful for one owner to physically invade the land of another owner. There can be no damnum absque injuria where there is such a trespass."

On this phase of the question we are of the view that the judgment of the lower court must be affirmed. It is unnecessary for us to enter into a prolonged discussion of the cases cited by the respective parties, a few of which we have so briefly noted, or to analyze those most strongly relied on by either side to the controversy. So far as the former decisions of this court are to be regarded, none of them, when rightly understood, extends the doctrine of nonliability without negligence to a case like the present. Neither do they prevent the application of the rule relied on by the respondents to the instant case.

[10] The trial court made special findings awarding the respondents damages amounting to $9,180.80, segregated into the following items: For injuries to personal property, $164; for injuries to the realty, $6,516.80; for the eviction of the respondents from their residence, $2,500. Appellant concedes the allowance for the damages to the personalty to be correct, but contends that the court did not apply the proper measure in arriving at the amount of damages to the realty and for the eviction. In the matter of the injury to the realty, the court specially found, by specific items, what it would cost to restore the premises to their original condition, and allowed the aggregate amount as damages. Appellant does not dispute the accuracy of the court's figures, but contends that the discovery of oil in its well gave a new value to the property of the respondents—a value as oil property, greatly in excess of its previous value as residential property—and that the restoration of the property to its original condition will add nothing to its value for its new use. Wherefore, the value being greater after the "blow-out" than it was before, appellant argues, the respondents suffered no loss by reason of the injury to the realty. We are not impressed with appellant's argument on this point. The rule to be applied in this case is: If the cost of repairing the injury by removing the débris deposited by the appellant, and otherwise restoring the premises to their original condition, amounts to less than the value of the property prior to the injury, such cost is the proper measure of damages; and if the cost of restoration will exceed such value, then the value of the property is the proper measure. Salstrom v. Orleans, etc., Mining Co., 153 Cal. 551, 558, 96 P. 292. From the evidence and the findings, which are sufficient for all purposes, it appears that the trial court understood and acted within the scope of the rule.

[11, 12] In response to the general issue tendered as to the eviction of the respondents, the trial court found that, by reason of the eruption of appellant's well, the premises of respondents were "rendered wholly uninhabitable and wholly useless for residential purposes, and plaintiffs were compelled to immediately remove themselves and their belongings from their said home, and were thereby evicted, ousted, and ejected therefrom, and were deprived of the use and enjoyment thereof for residential purposes," for which eviction the court awarded damages in the sum of $2,500. The testimony of the two respondents as to the circumstances under which they were compelled to flee from their home, its uninhabitable condition after the eruption, and the manner in which they were deprived of its use, was admitted in support of the general issue, and amply supports the finding. The premises could have been restored to their original condition. The cost of such restoration was fixed by the court. If that work had been done, it does not appear but that respondents could have resumed occupancy of the premises. Their recovery was limited to compensation for the damages naturally and necessarily resulting to them from the injury alleged in the complaint. No special damages, such as cost of removal from the premises, loss of rentals of the premises, or cost of renting another home, were alleged or proved. We are not, however, left to speculation as to the basis on which the trial court fixed the amount of the damages allowed for eviction. The law affords redress by giving damages against a wrongdoer for the annoyance and discomforts suffered in such cases as this. Baltimore, etc., R. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 329, 2 S. Ct. 719, 27 L. Ed. 739.

We must assume that the trial court allocated the full amount of the damages awarded for the eviction as compensation for the physical discomforts suffered by the respondents, and for the deprivation of the use and comforts of their home. The amount in money necessary to compensate the plaintiffs in such cases is not to be estimated by witnesses or the "actual amount" established by testimony or calculated by any arithmetical rule. It must be left to the sound judgment, experience, and discretion of court or jury to fix the amount in view of the facts in each particular case. Gempp v. Bassham, 60 Ill. App. 84, 87; Fox v. City of Joliet, 150 Ill. App. 491, 495; Judson v. Los Angeles, etc., Gas Co., 157 Cal. 168, 172, 106 P. 581, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 183, 21 Ann. Cas. 1247. See, also, Fairbank Co. v. Nicolai, 167 Ill. 242, 247, 47 N. E. 360; Gavigan v. Atlantic Refining Co., 186 Pa. 604, 613, 40 A. 834; Berger v. Minneapolis Gaslight Co., 60 Minn. 296, 302, 62 N. W. 336. The damages awarded by the court to the plaintiffs for the eviction may have been liberal, but they do not appear to us so excessive as to justify our interfering with the allowance.

The judgment is affirmed.

★Hearing denied in bank.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiff herein instituted an action for divorce against the defendant, charging cruelty and praying for a decree of divorce, for the custody of the three minor children of the marriage, for the assignment to the plaintiff of her equitable share of the community property, and for the payment of reasonable alimony, counsel fee, and costs. The complaint is sufficient in form and substance to justify the relief prayed for therein. A demurrer to the complaint upon both general and special grounds was presented on behalf of the defendant, which in due course was overruled; whereupon an answer was filed denying, in the main, the allegations of plaintiff's complaint which charged the defendant with cruelty. Thereafter the plaintiff presented and filed a document which she designated "Amended Complaint" and which, after repeating the averments of her original complaint, proceeded to set forth certain additional acts of cruelty on the part of the defendant occurring after the commencement of the action and which would have been the proper subject of a supplemental complaint. To this so-called amended complaint the defendant presented a demurrer, which the trial court apparently treated as having application to that portion of the amended complaint which embraced the matters occurring since the institution of the action, and the court, apparently considering the added matter to have been defectively stated, sustained the demurrer to the amended complaint; whereupon the plaintiff presented and filed another document which she denominated "Supplemental Complaint," but which was evidently intended to constitute a supplement to the original complaint, setting forth with more of detail the defendant's subsequent acts of cruelty. To this so-called supplemental complaint the defendant filed a general demurrer which the court overruled; whereupon an answer was filed to the so-called supplemental complaint. The cause then proceeded to trial, at the conclusion of which the trial court found its findings of fact and conclusions of law in the plaintiff's favor, and also filed and caused to be entered an interlocutory judgment decreeing the plaintiff entitled to the divorce, to the custody of the minor children, to a designated share of the community property of the parties, together with an award of alimony and counsel fee. The defendant in due time gave notice of intention to move for a new trial, which motion came on for hearing before the court and was denied; whereupon the defendant appealed from the interlocutory decree of divorce and presented and caused to be settled a bill of exceptions in support of said appeal, specifying therein a number of particulars wherein the evidence was alleged to be insufficient to justify the findings and judgment of the trial court.

The appellant urges for the first time upon his appeal the contention that the judgment should be reversed for the reason that there was no sufficient pleading in the way of a complaint on file to justify the trial court in entering said or any judgment in this action. That the contention of the appellant in that regard is without any semblance of real merit is made plain by an examination of the record. The plaintiff had originally a good complaint on file. She undertook to so supplement its averments as to introduce matters occurring after the commencement of the action, and in so doing she erroneously described her pleading as an "Amended Complaint." When the court sustained a demurrer to this so-called amended complaint, the plaintiff presented what she again erroneously designated a "Supplemental Complaint," when it was in reality nothing more than a supplement to the original complaint. The trial court so treated it, and the cause went to trial without further objection on the part of the defendant to the form of the plaintiff's pleading; nor did the defendant urge any such objection upon his motion for a new trial or in his bill of exceptions presented in the course of said motion and on this appeal. His present objection to the form of the plaintiff's pleading comes entirely too late.

The only other point made by the appellant is that there was no sufficient corroboration of the plaintiff's testimony with respect to the defendant's alleged cruelty. An examination of the record shows that this contention has no merit, since the plaintiff's testimony was amply corroborated by the testimony of her eldest daughter, while several other witnesses produced on behalf of the plaintiff gave testimony as to the constant suffering of the plaintiff and the fear of the defendant entertained both by herself and her minor children.

There appearing to be no error on the face of the record, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action upon a claim against an estate by Charles J. Bass and others against Ernest C. Hueter and another, as executors of the last will and testament of Ernest L. Hueter, deceased. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Morrissey and Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, all of San Francisco, for appellants. W. E. Cashman, W. H. Metson, and Chickering & Gregory, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit in an action on a claim against the estate of Ernest L. Hueter, deceased. The plaintiffs alleged that on or about the 17th day of October, 1903, Ernest L. Hueter borrowed from Ellen Bass the sum of $18,000 and agreed in writing to repay the same, as evidenced by a promissory note of which the following is a copy:

"$18,000. 17th day of October, 1903.

"I promise to pay to Ellen Bass or order, the sum of eighteen thousand (18,000) dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six (6%) per cent. per annum, three months after notice after one year from date.

"Ernest L. Hueter."

Ellen Bass died on June 17, 1904. Her estate was administered upon and on September 5, 1905, was distributed to the plaintiffs herein. Ernest L. Hueter died on November 9, 1923. His will was admitted to probate and the defendants were appointed as executors. Thereafter on April 4, 1924, a notice on behalf of said distributees, the plaintiffs herein, was caused to be served upon the defendants as such executors to pay said promissory note. Upon the failure to pay the note and the rejection of a claim based thereon against the estate of Hueter, this action was brought.

By answer the defendants, among other things, pleaded the statute of limitations as a complete bar to any relief demanded by the plaintiffs. At the trial it appeared that no notice or demand for payment had ever been given or made upon Ernest L. Hueter during his lifetime either by Ellen Bass, the payee of the note, during her lifetime, nor by or on behalf of the plaintiffs herein until the aforesaid notice of April 4, 1924.

[1, 2] The defendants' motion for a nonsuit was made and granted on the ground that no special circumstances appeared to relieve the plaintiffs from the bar of the statute, and that therefore the statutory period of limitations had long since run. Whether the trial court was right in so deciding is the crucial point on this appeal. The determination of the point rests primarily upon the effect to be given the clause in the note fixing the maturity thereof "three months after notice after one year from date." By the use of this language the intention of the parties was clear that upon the expiration of one year from October 17, 1903, the payee of the note could notify the maker that the note would be due three months thereafter.

It was said in Williams v. Bergin, 116 Cal. 56, 47 P. 877, with the citation of many cases:

"The rule is well settled that when the plaintiff's right of action depends upon some act which he has to perform preliminarily to commencing suit, and he is under no restraint or disability in the performance of such act, he cannot suspend indefinitely the running of the statute of limitations by a delay in performing such preliminary act, and that if the time within which such act is to be performed is indefinite or not specified, a reasonable time will be allowed therefor, and the statute will begin to run after the lapse of such reasonable time."

And it has been uniformly held that unless there are peculiar circumstances affecting the question, a reasonable time is a period coincident with that provided in the statute of limitations for barring the action. Vickrey v. Maier, 164 Cal. 384, 129 P. 273; Thomas v. Pacific Beach Co., 115 Cal. 136, 46 P. 899. Where, under the contract of the parties, a notice is required to be given or a demand required to be made, a party cannot prevent the statute from running by failing to give the notice or make the demand. Harrigan v. Home Life Ins. Co., 128 Cal. 531, 58 P. 180, 61 P. 99; 16 Cal. Jur. 492. The general rule is too well settled to require further citation of authority, especially with reference to obligations for the direct payment of money such as we have in this case.

[3, 4] It has been noted that the promissory note in question was dated October 17, 1903. By the terms thereof the notice required could have been given on and after October 17, 1904.

It was not given until April 4, 1924, or nearly 20 years after it could have been given, and the statute had long since run unless circumstances were present and continued which excused the delay. Such circumstances may appear on the face of the written obligation. At least the intention of the parties is to be determined by an inspection of the document itself. If the terms of the instrument be plain and certain on the subject, no resort to extraneous evidence may be had to determine the intention of the parties.

[5-7] There is nothing on the face of the note here in question which would indicate that it was the intention of the parties that the maturity of the note should be delayed indefinitely after the expiration of one year and three months. It is clear that it was intended that the payee of the note could fix the maturity of the note by notice given after one year from its date. The plaintiffs call attention to the fact that contemporaneously with the execution of the note a pledge agreement was entered into between the parties wherein the maker of the note, as pledgor, agreed to pledge 2384 shares of the capital stock of the Bass-Hueter Paint Company as security for the payment of the note and to that end to indorse certificates for that amount of stock and place the same in the hands of a third party as pledge holder; that in this agreement the terms of the note that it should be payable after "three months' notice after one year from date" were recited with the alternative "at any time prior to maturity at the option of the pledgor"; that the pledgor should have the right to vote the pledged stock "at all meetings of the stockholders of said company which may be held until said note shall have been paid"; and that a sale of the stock was to be allowed only if the principal and interest of said note was not paid "when due according to the terms thereof." Accordingly, it is urged that the provisions of this agreement are consistent only with a purpose to postpone payment. The provisions of this agreement may, of course, be resorted to in order to determine the intention of the parties. But we cannot agree that the terms of the agreement evidence any intention to postpone the maturity of the note indefinitely after the expiration of the 15 months' period. On the contrary, the agreement is entirely consistent with the purpose expressed in the note and the law would read into the provisions of both instruments the obligation to give the required notice within a reasonable time after it could be given by the payee or owner of the note.

[8] It remains to be seen whether the evidence in the record dehors the note was sufficient to justify the conclusion that the holder of the note was laboring under any restraint or disability which would excuse the delay in the performance of the act necessary to mature the note within a reasonable time. Ellen Bass, the payee, died before the expiration of the one year from the date of the note. She, therefore, had no opportunity to give the notice. Edith B. Lindsay, one of the plaintiffs herein, was appointed executrix of her will. By order of court, duly entered on September 5, 1905, the estate was distributed. After distributing specific items of property, the residue, including "any other property not now known or discovered, which may belong to the said estate," was distributed to the surviving children of the defendant, the plaintiffs herein. Edith B. Lindsay, one of the plaintiffs, testified that in December, 1923, she found the note and the pledge agreement in an old trunk containing some of the effects of her deceased mother, but that by inadvertence the note had been destroyed. The pledge agreement was offered in evidence, but it did not contain a copy of the note. The contents thereof were proved by the testimony of Mrs. Lindsay to the effect that she had seen the note in December, 1923, and remembered the form thereof. Mrs. Lindsay further testified that she had a conversation with her mother shortly prior to June, 1904, in which her mother requested her to look for the papers with regard to what Ernest L. Hueter owed her; that she made a search for the same, but was unable to find them; that about two months after her mother's death, and after she had been appointed executrix of her mother's estate, she had a conversation with Ernest L. Hueter in which she stated to him that she was unable to account for $18,000 of the money owing to her mother, and that Mr. Hueter replied:

"Show me the papers. If you will produce any papers showing that I owe you any money, I will pay it."

No effort was thereafter made by Mrs. Lindsay or any one else, so far as the record discloses, to obtain the payment of said indebtedness during the lifetime of Ernest L. Hueter. In December, 1923, Mrs. Lindsay addressed a letter to the firm of Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck at San Francisco, in which she inquired about the pledge agreement of October 17, 1903, and received a reply that all the papers, books, and office records of Mr. Morrison's firm had been destroyed in the conflagration of 1906 and that the documents sought undoubtedly had been destroyed at that time; that search had nevertheless been made among Mr. Morrison's papers for the document without success. Mr. Morrison had died about two years prior to this correspondence between Mrs. Lindsay and the firm of Morrison, Dunne and Brobeck.

From the foregoing it is observed that no step was taken by any one claiming an interest in said estate or the alleged indebtedness represented thereby to enforce payment during all the time from October 17, 1904, until after the death of the maker of the note in November, 1923, a period of over 19 years. It further appears from the record that Mrs.

Lindsay was actively engaged in the settlement of her mother's estate in 1904 and 1905, with notice of a claimed indebtedness in favor of her mother's estate in the sum of $18,000 but did nothing, as executor of her will or as distributee and co-owner of the note, to ascertain the status of the claim other than as above outlined. The trial court decided that the defense of the statute of limitations had been successfully interposed. We think the record on this point presented a question of law and that it cannot be said that the court was unjustified in granting the motion for nonsuit.

The plaintiffs rely on the cases of Neale v. Morrow, 150 Cal. 414, 88 P. 815, and Vickrey v. Maier, 164 Cal. 384, 129 P. 273, as supporting their contention that the documents themselves evidence an intention that the maturity of the note should be postponed until a notice had been actually served upon the maker. In each case the general rule which we conclude is applicable to the present case was recognized, but it was determined that from the form of the documents themselves it was in the contemplation of the parties that the time of payment should be indefinitely postponed. The Neale Case was an action on a promissory note payable "five days after actual demand." The note was one of fifty notes for $5,000 each executed in favor of an insurance company, the whole to constitute a guaranty fund required by a statute of this state which provided that the notes should remain with the company as part of the assets thereof and be liable for all of its debts next after its assets from premiums and other sources, exclusive of capital stock, until the net earnings of the company over and above certain items would be equal to the original amount of such guaranty fund and of the capital stock. The statute further provided that when this fixed capital was attained all notes in the fund remaining in the company's control should be surrendered to the makers thereof, but that until that time no guaranty note should be withdrawn from the fund unless another note of equal solvency should be substituted therefor, and not then unless with the unanimous approval of the board of directors then in office, and of all the other parties liable on the rest of the notes comprising the guaranty fund. Interest at the legal rate was to run only after actual demand. In the meantime a commission of 5 per cent. per annum was required to be paid to the maker of each note while the same was outstanding, and if the maker should pay the note the company was to pay the maker 12 per cent. on the amount so paid until the said amount be repaid to the maker by the company. The contingency provided by the statute which would justify the collection or surrender of the note, to wit, the acquisition of a fixed capital in the amount required by the statute, never happened. In fact, the company became insolvent and the note sued on had to be resorted to in order to satisfy those for whose benefit the guaranty fund notes had been accumulated. There is no possible doubt that the parties to the note sued on in that case contemplated that the maturity of the note should be postponed until such time as the statute required.

The case of Vickrey v. Maier, supra, also relied on by the plaintiffs, does not support their contention. It involved the construction of a contract for the purchase and sale of personal property at a fixed price at the option of the seller, and the action was one in effect "to enforce performance of a contract to buy personal property." The court applied the same rule as is applicable in the case of a sale of real property. It was decided that under the contract there in question the parties contemplated that there might be a delay in the exercise of the option therein provided for and that the action was not barred.

Other points are made by the plaintiffs. Discussion of them is made unnecessary by reason of the determination of the main question.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re LUCKENBACH'S ESTATE.★

LUCKENBACH et al. v. LUCKENBACH;
(PIRAUX, Intervener).

(L. A. 10383.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 29, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 29, 1928.

1. Wills §55(10)—Devise of entire estate to testator's wife to exclusion of brothers and sisters, with provisions for others if wife predeceased him, held not unnatural disposition indicating mental incompetency.

Will leaving testator's entire estate to his wife, who had been his companion for 36 years, to exclusion of brothers and sisters whom he had not seen for many years nor regularly corresponded with, and containing provisions for a former business associate, his secretary and latter's son, daughters of his brother and his wife's sister, two lodges and a church, with residue in trust for a brother, three sisters and four sisters-in-law, and remainder to a home for boys, to take effect only if wife did not survive him, held not an unnatural disposition indicating mental incompetency.

2. Wills §166(2)—Evidence held insufficient to sustain finding of fraud or undue influence invalidating will leaving entire estate to testator's wife.

In will contest, evidence of testator's having stealthily handed contestant a $20 bill when his wife, to whom he left entire estate, could not see bill passed, his remarks to such contestant as to his intention to provide for her when she could no longer work, and his statement that he would provide for his brothers and sisters, held insufficient to sustain a finding of fraud or undue influence invalidating will.

3. Wills §55(1), 166(12)—Few isolated, detached, trivial, and inconsequential incidents remote from date of will are of little weight on questions of mental capacity and undue influence.

A few isolated and detached, trivial and inconsequential incidents, happening at a time remotely distant from date of execution of will, are to be given little weight in considering testator's mental status and freedom of action.

4. Wills §55(10)—Bequest of income for education of, and payment at age of 18 to, beneficiary 35 years old when will was executed, held not to warrant inference of mental incompetency.

Bequest of sum in trust, to pay income to one who was 35 years old and had finished her education when will was executed "for her education" and during her life "after she has attained the age of 18 years," held not to warrant inferences, even in considering propriety of nonsuit against will contestants, that testator insanely believed such beneficiary and all his relatives, including contestants, to be much younger than they were, in view of creation of trusts for three other persons in practically same phraseology by will, which was lengthy and drawn by attorney.

5. Wills §81—Inappropriate language of bequest of income to one 35 years old when will was executed for her education and during her life after attaining age of 18, would not affect validity thereof.

Inappropriate language of bequest, in trust to pay income to one who was 35 years old when will was executed for her education and during her life after attaining age of 18 years, would not affect validity of such provision or her rights thereunder.

6. Fraud §50—Fraud cannot be presumed.

Fraud must be proved and cannot be presumed.

7. Trial §139(1)—To justify submission of fact question, there must be substantial proof of fact alleged.

To justify submission of any question of fact to a court or jury, there must be proof of a substantial character that the fact is as alleged.

8. Wills §401—Judgment of nonsuit in will contest must be affirmed, notwithstanding presumptions in contestants' favor, where evidence would require reversal of judgment for contestants.

Where evidence in will contest would require reversal had court below refused to grant nonsuit and declared will invalid, judgment of nonsuit must be affirmed, though every presumption fairly arising from evidence in contestants' favor must be indulged and benefit of all evidence tending to sustain their averments given them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward T. Bishop, Judge.

Will contest by Anton H. Luckenbach and others against Lena Luckenbach, as executrix of the estate of John Luckenbach, deceased, and another, in which Katherine Piraux intervened as a contestant. From a judgment of nonsuit, contestants appeal. Affirmed.

Thomas P. White, of Los Angeles, and Osian Cameron and Edward H. S. Martin, both of Chicago, Ill., for appellants.

Hewitt, McCormick & Crump and Hewitt, Ford, McCormick & Crump, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal was taken by the contestants of the will of John Luckenbach, deceased, from a judgment of nonsuit entered against them in a contest instituted after the admission of said will to probate.

Contestants are two brothers and two sisters of the decedent. As grounds for revoking the probate of said will, which devised and bequeathed the testator's entire estate to his wife, Lena Luckenbach, respondent herein, if she should survive him, and appointed her executrix, contestants alleged that the decedent was incompetent to make a will and of unsound mind. They further alleged, upon information and belief, that he did not know the contents of the will, that it was not executed in the manner required by law, and was fabricated and forged by altering a will of said decedent. In addition, it was alleged that the execution of the will was procured by the fraudulent promise of testator's wife that if he would devise all his property to her she would, after his death, provide and care for all of his brothers and sisters according to their needs, which promise she made with intent to deceive and without any intention of performing it. The tenth and last ground of contest is designed to set forth facts constituting undue influence on the part of said wife. It is therein alleged that for 10 years immediately prior to his death John Luckenbach was afflicted with disease of both body and mind and was under the domination and control of said Lena Luckenbach, a woman of strong and domineering mind; that said Lena Luckenbach, with the intention of procuring said John Luckenbach to execute the said purported will, and taking undue and unfair advantage of his necessities, fears, and distress of mind and body, many times before the execution of the will falsely stated to John Luckenbach, and caused him to believe, that his brothers and sisters, particularly the petitioners, already had their present and future financial needs well provided for and would not and could not preserve or take care of any property which they might receive from his estate at his death, and had no affection for him, and were anxiously awaiting his death to obtain his property and squander the same; and, further, threatened him and caused him to believe that if he did not will and devise all of his property to her, the said Lena Luckenbach, she would cause him great trouble in his lifetime and make life miserable for him, and by means of such statements, threats and demands influenced him to execute said will.

In her answer Lena Luckenbach specifically denied all allegations as to the invalidity of the will, and also alleged that the property was the community property of decedent and herself, and that she, as surviving wife, would be entitled to the whole thereof if decedent died intestate.

Decedent died on January 9, 1926, a resident of the county of Los Angeles, leaving an estate appraised at $663,852.40. His will here attacked was dated December 18, 1924. He was about 58 years of age at the time of his death and left surviving him his said wife, Lena Luckenbach, whom he had married in Green Bay, Wis., in 1890. No children were born to the couple, and decedent's parents had predeceased him by many years. In addition to his wife, he left surviving him three brothers and four sisters, residing in the states of Illinois and Wisconsin. Two of said brothers, Anton H. and Simon Luckenbach, and two of the sisters, Mary O'Brien and Katherine Piraux are the contestants herein; Katherine Piraux having joined in the contest by petition in intervention. Two other sisters and another brother have not joined in the contest.

[1] The evidence adduced to establish the testator's unsoundness of mind and mental incompetency falls far short of the requirements of the law. In that connection contestants rely upon an alleged unnaturalness in the disposition of decedent's property and upon statements made in a certain legacy in his will, which, they contend, indicate that decedent was affected with an insane delusion regarding them, of which insane delusion said will is a product.

We find nothing unnatural in the disposition made by the testator of his property. In the event that his wife survived him, he bequeathed his entire estate to her. While the other provisions of the will did not take effect, since the testator's wife survived him, nevertheless a brief review of said provisions is important in the consideration of the testator's mental condition. He first directed that his entire estate be converted into money. After providing that $50,000 should be set aside for the erection of a mausoleum for the bodies of himself and his wife, and providing for the upkeep of said mausoleum, the testator created a trust fund of $10,000, the income from which was to be disbursed by the trustee named for the education of a son of the testator's secretary until he attained the age of 21, said income then to be paid to him until he attained the age of 30, when the trust was to terminate. A similar trust fund was created for another son of the testator's secretary, and a trust of $5,000 for Martha Angus Carroll, whose relation to the testator does not appear. He then bequeathed $20,000 to a trustee to pay the income to a daughter of his wife's sister for life. Next follows the provision upon which contestants lay great stress and insist that it indicates that the testator was the victim of an insane delusion with reference to them. In said provision he bequeathed $10,000 to a trustee to pay the income to Edith Luckenbach, daughter of his brother Anton, "for her education, the disbursement thereof to be directed by my said trustee, and after she has attained the age of eighteen years, to pay said net income unto her during her natural life." (Italics supplied.) At the time of the execution of the will, Edith Luckenbach was 35 years of age. She had pursued a student's life and had taken degrees at Harvard and Columbia Colleges, which facts, it is claimed, should have been known to the decedent, as she had visited him upon one occasion at his home during the month of August, 1924, a few months before the execution of the will. The said provision will be more fully considered hereafter.

A legacy of $25,000 was bequeathed to a former business associate and $50,000 to his secretary, whose sons he remembered in previous paragraphs of the will. Said legacies were made "because of the faithfulness and loyalty of the legatees." To the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the State of California was bequeathed $100,000, to be expended for the care of orphans or the aged in Masonic homes; to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Lodge 99, $100,000, to be used for the charity work of the order; and to the Christ Episcopal Church of Green Bay, Wis., $2,000.

The residue of the estate, which was considerable in magnitude, was bequeathed to the Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank, in trust to pay the interest semiannually in equal shares to William Luckenbach, a brother of decedent, but not a contestant herein; Anna Luckenbach, a sister of decedent, but not a contestant; Katherine Piraux, a sister and a contestant; Josephine Luckenbach, a sister of decedent who predeceased him; and four sisters of decedent's wife. Not more than $200 a month was to be paid to any of said persons. Any surplus above the sum of $200 per month was to be paid to the McKinley Industrial Home Society of Los Angeles, and at the termination of the trust upon the death of all beneficiaries, the said residue was to go to said society, for the benefit of the McKinley Home for Boys. The will also contained a provision for the forfeiture of the legacy of any person who should institute any contest thereof.

On its face said will furnishes no indication of being the product of a disordered mind, but, rather, would appear to be the well thought out and carefully considered scheme of a highly rational person, conscious of a duty to society to assist in the maintenance of its weaker members, desirous of showing his appreciation of loyalty and devotion given him by a business associate and faithful secretary, and mindful of the welfare of members of his own and his wife's family. The fact that he placed the claims of his wife above those of the other legatees, by limiting the above provisions to take effect only in the event that his wife did not survive him, does not render the will unnatural, especially in view of the circumstances of the parties and the relationship between decedent and his brothers and sisters, as indicated by the evidence offered on behalf of contestants.

Decedent started out in the jewelry business in Green Bay, Wis., some time after 1887, with a small capital of $2,000, partially borrowed from his mother and sisters and partially from other sources. In 1890 he married respondent, whom he had known from childhood. It appears that she assisted her husband in conducting his business. The business proved prosperous and several years later was sold. They left for Los Angeles, Cal., with approximately $30,000, and there entered into the jewelry business from which decedent amassed his fortune. The other members of the family all remained in either Wisconsin or Illinois. There is little evidence in the record as to the relationship between John Luckenbach and his brothers and sisters between the time he left for California and 1911. After that date it appears that he visited members of his family whenever his business required his presence in the Middle West and when going on or returning from trips to Europe with his wife. He saw them in 1911, 1913, 1916, and 1917. Decedent's relation with his brothers and sisters was friendly and cordial, but there is no evidence in the record tending to show that their affections were exceptionally deep-seated or any greater than that which exists between brothers and sisters who have been long separated and meet infrequently. None of contestants saw decedent after 1917, which was seven years before the execution of the will and nine years before his death, and no regular correspondence appears to have been carried on with any of the brothers and sisters. Simon Luckenbach testified that he had not seen decedent nor heard from him through the mails since 1911. Anton last wrote in 1919, asking him if he would make him a loan of $5,000, but received no reply.

The state of health and financial condition of certain of the brothers and sisters is relied upon as rendering unnatural the disposition of the testator's property to his wife to the exclusion of said brothers and sisters. The youngest was 54 and the oldest over 70 years of age, and all, with the possible exception of Anton, seem to have possessed very limited means. Mary O'Brien, one of the contestants, testified to a visit with decedent in Chicago in 1917, at which date she was working to support herself, in the course of which she and decedent discussed the fact that she was afflicted with rheumatism, and decedent told her that when she was no longer able to work he would take care of her. In 1919 she married, and at the date of the execution of the will she was being supported by her husband. Contestant Simon, a shoe salesman, was a sufferer from stomach trouble when decedent saw him in 1911. Decedent suggested that if he would go up in Masonry he would assist Simon financially. Contestant Katherine Piraux had been supported by her adult sons for many years, as had Margaret Woelz, one of the sisters who did not join in the contest.

For many years before his death, decedent had regularly sent monthly remittances to his sisters Anna and Josephine and to his oldest brother, William. He also paid Josephine's funeral expenses. At the date of his death and for some time prior thereto, he was contributing $50 per month to Anna and to William, and upon several occasions during his visits he had given Mary O'Brien, then Mary Luckenbach, gifts of money. Other contributions to the support of said brothers and sisters seem neither to have been received nor expected. Anna and William, who were the chief recipients of decedent's bounty during the lifetime, have not joined in the contest. The facts show that distance and the lapse of time had gradually weakened any intimacy or close association existing between the decedent and the members of his family. We cannot declare a testamentary disposition unnatural because the testator leaves his entire estate to his wife, who has been his companion for 36 years, to the exclusion of brothers and sisters whom he had not seen for many years preceding his death and with whom he had carried on no regular correspondence.

[2, 3] Although there is absolutely no evidence in support of the allegations of contestants' petition that Mrs. Luckenbach promised to provide for her husband's brothers and sisters, the testator may well have acted with the expectation that she would do so. It appears in evidence that the monthly checks to Anna, William, and Josephine were frequently signed by Mrs. Luckenbach, and that if letters accompanied the checks they were written by her. It further appears from the testimony of contestants that Mrs. Luckenbach continued to make the monthly payments after the death of her husband until the will contest was instituted. Contestants offered as evidence directed to the allegation of undue influence an incident related by contestant Mary O'Brien, to the effect that in a stealthy manner decedent handed her a $20 bill as he was leaving Chicago in 1911, at the depot, when Mrs. Luckenbach was ahead of them and in a position where she could not see the bill passed. Said incident is practically of no value in view of evidence as to Mrs. Luckenbach having joined her husband in extending aid to his relatives, and the further testimony of Mary O'Brien herself that Mrs. Luckenbach was aware of the gifts made by her husband and had mailed money to Mary O'Brien before the marriage of said Mary O'Brien. Nor are the remarks of the testator to said Mary O'Brien, in 1917, as to his intention to provide for her when she was no longer able to work, nor the further statement, made in 1917, testified to by Anton Luckenbach, that he would provide for his brothers and sisters and not work for the "other fellow," when given the fullest effect possible, sufficient under any analysis of the facts, considered either alone or together with the other circumstances relied upon, to sustain a finding of fraud or undue influence. A few isolated and detached, trivial and inconsequential incidents, happening at a time remotely distant from the date of the execution of the will, are to be given little weight in considering the mental status of the person under investigation or the further testamentary essential, freedom of action.

[4, 5] There remains only to consider the provision of the testator's will in regard to Edith Luckenbach. As stated above, said provision bequeathed $10,000 to a trustee to pay the income to Edith Luckenbach "for her education, the disbursement thereof to be directed by my said trustee, and after she has attained the age of eighteen years, to pay said net income to her during her natural life." (Italics supplied.) At the time of the execution of the will Edith Luckenbach was 35 years of age and had finished her education in the ordinary sense of the term. She had visited the decedent a few months before the will was drawn. Contestants argue that the inclusion of this provision indicates that the testator must have believed said Edith to be at least 17 years younger than she actually was, and that such a belief reveals unsoundness of mind incompatible with testamentary capacity. They further argue that it is reasonable to infer and must be inferred, in considering the propriety of the nonsuit, that believing Edith Luckenbach to be younger than she actually was, the testator insensibly believed all his relatives to be younger than their years and possessing the added strength and capacity to support themselves which youth would be likely to give them. We are unable to accede to the view that such extravagant inferences have any place in the determination of legal rights, even in considering the propriety of a nonsuit. The said provision is contained in a portion of the testator's will in which he creates trusts for three other persons, the income to be paid for their education until they shall attain the age of either 18 or 21 years. The phraseology of the provision for Edith Luckenbach is practically identical with that of the other trust provisions. The will is a lengthy document, and apparently was drawn by an attorney. The only reasonable inference which may be drawn in view of all the circumstances, even in considering whether a nonsuit should have been granted, is that the inappropriate language, which, however, would not affect the validity of the provision or the rights of Edith Luckenbach thereunder, inadvertently crept into the instrument, and either was not noticed by the testator, or was not deemed by him of sufficient importance to be changed. Nor does the testimony of the witness Palmer affect our conclusion.

The testator was only about 58 years of age at the date of his death. Absolutely no evidence was introduced to support the allegations of the petition that decedent, for 10 years immediately preceding his death, was afflicted with disease of mind and body. There is a reference to an eczema on his hands with which he was afflicted at times, but otherwise not a shred of evidence that at the time of his death, or at any other time, he suffered with any disease whatsoever. Absolutely no evidence as to improper execution of the will or proof relating to the charge that it was forged was attempted to be introduced. Nor was any evidence introduced in support of the allegations of the petition charging Mrs. Luckenbach with undue influence in stating to her husband that his relatives were anxiously awaiting his death to obtain and squander his property and making other false statements. Rather the proof would indicate that she was well disposed towards said relatives.

[6-8] The evidence relied upon is wholly insufficient to support an adjudication pronouncing said will invalid. As this court said in Estate of Bryson, 191 Cal. 521, 217 P. 525:

"Adopting, as we must, the rules of construction that apply to cases of nonsuit, by indulging every favorable inference fairly deducible and every favorable presumption fairly arising from the evidence, and giving to contestant the benefit of every piece of evidence which tends to sustain his averments, as fully stated in Berger v. Lane, 190 Cal. 443 [213 P. 45], and cases cited, it is clear that he has completely failed to make out a prima facie case. The rule of law is that fraud must be proved and cannot be presumed, and its application to the facts of this case is sufficient alone to defeat contestant's case. The inferences and presumptions spoken of above must fall within the realm of rationality. There is nothing in contestant's case which amounts to more than mere conjecture, surmise, or suspicion. To justify the submission of any question of fact to a court or jury there must be proof of a substantial character that the fact is as alleged."

If the court below had refused to grant a nonsuit and the will had been declared invalid, on the basis of the evidence here offered, we would be required to reverse the judgment on appeal, as being against the law. This being the case, the judgment of nonsuit must be affirmed. Estate of Unger, 188 Cal. 714, 206 P. 1003; Estate of Wall, 187 Cal. 50, 200 P. 929; Estate of Chevallier, 159 Cal. 161, 168, 113 P. 130; Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 495, 502, 82 P. 57.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

C. GANAHL LUMBER CO. v. THOMPSON et al. (L. A. 9055.)

Supreme Court of California. Oct. 1, 1928.

1. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 132(1)—Where owners did not file notice of completion of building within 10 days, claimant filing claim 97 days after actual completion had no valid lien (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187).

Where owners failed to file notice of completion of building within 10 days thereafter, claimant, who furnished materials, filing claim of lien 97 days after actual completion, had no valid lien under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187, since claim of lien should have been filed within 90 days.

2. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 132(7)—Owner's notice of completion tardily filed is not "equivalent" of completion, so as to afford lien claimant 30 days thereafter in which to file claim (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187).

Owner's notice of completion of building tardily filed cannot be said to be "equivalent" of completion within meaning of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187, so as to afford lien claimant 30 days thereafter within which to file his claim of lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Equivalent.]

3. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 132(7)—Owner's notice of completion, to be "equivalent" of completion authorizing filing of lien claim within 30 days, must be filed within 10 days after completion (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187).

Notice of completion of building filed by owner, to be "equivalent" of completion within meaning of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187, requiring claimant to file claim of lien within 30 days thereafter, must be filed within 10 days after actual completion.

4. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 313—Inadvertent insertion of building owner's name in body of contractor's bond did not relieve surety of liability thereunder (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1183).

Inadvertent insertion of building owner's name in body of building contractor's bond, given under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1183, did not serve to relieve surety of liability thereunder.

5. Principal and surety ⚡59—Contracts of suretyship must be so interpreted as to give effect to parties' intention as it existed at time of contract, and technical rules of construction give way to intention (Civ. Code, §§ 1636, 2837).

Under Civ. Code, § 2837, relating to interpretation of contracts of suretyship, general rule is that contracts of suretyship must be so interpreted as to give effect to intention of parties as it existed at time of contracting, so that technical rules of construction must give way when intention of parties is ascertainable and lawful, under section 1636.

6. Bonds ⚡48—In construing bond to carry out intention of parties, court may transpose or reject insensible words.

In construing a bond so as to carry out intention of parties, court may transpose or reject insensible words.

7. Mechanics' liens ⚡313—That surety's name did not appear in recital of building contractor's bond did not affect his liability thereunder (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

That surety's name did not appear in recitals of building contractor's bond, given under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, did not affect its validity or his liability thereunder, where bond was otherwise properly executed and signed by him and bond and circumstances clearly showed an intention to charge him.

8. Mechanics' liens ⚡313—Failure of building contractor to sign bond as principal did not affect liability of surety thereon (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

Failure of building contractor to sign bond, given under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, as principal, did not affect liability of surety thereon.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Action to foreclose mechanic's lien by the C. Ganahl Lumber Company against W. Thompson and another, copartners doing business as Thompson & Stowell, and others. From adverse portions of the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part, with directions.

Superseding opinion in 265 P. 511.

G. C. De Garmo and H. B. Cornell, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Walter M. Campbell, of Los Angeles, for respondents Milton M. Longshore and Faith M. Longshore.

Richard Kittrelle, of Los Angeles, for respondent W. G. McWhinnie.

WASTE, C. J. This action was instituted to foreclose a materialman's lien and to recover on a statutory bond given by the contractors. The appeal is taken on the judgment roll alone. It appears from the findings that the defendants Longshore, as owners, entered into a contract with the defendants Thompson & Stowell, as contractors, for the erection of a building on the owners' lot in the city of Redondo Beach. Defendant McWhinnie, as surety, purported to execute a bond to insure the performance of the contract as provided for in section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The building was completed September 21, 1923, at which time the owners moved in, took possession, and occupied the premises. The occupancy was accompanied by a cessation of labor. Notice of completion was not filed within 10 days after completion, as required by section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but was filed by the owners on November 30, more than 2 months thereafter. This notice specified November 15 as the date of completion. On December 27 the appellant filed its claim of lien for materials furnished and used in the construction of the building and subsequently brought this action to foreclose.

The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff against the contractors for the amount due for the materials furnished, together with interest and costs, but denied it the right to foreclose its lien. It also denied plaintiff judgment against the surety on the contractors' bond. From the adverse portions of the judgment, plaintiff has appealed.

[1] The trial court found, and the appellant concedes, that the building was completed and occupied by the owners on September 21, 1923. As the owners failed to file their notice of completion within 10 days thereafter, it was incumbent upon all persons to file their claims of lien within 90 days after actual completion of the building. Code Civ. Proc. § 1187; Schwartz & Gottlieb v. Marcuse, 175 Cal. 401, 415, 165 P. 1015; Bird v. American Surety Co., 175 Cal. 625, 631, 166 P. 1009; Robison v. Mitchel, 159 Cal. 581, 585, 114 P. 984; Simons Brick Co. v. Hetzel, 72 Cal. App. 1, 9, 236 P. 357; Emigh-Winchell Hdw. Co. v. Pylman, 38 Cal. App. 508, 509, 176 P. 722. This the appellant failed to do, for it deferred such action until December 27, 1923, 97 days after actual completion. It has, therefore, no valid lien.

[2, 3] Even if it be assumed, without deciding, that the owners by reason of their tardy filing of the notice of completion are estopped to deny that the building was completed on November 15, 1923, as recited in such tardy notice of completion, it would avail the appellant nothing, for its claim of lien would not, even then, have been filed within 30 days after such completion as required by section 1187. A notice of completion, tardily filed, cannot, as contended by appellant, be said to be the "equivalent" of completion within the meaning of section 1187, so as to afford a lien claimant 30 days thereafter within which to file his claim of lien. The Code section, both expressly and by necessary implication, requires that such notice of completion, to be the "equivalent" of completion, must be filed within 10 days after completion. The language of the section may not reasonably be construed to include, as the "equivalent" of a completion, a notice thereof filed at any time thereafter. In other words, such notice to be the equivalent of completion must be filed in accordance with the mandatory provision of the Code section, viz., within 10 days after actual completion. Any other construction of this provision of the section would be strained and unwarranted. In the language of Buell & Co. v. Brown, 131 Cal. 158, 162, 63 P. 167, 168:

"We are not required to give a strained construction to the statute in order to enable plaintiff to collect its debt from parties who never agreed to pay it and who never requested the delivery of the materials."

The case at bar is distinguishable from Hubbard v. Lee, 10 Cal. App. 477, 482 (6 Cal. App. 602, 92 P. 744), 102 P. 528, claimed by the appellant to be "directly in point." In the cited case the owner had neglected not only to file for record the notice of completion as required by the statute, but had repeatedly stated and represented to the materialman and lienor that the buildings were not completed, and that he had not accepted them and would not accept them until certain other work was done. The lienor relying on these representations delayed the filing of his lien, and the owner was thereafter held to be estopped by reason of such representations to deny the timeliness of the filing of the lien.

[4-8] The trial court held that plaintiff was not entitled to judgment against defendant McWhinnie as surety on the contractors' bond, "for the reason that said instrument is not a good, sufficient, and valid bond." An examination of the bond appearing in the findings discloses that it was not properly drawn, in that the name of one of the owners of the property appears in the body of the instrument as "surety," whereas the signature of defendant McWhinnie appears at the end thereof where it is usual and customary for a surety or obligor to sign his name. In our opinion the apparent inadvertent insertion of the owner's name in the body of the bond does not serve to relieve the defendant McWhinnie of liability thereunder. Section 2837 of the Civil Code provides that—

"In interpreting the terms of a contract of suretyship, the same rules are to be observed as in the case of other contracts."

The general rule is that contracts must be so interpreted as to give effect to the intention of the parties as it existed at the time of contracting. It follows, therefore, that technical rules of construction must give way when the intention of the parties is ascertainable and lawful. Civ. Code, § 1636; 6 Cal. Jur. 252, § 163. Without question it was the intention of all the parties concerned herein, including the defendant McWhinnie, that he should be liable in the event the conditions specified in the bond as creating liability should arise. In construing a bond so as to carry out the intention of the parties, a court may transpose or reject insensible words. 4 Cal. Jur. 352, § 2, and authorities there cited. Inasmuch as the defendant McWhinnie signed his name at the end of the bond as obligor, the improper insertion of the owner's name in the body of the instrument should be disregarded. It is no defense that defendant McWhinnie's name does not appear in the recitals of the bond, for the fact that an obligor's name is not recited in the body of the bond, or is incorrectly recited therein, does not affect its validity or his liability thereunder if the bond is otherwise properly executed and signed by him and if the bond and circumstances clearly show an intention to charge him. 4 R. C. L. 51, § 8. Nor does the failure of the contractors to sign the bond as principals affect the liability of the surety thereon. Kurtz v. Forquer, 94 Cal. 91, 93-94, 29 P. 413.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed, except in so far as it purports to deny relief to the appellant as against the defendant McWhinnie. In this latter respect the judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to enter judgment for the plaintiff as against the defendant McWhinnie; the appellant to recover costs against the respondent McWhinnie, and respondents Longshore to recover costs against the appellant.

We concur: SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.; RICHARDS, J.

SIENK, J. (concurring and dissenting). I concur in the conclusion of the foregoing opinion concerning the sufficiency of the bond as against the defendant McWhinnie, but I dissent from that portion of the opinion which holds that the plaintiff's claim of lien was not filed within time. It is undisputed that the claim of lien was filed within 30 days after the filing of the notice of completion by the owners. But it is held that, because the owners did not file the notice of completion within 10 days after the date of completion, as such date is now asserted by them (but contrary to the completion date inserted in the notice of completion), therefore the filing of said notice of completion could not be deemed an equivalent of completion as provided in section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Ordinarily no one is in as good a position to know when a building is completed as the owner. At least he is in a better position to know than lien claimants. Being in that position, he is bound so to direct his course of action as not to mislead lien claimants with reference to the time when claims of liens must be filed. If the owner occupies the premises and there is a cessation of labor, as in the present case, the lien claimants are put upon notice that they must file their liens within 90 days, if no notice of completion is filed within that time. But if, as here, within said 90 days, the owner files of record a verified notice of completion, lien claimants should be entitled to rely on the record of such filing as indicating the statutory equivalent of completion, and the owner should be estopped to deny the verity and effect of his affirmative step in so filing his notice of completion. Otherwise his action might, and in this case undoubtedly did, operate to the prejudice of the lien claimant. In other words, the owner should not be permitted to rely on his own disregard of the statute in failing to file the notice of completion within the statutory time when such disregard of the statute has resulted in misleading the lien claimant. That an estoppel will lie against an owner when he makes inconsistent claims as to the date of completion has been decided in the case of Hubbard v. Lee, 10 Cal. App. 477, 102 P. 528, relied upon by the plaintiff. The oral representations of the owner in that case were of no greater force, in my opinion, than the solemn act of the owners in this case in verifying and recording their notice of completion. As a practical matter the lien claimant should be permitted to rely on the filing of the notice of completion as the thing which starts running the 30-day period, if the notice of completion is filed within the 90-day period. He may gain his information from the records of the county recorder either by the publication of filings of notices of completion in the various trade and other journals, or by inspecting the records himself. See Hughes Mfg., etc., Co. v. Hathaway, 174 Cal. 44, 161 P. 1159. If no notice of completion is filed within the 90-day period, he must of course place his claim of lien on record within that period in order to protect his rights, and no question of estoppel would arise by reason of the failure of the owner to file a notice of completion within that time.

94 Cal. App. 222

PEOPLE v. SULLIVAN et al. (Cr. 1054.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 1, 1928.

Criminal law §1182—Defendants having neither filed briefs nor appeared when case was called, conviction will be affirmed (Pen. Code, § 1253).

Where defendants, convicted of robbery first degree, filed no brief on appeal, and no appearance was made for them when case was called for hearing, though transcript on appeal was filed, judgment of conviction and order denying motion for new trial will be affirmed, under Pen. Code, § 1253.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; John F. Pullen, Judge.

James Sullivan and another were convicted of robbery, first degree, and they appeal. Affirmed.

George E. Foote and Daniel Dennis, both of Sacramento, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendants were convicted in the superior court of Sacramento county of a felony, to wit, the crime of robbery of the first degree. The transcript on appeal was filed in this court September 5, 1928. No brief has been filed in behalf of appellants. The cause was regularly placed on the calendar for oral argument on October 1, 1928. No appearance was made for appellants at the time the case was called for hearing.

Pursuant to the provisions of section 1253 of the Penal Code, the judgments and the order are affirmed.

In re CATE. (Civ. 4702.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 26, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 26, 1928. Hearing. Granted by Supreme Court Nov. 22, 1928.

1. Attorney and client §61—Application for reinstatement is but an application for admission or readmission to the bar.

An application for reinstatement as attorney at law constitutes an application for admission to the bar or for readmission.

2. Evidence §22(1)—Court takes judicial notice that state bar has effected organization and held first meeting (State Bar Act, §§ 7, 47).

Court in view of the provisions of the State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38; Deering's Consol. Supp. Gen. Laws, Act 591) §§ 7, 47, takes judicial notice of the fact that the state bar has effected organization, and that it has held its first meeting.

3. Statutes §205—All provisions of law must be considered to ascertain import and effect of certain section thereof, if constituting aid to ascertainment of such meaning (State Bar Act, § 26).

In order to ascertain the import and effect of language of State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38; Deering's Consol. Supp. Gen. Laws, Act 591) § 26, to the effect that the board of governors shall have power to pass on all petitions for reinstatement, all other provisions of the act must receive consideration if such provisions constitute an aid in ascertaining meaning of such provision.

- 4. Attorney and client ⚡61—Power conferred on board of governors to pass on petitions for "reinstatements" must be exercised in accordance with provision governing "admissions" (State Bar Act, §§ 24, 26).

Power conferred on board of governors created pursuant to the State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38; Deering's Consol. Supp. Gen. Laws, Act 591), to pass on all petitions for reinstatement to practice law by virtue of section 26, must be exercised in the mode and with the limitation prescribed by section 24, relative to admission to practice law within state; the word "admissions" occurring in section 24 including the word "reinstatements."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Admission.]

- 5. Attorney and client ⚡61—Disbarred attorneys after reinstatement become members of state bar and entitled to practice law (State Bar Act, §§ 3, 7, 24, 47).

Disbarred attorneys after reinstatement become members of the state bar and entitled to practice law, since by virtue of reinstatement they are brought within terms of the State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38; Deering's Consol. Supp. Gen. Laws, Act 591) § 24, thus satisfying the provisions of sections 3, 7, 47, thereof.

- 6. Attorney and client ⚡61—Court of Appeal, though deprived of jurisdiction of proceedings for reinstatement by legislative enactment, nevertheless has inherent powers in such matters (State Bar Act).

Though the Supreme Court, according to the provisions of the State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38; Deering's Consol. Supp. Gen. Laws, Act 591), has final jurisdiction over proceedings for reinstatement and Court of Appeal under the strict terms thereof is deprived of all jurisdiction in such matters, nevertheless it has inherent power in such matters without regard to legislative enactment.

- 7. Constitutional law ⚡52, 79—Attorneys are part of judicial branch and not subject to control of executive or Legislature.

Attorneys at law, being officers of courts, are a part of the judicial branch of government, and neither the executive or Legislature, short of express constitutional authorization, can exercise control over them, so far as their existence or conduct relate particularly to their status or duty as attorneys.

- 8. Attorney and client ⚡61—Applicant for reinstatement will be committed to procedure of law providing for hearing by board of governors of state bar (State Bar Act).

Though Court of Appeal possesses inherent power to reinstate an attorney at law, applicant will nevertheless be committed to procedure provided by the State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38; Deering's Consol. Supp. Gen. Laws, Act 591), providing for hearing of such application by the board of governors of the state bar.

Application by Clyde E. Cate for reinstatement as an attorney at law. Petition denied. See, also, 197 Cal. 796, 241 P. 95.

Alfred E. Cate, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Hewitt, McCormick & Crump, of Los Angeles, for respondent Los Angeles Bar Association.

WORKS, P. J. On July 29, 1927, there went into effect an epoch-making enactment of the Legislature, known as the State Bar Act (Stats. 1927, p. 38, Deering's Consol. Suppl. Gen. Laws, p. 861, Act 591). Long before that time the petitioner in the present proceeding, who had been disbarred in 1918, filed in this court his application for reinstatement as an attorney at law, and the proceeding inaugurated by the application is still pending. We are now asked to order his reinstatement; all evidence having been taken which was deemed necessary pursuant to the application, and a referee in whom was reposed the duty of taking the evidence having presented his findings thereon. The question arises whether we have jurisdiction, considering the provisions of the State Bar Act, to make the order which the proceeding contemplates. The new enactment provides (section 9) for a board of governors of the state bar, to which is confined (section 20) the duty of governing the bar and of discharging the powers and duties by the act conferred. Along with the power to disbar, suspend, or reprove members of the legal profession, the governors, as the act provides, "shall have power to pass upon all petitions for reinstatement" after disbarment (section 26). This power to pass upon petitions for reinstatement appears, under the letter of the section, to be all-inclusive, and, unless there is somewhere to be found a state of the law which permits us to continue in the exercise of a jurisdiction once attached, admitting for the present that the Legislature has plenary power over the matters covered by the State Bar Act, our former jurisdiction over the present proceeding is ousted, and an exclusive jurisdiction to dispose of petitioner's desire for a reinstatement is vested in the state bar.

Section 26 of the act contains the following language:

"Nothing in this act contained shall be construed as limiting or altering the powers of the courts of this state to disbar or discipline members of the bar as this power at present exists."

There is in the act, however, no express and direct limitation placed upon the power of the board of governors, conferred by section 26, to "pass upon all" petitions for reinstatement. The fact that the Legislature imposed no such limitation, while it expressly assumed to leave with the courts their ancient jurisdiction to "disbar or discipline" delinquent members of the bar, is somewhat persuasive toward the view that the lawmaking body intended that petitions for reinstatement should be under the exclusive jurisdiction of the governors.

[1, 2] Other parts of the act which seem to induce to the same conclusion may profitably be examined. Section 3 provides:

"The first members of the state bar shall be all persons now entitled to practice law in this state."

Section 7 reads:

"After the organization of the state bar, as herein provided, all persons who are admitted to practice in accordance with the provisions of this act shall become by that fact members of the state bar."

These are the only provisions of the act which prescribe the qualifications for membership in the state bar, and it seems obvious that no one can be or become a member who is not qualified as specified in the two sections. The language governing the admission "to practice in accordance with the provisions of this act," to employ a part of the verbiage of section 7, is found in section 24. It is not necessary here to quote the latter section, nor to attempt to state its provisions. It is enough to say for the present that the plan formulated in the language of the section includes, merely of itself and in its letter, no such method of admission as we are now asked to apply in the case of petitioner here, for it is undoubtedly the law that an application for reinstatement is but an application for admission to the bar, or for "readmission" as the Supreme Court has construed the word "reinstatement." In re Stevens, 197 Cal. 408, 241 P. 88. Section 47 of the State Bar Act reads:

"No person shall practice law in this state subsequent to the first meeting of the state bar unless he shall be an active member thereof as hereinbefore defined."

This language imports, if we take merely the letter of the act, that, if we should readmit petitioner to the bar, he could not practice law. Our order to that purpose would therefore be futile. In view of the provisions of sections 7 and 47 of the act, we take judicial notice of the fact that the state bar has effected its "organization" and that it has held its "first meeting."

If we look only to the provisions of the State Bar Act expressly providing for reinstatements, it seems obvious that our jurisdiction over the present application has been terminated and that we have no power to grant the petition which petitioner has lodged with us. There are many other and very important considerations, however, which require a minute examination before we can conclude the proceeding.

We have already observed that section 24 of the State Bar Act provides a complete scheme for "admissions" to the bar, and the quoted word is employed throughout the section; that is, so far as the mere letter is concerned, the section has no application to "reinstatements." Did the Legislature, despite the rule that reinstatements are but readmissions to the bar, intend by section 24 to place reinstatements and admissions in different classes? If it did, strange consequences will follow. Under such a condition the language of section 26 of the act, conferring authority upon the board of governors of the state bar to "pass upon all petitions for reinstatement" would place the board under the same disability which is above said to confront the courts if they should ever exercise jurisdiction over an application for reinstatement and should grant it; that is, the letter of the statute would prevent the reinstated person from either becoming a member of the state bar or practicing law.

Counsel for respondent Los Angeles Bar Association, so it appears clearly from their brief, take a position in the present proceeding from which necessarily flow the dire consequences just mentioned. They head a division of their brief thus:

"From and after the going into effect of the State Bar Act the board of governors have had exclusive power to pass upon all petitions for reinstatement of disbarred attorneys."

They then quote the portion of section 26 of the State Bar Act to the effect that the governors shall have power to "pass upon all" petitions for reinstatement. It is also said in the brief that "the power heretofore exercised by the courts" over petitions for reinstatement "has been taken away from them and vested in the board of governors; subject, however, to the possible qualification that the Legislature could not deprive the courts of authority to refuse to admit unworthy applicants." The claim of respondent is said toward the close of the brief to be "that the Legislature has deprived the courts of authority to reinstate disbarred attorneys and vested the authority to pass on applications for reinstatement in the board of governors." If we take alone the language of section 26 concerning the power "to pass upon" all petitions for reinstatement, and disregard all other portions of the State Bar Act, and, as well, lay aside all question as to the inherent power of courts over admissions and reinstatements, the attitude of counsel seems justified, for the term "pass upon," when standing alone, probably means "to decide, to determine, to dispose of." After a somewhat cursory examination, we have been unable to locate judicial definitions of the term, and we have thought it unnecessary to make an intensive search, for the reason that the question now under discussion may receive a more thorough and exhaustive consideration if we proceed upon the assumption that it is the equivalent of "to decide, to determine, to dispose of." Another reason for the assumption is that counsel evidently believe that the expression is so to be understood. It seems proper, in considering their views, to proceed from the basis upon which those views are founded.

[3] It is obvious, under well-settled rules of statutory construction, that all the provisions of the State Bar Act must receive consideration in an endeavor to ascertain the import and effect of the language of section 26 to the effect that "the board shall have power to pass upon all petitions for reinstatement," if, indeed, other provisions of the act are to be found which aid to an ascertainment of the meaning of that particular part of section 26.

We have already taken the tentative view that the provision now under scrutiny provides for the reinstatement or readmission of disbarred attorneys after a method which does not admit of their becoming members of the state bar or of their practicing law. That view now requires a circumspect exploration, and it will best proceed from a quotation of section 24 of the State Bar Act, which reads:

"With the approval of the Supreme Court, and subject to the provisions of this act, the board shall have power to fix and determine the qualifications for admission to practice law in this state, and to constitute and appoint a committee of not more than seven members with power to examine applicants and recommend to the Supreme Court for admission to practice law those who fulfill the requirements. With the approval of the Supreme Court the board shall have power to fix and collect fees to be paid by applicants for admission to practice, which fees shall be paid into the treasury of the state bar; provided, however, that until otherwise fixed and determined, the requirements for admission to practice under this act shall be the same as those now prescribed by the Supreme Court for admission to practice in this state and shall be enforced as the same now are enforced through the state board of bar examiners."

[4] We have observed above that the only members of the state bar are to be those who at the time of the passage of the State Bar Act were "entitled to practice law" (section 3), and those who, after the organization of the state bar, "are admitted to practice in accordance with the provisions of this act" (section 7). Now, it will be noted that the language of section 26, to the effect that the board of governors "shall have power to pass upon all petitions for reinstatement," is not a provision regulating admissions to the bar, and in making this assertion we are ascribing no weight whatever to the fact that section 7 deals altogether with admissions, while the language quoted from section 26 refers to reinstatements; that is, we attach no importance to the mere difference between the words employed in the two places. What we do mean is this: The language of section 26 with respect to reinstatements clothes the governors with a mere power, without prescribing in the slightest degree the manner of its exercise. Section 24, on the other hand, provides a complete scheme for the regulation of procedure in the ordering of "admissions," as a perusal of it will amply demonstrate. It seems obvious to us, for reasons which we shall now proceed to set down in numbered paragraphs, that the power conferred upon the governors to "pass upon all petitions for reinstatement" by section 26 must be exercised in the mode and with the limitations prescribed by section 24.

1. Reinstatements of disbarred attorneys have always been regarded as in the nature of admissions, as already pointed out. Those who have been disbarred are out of the profession and seek again to enter it. It is quite logical, therefore, to believe that the procedure regulating proceedings for reinstatement should be similar to that provided for the admission of those who, never having been lawyers or having been admitted in other states, seek an entrance into the California bar for the first time. In truth, we shall endeavor to demonstrate below that, as compared with original petitions for admissions to the bar, applications for reinstatement should be more closely scrutinized, that the requirements preceding reinstatement should be the more exacting, and that proceedings for reinstatement require the greater and the more jealous solicitude of the courts, as well as of the board of governors of the state bar.

2. Section 24 of the act provides that, subject to the approval of the Supreme Court, the governors "shall have power to fix and determine the qualifications for admission to practice law in this state," but nowhere in the act is there to be found any such provision as applying to reinstatements, if they are to be differentiated from admissions. It is as necessary that there be rules fixing the qualifications to be shown before reinstatements as that there be rules to the same purpose affecting admissions. We have not overlooked the fact that section 27 of the State Bar Act provides that the governors "shall have power to formulate and declare rules and regulations necessary or expedient for the carrying out of this act," but we think this language cannot be looked to as a means whereby to provide machinery for the exercise of the power over reinstatements conferred by section 26. As the means for the exercise of the power must be found outside of section 26, it is more in accord with the tenets of statutory construction and interpretation to see it in the special provisions of section 24, which fit the case exactly, than in the general language of section 27, which, with a due and proper precaution, provides for a multitude of unforeseen contingencies which may arise in the discharge of the duties conferred by the act. The Legislature foresaw, it is clear to us, the necessity for rules fixing qualifications necessary to reinstatements, for they perceived the need for such rules in providing for "admissions," a kindred—really the same—subject. As the lawmaking body did see the first-mentioned necessity, it is fair to say that they anticipated it in the provisions of section 24.

3. What is said in the last preceding paragraph of this opinion applies to other provisions of section 24, and a few special remarks may be applied to those provisions. With the approval of the Supreme Court, the governors may "constitute and appoint a committee of not more than seven members with power to examine applicants" for admission to the bar. No such machinery is provided by section 26 respecting reinstatements, nor is it erected by any other part of the act. It is true, looking now to section 30, that the governors "shall have power to create such local administrative committees as it may deem advisable," but the same objections affect the applicability of this language to the exercise of the power over reinstatements as are above stated concerning section 27. Section 24 provides also that with the approval of the Supreme Court the governors "shall have power to fix and collect fees to be paid by applicants for admission to practice, which fees shall be paid into the treasury of the state bar." We think the Legislature must have intended this language to apply to applicants for reinstatement. It would be unreasonable to suppose, power having been given to exact the payment of fees where original admissions are sought, that the Legislature intended the existence of no such power where applications are made for admissions, or readmissions, in the form of reinstatements.

4. Perhaps the most eloquent reason remains to be stated why the Legislature did not intend that petitions for reinstatement should be passed upon by the governors without directions from or interference by the courts. We have already seen that section 24 contemplates the exercise by the Supreme Court of plenary control over the machinery required to be operated before "admissions" may result. The approval of the court is necessary to the adoption of rules prescribing the qualifications and to the fixing of fees to be charged applicants. It is further provided by the section that, after applicants for admission have been examined, the committee conducting the examinations is to "recommend to the Supreme Court for admission to practice law those who fulfill the requirements." This language evidently leaves to the governors the exercise of merely an advisory and preliminary function, for the provision plainly contemplates that the court shall make all orders for admissions. The act nowhere provides in express terms, however, that the orders shall be so made. This, we may remark in passing, is a pregnant omission, for it seems to be a concession to the inherent power of the courts to order admissions to the bar, a subject upon which we shall have more to say below. It is to be observed also that section 26 of the act gives to the Supreme Court a supervisory control over the matter of disbarments and suspensions of lawyers. The section provides that orders for disbarment or suspension shall be made by the governors of the bar, but forbids that such orders shall become final until the end of a period during which the person affected by any such order may petition the Supreme Court to reverse or modify it. Section 26 also provides:

"Nothing in this act contained shall be construed as limiting or altering the powers of the courts of this state to disbar or discipline members of the bar as this power at present exists."

We step aside, again, from our present purpose to observe that here is a plain concession to the inherent power of courts to discipline offending attorneys at law. To resumé: We see in the State Bar Act, then, a sedulous care upon the part of the Legislature to leave to the courts their ancient jurisdiction to make orders admitting to the bar and to discipline recalcitrant lawyers. It is unthinkable, with these provisions before us and considering the language of section 26 upon which respondent bar association relies, that the Legislature intended to vest in the governors sole and exclusive power to "pass upon" petitions for reinstatement, admitting for the moment that the lawmaking body is empowered to grant such a revolutionary power. That the claim of right to exercise this exclusive jurisdiction cannot stand seems plain, when we compare proceedings for "admission" with those for "reinstatement," regarding them for the purposes of argument as distinct and different things. It is only in exceptional cases that an applicant for admission is met with the claim that he is morally unfit to become a lawyer. Such a situation is seldom presented in cases in which law students ask for admission to the bar for the first time, and it presents itself with perhaps less frequency when those apply for admission who have already been practitioners in other jurisdictions. On the other hand, the condition occurs in every case in which a disbarred lawyer asks for a reinstatement at the bar. Every disbarment results from some act or acts of moral turpitude which have operated to place the erring lawyer beyond the pale. When he asks to be reinstated, the question at once arises whether he has rehabilitated himself and is once again clothed with the moral attributes he was supposed to possess when he first became a lawyer. It seems plain, then, as we hinted earlier in this opinion, that petitions for reinstatement require even a more careful scrutiny than do applications for admission. We are forced to conclude that the Legislature intended no attempt to withdraw from the courts the exercise of a jurisdiction so necessary to their very existence.

5. A glance at section 26 of the State Bar

Act, in which is contained the grant of power to the governors to "pass upon" petitions for reinstatement, will furnish further reason for the view that the Legislature did not intend to clothe the governors with an exclusive jurisdiction over such matters. It is profitable to consider the context of the grant to the governors. It is made in a sentence which reads:

"The board of governors shall have power, after a hearing for any of the causes set forth in the laws of the state of California warranting disbarment or suspension, to disbar members or to discipline them by reproof, public or private, or by suspension from practice, and the board shall have power to pass upon all petitions for reinstatement."

Then follow provisions requiring the governors to keep transcripts of evidence in all cases involving disbarment or suspension, to make findings and decision thereon, and to file with the clerk of the Supreme Court a certified copy of each decision ordering a disbarment or a suspension, together with the transcript of evidence taken and the findings thereon. Next comes the provision, which we have already mentioned, allowing each respondent in such a proceeding the right to ask the Supreme Court to review the decision disbaring or suspending him, and, in case a review is not asked or if it is asked and the decision of the governors is affirmed, requiring the Supreme Court to order the disbarment or suspension. It is hardly believable that the Legislature, having so carefully provided for the action of the Supreme Court in finally disposing of proceedings resulting in disbarments or suspensions, intended that those who are disbarred may be returned to the profession without the sanction of that tribunal or of any other court.

It appears from the State Bar Act that the Legislature has provided a complete plan, in which the Supreme Court prominently figures, for the control of lawyers and would-be lawyers from admission to disbarment, if we except the power to administer reproofs. There is no doubt that this latter power is vested in the governors of the bar without the power of the courts to interfere, so far as the Legislature has the authority to make such a grant, and we interject this latter remark because we have no present desire to admit or to deny the authority. The question is not before us. Respondent bar association contends that after disbarment the courts are done with the former lawyer until after he shall have procured a re-entry into the profession through the exercise of a power residing exclusively in the governors, when the Supreme Court resumes its disciplinary authority over him. He enters the profession in the first instance only with the sanction of the courts. After he has been weighed in the balance and found wanting, after he has been excluded from the profession for his delinquencies, he may enter again without the sanction of the courts. From the entire language of the State Bar Act, we think no such anomaly was intended by the Legislature. We conclude that the word "admissions," wherever it occurs in section 24 of the act, includes the word "reinstatements," and that the power conferred upon the governors, by section 26, to "pass upon" petitions for reinstatement can be exercised only pursuant to the provisions of section 24, and under all the limitations prescribed thereby and affecting admissions generally.

[5] Through this course of reasoning we reach the conclusion that disbarred attorneys who are reinstated become members of the state bar and may practice law. By it they are brought within the terms of section 24 of the State Bar Act and the provisions of sections 3, 7, and 47 are satisfied.

[6] Having arrived at the determination that the Supreme Court, according to the provisions of the State Bar Act, has final jurisdiction over proceedings for reinstatement, and that the strict terms of the act deprive us of all jurisdiction over such matters, even in a proceeding instituted before the act took effect, a cursory glance might indicate that our labors in the present proceeding are at an end, but we fear that they are not. Respondent bar association, as a part of its contention as to the effect of that part of section 26 which provides that the governors of the state bar shall have power to pass upon petitions for reinstatement, insists that the action of the Legislature excludes the jurisdiction of the courts, for the reason that the legislative department has plenary power to regulate the admission, discipline, disbarment, and reinstatement of attorneys at law. This is a contention that the courts of the state have no inherent powers in such matters, and this specific point is made in the briefs. Despite the fact that the Legislature has conceded to the Supreme Court the jurisdiction finally to decide whether petitioner shall be reinstated, the question yet remains whether this court has inherent power to order his reinstatement, if we should determine that he is entitled to the order. Indeed, the larger question remains whether the Supreme Court itself has inherent power to deal with admissions, disbarments, and suspensions, as the contention of respondent bar association is that in this state an authority over such matters rests in the Legislature which is exclusive of the power of all courts. We do not assume to decide this question for the Supreme Court, and merely state the extreme to which the contention of respondent proceeds, for the purpose of indicating the transcendent importance of the question presented. As we think courts have the inherent power mentioned, and are convinced that the Legislature has no authority over such matters, except as regulatory enactments passed by it, receive the approval and sanction of the courts, and as the point made by respondent disputes a jurisdiction which we think reposes inherently in this court, we are impelled to state the reasons for our conclusion. If the courts do possess the inherent power in question, no attempt to challenge their authority should ever be allowed to pass unnoticed.

[7] At the outset of the discussion of the point presented it is to be remembered that attorneys at law are officers of the courts, and that they are so important to the exercise of the functions of the judicial branch of government that the courts cannot exist as operative institutions without them. These basic principles lead to the view that they are a part of the judicial branch, and that neither the executive nor the Legislature, short of express constitutional authorization, can of right exercise control over them so far as their existence or conduct are concerned when related strictly to their status or duty as attorneys as distinguished from their status or duty as citizens. These views are entertained by most of the courts of the country. A few courts are opposed to them, but only, we think, as the result of a riot of unreason and to the sacrifice of sacred principles which lie at the very base of the existence and maintenance of the judicial branch. Our first labor in solving this important question is to examine authorities coming from other jurisdictions. We shall then consider California cases which are claimed by counsel to show an abdication here of some of the most important and wholly necessary duties and privileges of the judicial branch of government.

We shall first turn to those opinions of the courts which decide or which have expressed obiter to the effect—for we desire to produce a variety of judicial utterances upon the subject—that the judicial branch has inherent power to admit to the bar. In an early case, in which a woman had applied for admission, the court expressed itself thus:

"In courts proceeding according to the course of the common law, a bar is almost as essential as a bench. And a good bar may be said to be a necessity of a good court. This is not always understood, perhaps not fully by the bar itself. On the bench, the lesson is soon learned that the facility and accuracy of judicial labor are largely dependent on the learning and ability of the bar. And it well becomes every court to be careful of its bar and jealous of the rule of admission to it, with the view of fostering in it the highest order of professional excellence. The Constitution makes no express provision for the bar. But it establishes courts, amongst which it distributes all the jurisdiction of all the courts of Westminster Hall, in equity and at common law. Putnam v. Sweet, 2 Pin. [Wis.] 302. And it vests in the courts all the judicial power of the state. The constitutional establishment of such courts appears to carry with it the power to establish a bar to practice in them. And admission to the bar appears to be a judicial power. It may therefore become a very grave question for adjudication here, whether the Constitution does not intrust the rule of admissions to the bar, as well as of expulsion from it, exclusively to the discretion of the courts. * * * We do not understand that the circuit courts generally yielded to the unwise and unseemly act of 1849, which assumed to force upon the courts as attorneys, any persons of good moral character, however unlearned or even illiterate; however disqualified, by nature, education or habit for the important trusts of the profession. We learn from the clerk of this court that no application under that statute was ever made here. The good sense of the Legislature has long since led to its repeal. And we have too much reliance on the judgment of the Legislature to apprehend another such attempt to degrade the courts. The state suffers essentially by every such assault of one branch of the government upon another; and it is the duty of all the co-ordinate branches scrupulously to avoid even all seeming of such. If, unfortunately, such an attack upon the dignity of the courts should again be made, it will be time for them to inquire whether the rule of admission be within the legislative or the judicial power." In re Goodell, 39 Wis. 232, 20 Am. Rep. 42.

Somewhat later the Supreme Court of Wisconsin said, in a case involving the fortunes of the same applicant for admission:

"It may admit of serious doubt whether, under the Constitution of this state, the Legislature has the absolute and exclusive power to declare who shall be admitted as attorneys to practice in the courts of this state; or whether the courts themselves, as a necessary and inherent part of their powers, have not full control over the subject. It was said by the Chief Justice, on the previous application, that it was a grave question whether the Constitution does not intrust the rule of admission to the bar, as well as of expulsion from it, exclusively to the discretion of the courts, as a part of their judicial power." In re Goodell (Wis.) 81 N. W. 551.

One of the leading cases upon this subject is to be found among the decisions of the Supreme Court of Illinois. The state Legislature had passed an act containing the following provision:

"And every applicant for a license who shall comply with the rules of the Supreme Court in regard to admission to the bar in force at the time such applicant commenced the study of law, either in a law office or a law school or college, shall be granted a license under this act, notwithstanding any subsequent changes in said rules."

An application for admission was made by one possessing the qualifications prescribed by the rules of the Supreme Court existing at the time the statute was enacted. In the meantime, however, the court had adopted new rules touching admissions, and the applicant, at the time his application was made, did not possess the qualifications fixed by these amended rules. In passing upon the application, the court said, after discussing some questions involving the effect of the statute:

"Another fatal objection to the provisions in question is that the Legislature, in their enactment, overlooked the restraint imposed by the Constitution and assumed the exercise of a power properly belonging to the courts. A provision which has been incorporated in each successive Constitution of this state is found in the present Constitution as article 3, in the following language: 'The powers of the government of this state are divided into three distinct departments,—legislative, executive and judicial; and no person, or collection of persons, being one of these departments, shall exercise any power properly belonging to either of the others, except as hereinafter expressly directed or permitted.'"

After this reference to a constitutional provision which in effect is no different from section 1 of article 3 of our own Constitution and which is like provisions of the Constitutions of the states of the Union generally, and after discussing at length a question to which we shall refer later, the court said further:

"This court has never acknowledged the power of the Legislature to prescribe the amount of learning which shall qualify an attorney to practice in our courts. Section 3 of the same act, to which the provision in question is an amendment, and which is the same as section 10 of the act of 1845, has always provided that 'any person producing a license or other satisfactory voucher proving that he hath been regularly admitted an attorney at law in any court of record within the United States and obtaining a certificate of good moral character, as required in the preceding section, may be licensed and permitted to practice as a counsellor and attorney at law in any court in this state without an examination.' Each state has its own rules, and in some states inferior courts of record are permitted to grant licenses, and in others the requirements have always been below ours. The effect of enforcing such a statute would be to degrade the profession, and fill its ranks with those not qualified by our rules. This court has refused to recognize that section as valid, and has required that the course of study in the other state shall be at least equal to that prescribed by our rules, or that the applicant should have been engaged in active practice under the license for a specified period. Again, the statute has always provided that the license may be obtained from some two justices of this court, while the rules have required that the motion shall be made to, and granted by, the court. Two justices are a minority, and not a court, and no motion to admit has been granted except by a majority of the court. In Dahneke v. People, 168 Ill. 102, 48 N. E. 137 [39 L. R. A. 197], we held that, although it was the duty of the county board to erect and keep in repair a suitable court house, when the board has provided rooms they are under the control of the courts. We said: 'It rests with the judges of the courts to arrange among themselves how they will occupy the several courtrooms thus provided for them by the county board. The county board has no right to dictate to the judges as to what particular room each judge shall occupy. To make the judges of our courts depend upon a legislative or political body for the rooms in which they shall hold their sessions, in the manner indicated in this record, would be to destroy the dignity and independence of the judiciary.' The courts have an undoubted right to order and control their courtrooms, and to maintain their independence as a branch of the government. Each department of the government derives its power from the same source, and each is of equal dignity and independence, under our Constitution. In Wisconsin, it was held that the judicial power extended to the selection of the court's own janitor, and in its separate and independent sphere of action the power could not be taken from the court, and given to the legislative or executive department, or any officer of either. In re Janitor [of] Supreme Court, 35 Wis. 410. None of the decisions of this court cited by counsel for applicants touch this question in any way. With the exception of two cases, they are proceedings for the disbarment of attorneys, and the power of the Legislature to protect the public against persons unfit to practice law and to pass laws for that purpose has never been denied. One of the remaining cases is Robb v. Smith, 3 Scam. [Ill.] 46, relating to the right of one not admitted by the court as an attorney to commence or prosecute a suit for another, and is of the same class. One case only is an application for admission, and that is the case of the late Myra Bradwell (In re Bradwell, 55 Ill. 535). There the court spoke of the attorney holding his commission from two members of the court, but the decision was the decision of the court, and not of two justices. The application was considered, and denied by the court, as such, because the Legislature had, in effect, prohibited her from practicing law. The court passed on her legal acquirements, and said they were satisfied with her learning and ability. The court did not concede the powers of the Legislature to decide that question. It was held that the court should not admit any person or class of persons not intended by the Legislature to be admitted. It was said that, if the Legislature should choose to remove the existing barrier, the court would cheerfully issue licenses equally to men and women. After an amendment providing that no person should be refused a license on account of sex, a license was granted to her. The Legislature did not undertake by the amendment to deprive the court of passing upon her learning and fitness to practice law. That power belongs to the court by virtue of its being a court of justice, and one of the departments of state into which, under the Constitution, the power falls. Without such power by which the courts can protect themselves against ignorance and want of skill, they cannot properly administer justice. The doctrine of that case is the same as of the others. It was competent for the Legislature to remove the barrier, and to protect Mrs. Bradwell in her civil rights, against discrimination on account of sex. * * * It would be strange, indeed, if the court can control its own courtroom, and even its own janitor, but that it is not within its power to inquire into the ability of the persons who assist in the administration of justice as its officers."

The court says again, a little later in its opinion:

"The function of determining whether one who seeks to become an officer of the courts, and to conduct causes therein, is sufficiently acquainted with the rules established by the Legislature and the courts, governing the rights of parties and under which justice is administered, pertains to the courts themselves. They must decide whether he has sufficient legal learning to enable him to apply those rules to varying conditions of fact, and to bring the facts and law before the court, so that a correct conclusion may be reached. The order of admission is the judgment of the court that he possesses the requisite qualifications, under such restrictions and limitations as may be properly imposed by the Legislature for the protection and welfare of the public. The fact that the Legislature may prescribe the qualifications of doctors, plumbers, horseshoers, and persons following other professions or callings, not connected with the judicial system, and may say what shall be evidence of such qualifications, can have no influence on this question. A license to such persons confers no right to put the judicial power in motion or to participate in judicial proceedings. The attorney is a necessary part of the judicial system, and his vocation is not merely to find persons who are willing to have lawsuits. He is the first one to sit in judgment on every case, and whether the court shall be called upon to act depends on his decision. It is our duty to maintain the provision of the Constitution that no person, or collection of persons, being one of the departments of the government, shall exercise a power properly belonging to another; and if the Legislature by inadvertence, as in this case, assumes the exercise of a power belonging to the judicial department, it should only be necessary to call their attention to the restraint imposed by the Constitution."

In concluding its lengthy opinion the court said:

"It is conceded that when the rule was made, November 4, 1897, the court had full power to make it, and to fix the standard of admission. It was a valid rule of the court, acting within its unquestioned jurisdiction, and the question is whether the Legislature could rightfully encroach upon a power belonging to the judicial department, and set aside the rule. The Constitution answers the question in the negative." In re Day, 181 Ill. 73, 54 N. E. 646, 50 L. R. A. 519.

The court of last resort of another jurisdiction has thus announced the law, following its statement with the citation of a long list of authorities:

"With scarcely an exception it has been held that both in the admission to and suspension from practice of the law, courts act judicially in the exercise of an inherent power, and not in a mere administrative or ministerial capacity, and in the execution of the will of some other branch of the government." In re Application for License to Practice Law, 67 W. Va. 213, 67 S. E. 597.

The Supreme Court of one of the other states says:

"A practicing attorney is an officer of the court in which he is admitted to practice. The power to admit applicants to practice law is judicial and not legislative, and is, of course, vested in the courts only. 4 Cyc. 900. The act of admission is a judicial determination, and is not for a term of years but for life, or until the attorney shall have been disbarred by a court of competent jurisdiction." Hanson v. Grattan, 84 Kan. 843, 115 P. 646, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 240.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin has said again, in a comparatively late case:

"It has been aptly said by this court, that a bar is as essential, almost, as the bench and a good bar is essential to a good bench and a good bench to a good bar. Matter of Goodell, 39 Wis. 232, 20 Am. Rep. 42. To that end it is recognized, in general, that the position of attorney is 'subject to strict oversight and summary power of the court'—Matter of Mosness, 39 Wis. 509, 20 Am. Rep. 55—within the limits of reasonable legislative regulation, and that of judicial discretion where there is no written law on the subject. While using due caution to avoid doing injustice to any one who holds, even de facto, the position of member of the bar, the court should firmly perform its high judicial duty to protect itself, its bar, and the public from the danger of any one holding the high and honorable position of attorney at law who is not legally as well as morally qualified therefor. To that end the court has ample power, which may be exercised quite summarily, the boundaries of due process of law not being transcended, as the decisions of this court referred to, bear witness. They are in harmony with the general trend of authority [citing several cases]." Vernon County Bar Ass'n v. McKibbin, 153 Wis. 350, 141 N. W. 283.

In the last case we shall cite upon the particular branch of the subject now under the glass another Supreme Court says:

"The courts are, of course, a separate and independent division of the government, and, within their constitutional rights, not subject to control by the Legislature. Article 3, Constitution of Arizona. We think there is no more important duty, nor one whose performance is more necessary to the proper functioning of the courts, than to see that their officers are of proper mental ability and moral character. The Legislature may, and very properly does, provide from time to time that certain minimum qualifications shall be possessed by every citizen who desires to apply to the courts for permission to practice therein, and the courts will require all applicants to comply with the statute. This, however, is a limitation, not on the courts, but upon the individual citizen, and it in no manner can be construed as compelling the courts to accept as their officers all applicants who have passed such minimum standards, unless the courts are themselves satisfied that such qualifications are sufficient. If they are not, it is their inherent right to prescribe such other and additional conditions as may be necessary to satisfy them the applicants are indeed entitled to become such officers. In other words, they may not accept less, but may demand more, than the Legislature has required." In re Bailey, 30 Ariz. 407, 248 P. 29.

We have quoted from these opinions without comment, for the purpose of presenting a general survey of the question to which they relate. Particular language in two of them, however, requires a brief notice. It is said in Vernon County Bar Association v. McKibbin, in the midst of a plain and explicit statement that the courts possess the inherent jurisdiction to admit and control lawyers, that the power is exercisable "within the limits of reasonable legislative regulation, and that of judicial discretion where there is no written law on the subject." The meaning of the portion of the quoted language which precedes the comma will be made plain when we come to consider the rule, quite generally adopted by the courts, that they will enforce, upon principles of comity between the three branches of government, those reasonable legislative enactments which are an aid and not a hindrance to the judicial branch in the exercise of its functions and which do not in essence impinge upon the constitutional judicial prerogative. The quoted language following the comma, in the light of its context and in the light of the rule just mentioned, imports that the "judicial discretion" mentioned is exercisable upon particular points or questions which are not covered by "written law" which has received the approval of the judicial branch, and which, through that sanction alone, has been put into operative effect.

A few words are necessary concerning some inaccuracies of expression in the opinion pronounced in Re Bailey. In the quotation which is made above from the opinion, some language is used which bears the possible construction that the Legislature may prescribe rules fixing minimum qualifications for applicants for admission to the bar which the courts are bound to follow. This construction is not compatible with what is said in the first few lines of the quotation, and it is not possible when we consider a part of the opinion which is not included in the quotation. After referring to several authorities, the court writes this pregnant sentence:

"It is therefore held by the best-considered cases, where this point has been specifically passed on, that the requirements prescribed by the Legislature are merely restrictive of the rights of the applicant, and that they did not, and cannot, compel the courts to admit any one to practice."

Some of the expressions in the opinion in this Arizona case, indeed, sporadic statements contained in other decisions to which we have referred, inspire us to remark that the power to admit, control, and disbar lawyers is either wholly legislative or wholly judicial. There is no such thing, we think, under American constitutional limitations upon the powers of the respective branches of government, as the splitting up of jurisdiction over indivisible subjects, so that one of the three branches of government may rove over a part of the subject and another branch may traverse the remainder. This remark would seem to be trite. In the matter of power over attorneys at law, the judicial branch is either wholly slave to the legislative branch or wholly free from its domination. It cannot be "half slave and half free." More will be said upon this particular subject later.

We now come to a consideration of another line of authority which bears upon the general question which confronts us. Most of the cases which we have already cited proceed upon the theory that, as an act of grace and upon principles of comity the courts, out of regard for the general welfare, will sanction and put into effect such legislative enactments affecting the admission and control of attorneys as may be reasonable aids to them in the discharge of their duties in that behalf. This concession does not admit a power in the Legislature as one of the co-ordinate branches of government, and as illustrating that truth the courts have not hesitated to ignore unreasonable legislation upon the subject.

We have already stated the circumstances out of which arose the opinion in the earliest Wisconsin case from which we have quoted. The court said further in its opinion:

"The Legislature has, indeed, from time to time, assumed power to prescribe rules for the admission of attorneys to practice. When these have seemed reasonable and just, it has generally, we think, been the pleasure of the courts to act upon such statutes, in deference to the wishes of a co-ordinate branch of the government, without considering the question of power. * * * [I]t is a pleasure to defer to all reasonable statutes on the subject. And we will decide this motion on the present statutes, without passing on their binding force."

The court then denied the application on the ground that there was no warrant for the admission of women to the bar. In re Goodell, 39 Wis. 232, 20 Am. Rep. 42.

Early in the year following that in which this Wisconsin case was decided, the Supreme Court of that state rendered an opinion in another interesting case. The Legislature had passed a bill providing that any person who had been admitted to practice law in Illinois "shall be admitted and licensed to practice as an attorney and counselor at law in all the courts of this state," upon making application to that end. A motion for the admission of one who came within the terms of the act was presented to the Supreme Court. In denying the application, the court said:

"The office of attorney and counselor of the courts is one of great official trust and responsibility in the administration of justice; one liable to great abuse; and has always been exercised, in all courts proceeding according to the course of the common law, subject to strict oversight and summary power of the court. It would be an anomaly, dangerous to the safe administration of justice, that the office should be filled by persons residing beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and practically not subject to its authority. We take it, that members of the bar of this state lose their right to practice here by removing from the state. After they become nonresidents, they can appear in courts of this state ex gratia only. Our courts cannot have a nonresident bar. This all appears to us to be so very plain, that it is difficult to believe that chapter 50 of 1855 was intended to do more than to authorize the appearance here, as counsel in the trial and argument of causes, of gentlemen of the bar of other states. If intended to do that, it was probably unnecessary. If intended to do more, it was clearly without the power of the Legislature." In re Mosness, 39 Wis. 509, 20 Am. Rep. 55.

Several years after Miss Goodell had suffered the rebuff administered in the opinion In re Goodell, 39 Wis. 232, 20 Am. Rep. 42, the Legislature of Wisconsin passed a statute expressly qualifying women for admission to the bar. She again made application and the court, which at last admitted her, thus referred to its earlier opinion in passing upon the application:

"[I]t was * * * remarked by the Chief Justice that the Legislature had, from time to time, assumed the power to prescribe rules for the admission of attorneys, and, when those rules have seemed reasonable and just, it has generally been the pleasure of the courts to act upon such statutes, in deference to the wishes of a co-ordinate branch of the government, without considering the question of power. A majority of the court are disposed to pursue the same course now, and act upon the statute above cited, waiving, for the present, the question whether or not the courts are vested with the ultimate power, under the Constitution, of regulating and determining for themselves as to who are entitled to admission to practice." In re Goodell (Wis.) 81 N. W. 551.

It is said in one of the opinions from which we have already quoted:

"It is generally conceded, however, that it is competent for the Legislature to prescribe the qualifications for admission and the grounds for disbarment, as well as the procedure therein. It is not within the power of the Legislature, however, to admit an attorney to practice in the courts of the state or to disbar a practicing lawyer. * * * Originally the courts alone determined the qualifications of candidates for admission, but to avoid friction between the departments of government the courts of this and other states have generally acquiesced in all reasonable provisions relating to qualifications enacted by the Legislature." (Hanson v. Grat-tan).

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin has said in a comparatively late case from which we have quoted above:

"There is no question but that the Legislature has power to regulate admission to the bar by prescribing a standard therefor, and it is the duty, as it should be the pleasure, of the court to give full effect to all reasonable efforts in that regard. Further, in case of the Legislature having, as here, prescribed conditions of eligibility to admission to practice law, which are reasonable, want of such conditions should be regarded as insurmountable." Vernon Co. Bar Ass'n v. McKibbin.

It will be observed that in this extract the court ascribes to the Legislature a "power" to regulate admissions to the bar, but the entire opinion shows that the word was employed as referring to a power exercisable only under the sanction of the court. It is especially to be noted that the court quotes with approval from In re Goodell, 39 Wis. 232, 20 Am. Rep. 42.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania uses this forceful language:

"Nothing is clearer in the Constitution than the separation of the legislative and judicial branches of our state government. Neither possesses the powers of the other, and any power inherent in the one cannot be exercised by the other. Judicial powers and functions are to be exercised by the judiciary alone, and a century ago in Commonwealth ex rel. Brackenridge v. Judges of Common Pleas, 1 Serg. & R. 187, it was held that the admission of an attorney to practice before a court is a judicial act. This has never been doubted or questioned since, and, if the act of 1909 is an encroachment upon the judiciary, it must be regarded as a vain attempt by the Legislature to exercise a power which it does not possess." Hoopes v. Bradshaw, 231 Pa. 485, 80 A. 1098.

The act mentioned in the opinion in that case conferred the right of those admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court to practice in the lower courts of the state. Notwithstanding the positive expressions contained in the foregoing quotation, the Supreme Court upheld the statute upon the ground that it merely determined a reasonable effect to be given to orders or decrees of the court.

Departing now from this particular line of cases, we observe that a few decisions have conceded to the legislative branch of government the right, under the police power, to pass certain measures within a limited range and which affect in some measure the relationship between lawyers and the courts.

In the case which is probably the most thoroughly considered of all those declaring that the courts have inherent power over the admission and control of attorneys, it is said:

"It may be readily admitted that such all-pervading [police] power does, in some respects, reach the practice of the law, and gives to the Legislature some power concerning it. The Legislature may enact police legislation for the protection of the public against things hurtful or threatening to their safety and welfare. They may prescribe reasonable conditions which will exclude from the practice those persons through whom injurious consequences are likely to result to the inhabitants of the state." In re Day, supra.

In another of the opinions from which we have already quoted, In re Day and other cases are cited to support the following statements:

"But notwithstanding the jurisdiction of the courts over the subject it has been generally conceded that the Legislature may in the exercise of its police power, prescribe reasonable rules and regulations for admissions to the bar, which will be followed by the courts. But the Legislature may not impose unreasonable rules or deprive the courts of their inherent power to prescribe other rules and conditions of admission to practice." In re Application for License, etc., supra.

We turn now to a line of cases upon another specific point, that relating to the inherent power of courts to disbar erring lawyers. We think there is no dissent in any of the decisions from the proposition that such a power exists in full vigor. It is said in an opinion which was rendered seventy years ago:

"All courts have the power to control and regulate, to a certain extent, the conduct of their officers, and to inflict on them for their official misconduct, such punishment as the law prescribes. If a court have knowledge of the existence of such official misconduct on the part of any of its officers, it not only has the power, but it is its duty, to institute an appropriate proceeding against the offender, and to bring him, if guilty, to condign punishment. And it is much to be regretted that this duty which the law devolves upon the courts of the country is so little regarded, and that the obligations which it imposes are so frequently overlooked or neglected. The official misconduct of an attorney at law may be inquired into in a summary manner by the court, and if guilty of such misconduct, his name may be stricken from the roll of attorneys admitted to the practice of law at the bar of the court. * * * The power to remove an attorney from the bar ought to be exercised with great caution and discretion, but it is a power incidental to all courts, and unless it be clearly exceeded or abused by a circuit court this court should not interpose, as it can not decide with the same means of information that the court below was in the possession of." Rice v. Commonwealth, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 472.

It is said by the supreme court of another state:

"At common law, attorneys were, as now, under the statute, officers of the court; and as such they were liable to be punished in a summary way, either by attachment or having their names struck out of the roll of attorneys, for any ill practice attended with fraud and corruption, and committed against the obvious rules of justice and common honesty. Bac. Abr. 'Attorneys', 474. This is an inherent power residing in the court without the aid of statutory enactment. The exercise of the power may be, as it often is, regulated by statute, but the statute does not create it. Its existence is necessary and incidental to the court for its own protection, to secure the proper administration of justice, to maintain the prestige of the profession for integrity, to conserve the public good, and to protect clients from malpractice attended with fraud and corruption. * * * It is, therefore, laid down by the text-writers upon this subject, as deducible from the practice and decisions of the courts in such cases, that a court has the inherent right to exercise this summary jurisdiction over its attorneys, as officers of the court, to require and compel them to deal justly and honestly with their clients, and to punish them by fine and imprisonment for contempts or misconduct in their office, and, in cases where the malpractice or misconduct in their professional capacity showed them to be unfit persons to practice the law, to strike their names from the roll." State v. Winton, 11 Or. 456, 5 P. 337, 50 Am. Rep. 486.

In this opinion the court remarks that the "power" to disbar "may be regulated by statute," but the immense weight of authority, some of which has already been cited, demonstrates that the regulation must be reasonable, and that the courts enjoy the sole right to say whether it is reasonable or not. This limitation, in truth, operates to curb all attempts of the legislative branch, in whatever direction, to control or regulate the power of the courts over their officers.

In a case coming from another state, the question was involved whether one disbarred as a lawyer could qualify for the office of district attorney. In disposing of the question, the court said:

"As we read the brief of appellant, he virtually concedes that his election to the office of state's attorney does not entitle him to appear in the courts of record of this state as such state's attorney, when he could not appear in matters not pertaining to such office; but, inasmuch as we consider this admission, if well founded, to be fatal to the claims of appellant, we will not pass it without full consideration. Did the framers of the Constitution intend to indirectly take from the courts, in favor of a certain excepted class of persons, a right which the statutes of the territory had recognized as resting in the courts—a right recognized for centuries, by all countries and states having laws based on the English common law, as the inherent right of the court, a right necessary in the very nature of courts and the duties devolving upon them, a right which, if lost, would soon bring the courts of our land into contempt—the right to say who shall as attorneys be recognized as officers of the courts, together with the right to expel such persons whenever they have been adjudged unworthy or unfit for this important trust? This right of the courts is as much the law of our land, and of as much dignity as such, as any law found in the Constitution or statutes. It is not dependent upon either the Constitution or statutes for its existence, but exists fully in all courts of record unless expressly restricted or taken away by express legislation, and it is a serious question whether it lies within the power of the Legislature to more than regulate this right of the court, whether the Legislature can more than prescribe certain qualifications for admission, leaving to the proper court to fix others if it sees fit, and whether the Legislature can more than fix certain grounds for disbarment, leaving to the court the right to disbar for other reasons within sound judicial discretion. 3 Am. &

Eng. Ency. Law, pp. 287, 300, 301; 4 Cyc. 900. No one has ever contended that our Supreme Court, in which our statutes have left this right of admission and disbarment, had not full power to exercise such right the same as to reach any other judicial determination, or that the effect of its decision or judgment had in any manner been restricted." Danforth v. Egan, 23 S. D. 43, 119 N. W. 1021, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1030, 20 Ann. Cas. 418.

The inherent power of courts to disbar is so universally recognized that we forbear to burden this lengthy opinion with further quotation from the cases which uphold it. Other authorities upon the subject which may be examined with profit are State v. McClaugherty, 33 W. Va. 250, 10 S. E. 407; State v. Stiles, 48 W. Va. 425, 37 S. E. 620; State v. Hays, 64 W. Va. 45, 61 S. E. 355; Hoopess v. Bradshaw, 231 Pa. 485, 80 A. 1098; In re Platz, 42 Utah, 439, 132 P. 390; Vernon County Bar Ass'n v. McKibbin, 153 Wis. 355, 141 N. W. 283; In re Bailey, 30 Ariz. 407, 248 P. 29.

The cases which we have cited, to various points which aid to a solution of the general question presented to us, are among those which support the view that courts have an inherent power to admit applicants to the bar, to regulate the conduct of lawyers, and to disbar them. The cases establish the rule that the courts also possess the power to conduct such investigations as may be required in a proper exercise of their inherent jurisdiction, irrespective of statutory attempts to regulate procedure, and, indeed, in defiance of unreasonable legislative provisions upon the subject. The sole power to determine whether such statutes are reasonable resides in the courts, and they derive their force only from the sanction of the courts. Strictly speaking, a power in the Legislature in such matters does not exist. At least, such is the undoubted effect of the cases to which we have directed attention.

We must now enter upon a minute exploration of the grounds upon which respondent bar association contends that the salutary rules stated in the last preceding paragraph of this opinion have no application in California. Indeed, they cite a few cases from other states in opposition to the mass of authority to which we have already adverted. These must first receive our attention.

One of the authorities upon which respondent relies is Cooper's Case, 22 N. Y. 67, to a specific consideration of which we shall come later. For the present we shall say that the case involved the right of a law student of Columbia College to be admitted to the bar. One of the faculty of the law school, Prof. Theodore A. Dwight, filed a brief in the case, and upon a part of this brief respondent bar association relies. This reliance must be dealt with before we consider the opinion in Cooper's Case itself. Prof. Dwight says:

"At common law, the court had no power to appoint an attorney or counselor. The rules regulating the appointment are merely statutory. This appears from the history of the English law."

To this statement many English text-books are cited by the professor and a few English cases. In connection with its dependence upon the view of Prof. Dwight, respondent refers to a dissenting opinion of one of the judges of the court which decided In re Application to Practice Law, supra, and remarks that he "points out that the courts at common law did not possess authority to admit attorneys."

If it be granted for the moment that Prof. Dwight and the dissenting justice mentioned are correct in their view as to the state of the English law, the circumstance is one of negligible interest, a truth which has been shown admirably by an opinion from which we have already quoted copiously. After referring to a constitutional provision similar to section 1 of article 3 of our Constitution, the court remarks that the question presented by it had been argued by counsel, and that the history of the exercise of the power of admitting to the bar in England had been very carefully set forth. The opinion then proceeds:

"That history is very interesting, but is of little benefit in determining whether the power is one properly belonging to courts or to the Legislature. The difference in the principles underlying the systems of government is such as to render a conclusion inapplicable, even if it should be found that parliament had exercised such power. Judge Cooley, in his great work on Constitutional Limitations, points out that while it is natural that we should recur to the powers of parliament, and incline to concede, without reflection, that whatever the Legislature of the country from which we derived our laws could do might also be done by the legislative authority in this country, we should bear in mind the important distinction that parliament may exercise all the powers of government, while the Legislature can exercise but one. Cooley, Const. Lim. 102. He says further (page 104): 'So long as the parliament is recognized as rightfully exercising the sovereign authority of the country, it is evident that the resemblance between it and American Legislatures in regard to their ultimate powers cannot be traced very far. The American Legislatures only exercise a certain portion of the sovereign power. The sovereignty is in the people; and the Legislatures which they have created are only to discharge a trust of which they have been made a depository, but with well-defined restrictions. Upon this difference it is to be observed that while parliament, to any extent it may choose, may exercise judicial authority, one of the most noticeable features in American constitutional law is the care taken to separate legislative, executive, and judicial functions. But the grant of the judicial power to the department created for the purpose of exercising it must be regarded as an exclusive grant, covering the whole power, subject only to the limitations which the Constitutions impose and to the incidental exceptions before referred to. While, therefore, the American Legislatures may exercise the legislative powers which the parliament of Great Britain wields, except as restrictions are imposed, they are at the same time excluded from other functions which may be, and sometimes habitually are, exercised by the parliament.' Whatever the English practice may have been, the question must be what the nature of the power is, and whether it is one which naturally pertains to the courts. If it is judicial in its nature, the Legislatures are expressly prohibited from exercising it." In re Day, supra.

But there is ample authority to support the view that Prof. Dwight and the dissenting justice have not formed a correct estimate of the state of the English law.

"The history of the admission of attorneys in England, however, does not justify the claim that it is the exercise of the legislative function, but utterly refutes it. In that country, the legal profession has been divided into classes which do not exist here. One class embraced what were known as 'attorneys' when their practice was in the courts of common law, 'solicitors' when it was in chancery, and 'proctors' in the admiralty and ecclesiastical courts; all of whom, at all times, must have been admitted to the courts upon examination regarding their fitness, and this power no other department of government ever sought to control. Originally, no one could appear by attorney without the special warrant of the king, issuing out of chancery or under seal, granting the privilege. The king was considered the fountain of justice, and, as he could not in person decide all controversies and remedy all wrongs, the injured parties were referred to the proper forum, and writs were framed in his name to his judges. Suits were begun in that way, and when he granted the privileges in question it was as a part of that system, and not in a legislative capacity. In a civilized country, where the rights of persons were to be determined in accordance with established rules, either statutory or promulgated by the courts, the employment of persons acquainted with those rules became a necessity, both to the parties and the court. Persons unlearned in the law can neither aid a litigant nor the court, and parliament, at different times, extended the right of the litigant to appoint an attorney to represent him in court. Maugh. Attys. Append. 6, 7. In 1292, Edward I made an order by which he appointed the lord chief justice of the court of common pleas and the rest of his fellow justices of that court, that they, according to their discretion, should provide and ordain from every county certain attorneys and apprentices of the best and most apt for their learning and skill, who might do service to his court and people, and those so chosen only, and no other, should follow his court and transact the affairs thereof; the said king and his council then deeming the number of seven score to be sufficient for that employment, but it was left to the discretion of the said justices to add to that number or diminish it, as they should see fit. 1 Pol. & M. Hist. Eng. Law, 194; Dugd. Orig. J. 141. The profession of attorney was placed under the control of the judges, and the discretion to examine applicants as to their learning and qualifications, and to admit to practice, was exercised from that day by the judicial department of the English government, and no legislation sought to deprive the court of the power in that respect, or to invest it in any other branch of the government. Parliament legislated upon the subject, but the legislation was of a character to exclude persons unfit to practice, who threatened the public welfare through ignorance or untrustworthiness. The statutes always recognized that the admission of attorneys was a matter essentially belonging to the courts and a matter of judicial discretion, and only sought to protect the public against improper persons. The first of these acts was St. 4 Hen. IV, c. 18, passed in 1402. The attorneys had increased to the number of 2,000, and the act, reciting that damages and mischiefs ensued from the great number of attorneys unlearned in the law, ordained and established that all attorneys should be examined by the justices, and by their discretion their names put in the roll, and the other attorneys put out by the discretion of said justices, and their masters for whom they were attorneys should be warned to take others in their places, so that in the meantime no damage nor prejudice should come to their said masters. Maugh. Attys. Append. 9. In 1413, by St. 1 Hen. V, undersheriffs, sheriffs, clerks, receivers, and bailiffs were excluded from practicing as attorneys, because 'the king's liege people dare not pursue or complain of the extortions and of the oppressions to them done by the officers of sheriffs.' In 1455, by St. 33 Hen. VI, c. 7, parliament limited the number of attorneys for Suffolk, Norfolk, and Norwich, reciting that the number had increased more than 80, 'most of whom, being not of sufficient knowledge, came to fairs, etc., inciting the people to suits for small trespasses.' In 1605, by St. 3 Jac. I, c. 7, it was attempted to further regulate attorneys to the same end. Maugh. Attys. Append. 13. Parliament did not, by any of these acts, undertake to determine the amount of learning which would qualify a person for admission. The courts from time to time made their rules regulating the admission of attorneys, and on occasion provided for the appointment of a committee or board of examiners. Maugh. Attys. Append. 14, 16. Blackstone says (3 Comm. 26): 'These attorneys are not formed into a regular corps. They are admitted to the execution of their office by the superior courts of Westminster Hall. No man can practice as an attorney in any of those courts but such as is admitted and sworn an attorney of that particular court. An attorney of the court of king's bench cannot practice in the court of common pleas, nor vice versa. So early as St. 4 Hen. IV, c. 18, it was enacted that attorneys should be examined by the judges, and none admitted but such as were virtuous, learned, and sworn to do their duty.'

"It is argued that the power to admit is legislative because the similar power to disbar was granted by an act of parliament. By St. 3 Edw. I, c. 29, it was provided that, if any counsel should be guilty of deceit or collusion in the king's court, he should be imprisoned for a year and a day, and thenceforth should not be heard to plead in that court for any man. 3 Bl.

Comm. 29; Weeks, Attys. § 14. This no more tends to show that the power is legislative than the fact that the Legislature provides punishment for stealing shows that the trial and conviction of a thief is a legislative proceeding. It is a function of the Legislature to fix punishment for transgressions against the public, and disqualification for office or the deprivation of a license is not infrequently annexed to such punishment. Neither does it follow, because this court has at different times mentioned the statute as authorizing a disbarment proceeding, that such a proceeding is legislative, or that the Legislature might either disbar an attorney or prescribe a conclusive rule of evidence against him. The Legislature provides for the punishment of misdemeanors, and that a person charged with such offense shall be tried by some court, but the trial in the court is a judicial proceeding, and whether he shall be found guilty or not is beyond the control of the Legislature.

"The other class of professional practitioners in England were those who gave counsel in legal matters and conducted causes in courts as advocates. They came to the bar through the inns of court. These were colleges in which students resided and pursued their studies from a very early date. Lawyers gathered about the court at Westminster, and hospitia curiæ were established, which were occupied by the lawyers and contained schools of law. On the suppression of the Knights Templars, the Pope granted their estates to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, who leased the buildings in London to the students of the law. The place was called 'The Temple,' from its former occupants, and the societies of the Inner Temple and Middle Temple were formed. The buildings included the Inner Temple and the Middle Temple, and there were added Lincoln's Inn, on the site of a palace of an Earl of Lincoln, and Gray's Inn, the former residence of the Lords Gray of Wilton. After the suppression of the Knights Hospitallers by Henry VIII, the society held the Temple buildings of the crown by lease, and in 1608 they were granted by letters patent of James I to the chancellor of the exchequer (a judicial officer), the recorder of London, and the benchers and treasurers of the Inner and Middle Temples, for 'lodging, reception, and education of the professors and students of the law.' At these inns the students of law attended in great numbers, and were instructed in the law and practice. From time to time rules were made for the government of these inns by the judges, or with their concurrence, and the advice and consent of the king or queen and the benchers or societies themselves. Dugd. Orig. J., 312, 316, 317, 320. The societies submitted for ages to be governed by the rules so made, and in every instance their conduct was subject to the control of the judges as visitors. They were voluntary societies, to which mandamus would not lie, but the ancient and usual way of redress for any grievance was by appealing to the judges. Booreman's Case, March, 177; Rex v. Benchers of Gray's Inn, 1 Doug. 353; Rex v. Benchers of Lincoln's Inn, 4 Barn. & C. 855. The origin of their power to call to the bar is lost in the past, but they acted substantially as a board of examiners, subject to the control of the judges as visitors, and their act was accepted by the courts. The time of study was reduced from longer periods to five years before any student could be called to the bar, unless he was a master of arts or a bachelor of laws of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge or Dublin; in their case, it might be diminished to two years. He was then called a 'barrister.' In the old books they were styled apprentices, as in the foregoing order of Edward I, and were not qualified to execute the full office of an advocate until they were of 16 years' standing (3 Bl. Comm. 27), when they might be advanced to the degree of serjeant. The benchers of the inn, who governed the society, were elected from the barristers according to seniority. There is nothing in all this which tends to support the view that the admission of any class of the legal profession was ever regarded as a legislative act." In re Day, supra.

The decision of the Court of Appeals in Cooper's Case, supra, was an oddity in the law when it was pronounced, although a few courts have since adopted the doctrine announced in it, and it has been condemned in some of the best-considered cases upon the subject to which it relates. It is necessary now to pay some attention to the decision.

An act of the Legislature had been passed which provided that law students holding diplomas of the law school of Columbia College "shall be admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor at law in all the courts of this state." Cooper, armed with the diploma requisite under the terms of the act, with an affidavit of age and citizenship and with the certificate of a practitioner at the bar that he was of good moral character, applied to the Supreme Court of the state for admission to the bar. The application was denied, and Cooper prosecuted an appeal to the Court of Appeals, where the order denying him admission was reversed. The mere fact that the applicant was finally admitted is not strange, for admissions have been ordered in other states upon similar evidence, partially under statutes relating to the effect to be given to the diplomas of law schools, which diplomas the courts have been willing to accept as sufficient evidence of mental qualifications. It will be observed that Cooper presented evidence also of age, citizenship, and moral character. The decision in Cooper's Case is, however, or certainly was at the time it was rendered, unique in the extreme reasons announced as grounds for a submission to the legislative will. Indeed, we think few later cases can be found in which a surrender so abject has been made upon reason so completely subversive of the rights and duties of the judicial branch of government. We shall quote neither connectedly nor at length from the opinion of the Court of Appeals. Such excerpts as we shall make will be followed, as we make them, by such comment as we think applies to them.

"Barristers and counselors at law were never appointed by the courts at Westminster, but were called to the bar by the Inns of Court, which were voluntary unincorporated associations." This statement is disputed by the quotation which we have last above made from In re Day, and, even if the statement were correct, it must be remembered that it is shown by In re Day, upon a citation of authority concerning a point which is well understood, that "from time to time rules were made for the government of these inns by the judges, or with their concurrence," and that the inns "submitted for ages to be governed by the rules so made, and in every instance their conduct was subject to the control of the judges as visitors." Indeed, the judges stood behind the Inns of Court and were their monitors and governors. Indirectly, but controllingly, they provided for calls to the bar, and actually they made the orders for admissions. Costigan, in his Cases on Legal Ethics, says, page 8: "At the head of the profession, and exercising a general control over it, are the serjeants-at-law and the judges." And again (page 9): "These Inns of Court are colleges which train the students in the law and call them to the bar. Each has its independent, its collegiate life; but in all, as in modern colleges of the same university, the customs and the system are similar. All are in some sort subordinate to the judges and the serjeants, just as the modern college is subordinate to the rulings of its visitor or to the statutes of the university." Lord Mansfield said (see Costigan, p. 44) in The King v. Benchers of Gray's Inn, 1 Doug. 353, that the only power the inns have "concerning the admission to the bar, is delegated to them from the judges, and, in every instance, their conduct is subject to their control as visitors."

We proceed with quotations from the opinion in Cooper's Case. After mentioning the State Constitution, in the respect of its effect upon previously existing statutes, the court said, italics ours:

"Indeed, the specific provision of the Constitution on the subject of attorneys, in the connection in which it stands, bears much more the aspect of being designed to take power from the courts than to confer it upon them."

The opinion then proceeds, the italics this time being those of the court:

"The entire section reads as follows: 'They (i. e., the judges) shall not hold any other office of public trust. All votes for either of them, for any elective office except that of justice of the Supreme Court or judge of the Court of Appeals, given by the Legislature or the people, shall be void. They shall not exercise any power of appointment to public office. Any male citizen of the age of twenty-one years, of good moral character, and who possesses the requisite qualifications of learning and ability, shall be entitled to admission to practice in all the courts of this state.'"

The court then goes on, without the citation of authority, to declare that attorneys at law are public officers, and draws the deduction which naturally follows from such a declaration in the light of the italicized portion of the constitutional provision. The court, however, in drawing the deduction, departs from what it had said about the "connection" in which the provision as to attorneys stands. The conclusion is reached wholly from the italicized sentence, entirely aside from the connection mentioned, for, if attorneys are public officers, the italicized sentence was enough to settle the question. It may be worth while to note that the "connection" mentioned is wholly one of juxtaposition and not of substance. The section, down to and including the italicized sentence, refers to the judges and places various limitations upon their powers. The remainder relates to attorneys, and is as separate from what precedes it as if it were in a different section. It has been decided in this state that an attorney is not a public officer (In re Galusha, 184 Cal. 697, 195 P. 406) in the sense in which that term was undoubtedly intended in the New York Constitution. All these considerations are of importance here, as the provision of the Constitution to which the New York court refers was the principal factor in the discussion leading to the conclusion which the court finally reached.

Cooper's Case has not escaped notice by at least one tribunal which adopts the view that an inherent power rests in the courts to deal with the admission and discipline of attorneys. It is said in an opinion to which we have frequently referred:

"In the state courts the power of the Legislature to prescribe the amount of learning upon which the court must admit to the practice of law has never been recognized, as far as counsel have discovered, with the single exception of In re Cooper, 22 N. Y. 67. * * * In that case the Legislature enacted a statute admitting to practice on diploma of the Columbia College, and it was held that the act was valid. Counsel for applicants in this case contend that the subject is legislative, and not judicial, in its character, and the act of admission is ministerial. Their chief reliance is that Case of Cooper. The first question there considered by the Court of Appeals was whether the admission of attorneys was a judicial proceeding. The Supreme Court had denied admission, and Cooper had appealed. It was suggested that the power of admitting attorneys was executive or administrative, rather than judicial, and this objection, if well founded, would be fatal to the appeal. Upon a full consideration of that question, it was held that the admission of attorneys was a judicial proceeding and the exercise of an appropriate judicial function. The appeal was entertained on that ground. The power being judicial in its nature, our Constitution prohibits its exercise by the Legislature. The court based its decision upon the ground that, although the appointment of attorneys had usually been intrusted in that state to the courts, and was judicial in its nature, yet it was not a necessary or inherent part of their judicial power, but was subject to legislative action, and had been derived from statute. In that state the power to admit to practice was exercised before the Revolution by the Governor. By the Constitution of 1777, the appointment of attorneys was given to the courts, but the provision was dropped from the Constitution of 1846, which provided: 'Any male citizen of the age of twenty-one years, of good moral character, and who possesses the requisite qualifications of learning and ability, shall be entitled to admission to practice in all the courts of this state,' Article 6, § 8. In view of the history of admission and this particular condition of affairs, the act was sustained. The consequences have been greatly deplored by eminent men, abundantly able to judge of the injustice to the public resulting from the rule then established, under which other special laws were passed." In re Day, supra.

As we have already observed, respondent bar association bases its argument in part upon a dissenting opinion. In re Application for License to Practice Law, 67 W. Va. 213, 67 S. E. 597, 604. After all we have said above and shall say later, we find it unnecessary to traverse this dissenting opinion. We may observe, however, that the conclusion reached in it is based in some measure upon California cases to which we shall give consideration below.

In addition to the authorities relied upon by respondent outside of this state, there is at least one other which is in point. In it the question presented received a thorough consideration, and the court reached a conclusion opposed to the overwhelming weight of authority upon the subject. The case is In re Applicants for License, 143 N. C. 1, 55 S. E. 635, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288, 10 Ann. Cas. 187, and was decided by a divided court, with two justices dissenting. The extent of the court's submission to the legislative will is indicated by the language of the annotator who wrote a note following the decision as reported in L. R. A. He remarks that, "aside from the above case, no case can be found wherein the court holds or recognizes the right of the Legislature to encroach upon the right of the court to require that the attorneys practicing before it shall be of good moral character." This note is quoted and commented on in Re Application for License to Practice Law, 67 W. Va. 213, 67 S. E. 597. We can see no difference, however, between a statute which is said to compel the courts to admit a certain class of persons to the bar, irrespective of their moral character, and one which attempts to require the admission of a class without regard to learning in the law. In our view, the case which the annotator criticizes goes to the lengths which logic requires that all cases should go which adhere to the view that courts have not all inclusive inherent power over admissions. The criticized case is the only consistent one of all those which are opposed to the great weight of authority upon the question here considered. In the case there is no halfway station at which the judges stopped. They went to the limit which reason and logic require.

We must now consider the California cases upon which respondent bar association relies. They are nearly all decisions of the Supreme Court, and it must be admitted that in them general language occurs which appears, on the surface, to support the contention of respondent. We shall make some specific comment upon each of them hereafter, but we direct attention to the fact, in advance, that it is not decided in any one of them that courts have not inherent power over the admission and discipline of attorneys at law, nor is the inherent power of courts over such matters considered or even mentioned in any of them.

Cohen v. Wright, 22 Cal. 293. This case was decided during the Civil War, and the sole question determined by it involved the constitutionality of a "test oath" statute passed by the Legislature—a statute similar to those enacted generally by the Legislatures of the Northern States during the period and which gave rise everywhere to litigation similar to that presented by the case now under scrutiny. In holding the statute constitutional, the court employed the language upon which respondent bar association relies. The court says, for instance:

"The right to practice law is not a constitutional right, for it is not mentioned in that instrument, or recognized, or established by it. It is a mere statutory privilege, not even rising to the dignity of an office, except in a very limited sense. * * *

This language is employed during the course of a discussion of one of the constitutional questions considered by the court, which question had no relationship whatever to the point now before us. The court had in mind, in using the words "statutory privilege," nothing bearing upon a possible conflict of power between the judicial and legislative branches of government. Uttered under such circumstances, the expression can hardly be allowed the disastrous potency respondent would ascribe to it.

The court says also:

"The right to practice law is not an absolute right, derived from the law of nature. It is the mere creature of the statute, and when the license is issued and the official oath taken, which authorizes the attorney to exercise the right, it confers but a statutory privilege, subject to the control of the Legislature. Such is the legal effect of all statutory privileges, unless they are in the nature of contracts or vested rights of property."

These expressions were employed, as the last sentence of the quotation shows, in dealing with the question whether the right to practice law is property. So limited, as they must be in appraising the effect of the decision, they are utterly without value here.

The court says again:

"The Legislature has power to repress whatever is hurtful to the general good, and to pass laws regulating the relations, contracts, intercourse and business of the people at large, and of its members to each other, and it is generally the exclusive judge of what is or is not hurtful, the only limitations upon this power being those prescribed by the Constitution. It has the power to regulate as well as to suppress particular branches of business deemed by it immoral and prejudicial to the general good. The duty of government comprehends the moral as well as the physical welfare of the state. * * * The practice of the law is a privilege to which the Legislature may attach such conditions as it may deem proper, and a breach of the condition is a forfeiture of the right."

This passage in the opinion concedes to the Legislature a power which is akin to that said in Re Day, supra, to be possessed by it, and nothing more—the authority, under the police power, to prevent the admission of unworthy persons to the bar—the only difference being that in Cohen v. Wright the language of the court would seem to concede the existence in the Legislature of the right to exercise a supervisory control, under the police power, over attorneys after admission. The language of the court, thus understood, can be said to reflect in no degree upon the general inherent power of the courts to admit attorneys and to discipline them. What was intended by the court is shown by a further extract from its opinion:

"We have carefully considered the constitutional objections to this law, and we see nothing in the Constitution of this state prohibiting the Legislature from requiring public officers, or those exercising special privileges, like attorneys at law, to take an expurgatory oath of the character of that prescribed by this act, and it is clearly within their general legislative powers, unless so prohibited."

The opinion contains another passage which relates to this question of the exercise of the police power by the Legislature:

"The powers and privileges of a lawyer are extensive, and of great importance to the public interests. The Legislature and the courts have always carefully guarded the profession against being degraded or corrupted, that it may command the confidence and respect of the public. The safety of the government and the security of popular rights depend, in a great degree, upon the purity of the bench and the bar. If treason is allowed to find its advocates among their members, the very existence of the government and the liberties of the people are endangered. It is therefore the solemn duty of the legislative authority to provide the necessary means to purge the profession of every taint or suspicion of treason. The Legislature of this state have attempted to perform that duty, by the passage of the act now under consideration, and it should be sustained by the courts, unless they have clearly exceeded their constitutional powers. It is not open to that objection, as we have shown, and is therefore valid, and must be enforced accordingly."

In the case the court was called upon to consider also the constitutionality of a provision of the statute which required parties to actions, before they might proceed, to take an oath similar to that required of attorneys. In deciding this point, the court used strong language which will serve to illustrate the view taken by it concerning the provision requiring an expurgatory oath by attorneys:

"There is nothing in the Constitution which prohibits the Legislature from closing the doors of the courts against traitors and their aiders and abettors; or which requires that this shall not be done until after conviction of the crime, in a regular criminal trial; or that prohibits the Legislature from requiring of those litigating in the courts that they shall purge themselves, by their own oath, of the imputed offense, before they shall claim their aid. The treasonable acts may be so extensively and secretly committed, that the ordinary course of a criminal trial would be entirely ineffectual to stay the evil. The litigant has no just right to complain, for it is his own voluntary or willful act that closes the doors against him. The law warned him what the result would be, and although it may be severe, it is a consequence of his own voluntary violation of the fundamental rights of society. The law may be a very efficient means of preventing the spread of treason and rebellion. It brings one of the consequences of treasonable conduct directly home to those who have something at stake—something to lose if the government is overthrown—something to gain if it is sustained. Without it, traitors might recover, by the aid of the courts, the very means to destroy the government, by aiding and assisting the rebellion, and thus the government would be furnishing the instruments to assist in its own destruction."

So much for the portions of the opinion in Cohen v. Wright upon which respondent relies, but more remains to be said concerning the case. As we have already observed, the opinion, in terms, contains nothing upon the subject of the inherent power of the courts. Some parts of it, however, exhibit language showing that such a power exists, for instance:

"Attorneys are officers of the court, and as such are subject to the control of the court before which they practice, which has power to summarily investigate the dealings and transactions between them and their clients in cases before it, as also to disbar them for misconduct and deprive them of the privilege of practicing their profession."

And the court says again:

"The public have a right to demand that no person shall be permitted to aid in the administration of justice whose character is tainted with dishonesty, corruption, crime, and, we will add, disloyalty or treasonable acts. And his name will be stricken from the roll by the court, by a summary proceeding, in such cases, whether provided for by statute or not, as it is a duty which the court owes to the public. * * * And this is done not as a punishment of the attorney, but as a measure necessary for the protection of the public. * * * And the court has power to require the attorney to purge himself upon oath of the imputed charge. * * * The name of an attorney who has fought a duel will thus be stricken from the roll, although no statute provided for such a case, and although the attorney had not been convicted of the offense. * * * A conviction of the crime charged is not necessary."

These extracts relate to the power to disbar, it is true, but the power to disbar necessarily presupposes the power to refuse to admit, on grounds similar to those from which disbarment may result.

Ex parte Yale, 24 Cal. 241, 85 Am. Dec. 62. In this case the Supreme Court had before it the identical question presented for its consideration in Cohen v. Wright, and did no more than adhere to the opinion announced in that case. Indeed, the court said in the later case that, "though a very elaborate opinion was rendered" in the earlier one, "it was considered proper to permit the questions to be again argued upon the motion and objection in writing, as there was no record in this court of the motion or proceeding upon which the opinion in the case of Cohen v. Wright was rendered." The opinion in the later case, however, contains some of the most striking language upon which respondent may rely in its dependence upon California cases, but nevertheless the terms employed by the court are subject to the limitations referred to above in our comments on Cohen v. Wright. We must now refer to some of the far-reaching expressions of the court—if we look to the letter of them—employed in deciding the exact question before it:

"The manner, terms, and conditions of their [attorney's] admission to practice, and of their continuing in practice, as well as their powers, duties and privileges, are proper subjects of legislative control to the same extent and subject to the same limitations as in the case of any other profession or business that is created or regulated by statute."

It will be observed, of course, that this entire passage goes beyond the question the court was called upon to decide, and, moreover, if it is to be allowed its full potency, we must cast aside much of the reasoning in Cohen v. Wright. In that case the court grounded its decision upon the authority of the Legislature, under the police power, to prevent "traitors" from continuing in the practice of the law. In Ex parte Yale we see language which apparently concedes to the lawmaking branch an absolute, unequivocal, and exclusive power to deal with lawyers from the inception of proceedings for admission to the close of proceedings for disbarment, and all this without any expressed intention to depart from Cohen v. Wright. In truth, there is practically an expressed intention to follow the "elaborate" opinion in that case, for the question considered was allowed to be presented a second time solely to establish a record upon which the decision in the former case might rest. It will be observed, particularly, that by the inclusion of the words "of their continuing in practice" in the extract above quoted from the opinion in the later case, the court, in terms at least, wipes out all that was said in Cohen v. Wright concerning the summary manner in which courts may handle disbarment matters "whether provided for by statute or not." That respondent does not ascribe this ruinous effect to Ex parte Yale is evident from certain concessions made in its brief. These concessions will be the subject of later comment. The Supreme Court said further, in Ex parte Yale:

"There is no provision of the Constitution directly restricting the Legislature from exercising plenary control over the qualifications, admission, oath, or duties of attorneys at law, and in our opinion no such restriction arises by implication; and it therefore follows that the Legislature may lawfully require, as a condition to their admission to practice, or their continuance in practice, the taking of the oath prescribed in the act under consideration, or, at their pleasure, may dispense with all conditions and oaths."

This language is subject to the comment we have made upon the first quotation taken from the opinion, but especial attention must be directed to the final words contained in it, "or, at their pleasure, may dispense with all conditions and oaths." As this language is the veriest obiter, we do not hesitate to characterize it as showing the most abject bow to the legislative will to be found in the entire sum of pronouncements of the judicial branch of government in this country. To bring the question of the inherent power of courts over such matters to a sharp issue, how would any unit of the judicial branch regard a statute which directed the admission to the bar of all persons, irrespective of age, citizenship, residence, education, idiocy, insanity, or morality? Short of positive constitutional inhibition, such a statute could be enacted under the language of the opinion, and specific constitutional inhibition would be hard to find, as the organic law takes no note whatever of attorneys at law. The extreme language of Ex parte Yale is most helpful in showing to what straits we are brought by a concession to the legislative department of government of sole and exclusive power over the admission and discipline of lawyers. The opinion is no more extreme in its language than the principle is extreme in the consequences to which it leads. The power referred to is either legislative or it is judicial, and the answer is that it is judicial.

The solution of the question inheres in the provisions of the Constitution which divide government into three departments, and which erect insuperable barriers between them.

In the Matter of Mock, 146 Cal. 378, 80 P. 64. In this case Mock applied to the Supreme Court for admission to the bar. The petition was presented after the Legislature had amended sections 277 and 279 of the Code of Civil Procedure in such manner as to attempt to confer upon the District Courts of Appeal the power to admit applicants to practice, in the language of section 277, "in all the courts of this state, including the Supreme Court." In disposing of Mock's application, the Supreme Court said:

"It is undoubtedly true that this court has the power, as a matter of comity, to permit an attorney from any other state to present argument to this court in any pending cause, but we are of the opinion that it has not, under the law as it is now written, the power to make an order admitting one to practice in all the courts of this state, and that the applicant must make his application to a District Court of Appeal."

This language is very broad it cannot be denied. It must be observed, however, that the opinion fails to show that the applicant made any appeal to the court's inherent power to admit, nor is that power mentioned by the court. No authorities are cited, except the two Code sections. Considering the state of the law throughout the country, considering the abundant reason for the prevailing rule that courts have inherent power over such matters, this case cannot be viewed as more than a sanction of the Code amendments relating to admissions by the District Courts of Appeal, as a reasonable regulation of the subject. Suppose the Legislature, instead of mentioning the Courts of Appeal, had named the justices courts of the state as the admitting tribunals. The issue then would have been sharply drawn. The extreme to which we are logically led by a concession to the Legislature of the actual power to interfere with a matter which in principle is solely one of judicial concern then would have been reached. We are confident that, in such a case, the Supreme Court would have asserted its inherent power and would have refused to follow the Code amendments as wholly unreasonable, as subversive of the dignity and functions of the judiciary, and as dangerous to the administration of justice.

In re Hovey, 7 Cal. Unrep. 202, 80 P. 234. What is above said as to In the Matter of Mock applies with full force to this case.

In re Students of Hastings College of Law, 7 Cal. Unrep. 376, 110 P. 341. Certain students, upon diplomas from Hastings College, applied to the District Court of Appeal for admission to the bar. The act of the Legislature which created the college contained the provision that a diploma of the institution should entitle the holder "to a license to practice in all the courts of this state." In admitting the applicants, the court said:

"It is our duty to grant a license to each of said persons entitling him to practice as an attorney and counselor at law in all courts of this state. * * *"

Our comment upon In the Matter of Mock is equally applicable here. In order to draw to a sharp issue again the point urged by respondent bar association, suppose that one of the graduates from the college, after procuring his diploma and before making his application for admission to the bar, had been convicted of a crime involving a high degree of moral turpitude, or had suffered judgment for damages in a civil case because he had practiced gross frauds upon some trusting person. The court undoubtedly would not have ordered his admission under such circumstances, and it could have grounded its refusal solely upon its inherent power over such matters. We see at every turn, when logic is pursued to its legitimate extreme, how dangerous it is to concede to the Legislature any real power over these strictly judicial affairs.

In re Mash, 39 Cal. App. 548, 179 P. 897. In this case the District Court of Appeal had ordered an admission to the bar. An application for rehearing was made to the Supreme Court, but it was denied. The higher court said, in a brief opinion rendered by it, that the power "to admit persons to practice law is now vested exclusively in the District Court of Appeal," thus reiterating the view stated In the Matter of Mock. The rehearing was denied on the ground that the case presented merely a conflict of evidence, but the court employed this very general language in its opinion: "Our functions in such a case are supervisory only. We have no original authority to admit persons to practice law."

Danford v. Superior Court, 49 Cal. App. 303, 193 P. 272. There is nothing in this case which requires particular comment, nor which interferes with the views we entertain toward the question now before us.

In re Collins, 188 Cal. 701, 206 P. 990, 32 A. L. R. 1062. Some of the strongest language upon which respondent bar association may rely is to be found in the opinion in this case, if we look but to the letter of it. An order of disbarment had been entered against Collins without notice, upon presentation to the court of a certified copy of the record of his conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude. Because of the lack of notice, Collins petitioned that the order be set aside. The order had been made pursuant to the provisions of section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which declared that one might be disbarred upon "conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, in which case the record of conviction shall be conclusive evidence." After an exhaustive discussion of the question presented, the court determined that notice was not necessary to support the order of disbarment, but said in the course of its opinion:

"It may be admitted that the right or privilege of exercising the vocation of attorney and counselor at law is a valuable right or privilege, but it must also be conceded that it is a right or privilege which the Legislature had the power to bestow, or to empower the judicial department of the state government to bestow, upon such terms as would be consistent with the nature and purpose of the right or privilege to be exercised; and that this being so the Legislature had the undoubted right to prescribe the possession of a good moral character in the applicant for the grant of the right or privilege of entering and of exercising the legal profession, and also, of necessity, to prescribe the continued possession of such good moral character in the individual receiving such grant."

We think this language was unnecessary to a decision of the mere question whether Collins was entitled to notice before he could be disbarred upon a production of the record of his conviction of crime. The case presented no question as to the power of either court or Legislature over the matter of disbarments. Whether notice was necessary depended wholly upon other matters of law, and the result would have been the same if the order had been made under a rule of court containing language similar to that contained in section 287 of the Code. That the matter of disbarments could be regulated by such a rule of court is established by a long line of authority, from which, as we have already observed, there is no departure or dissent. We cannot believe that the Supreme Court, by the language which we have quoted, whether it be regarded as obiter or as necessary to the decision rendered, intended to make inapplicable in California the universal rule pertaining to the control of the courts over the matter of disbarments. We think the language of the court requires no such construction, and it should not be so construed unless no other course were open. We regard the court's expressions as amounting to nothing more than a restatement of the ground taken for the first time in the Matter of Mock. It is especially to be noted—a thing peculiar to all the California cases upon which respondent relies—that the court makes no mention of the inherent power of courts over lawyers. We cannot conceive that the court has ever intended to decide a question which it has never either discussed or mentioned.

In re Stevens, 197 Cal. 408, 241 P. 88. While the opinion in this case is lengthy, and contains an exhaustive treatment of the questions considered by the court, we think it contains nothing new upon the particular question presented to us here.

In re Weymann (Cal. App.) 268 Pac. 971.

This was an application for admission to the bar under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure which were in operation before the State Bar Act. There were but two questions presented for the consideration of the court. One of these was whether the sections of the Code had been repealed by the provisions of the act; that is, a question as between two sets of enactments by the Legislature, not a question as to a distribution of powers between two branches of government. The second question was as to the constitutionality of the State Bar Act under the provisions of the organic law requiring that a statute shall provide only for matters expressed in its title. In leading up to a determination of the first question, the court reproduced, in effect, the language which we have quoted above from In re Collins, and about which we need say nothing more. We cannot regard the case as interfering with the views we hold upon the question presented here.

We have considered carefully all the California cases upon which respondent relies, and we now turn to two others, both of which were decided by the District Court of Appeal. The first of these is In re Chapelle, 71 Cal. App. 129, 234 P. 906, and it presents the other side of the shield, not exhaustively but in brief. This is the first case in California in which the inherent power of courts to admit to the bar was in question and the first in which the power was ever mentioned. Chapelle, desiring to avoid the necessity for an examination before the state board of bar examiners, and alleging reason for the claimed exemption in his case, asked for an admission under the inherent power of the court. In his brief petitioner cited authority to the effect that the inherent power exists, and no attempt was made to meet the point by either of the respondents in the proceeding. These were the state board of bar examiners and the Los Angeles Bar Association, the respondent in the present matter. Neither respondent saw in the decisions of the Supreme Court the ruinous potency which respondent bar association would now ascribe to them. Indeed, respondent bar examiners expressly relied on In re Goodell, 39 Wis. 232, 20 Am. Rep. 42, and quoted that part of the opinion in the case to the effect that, where rules prescribed by the Legislature affecting admissions "have appeared reasonable and just, it has been the pleasure of the court to act upon such statutes in deference to the wishes of a co-ordinate branch of the government, without considering the question of power." After making this quotation, the bar examiners proceeded to say:

"In this state our Supreme and District Courts of Appeal have expressly adopted the rules [fixing the powers and duties of the state board of bar examiners], Rules of Court, No. 1; hence it appears that the courts have voluntarily adopted the method prescribed by the Legislature for securing the necessary evidence to determine the fitness of applicants."

Upon this background we remarked, in disposing of Chapelle's application, "The courts undoubtedly enjoy the inherent power to determine what persons shall be admitted to the bar"; and we said later in the opinion:

"Notwithstanding the inherent power of the courts to admit applicants for licenses to practice law 'it has been generally conceded that the Legislature may, in the exercise of the police power, prescribe reasonable rules and regulations for admissions to the bar which will be followed by the courts,'" and cited authority for the statement.

After a quotation from Ex parte Yale, supra, we said further:

"The only restraints upon the exercise of this power by the Legislature are that the regulations prescribed by that branch of the government shall be reasonable and shall not deprive the judicial branch of its power to prescribe additional conditions under which applicants shall be admitted, nor take from the courts the right and duty of actually making orders admitting them [citing cases]. In some jurisdictions it has been determined, it is true, that the power to regulate the machinery governing admissions to the bar is strictly judicial and that the legislative branch cannot be concerned with it, * * * but in our opinion such a view is consonant neither with reason nor with the weight of authority."

We then proceeded to inquire:

"Do the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the board of bar examiners exhibit a proper exercise of the control which the Legislature may justly impose upon the matter of admissions to the bar?"

This question we answered in the affirmative, and for that reason we denied Chapelle's application. The opinion rendered by us contains certain inaccuracies of expression into which we probably should not have fallen if the question of power had been in dispute, for we then would have been called upon to make the exhaustive search of the authorities which has been conducted in the present case. Still, taking the opinion by and large, In re Chapelle truly reflects the state of the law upon the question of inherent power as it exists throughout the nation, with wholly unimportant departures from it in one or two states. The case declares the rule, in effect, that the matter of admissions, including regulations leading up to orders for admissions, belongs to the judicial branch of government, for we allowed potency to the legislative enactments which were before us solely upon the ground that they prescribed reasonable regulations.

The second decision of the District Court of Appeal to which we have referred above is Sloane v. Hammond, 81 Cal. App. 590, 254 P. 648, the opinion in which was also rendered by this division of the court. The case presented questions different from those considered in any other to which we have referred, but it shows the extent to which courts may go, in one direction, in keeping in existence a bar by means of which to perform the judicial function. The point in the case which is of interest here may be developed without taking the time or space to show how the litigation arose. We said that it was the primary duty of the Legislature to provide public officers whose duty it is to prosecute those charged with the commission of crime, but, in view of the fact that such officers are sometimes disqualified to perform their duty in particular cases, we quoted thus from State v. Moxley, 102 Mo. 374, 14 S. W. 969:

"If the contention of defendant's counsel is to prevail then, if a prosecuting attorney should be for any reason disqualified, all the wheels of criminal justice would be brought to a standstill, for the reason that there would be no vacancy in the office that the Governor could fill, and no power in the court to make a temporary appointee who could in all things discharge the duties pertaining to the office in question. The law does not intend any such absurdity, and will not permit such a failure of justice. And aside from statutory provisions, such as those quoted, the power thus to appoint a temporary representative of the state, one armed with full authority to discharge in full the office he temporarily fills, is of necessity an inherent power in courts of justice."

We also quoted at length from Hisaw v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 484, 165 P. 636, and, in addition, cited Board of Com'rs v. Fain, 66 Okl. 13, 166 P. 896, and State v. Ellis, 184 Ind. 307, 112 N. E. 98. We then said:

"The law is well settled, upon just considerations of public policy, as we have seen, that courts possess the inherent power to name special counsel to act in the place of disqualified public prosecutors."

We think the power here referred to is closely akin to the inherent power of courts to create, maintain, and discipline a bar, if for the moment we suppose the Legislature had not attempted to provide for one, and the power which the courts of necessity must possess to do the same things where statutes upon the subject are in existence, which statutes prescribe regulations tending to degrade the courts or to imperil the due administration of justice. If the courts may disregard such statutes, they may disregard all statutes bearing upon such subjects, for it is for them to decide whether the statutes are reasonable, and no power exists to gainsay what they decide.

These are all the California cases which can be said to touch the question before us. We now turn to other matters. We have already referred to certain concessions which are made in the brief of respondent bar association. These are now to be noticed. After saying that the State Bar Act has removed from the courts the power to reinstate disbarred lawyers, respondent proceeds, "subject, however, to the possible qualification that the Legislature could not deprive the courts of authority to refuse to admit unworthy applicants." This concession, if we strike the word "possible" from the expression making it, eliminates in principle the entire argument advanced by respondent in support of the claim that the Legislature has plenary power over the admission and discipline of lawyers. If the Legislature enjoys that power, by what warrant may the courts defy it in the particular referred to in the concession? The attitude of respondent is like that exhibited in most of the cases upon the subject now under treatment. The decisions generally show an inexplicable attempt to split a question which is indivisible and a failure to pursue logic to its ultimate abode. The only part of the Constitution which can touch the question is that which divides government into three co-ordinate branches, with the accompanying mandate that neither of the branches shall exercise functions outside its own domain. If the Legislature has full power over admissions to the bar, it may provide for the installation as officers of the courts of unworthy as well as of worthy persons. Again, in principle there can be no distinction, granting the existence of such a power in the Legislature, between an enactment which permits the admission of immoral or criminal characters and one which allows the admission of persons deficient in mentality or in education. In short, if the power is admitted to exist, the Legislature is supreme, the courts are enslaved, with the result that the successful administration of justice depends in a large degree upon the legislative fiat and not upon a due and efficient exercise of the judicial function. This must be true, for a proper performance of the duties of the courts depends materially not only upon the integrity but upon the learning of the bar.

Respondent asserts that "the only power reserved to the courts" under the State Bar Act is mentioned in that part of section 26 which reads:

"Nothing in this act contained shall be construed as limiting or altering the powers of the courts of this state to disbar or discipline members of the bar as this power at present exists."

This "reservation" is doubtless based upon a state of the law of judicial decision in some parts of the country which is beyond comprehension. We have already commented upon the fact that there is no dissent from the rule that the courts enjoy inherent power to disbar lawyers. This rule seems to prevail even in those few jurisdictions in which the Legislature has been said to be supreme in the control of other matters affecting the bar, especially the matter of admissions. Here is another attempt to dismember an indivisible subject. How can it be said that the power to disbar, including the power to provide for all steps leading to disbarment, is judicial, while the power over admissions is legislative? If we may resort for a moment to the vernacular, the assertion means that the legislative department may "hire" but that the judicial department may "fire." In language a little more choice, the assertion imports that the Legislature may compel the courts to admit to the bar on one day individuals whom they may disbar on the next. There is no warrant for such a state of affairs under the language of the constitutional provision erecting the three departments of government and making each of the three, in its own sphere, independent of the other two; and, as we have so frequently said, that provision is the only anchorage ground to which the question here involved may be fastened. All these matters—admissions, discipline, disbarments—are either wholly under legislative control or they are wholly under judicial control. This is so surely true that we now venture assertions which we have not yet made. The courts have quite uniformly held that, whatever wounds the legislative branch may inflict upon the body of the judicial branch, the courts have the power, of which they cannot be deprived, to make actual orders admitting to the bar. But why cannot they be deprived of this power, when all else is gone? If the Legislature may, by ill-advised regulation or requirement, put forward those whom the courts are bound to admit, the power to order admissions is already departed, for the courts grasp only at the shadow, while the Legislature holds fast to the substance. In making the orders, the judicial branch becomes but the agent of the legislative branch. Surely, upon principles of sound logic, the legislative domination for which respondent bar association contends must include the making of orders for admissions. To such straits are we driven by the concession to the legislative branch of power over officers of the judicial branch.

Section 7 of article 4 of the Constitution provides that each house of the Legislature shall choose its officers, and sections 23 and 23a provide that each house may provide for its attachés, although the provisions as to attachés seem to have been inserted as a mere introduction to language, also contained in the sections, imposing a limit upon the expenditure which may be made for the employment of "help," as it is termed in the organic law. At any rate, we think the provisions for the selection of officers and attachés adds nothing to the section of the Constitution erecting the three departments of government. Suppose the Constitution contained no specific provision for the choice of officers and the employment of attachés by the houses. Suppose that in that event the Governor should attempt to appoint the speaker of the Assembly and the president pro tempore of the Senate and to name the attachés of both Houses. Can there be a doubt that the attempt would be regarded justly as an invasion by the executive of the powers of the Legislature, and that the courts would so determine? The appointment and control of its officers and attachés is a necessary function of the two houses. The performance of the work of legislation could not safely be risked without such power of appointment and without such overmastering control. We regard the power to select, discipline, and disbar attorneys at law, necessary officers of the courts as they are, to be equally important to the operations of the judicial branch and as coming as clearly within its province.

[8] We conclude that this court possesses the inherent power to readmit petitioner to the bar, if we should determine that his application is meritorious. Into the merits of the petition, however, we have not gone, nor do we intend to do so. While we must avoid all appearance of prejudging any of the questions, constitutional or otherwise, which may hereafter arise under the State Bar Act, we do not hesitate to accord to the enactment, in so far as it affects the control of the bar, our sanction and approval as providing reasonable aids to the courts in the discharge of a duty which pertains strictly to them. We think the act a striking landmark in the history of the relationships between the bench and the bar, and believe it to contain some of the most salutary regulations ever devised for the purpose of purifying the well springs of justice. Viewing the statute as we do, we think we should not be the first to fritter away, even in a slight degree, the powers conferred by it upon the board of governors of the state bar. Disappointing as our conclusion may be to petitioner, if it shall eventually be determined that he is entitled to a readmission, his case must give way to the general good, and he must be remitted to the procedure provided by the State Bar Act for the accomplishment of his desires.

We have already said that it was incumbent upon us to consider the point raised by respondent bar association as to the inherent power of the courts over the bar, for the reason that, if the power exists, it should never be permitted to be brought in question. At this particular juncture in the judicial history of the state there is another reason why it was imperative that the question be decided. We now have in existence the State Bar Act, the general scheme of which we have approved and the excellences of which we have conceded. It is not beyond possibility that the act may be repealed at some future time by the Legislature. If the power of the lawmaking branch over the bar is plenary, as contended by respondent, the repeal then becomes effective, the judicial branch is powerless, and the Legislature may enact in the place of the discarded measure such ineffective or harmful legislation as it pleases, subject only to the inhibitions of the Constitution apart from the provisions erecting the three branches of government. On the other hand, the control of the bar being vested in the judicial branch, and the Legislature having no real power in the premises, any repeal of the State Bar Act may be disregarded by the courts, in so far as its provisions relate strictly to the admission, discipline, or disbarment of lawyers. A repeal of the act by the Legislature would wipe out the provision making the state bar a body corporate and perhaps other parts of it, but certainly considerable portions of the measure could be kept alive by the judicial branch in defiance of the will of the Legislature. Whether this should be done by ignoring the repeal and considering certain parts of the act as still effective, or whether those parts should be "re-enacted" by rule of court need not now be determined.

There is yet another reason why it is important that the inherent power of the courts over the bar should now be declared. While the board of governors of the state bar owes its existence to the initiative of the Legislature, it is well that it be understood that its real and continued existence depends upon the courts. It is well that it were realized that the board owes a faithful discharge of its duty to the judicial branch and not to the Legislature, and through the judicial branch, and as a part of it, to the people. It would be incongruous to view a board of lawyers, charged with the duty of aiding in the administration of justice, as dependent upon the Legislature for its existence and especially as answerable to the Legislature for the performance of its duty. The members of the board are lawyers, after all, in everything they do under the State Bar Act, and the Legislature could not, by providing for such a board, change the relations of those who might become its members to the branch of government of which, as individuals, they are a part.

FEDERAL MUT. LIABILITY INS. CO. v.
INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION
et al. (Civ. 6147.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 5, 1928.

Master and servant — 375(1)—Injury to ranch superintendent returning to route to horticultural commissioner, from detour to his own house on personal errand, held within employment.

Ranch superintendent who, after setting out for auto trip to see horticultural commissioner, departed from direct route to deposit bucket of olives at his own house and was injured in collision with another automobile before he had returned from his detour, sustained injuries in course of his employment, where he was given broad latitude as to his hours of work and was permitted to mingle his business and personal affairs.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by E. R. Underwood, opposed by the Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Company. From an award of the Industrial Accident Commission in claimant's favor, the insurer brings certiorari. Affirmed.

R. P. Wisecarver, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WORKS, P. J. Respondent E. R. Underwood was employed as a ranch superintendent by a corporation that owned and operated a ranch. The corporation will hereafter be referred to as the company. In the discharge of his duties, which were varied in character, Underwood did much traveling far and near, in an automobile furnished him for the purpose by the company. Much of his time, also, was expended in various pursuits upon the ranch itself. He was supposed to be occupied about the company's business in the daytime from Monday morning to Saturday night of each week, but he was also subject to special call at any time, day or night. Upon the day—which was Saturday—upon which arose the occurrences which are of interest here, there was being considered the necessity for spraying some trees upon the ranch. It became necessary for a horticultural commissioner, who was stationed at a town some 35 miles from the ranch, to be consulted as to the best means of conducting the projected operations. Upon the Saturday afternoon Underwood's superior in the handling of the company's affairs instructed him to go to the horticultural commissioner and ask his advice upon the troublesome subject. Underwood testified before the respondent Industrial Accident Commission that the superior said he had seen an article in which a certain method of spraying was advised, and, further:

"He instructed me to see [the commissioner] before returning to the ranch and consult with him as to whether it was necessary for us to do that on our particular place."

Shortly after this conversation, Underwood went to a garage not far from the ranch, where his car was being repaired, procured it, and drove away. He did not take the direct road to the town above mentioned, but left it approximately at right angles on a course which, after two turns to the left, would bring him back to the direct route thus referred to. The distance around this detour—we so term it for convenience only—was about four miles. Underwood's home was at a point on the road he thus took, in a stretch he traversed after making the first left turn. Before he departed from the ranch, one of the company's employees had given him some olives for his own consumption. These were contained in a large wooden bucket, which was filled with the fruit and with the brine in which it was immersed. When Underwood reached the garage he had placed the bucket in the car. When he reached his home he deposited the olives there and proceeded along the remainder of the so-called detour over a well-paved and well-traveled road which was on the direct route from his home to the town where the horticultural commissioner was to be found. On making the second turn above mentioned, he collided with another automobile and was injured. He applied to respondent commission for compensation for his injuries and an award was made in his favor. This proceeding was instituted for the purpose of annulling the award.

Further light is thrown upon the question presented by the testimony of Underwood's superior before the commission. He said:

"He is a man that is carrying rather heavy burdens and his calls away from the ranch for various reasons take him in many directions, employing help, buying supplies, and reporting to me every Saturday, and his employment is in a similar nature to mine, in that I am on duty all the time and if any one rang up Mr. Underwood in the middle of the night, Sunday night, Saturday night, or any other night, it would be up to him to respond and he would respond."

"Q. It would be his duty as your employee? A. Absolutely. A superintendent has no hours. Due to that fact, we extend rather broad latitude to that class of man, and if he had business to attend to of his own when he was in town on Saturday, that would be perfectly all right with us and he understood it that way. If he had occasion to stop at his home, he would still be on duty due to that latitude given."

"Q. You did not fix any particular hours that he would travel or the route he would take in the execution of his business? A. It would be impossible."

"Q. That was left to his discretion? A. Absolutely. * * * A man occupying the position he does cannot separate his business from his personal affairs. They are intermingled sometimes, usually at all times. It is not like a man going on duty at 8 o'clock in the morning and leaving at 6.

"Q. He was practically subject to call at any time? A. Yes, sir."

We think respondent commission was justified in finding from the evidence before it that Underwood did not commence his journey to consult the horticultural commissioner until after he had left the olives at his home. His injuries therefore arose out of his employment and were incurred in the course of it. He was not instructed to go directly to the horticultural commissioner, but only to see him "before returning to the ranch." Undoubtedly, considering the general character of his employment, these special instructions would have been entirely satisfied if he had remained at home, after unloading the bucket of olives, until after dinner, or even until the next day, or perhaps even until Monday morning, then proceeding to consult the commissioner and thereafter communicating the result to his superior the next time he appeared at the ranch. These views force the conclusion that his journey upon the business of his employer began at the time we have already indicated.

Petitioner contends, of course, that Underwood should have proceeded directly from the garage to the town, and that his side trip to his home took him outside the course of his employment, and that he would not again have entered it until he returned to the direct route from the garage to the town. Employers' Liability A. C. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 182 Cal. 612, 187 P. 42, and other authorities cited in the opinion there rendered, are referred to by petitioner as supporting this contention. We think all those cases very different from the one now before us.

Award affirmed.

FAULL et ux. v. JOHNSON et al.
(Civ. 3559.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 2, 1928.

1. Exchange of property §8(4)—Evidence, in action to rescind exchange of properties, held to warrant inference that representations as to value were positive statements of fact.

Evidence, in action to rescind exchange of properties, held sufficient to warrant inference that defendants' alleged representations as to value of their property were not mere expressions of opinion, but positive statements of fact.

2. Trial §165—On motion for nonsuit, favorable inferences fairly deducible from the evidence are considered facts proved for plaintiff.

In passing on motion for nonsuit, every favorable inference fairly deducible from the evidence must be considered as a fact proved in favor of plaintiff.

3. Exchange of property §3(1)—Parties relying on representations in exchange of properties need not investigate their truth.

Parties to exchange of properties, having relied on the representations by the other parties, were under no obligation to investigate the truth thereof, and this though they had opportunity to do so.

4. Exchange of property §3(1)—Representations in exchange of properties as to value, financial ability, and payment held material.

Where T., having a contract for purchase of a large tract of land, contracted to sell part of it to H., and defendants acquired T.'s rights under his contract with H., and exchanged them with plaintiffs for valuable properties, representations of defendants, in making the exchange, as to the financial ability of T., and as to the value of the property covered by H.'s contract, and that H. had already made a substantial payment on his contract, though it was not yet due, were material.

5. Exchange of property §3(1)—Misrepresentation of single material fact in exchange of properties held sufficient for rescission.

Misrepresentation by defendants, in exchange of properties with plaintiffs, of a single material fact on which they had a right to and did rely, will suffice to support plaintiffs' cause of action for rescission.

6. Exchange of property §5—Delay of 20 days not causing injury held not laches, barring action to rescind exchange of properties.

Plaintiffs' delay of 20 days before giving notice of rescission of exchange of properties with defendants, not being unreasonable, and not being shown to have caused defendants any injury, did not constitute laches, barring action for rescission.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, and E. G. MacAdams, of Long Beach, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. In the year 1919 Nancy E. Farlow entered into a contract to sell 264 acres of land in Fresno county to E. J. DeMasters. In January, 1920, Joseph E. Trembley, William R. Trembley, Claude H. Trembley, and Frank Trembley acquired all of the purchaser's rights under the contract. January 2, 1922, the Trembleys entered into an agreement to sell 47 acres of the land to O. E. Hillyard for $19,500, $4,700 thereof to be paid on or before December 1, 1930, and 60 per cent. of the gross proceeds received from the sale of all crops grown or produced upon the premises during and after the year 1924 to be applied on the purchase price until the whole of the remainder was paid, the deferred payments to bear interest at 7 per cent. per annum. Thereafter the defendants acquired the rights of the Trembleys under the Hillyard contract, September 15, 1924, the defendants agreed to convey such rights to the plaintiffs in exchange for valuable real property in Long Beach. Subsequently both parties executed conveyances consummating the exchange. The Trembleys failed to make the payments due under their contract of purchase of the larger tract, and by reason thereof, early in 1925, all their rights under that contract and the rights of the plaintiffs under the Hillyard contract were canceled by decree of court. February 9, 1925, the plaintiffs gave notice of rescission, and, the defendants refusing to rescind, this action was commenced on the following day. As grounds for rescission the complaint alleges a number of false representations alleged to have been made by the defendants and to have induced the plaintiffs to make the exchange, of which the following only need be considered:

(1) That the property described in the Hillyard contract was of the value of $27,500, whereas its true value was only $7,000.

(2) That Hillyard had made a payment of $2,000 on the contract price when in fact he had made no payment thereon.

(3) That the "Trembleys were worth the sum of $150,000 and were able * * * to keep their contract under which they were purchasing the land, * * * in full force and effect and not permit the same to become delinquent," whereas they "were not worth the sum of $150,000 and were financially unable to keep said contract in full force and effect."

At the close of the plaintiffs' case the court granted defendants' motion for a nonsuit, and the plaintiffs have appealed.

The plaintiffs introduced evidence clearly showing, if true, that the foregoing representations were made and that plaintiffs were induced thereby to make the exchange of properties. Witnesses for the plaintiffs testified that the Hillyard land was worth only $8,000 or $9,000. The testimony shows without contradiction that Hillyard had paid nothing whatever on his contract of purchase. It appears from the evidence that the Trembleys were financially unable to make the payments as they became due under their contract to purchase the larger tract, but it was not shown that they were not worth $150,000.

In granting the motion for a nonsuit the trial court, referring to the Hillyard tract of 47 acres, said:

"The testimony of the various witnesses seems to indicate that it was worth around $8,000 or $9,000."

The court took the view, however, that the representation that it was worth $27,500 was a mere expression of opinion, and that because the plaintiffs had an opportunity to examine the property they were not justified in relying upon the false representation as to its value.

Plaintiff James Pooley Faull conducted the negotiations on the part of himself and wife for the exchange of the properties. He testified that he had had no previous experience in buying agricultural land; that he did not "know anything about agricultural land"; and that he depended on the alleged representations "as to the value of this land." In company with one of the defendants, he was once upon the land for "an hour or an hour and a half possibly," but he made no independent investigation as to its value.

[1, 2] The evidence is sufficient to warrant the inference that the alleged representations as to value were not mere expressions of opinion, but positive statements of fact. Harris v. Miller, 196 Cal. 8, 15, 235 P. 981; French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, 585, 217 P. 515; Powell v. Oak Ridge Orchards Co. (Cal. App.) 258 P. 636; Dickey v. Dunn, 80 Cal. App. 724, 727, 252 P. 770; Stone v. McCarty, 64 Cal. App. 153, 167, 220 P. 690. In passing upon a motion for a nonsuit, every favorable inference fairly deducible from the evidence must be considered as a fact proved in favor of the plaintiff. Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 586, 82 P. 252.

[3] Plaintiffs having relied on the representations made by the defendants, they were under no obligation to investigate the truth thereof. French v. Freeman, supra; Dickey v. Dunn, supra. The fact that the plaintiffs may have had an opportunity to investigate the truth of the representations made by the defendants does not preclude a recovery. Teague v. Hall, 171 Cal. 668, 670, 154 P. 851.

[4, 5] The trial court also stated that the representation that Hillyard had made a payment of $2,000 on the contract of purchase was immaterial. Faull testified that he said, in a conversation with defendant Eby, that "there is one good feature of this contract, and that is that Mr. Hillyard has paid $2,000 cash on it, whereas he had until 1930 before he had to make any cash payments except the interest," to which Eby replied, "He got that money, I think, from the sale he made of a little piece of property up in that country somewhere." Eby denied that he made such statement, but he testified that he credited the $2,000 payment on the contract without any part thereof having been made. It appears from other testimony that this credit was made during the negotiations with plaintiffs.
